This favoured treatment to the I.U.L. which will add to the already over-burdened Military Budget a sum amounting to Rs. 15,25,000, while the cost of the time scale of promotion will amount to an additional sum of Rs. 1,00,000 per annum, is rendered all the more inexplicable by the fact that there is no dearth of candidates for the I.U.L. and the I.M.L. Their lists compare very favourably with the I.M.D., which as a result of this differential treatment, is much under strength.

Some of the concessions and increases that have been granted to the I.U.L. have subsequently been extended to the I.M.D., but in a lesser measure and from dates varying from nine months to two years later, and only after the injustice had been exposed in the Legislative Assembly and appeals had been submitted by members of the Department. Nevertheless, these belated concessions clearly indicate that the Army Department, however reluctant they may be to admit it, are cognizant of the principle of equality of status of these various Departments. And further, they have the effect of discrediting the distinction that is sought to be made between recruitment from the Domiciled Community and others, thus proving that the present-day exclusion of the I.M.D. from the benefits of Army Instructions (India) 286, 287 and 1134 is merely a reflex of the communal rivalries to which the Reforms have given birth and intensified. While it is true that, for occupational purposes, we are regarded as Statutory Natives of India, it is equally true that for Military purposes we are European British Subjects, but Army Regulations go further and classify and recruit members of the I.M.D. as British Warrant Officers and not as members of the Domiciled Community, or Anglo-Indians, or European British Subjects.

A reference to the attached statement showing the differences between the salary and allowances of fully qualified professional men of the Domiciled Community such as those that form the I.M.D., and those of British soldiers of inferior education and status, will show the invidious differences that exist. The astounding fact will be further revealed that a Staff-Sergeant promoted from the ranks receives in salary and allowances about Rs. 380 per month, i.e., more than the salary of an Assistant Engineer in the Superior Railway Service, and almost double the salary of a 4th Class Assistant Surgeon of the I.M.D., and that, eight years after he becomes a Major, he receives a total salary of Rs. 1,100 per month, including allowances, as compared with Rs. 700 which a Major in the I.M.D. receives. And, yet, I.M.D. men are recruited from the best families of the community and about 12 per cent. of its members are in possession of British medical qualifications, equivalent to that of I.M.S. and R.A.M.C. officers, and are in every way superior to the I.U.L. The further fact will be revealed that the British Military Hospital nurse, who takes her orders from the Military Assistant Surgeon, is in receipt of a salary and allowances of about Rs. 400 p.m. or twice that of a 4th Class Military Assistant Surgeon of the I.M.D.

In view of the facts and considerations set forth above, we consider no Army committee has any authority to create such a difference between the various Ancillary branches of the Army, and would point out that, apart from its financial extravagance, the scheme involves a breach of the King's Regulations. We, therefore, submit that all concessions that have been granted to the Ancillary branches of the Army should immediately be extended to the I.M.D. in their entirety. Our request is :—

(1) That the I.M.D. be definitely classed as one of the Departments mentioned in Appendix XXVII Regulations for the Army in India.

(2) That Army Instructions (India) 286 and 287 as also 1134, be made applicable in their entirety to the I.M.D. with equal retrospective effect.

(3) That the revised pension rates of the I.M.D. which have been sanctioned from 1.10.1927 be given with retrospective effect from the 1st October, 1925 as in the case of I.U.L.

(4) That, should the revised pension rates, sanctioned to the I.U.L. from the 1st October, 1925, be given retrospective effect so as to include I.U.L. pensioners, who retired on or after the 1st April, 1919, the same concession should be extended to I.M.D. pensioners who retired, or, who were in receipt of the present rates of pay on or after the 1st April, 1919.

(5) That the curriculum of educational and professional studies for entrance into the I.M.D. be raised so as to enable future entrants to obtain a degree instead of being handicapped by the possession of an inferior diploma.

CIVIL BRANCH.

As in the I.M.S. so in the I.M.D., its war reserve has been utilised for more than 50 years for Civil Medical employment in the various provinces, the Railway Medical Services, Superintendents of Jails, Lunatic Asylums, and in many political appointments, as also in Iraq and Mesopotamia. The great and valuable services rendered to the country by these officers are officially admitted and received a well-earned tribute from Sir Reginald Craddock in the minute of dissent he appended to the Lee Commission's Report. If any doubt can possibly exist as to the prejudicial effect of Indianisation on the community it should be, once for all, set at rest by the evidence of its action in the case of those I.M.D. men who were employed in the Provincial Medical Services.

Before the Reforms there was a steady recruitment of capable I.M.D. men, mostly those in possession of British qualifications, into the various Provinces; indeed, admission was looked upon as a legitimate prize by deserving members, and constituted a vested interest. Since 1920, however, in response to pressure in the Legislatures, certain Provinces, such as the United Provinces, and the Punjab, have closed their doors, altogether, while other Provinces have considerably curtailed the number previously employed. Madras, for instance, will not retain their services after they have received commissioned rank, while other Provinces are expected shortly also to issue orders against their employment. We have frequently represented this matter to the Government of India, but have received no satisfaction. Indeed, the recent Communiqué issued by the Secretary of State for India regarding the reorganisation of the I.M.S. and the reapportionment of Civil Surgencies and other Civil appointments entirely ignores the I.M.D. Unless the position is rectified, the I.M.D. war reserve will soon be completely shut out from such employment and drafted back into the Military Department, causing unnecessary distress, through the enforced unemployment of many who deserve a better fate. The Civil field of service has given employment to about 250 I.M.D. officers, who, with their wives and families, form a total of about 2,000 of the community. We plead that men in the I.M.D., especially those with a record of good service or with Indian degrees or British qualifications, be allowed to enter the Civil Medical Services of all Provinces and that Indianisation should not prejudice their claims to such employment.

See Tabular Statement Appendix, p. 303.

ARMY.

Our allegiance and our loyalty to all that is British has been our creed ever and certainly needs no reaffirmation on our part, but, now that Government has stressed the Parliamentary Statute calling us Statutory Natives of India for occupational purposes, we are confronted with the problem of our future position in the military organisation of India and cannot allow the fact to be overlooked, that for defence of Empire purposes, we are classed as European British subjects.

The bulk of the old Volunteer Force, from which, during the Great War, evolved the Indian Defence Force and which, in its turn became the present Auxiliary Force, was and is still to-day, composed of Anglo-Indians and Domiciled Europeans. This Force which is an effective second line of defence, auxiliary to the standing British Army, means a saving to-day of the considerable sum of about 2 crores of rupees yearly to the Indian Exchequer. We have already detailed our past military services to the Empire but, as further instance of our fitness for military service, we would refer to the record of the Indian Medical Department, an integral part of the British Army in India, and a Department exclusively reserved for members of the Domiciled Community. It was only during the War, however, and when England had need of more men and women that all ranks of the British Army and its Ancillary branches, such as the Indian Army Service Corps, the Indian Ordnance Corps and the Military Nursing Service for Women, etc., were thrown open to us and we were freely enlisted and treated on terms of equality with the British officer and soldier. When peace was declared the doors were closed again, and, to-day, we find ourselves in precisely the same position, as far as the Army is concerned, as we occupied in 1829 when Mr. Ricketts, the Anglo-Indian representative was sent on deputation to England to petition the House of Commons on behalf of the community. As in 1829, so in 1928, all avenues of employment in the British Army are closed to us, unless we deny our birth-right, or, as the Government of India advises us, we elect to send our boys to England for enlistment. The Anglo-Indian Community is the only one in India to-day that is denied the privileges and honour, as loyal citizens of the Empire, of serving as regular soldiers in the Army. Many representations have been made in vain to Government and the Indian Army authorities for the community to be allowed to form an Anglo-Indian Regiment or Battery, or, to enter the various Ancillary branches. Indeed, we understand that one Commander-in-Chief, not aware of the duality of status accorded to us by Statute, when asked for an opinion on the desirability of the employment of Anglo-Indians in the Army, replied that he thought the problem would be well on the way to solution if the community would definitely declare whether it desired to be considered Indian or European, instead of sitting on the fence. We regard this exclusion as an insult to our community.

We desire that—

(a) We be allowed to form an Anglo-Indian Unit, or Battery, or Signal Corps.

(b) We be allowed to enlist in all the Ancillary branches of the Army, such as the Indian Army Service Corps, the Indian Army Ordnance Corps, Military Works Service, as also the R.A.M.C. (Ranks), etc., etc.

(c) We be given 50 per cent. of commissions in the Auxiliary Force within a period of 10 years. In this connection we would point out, that though we form the major part of this Force, nearly 20,000 out of a total force of 32,000, we have in it only 110 Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European officers. The Army authorities have definitely refused our request for more officers and placed the responsibility for such appointments in the hands of Officers Commanding Battalions. When we turn to the Indian Territorial Force which has just been reorganised, we see quite a different picture, for every officer in this Corps, except perhaps the Commandant and the Adjutant, is or has to be an Indian with the same status, etc., as an officer of the Indian Auxiliary Force; and yet, it must not be forgotten that the Indian Territorial Force is the second line of defence of the Indian Army and is liable for active service abroad. When this demand was pressed from all sides in the Legislative Assembly and in Committee on behalf of the Indian Officers, and violent attacks were made on Government in connection with the Sandhurst Committee, the Army Department did not hide behind the Officers Commanding, but, frankly yielded to pressure and consented to the Indian Territorial Force being officered by Indians with equal status and a larger percentage of Indians being admitted into Sandhurst. Here you have a community, whose record of military service is undeniable and, though it supplies the bulk of the Auxiliary Force, it is denied an adequate share in the officering of this Unit. We are, in a large measure, silenced into accepting this position by the pressure of conscription on the large numbers of Anglo-Indians in the Auxiliary Force (approximating to 14,000) for whom employment on the railways is conditional on enlistment. This treatment is one more illustration of our peculiar difficulties, placed as we are midway between the European and the Indian, actually of neither, with our very existence threatened in the land of our birth, for which we have given of our best for almost two centuries. We therefore feel we are entitled to demand that within a period of ten years at least 50 per cent. of the Officers of the Indian Auxiliary Force should be members of the Domiciled Community.

LAND SETTLEMENT SCHEMES.

While the community is mainly urban the increasing pressure of Indianisation makes the exploration of fresh avenues of employment necessary, and settlement on the land should provide a ready solution for many who would otherwise be homeless and destitute. Facilities for agricultural training could be made available for the community so that the maximum benefit could be derived from the land.

For many years grants of land have been awarded by Government to military ranks as a reward for good service. The latest grant of this nature is known as the "Lower Sutlej (Nili Bar) Canal Colonisation Scheme." This provides for grants on the scale of 1½ rectangles (37½ acres) to an Indian officer and 1 rectangle (25 acres) to a N.C.O. or Sepoy. The grant of land is not free, but very easy terms have been imposed for payment of the value of the land. Although the grant of land under the Lower Sutlej Scheme was primarily intended for Indian soldiers, several cases have occurred in which such grants have also been made to Civilians for good services. The detailed terms, of course, would depend on the location of these plots, but, presumably, the principles governing the Lower Sutlej Scheme and other similar schemes would apply. As far as the Domiciled Community is concerned, tracts of land situated in such places as Ranchi, Hazaribagh, Kulu Valley, Kodaikanal (South India), the Western Ghats (near Poona), Assam and other such places which have a temperate climate, would provide a means of settlement on the land for a fair number of the community residing in or near those areas. Retired railwaymen and others who have a Provident Fund, or would commute their pensions, could pay back, in a lump sum, any reasonable price that Government may fix for the land. In view of the great services rendered by us to the country and the closure of other avenues of employment to the Domiciled Community, we feel Government should offer us special facilities to obtain land on similar terms to those offered to the army men and others.

Public Services Commission.—The proper and equitable distribution of appointments among the communities can only be efficiently controlled by a strong and impartial board independent of the Legislatures, composed of men of honesty and integrity. Considering the large number of Anglo-Indians employed in Government and Railway Services, we are of opinion that a representative of the Community should certainly have been given a place in the Public Service Commission.

Similarly, in regard to the provincial services, we would recommend the appointment of Public Service Commissions in those Provinces where none already exist and that at least one member of the Community be appointed to each of these bodies.

THE INDIAN AUDIT AND ACCOUNTS DEPARTMENT.

History of Recruitment.—Two distinct branches originally constituted the Indian Audit and Accounts Department, (1) which dealt with Civil Accounts, known as the "Enrolled List," and (2) the former "Accounts Branch of the Public Works Department', or the "Public Works List."

(1) Enrolled List.—All appointments up to 1886 were made in India from successful competitors at an examination of nominated candidates. The nominees at two out of every three examinations were Europeans and Anglo-Indians, and at the third were Indians of unmixed descent.

Indianisation—

The Public Service Commission of 1886 recommended for recruitment into this Department that—

(a) Indigenous agency should be more largely introduced.

(b) Open competitive examinations should take the place of competition after nomination.

(c) Chief Superintendents should be promoted.

(d) Worthy Provincial Service Officers should be promoted; and (e) Government should continue the right of special selection.

All these were accepted by Government except (b), as they considered the reasons for the system of nomination still applied. The maximum appointments to be assigned to Chief Superintendents and the officers mentioned in (d) were fixed at one-third of the total, exclusive of those reserved for the Indian Civil Service. In this way it was thought that the great majority of the officers so appointed would be Indians of unmixed descent and that the adoption of this method would accordingly give effect to recommendation (a). These propoals were approved by the Secretary of State for India, but, nomination at every third examination was modified by the substitution of "Statutory Natives of India" for "Indians of unmixed descent."

In 1899 an important change was made in the method of recruitment of the European branch of the service. It was found that suitable European candidates were not forthcoming in India, and it was decided that they should be selected in future by the Secretary of State in England. The effect of this change may be summarised as follows :—

(a) Not less than 45 per cent. of the appointments were to be given to non-Domiciled Europeans recruited in England.

(b) Not less than 22 per cent. were to be filled by competitive examination of nominated candidates in India, such recruitment being restricted to Statutory Natives of India.

(c) A proportion not exceeding 33 per cent. might be given to Chief Superintendents or other Officers specially promoted, who would ordinarily be Indians of unmixed descent.

Competitive Examination excludes Domiciled Community.—In the same year the standard for the competitive examination in India was made to approximate to that of the M.A. course of the Calcutta University in Mathematics and Science; the practical effect of which, owing to the paucity of Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European graduates, was the entire exclusion of members of the Domiciled Community. In practice recruitment under (c) was carried out to such a small extent that there was one Indian for every two Europeans in the Enrolled List.

More Indianisation.—In 1909 the Government of India, to still further advance the employment of Indians, decided, with the approval of the Secretary of State, to regulate recruitment to ensure an equal distribution of appointments between pure Indians on one side and Europeans and Anglo-Indians on the other. The European element was to be mainly provided for by appointment in England while in India competitive examination was to be the ordinary method of selection, but, Government reserved to themselves the right to promote able subordinates and to make direct nominations.

(2) The "Old Accounts Branch of the Public Works Department."—In 1893 this Department was reorganised to give effect to the recommendations of the Public Services Commission, their decisions being that

(a) recruitment should be in India; and

(b) appointments should be made in three ways :

(i) nominated candidates selected by competitive examination.

(ii) promotion of deserving accountants and

(iii) transfer in exceptional cases of officers from the engineer establishment.

The nominees at two out of every three examinations held for appointments to be filled by (b) (i) were to be Europeans and at the third to be Statutory Natives of India. The maximum number of appointments filled by (b) (ii) was not to exceed one-third of the appointments filled by the first and second methods together. The Government also reserved the power of making special appointments.

In 1899 it was decided that the recruitment should be partly in England as follows :—

(a) In England by the appointments of Cooper's Hill men to a limit of four-ninths of the vacancies.

(b) In India by the promotion of deserving subordinates to the extent of three-ninths of the vacancies ;

(c) In India by competitive examination of nominated candidates to the extent of two-ninths of the vacancies.

The recruitment in India was to be restricted to Statutory Natives of India, but Government continued to reserve the power to make special appointments.

In its practical application a very large proportion of the three-ninths vacancies assigned to promoted subordinates had gone to men of European parentage, and, possibly, as a result of the competitive examinations being placed below the University standard, and as more Europeans and Anglo-Indians than Indians were being nominated, most of the two-ninths vacancies were also held by members of the Domiciled Community. The result was that only a small proportion of these appointments were held by Indians.

Still more Indianisation.—In 1908 Lord Morley wrote he was not satisfied that the principle of furthering the employment of Indians in posts of responsibility had yet been applied to the fullest extent possible in this Department. The Government of India were opposed to any reduction in the proportion of Europeans recruited from England, but, in order to give effect to Lord Morley's wishes, they agreed that only one-ninth instead of three-ninth's of the vacancies should be used for the promotion of Accountants in very exceptional cases and that four ninths instead of two-ninths be filled by competitive examination in India of nominated candidates who were Statutory Natives of India. It was proposed to substitute for nomination by the Accountant-General a system of selection by the Government of India. By these means and by raising the standard of the examination, Government hoped to satisfy Lord Morley and to ensure that the great majority of appointments filled in India should go to Indians.

Competitive Examination again excludes Domiciled Community.—In 1910, separate examinations for these two Departments were abolished, and since then, an annual examination for the supply of candidates to what is now called, the "General List" is held. As this competitive examination demanded a degree it resulted in the entire exclusion of the Domiciled Community which, in those days, had very few graduates. The Government of India in meeting Lord Morley's wishes quite forgot the fact that Anglo-Indians and Domiciled Europeans were Statutory Natives of India, and were as much entitled to some consideration under such sudden changes in their schemes of Indianisation. The result of this policy has been that from 1910 to 1928 only one member of the Domiciled Community has entered by open competition into the "General List." now called the "Indian Audit and Accounts Service."

Statistics.—Recruitment by promotion of deserving subordinate Accounts Officers however, still continues and the Community, up to now, has been given a fair share of these promotions, but, whereas in 1913, the composition of the Superior Service was as follows: 70 Europeans, 42 Anglo-Indians and 46 Indians, or percentages of 44.30 Europeans, 26.45 Anglo-Indians and 29.25 Indians, in 1928 there are 44 Europeans, 20 Anglo-Indians and 112 Indians, or percentages of 25 Europeans, 11.36 Anglo-Indians and 63.64 Indians. At this rate within the next decade or so there will be no Anglo-Indians or Domiciled Europeans in this Service, and there will be no subordinate promotions because there will be no members of the community to promote.

Effect on Community.—The closing of the doors of the Department to the community by the demand for a degree and the sudden introduction of a competitive examination for the Superior Services, especially at a time when we were educationally unprepared, has affected it very adversely and it feels that it has a right to a proper share of representation, especially as many of its members have in the past made a mark in the Department and have risen to the highest positions.

Subordinate Grade.—In the subordinate grades our position is even worse than in the official grades. This is due to official response to the clamour of Indianisation by Indians and the failure of Heads of Departments to carry out the Government of India orders to protect the interests of minority communities. Losses due to these causes should be made good in both clerical and accountants' grades. Moreover our interests have been entirely neglected by Heads of Departments allowing the "Establishment Sections" of most, if not all, accounts offices to be manned and superintended by Indians, men who have power and who naturally protect the interests of their own communities. In former years there was a large number of the community in all Accounts offices in India and Burma, to-day there are very few, or practically none. Up to 1910 the community held five to seven per cent. of the posts in Accounts Offices, to-day they hold less than one per cent. of these posts. There is no dearth of qualified Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European candidates for this grade as hundreds of our boys pass the necessary examinations every year from our European Schools. Furthermore over a hundred Anglo-Indian and Domiciled Europeans are to-day yearly graduating, some of whom are available for such appointments.

Remedies.—(1) Government should apply to the Principals and Headmasters of European Schools and Colleges for suitable candidates for the lower grades and in this manner remedy what is obviously a grievous wrong.

(2) For the next 25 years, when we hope to be educationally fitted to run a level race with the Indian, we suggest that in addition to admission by open competition, 15 per cent. of the vacancies in the Indian Audit and Accounts Service should be given to the community to be filled by nomination by Government and that Principals of Colleges be asked to submit the names of suitable students.

EDUCATION.

Introduction.—We have dealt with the need for protecting the economic security of the parent for at least a period of years; we now come to the no less urgent necessity for assisting him to establish the economic security of his children by protecting, aiding and guiding European education so as to make it productive of the best results. We do not think it can be seriously contended that the brief and sharply-defined protection that we demand for a struggling community, overwhelmed by sudden and revolutionary changes, will operate to destroy its morale. Since it will be given frankly in circumstances of unusual stress and with the deliberate object of setting it on its feet, the community will not be slow to realise its responsibilities and rise to the occasion.

Historical.—Up to the time of the Indian Mutiny, the East India Company paid little attention to the education of children of European descent, although from 1813 onwards it had done much to advance the education of Indians. The defect was in part made good by individual servants of the Company, who, like Clive, accepted Britain's responsibility, at least for the maintenance and education of poor and destitute European and Anglo-Indian children, whom they rightly regarded as part of the price for Empire. When the Indian Mutiny broke out there were schools for children of European origin all over the country. They were maintained by private enterprise, and received no financial support from the Court of Directors.

When the Mutiny had been suppressed, a wave of gratitude to Anglo-Indians set in, and the British Government sought for some channel through which it might find practical and adequate expression. Lord Canning and Bishop Cotton entered into consultation, with the result that in his sermon in St. Paul's Cathedral, Calcutta, on Sunday, the 18th July, 1860, the Metropolitan of Indian recommended that public thanksgiving "to Almighty God for deliverance from the Sepoy Revolt" should find outward expression in the establishment of schools for the children of a community that had so nobly stood by England in her hour of need, and had shed their blood for their kinsmen across the seas." Lord Canning entered con amore into the scheme, and in his minute dated October, 1860, declared that, if neglected, the Anglo-Indian Community would become "a class dangerous to the State," and "a glaring reproach to the Government"; whereas "if cared for betimes, it will become a source of strength to British rule and of usefulness to India." He argued that Anglo-Indians "have a special claim upon us. The presence of a British Government has called them into being." Public subscriptions were raised, to which were added donations from the Anglican Church and the Government to establish "hill schools" to supplement the Christian denominational European schools on the plains. A few years later, in 1876, Lord Lytton, Governor-General, realising that the State was not adequately discharging its obligation to educate the Anglo-Indian community caused Archdeacon Baly to survey the condition of European education in India. The Archdeacon toured the country and submitted his report. It was then that Lord Lytton wrote his celebrated minute—Revenue Department (Miscellaneous Revenue) Resolution, dated Calcutta, the 31st August, 1881. In it he declared, "It has been rightly said that one very special reason why Government cannot afford to ignore the growing up in India of an uninstructed European population is that, in the case of the European, his capacity for self-maintenance depends entirely upon the education he receives. He cannot support himself in this country by working as a day labourer, or by adopting the avocations of the native peasant. An uneducated European must necessarily become an idle and profitless and often a dangerous, member of the community. On the other hand, it must be remembered that he (or his English ancestor) was brought out to India originally to do work that could only be done by the European, a fact which in itself had given him some claim to consideration. The climate is uncongenial to him; the cost of living is necessarily disproportionate to his means, and he is deprived at the same time of the educational opportunities which are now available at home, even to the poorest of the working class. In all these respects the European parent is placed at a disadvantage, and it becomes necessary for the Government to come to his assistance." Lord Lytton created European Education into a distinct section of Public Instruction, appointed Inspectors of European Schools, and ear-marked funds for these schools. It would be a mistake to suppose that European Education so far had fared at the hands of Government no worse than the education of Hindus and Muhammadans. The East India Company had established and endowed a Muhammedan College in Calcutta in 1782, and a Hindu College in Benares, in 1791. In 1813 the Company provided for the annual expenditure of one lakh of rupees on Hindu and Moslem education but nothing for European Education. By 1877–78 the allotment for the education of Indians had reached £730,013. Thereafter the provision of funds for the education of Indians increased year by year. Still nothing was assigned to European education. The first provision of money for Indian education was made in 1813 and for European education in 1882, i.e., after a period of 70 years, during which European education had to fend for itself. Allowing ten years as the normal term of school life, it was not till seven generations of Indians had received their education in schools provided or aided by Government, that the State began to discharge its responsibility for the education of European and Anglo-Indian children. To Lord Lytton is due the credit of extending to these the long established policy of providing Hindus with tols, patshalas, and Oriental Colleges, and the Muhammedans with Qran Schools, Maktabs and Madrasahs, and both with schools in which English was taught and in spite of the fostering care which Government has bestowed upon the education of Indians, what is the net result? Of the 60 millions of Muhammedans in British India only about 2 millions are at school; of the 320 millions in the country less than 8½ millions are receiving any education whatever; and of these 8½ millions 6½ millions are in primary and indigenous elementary schools, and 125 thousands are in secondary schools. Meanwhile, not less than 99 per cent. of European and Anglo-Indian children —boys and girls alike, are receiving formal instruction, and 22 per cent. of them are in the secondary school stage.

Necessity for European Schools.—As a result of this investigation into European education Lord Lytton declared in his Minute which has already been cited, "The Government is forced to admit the necessity of separate schools for European children during the age when their habits and principles are in process of formation." Every successive Governor-General has endorsed this pronouncement, seeing that the fundamental principles involved are the inculcation of the Christian Faith, which, in the case of Roman Catholics, who comprise 50 per cent. of the community, is compulsory under canon law—and the conservation of the British tone in the schools for Europeans and their descendants.

These principles cannot be realised in a school which admits all races in India. Government maintains Madrasahs, Qran schools and Maktabs into which only Muhammedans are admitted and Sanskrit Tols and Colleges into which only Hindus of the Higher classes are received. These institutions provide a precedent for European schools to be reserved to European and Anglo-Indians. It is essential that the education of children should be through their mother-tongue, and in living relationship with their faith, environment, and daily experiences. And when these differ as widely as they do among the peoples of India it becomes an educational necessity that there should be separate schools for those who are separated from one another by language, religion, culture, tradition and social usages. Christians want for their children Christian schools where they breathe a Christian atmosphere, are taught daily the Christian doctrine and can without hindrance live their faith and practise their worship. Almost without exception every European Secondary school is a boarding school. So also are a large number of Higher Elementary and Elementary Schools. It would be impossible for them to make provision for Hindu, Muhammedan and European children in refectories, dormitories and religious observances. Then too the great majority of European day-schools are mixed schools for boys and girls. European and Anglo-Indian parents, for obvious reasons consider it undesirable that Hindu and Muhammaden boys should be pupils of European mixed schools. In Indian schools there is co-education, but it is to be found only in indigenous and elementary schools whose pupils, boys and girls, are not more than eight years of age. It is well known that in the villages and hamlets of the country only too often neighbours are estranged by diversities of caste and creed. If Indians were to be admitted wholesale into European schools, and vice versa, this evil would be intensified by the emergence of race consciousness. Inevitably there would be collisions between European and Anglo-Indian pupils on the one side and Indian pupils on the other. Thus, viewed from every angle, it is imperative that the integrity of European schools should be maintained by the admission into them only of the present permissive 15 per cent. of non-Europeans, and no more.

In addition to this, it should be borne in mind that there are several European schools which owing to the circumstances of their foundation, endowments and constitution, must be reserved to Europeans and Anglo-Indians. Some schools have been established and maintained by Church and Missionary organisations with the express and exclusive object of educating the children of the permanent British population in India. These and the first mentioned class of schools cannot be thrown open to Indians, especially non-Christian Indians.

Ever since the time of Lord Canning and Lord Lawrence the policy has been to endeavour to preserve and improve the physique of European and Anglo-Indian children by removing them from the enervating and unhealthy plains of India, and providing them with schools on the hills. Government, Religious Organisations and Railways, have consistently carried out this policy for many years. Indians, however, dislike a cold climate, and have neither built themselves schools at an elevation, nor do they seek admission into European hill schools, as they sometimes do in respect of European schools on the plains. It may be mentioned that European schools, whose aggregate capitalised value is several million pounds, have been built and maintained without any financial contribution from Indians. It is not equitable therefore that they should demand admission into schools which others have built for themselves at their own expense, and for their own special needs.

European Schools.—According to the last quinquennial Report (1917–22) of the Educational Commissioner with the Government of India, there are—

6 European Colleges with 846 Scholars;

153 High Schools with 25,247 Scholars, containing Middle and Primary Departments.

130 Middle Schools with 13,322 Scholars, containing Primary Departments.

102 Primary Schools with 5,638 Scholars.

52 Special Schools with 1,547 Scholars.

1 Unrecognised School with 20 Scholars.

Their pupils are distributed as follows :—

	Scholars.
	Males.	Females.	Total.
Collegiate Stage ...	355	195	550
High School Stage ...	1,776	1,279	3,055
Middle Stage	4,809	4,396	9,203
Primary Stage	14,897	14,851	29,748
Special Schools	1,020	907	1,927
Unrecognised Schools ...	40	23	63
Total	22,987	21,651	44,638

Statistics derived from the Census of 1921 show that about 30 per cent. of the Anglo-Indian population is between the ages of 5 and 18 years. The expectation therefore would be 36,300 children in European schools. The excess of 8,000 in these schools represents children of pure European parentage, and a modicum of non-European children, e.g., Parsees, Jews, Armenians and Asiatics generally. An important fact emerges from these figures, that in a country where there is no compulsory education, no system of maintained schools, no old-age pensions, no unemployment doles, comparatively poor people by straining their every resource, even to the extent of making no provision for old age or family, are paying for the education of cent. per cent. of their children, children who in England would be participating in the privilege of receiving free instruction.

The Census Returns for 1921, and the statistics given in Vol. V, Statistics of British India, 1921, are not identical although the differences are not appreciable. From the available sources it appears that—

(A) 1 European or Anglo-Indian out of every 150 is in the College stage.
1 Hindu out of every 3,773 is in the College stage.
1 Muhammedan out of every 13,058 is in the College stage.

(B) of pupils in schools and colleges—
1 out of every 80 European and Anglo-Indian pupils is in the College stage.
1 out of every 91 Hindu pupils is in the College stage.
1 out of 269 Muhammedan pupils is in the College stage.

(C) Cent. per cent. of European and Anglo-Indian boys are being educated.
12 per cent. of Hindu and Muhammedan boys are being educated.
Cent. per cent. of European and Anglo-Indian girls are being educated.
1 per cent. of Hindu and Muhammedan girls are being educated.

Satisfactory to the Domiciled Community as are the above comparisons, equally satisfactory to them is the result of a comparison with the educational statistics in England. In the latter century 3 per cent. proceed from the elementary to the secondary stage. The corresponding percentage for Anglo-Indians is 22; and if exact figures could be obtained of the ever-increasing number of Anglo-Indian boys and girls who go to England for secondary, technical and university education the scales would turn still further in their favour. And here it should be observed that in the 444 European schools in India and Burma, there cannot be fewer than 15,000 orphans and destitute children, the sons and daughters, many of them of British fathers, who died prematurely perhaps, leaving their wives and children stranded in a distant and now more or less unfriendly land. The Poverty Commission appointed by the Government of Bengal in 1891–92 to investigate European and Anglo-Indian poverty in Calcutta, reported that 19 per cent. of these people were in utter destitution and living on public or private charity. The Pickford Committee of 1918–19 estimated the percentage at 17. This is a trustworthy account of the average economic condition of the white man and his descendants in India before and during the War. But their post-war condition is considerably worse. For Indianisation of the public services has so prejudicially affected them that they are less able even than formerly to shoulder unaided the entire responsibility for the education of the poor of their community. And yet they are bearing 65 per cent. of cost of their schools, leaving Government to meet only 35 per cent. The reduction of the educational grants during the operation of the Reforms is bringing in a crisis, for the schools find that they may be compelled to send away many of the children to whom they have been affording a home and education, unless the lost grants are made good. To some, higher education is a luxury; to others an advantage; to Anglo-Indians it is life itself. For the less education the community receives, the less will be its earning capacity, and the greater its poverty, until in want of education and consequential unemployment, cause and effect will practically merge into an identity:

Cost of European Education.—The schools for European and Anglo-Indian children are maintained by (a) Christian Organisations, (b) Railway Systems, (c) Private corporations and (d) Government. Of the 444 European Schools in India only 14 are maintained by Government. Thus, the public duty of educating a community is transferred from the State to religious bodies and private enterprise. This is clearly brought out by the expenditure in 1921–22, the date of the last Quinquennial Report on European Schools :—

EXPENDITURE.

Year.	Government Funds.	Board Funds.	Fees.	Endowments, Subscriptions, &c.	Total.
1921–22	46,70,968	21,653	49,06,770	36,73,835	1,32,73,226

Remarking on the above tabular statement the Commissioner for Education, Government of India, writes in his Report on the progress of education in India during the Quinquennium ending 1922. "The outstanding feature of the above table is the very high proportion of the cost (about 65 per cent.) which is met from fees and private sources. The corresponding figures for Indian education . . . show that only 35 per cent. of the total expenditure is met from fees &c." The Commissioner adds: "It is satisfactory to note that when the cost of European Education rose with the general rise in prices after the war, the greater part of the educational expenditure was met by the community itself in the shape of increased fees." While the cost to Government of each European scholar rose from Rs. 81/– to Rs. 103/–, the average fee paid for each scholar rose from Rs. 80/– to Rs. 108/–. In Bombay and in the Punjab the appreciation of the fee rate is phenomenal. In Bombay the cost to Government of each scholar fell from Rs. 101/– to Rs. 100/–, while the average fee rose from Rs. 68/– to Rs. 124/–. In the Punjab Government expenditure fell from Rs. 195/– to Rs. 190/– per scholar while the average fee paid rose from Rs. 113/– to Rs. 241/–. The readiness with which the Anglo-Indians pay for education fees that are generally out of proportion to their average income, is eloquent testimony to the universal recognition that the economic existence of the race lies in, at least, a secondary education.

In Great Britain the inhabitants are homogeneous and of the same culture, and there is a common line of poverty. They supply from within their own ranks every grade of labour from the crossing sweeper, to the Prime Minister. Free education is the civic right of every individual child and the lesser educated can make a living as skilled or unskilled labourers. The Army, the Navy, the Mercantile marine, factories, mines, agriculture, and the manifold arts and handicrafts make provision for tens of thousands. Emigration affords relief to congestion. In India none of these avocations and openings are available to Anglo-Indians whose poverty line being pitched higher than that of the indigenous Indian, disqualifies him from competing with his own fellow-countrymen. A wage that offers a competence to the Indian masses, and to even those Indians who have a secondary and technical education, is a starvation wage to Anglo-Indians. Lord Lytton gauged the economic situation accurately when, in his Minute of 1881, he stated that the European or his descendant in India "cannot support himself in this country by working as a day labourer or by adopting the avocations of the native peasant." On the other hand, he foresaw that "an uneducated European must necessarily become an idle and profitless, and often a dangerous member of the community." He realised the truth of Lord Canning's warning that, if neglected, the Domiciled Community might become a "class dangerous to the State" and a "glaring reproach to the Government." Whereas, "If cared for betimes, it will become a source of strength to British rule and of usefulness to India." Accordingly, what the Government did for European education from the time of Lord Canning until the Reforms came into operation in 1920, was in discharge of a moral obligation to those "who have a special claim upon us." The presence of a British Government has called them into being." Nor has it abandoned its moral obligation for, under the Reforms it has endeavoured to protect European Education by classing it as a Reserved Subject and by providing that "The Government must acknowledge and must be given effective power to discharge the obligation to see that their (Anglo-Indian) interests are not prejudicially effected." In the next section an endeavour will be made to show how, while Anglo-Indians have been making more and more strenuous efforts to provide their children with an adequate education, and have even taxed themselves beyond their means to afford it, the Provincial legislatures have taken an opposite course by adopting a policy of reducing the grants in aid of European Schools. The alarming fact is that hitherto no Provincial Governor has been known by certification to have restored a grant to European Education which has been refused or reduced by a Legislative Council and that, in spite of the Injunctions to the Governors of Provinces. Thus, although the Instrument of Instructions took the precaution to safeguard our interests, we have nevertheless suffered through non-application of the provision made for our protection and it is for this reason that we urge that we be given specific and effective statutory safeguards.

Legislatures and European Education.—The attitude of the Legislatures to European Education comes through interpellations, motions for reductions of its Budget, and arguments advanced for such reductions. The general tenor of these has been unfriendly and even hostile.

From the time that European education has been administered separately from Indian education, it has been permissible to have 15 per cent. non-Europeans on the rolls of European schools. As a condition of grants to European schools demands have been made for Indians to be admitted into them in larger numbers and even without limit. This cannot be done without sacrificing the Christian character and British tone of the schools and thus defeating the fundamental objects for which they exist. Moreover, the present European schools do not suffice for the accommodation of the children of the Domiciled Community, and they could receive a larger number of Indians only by excluding a corresponding number of European and Anglo-Indians. The children thus deprived of admission into their own schools, could be educated only by the establishment of new schools. But for this there is no money; and, what is more, there would be no end to the opening of new schools, as each newly-established school is filled with Indians. Ultimately, the advantages which at present attract Indians to European schools would disappear and the demand for them would cease, but not before irreparable mischief had been done to the cause of European education.

European education is relatively expensive when compared with Indian education, and its costliness is urged as an argument against its receiving grants which are considered excessive. The per capita cost of Indian education has been put into the balance against the per capita cost of European education. This is both unfair and misleading. In the first place, the bulk of the expenditure on Indian education is incurred in imparting elementary education, because only an inconsiderable percentage of Indian boys and girls advance to a secondary education. The opposite is the case with European and Anglo-Indian children the cost of whose education is chiefly incurred in secondary schools. Obviously, secondary education must cost a great deal more than elementary or rudimentary education. In the second place, one of the fundamental principles of education is that it should be in organic relationship to the realities of the pupils' every-day life and environments. The social setting of Europeans and Anglo-Indians, even the poorest of them, is at a much higher cultural level than that of the Indian masses, as also is their line of poverty. They are not a rural, but an urban people, whose standard of living is necessarily scaled to the cost of living in towns and industrial centres. And not only this, living in European style in the matter of clothing, food, housing, &c., their minimum expenditure in their homes exceeds by far the expenditure of the Indian peasant or skilled labourer, or middle classes of Indians. European education is on a scale that corresponds to the manner of living and the modes of thinking of Europeans and Anglo-Indians, and cannot but be more expensive than Indian education. And if this be true, it is also true that they are bearing a larger percentage of the cost of their education than do Indians. For, as has been stated elsewhere, the latest statistics obtained on the subject show that Europeans and Anglo-Indians meet 69 per cent. of the cost of their education, while Indians bear only 31 per cent. of the cost of theirs.

With the exception of perhaps half-a-dozen, the great number of Railway schools are elementary schools. The great bulk of European and Anglo-Indian children in these schools are therefore compelled to leave home if they wish to proceed to higher grade and secondary schools. This means that they have to become boarders. In all European boarding schools, the fees for board and tuition are inclusive. If they were separated the per capita cost of instruction in them would be about one-fourth of the sum shown in Government Blue Books. There are several Indian schools to which are attached boarding departments. But in them tuition fees are kept quite separate from boarding fees; and it is therefore possible in them to calculate the per capita cost of instructions by operating only upon the tuition fees. Naturally the per capita cost calculated from board and tuition fees will be very much higher than the per capita cost calculated exclusively upon tuition fees. And mislead by per capita costs worked out upon different bases, the objection is raised to what is called the excessive cost of European education, by members of the Provincial Councils who demand that that cost should be reduced, and who give expression to their disapproval of that cost by making cuts in the annual budgets for European schools.

An attempt has been made, but without success, to collect statistics relating to the cuts made in the European Schools Budgets in each Province, since the Reforms have been in operation.

It may however be pointed out that in six consecutive years European education in Bengal has lost a considerable sum of money both through the demands of the Education Department being reduced by Government and through Legislative cuts. In 1924, for instance, the Legislature accepted a cut of over Rs. 90,000/ which the Governor refused to certify. We believe that similar conditions prevail in other Provinces. Governors are vested with the power to certify the budget demands for European education, but, although they are charged to see that the interests of the Domiciled Community are in no way prejudiced, there is no known single instance in which any Governor has restored to European education, through the instrument of certification, any portion of a reduction made by Legislative Councils in the budget estimates for European education.

The Motions as detailed below for reductions or refusal of the two distinct and separate demands for European and Indian education in Bengal for 1928–29 afford a very illuminating and instructive contrast and clearly demonstrate the hostile attitude of Indian legislators towards European education.

Education (Reserved). Budget 1928, Bengal. Demand Rs. 12,89,000. Motion for reduction or refusal.

Moulvi Asimuddin Ahmed :—That the demand of Rs. 3,39,000 for European and Anglo-Indian education under the head 31/A. Direct grants to non-Government Secondary Schools be refused.

Babu Akhil Chandra Datta :—That the demand of Rs.4,11,000 under the head 31.B — Education (Reserved) Primary Direct grants to non-Government Primary Schools for European and Anglo-Indian education be reduced by Re.1.

Babu Amarendra Nath Ghosh :—Reduced by Rs. 10,00,000.

Maulvi Asimuddin Ahmad :—Reduced by Rs. 6,44,000.

Compare the above with Indian Education (Transferred) Demand Rs. 1,16,33,000. Motion for reduction :—

Rs.	17,500	Saral Kumar Dutt.
,,	17,500	Jitendralal Banerjee.
,,	17,500	Manmatha Nath Roy.
,,	1	Akhil Chandra Datta.
,,	1	Manmatha Nath Roy.
,,	1	Akhil Chandra Datta.
,,	1	Manmatha Nath Roy.
,,	10,400	Azizul Haque.
,,	1	Jitendralal Banerjee.
,,	1	Tamizuddin Khan.
,,	1	Manmatha Nath Roy
,,	1	Bhupendra Narayan Sinha.
,,	100
,,	1
,,	1
,,	1
,,	100
,,	5
,,	1	Six other token cuts.
,,	15,200	against Rs. 49,900 required to other items by Azizul Haque.
,,	3,000	against whole demand by Azizul Haque.

In the section "Cost of European Education" it has been shown that the European and Anglo-Indian population have bravely endeavoured to maintain and even to advance the standard of the education of their children, by making good, as far as they can, the annual decline in the sums voted by Legislative Councils. But obviously the growth of European education is receiving a set back by the attitude to it of Indian Legislatures. The whole economic life and prosperity of the Community depends upon their members being equipped with at least a sound secondary and by preference a University education. To leave their education to the caprice or mercy of Indian Legislatures is to expose their most vulnerable point to those who have not been slow to attack it If the Anglo-Indiam Community is to take its legiti. mate place in the social, industrial, and political life of their country, that form and degree of education that is essential to them must be afforded through adequate subventions from the State. To neglect their suitable education is to pursue a policy that will create a most difficult and ugly problem in the near future. The experiment of the past few years has revealed that European education had but little to hope from Provincial Legislatures and Provincial Administration, and it is therefore urged that it be made a central and non-votable subject.

Centralisation of European Education.—The experience which the community has had of the attitude of Legislative Councils to European education urges them to desire that it be removed from financial dependence upon the Provincial Legislatures by its being made a Central Non-votable Subject and for the following reasons :

Anglo-Indians and Europeans are domiciled in all the Provinces and Presidencies of India and whereas a uniform system of education is both possible and necessary for them, a diversity of educational codes, curricula, text books, and public examinations prevails in the different Provinces. The result is that children accompanying their fathers or guardians on transfer from one Province to another usually have their education interrupted, dislocated, and even retarded; and when it is borne in mind that Anglo-Indians and domiciled Europeans serve chiefly in Railways, Telegraphs, Postal and other All-India Services, it will be realised that the disability complained of exists on a large scale.

To remedy this evil it is urged that there be a uniform system of education in European schools throughout the country. But, a uniform system of education involves control from one centre, and our submission is that that centre should be the Government of India. So long as European education is administered in territorial compartments by Provincial authorities, it cannot be made symmetrical, nor can it be assured of equally distributed financial subventions from the public revenues.

We regret to say that we believe that a review of the attitude of the Provincial Legislatures towards European education, during the past five or six years, will reveal the existence of different policies, of different estimates of its claims to support and of a general tendency to cut down its grants. There has been evinced an inability to reconcile the disparity between the cost of European and Indian schools; and instead of its being recognised that the great need is for Indian schools to rise to higher educational ideals by a larger expenditure, the action taken by several Provincial Legislatures seems to be to compel European schools to approximate to the standard of Indian schools, a retrogressive step that can be taken only at the sacrifice of efficiency. Anglo-Indians and domiciled Europeans would rejoice to see Indian schools lifted to a higher plane of efficiency, just as much as they would deplore their own schools being dragged down to the lamentable inefficiency of the general run of Indian schools. They urge Indians to spend more on Indian schools, instead of demanding that there should be less spent on European schools. But, as things are, it is to be feared that so long as European schools are financed by Provincial Legislatures, supplies will not be voted on a scale which on the surface gives the impression of preferential treatment to European education.

In justification of the reduction of educational grants to European schools, some Legislatures have urged that Europeans do not make material contribution to the Provincial funds, but, to the resources of the Central Government through the payment of Imperial taxes. They argue that for this reason European education should derive its grants from the Government of India. With sentiments such as these influencing members of the Councils it is natural that under the present system European education should experience degrees of financial assistance varying with the attitude towards it of the local Legislatures. Symmetry of treatment, it is respectfully submitted, can be secured only by European education being converted into a central non-votable subject.

If the Government of India assumes control of European education and responsibility for financing it, the present system of administering that Department of Public Instruction will require sequential modification. At present the practice is for European schools in a Province to be the whole-time charge of a member of the Indian Education Service. Where the schools are too few to allow of this, one officer inspects Indian as well as European schools, or he has control of the European schools in two Provinces. The inspectors of European schools are responsible to the Director of Public Instructions of the Province. Thus, generally speaking, European education is administered in territorial sections coinciding with the Provinces, by inspectors who are in detachment from one another and in accordance with schemes that are not correlated or equally financed. It is to remedy the evils and disadvantages arising from this arrangement that the transfer of European education to the Central Government is advocated. If it is so transferred, it is recommended that European education fall to the member holding the portfolio in the Government; that its chief administrative officer may be designated "Inspector-General of European Schools," who will be directly responsible to the Educational Member, and that under him there be inspectors of European schools, to each of them being allotted a number of schools sufficient to give them full occupation, even if they be situated in more than one Province.

The system outlined above need not be more expensive than the one now in vogue. It will make it possible for symmetry to be introduced in the regulations from grants in aid, in curricula of studies, and in the organisation of schools according to their gradation. This will give uniformity and stability to European education and standardise it for the whole of the country. Children going from one Province to another owing to the the transfers of their fathers or guardians will not suffer the disadvantages they now experience by being obliged to enter schools imparting education under different systems, with classes graduated by different standards of progress, and with curricula and syllabuses that lead up to diverse final examinations. Nor will this be the only material gain. European schools' finance will be stablilised, and cease to be, as it is now, at the whim and caprice of Provincial Legislative Councils. The Anglo-Indian and domiciled European population, scattered as it is in small groups or in isolation throughout the length and breadth of India, has a setting unlike that of any of the Indian races, and it follows that the planning of its education should be different from that which is found suitable for the education of the people of a Province, and provided by methods confined to that Province. The classification of European education as a reserved Provincial subject recognises the principle enunciated by the Government of India Resolution, Revenue Department (Misc. Revenue) dated Calcutta the 31st August, 1881: "The Government is forced to admit the necessity of separate schools for European children during the age when their habits and principles are in process of formation." But the protection afforded by the Government of India Act of 1919 is confined to the system of education prescribed by the Provincial Governments for the European schools within their jurisdiction. It has failed to protect European education financially. The experience gained by the operation of that Act during the past five or six years reveals the imperative necessity of establishing the grants in aid to European schools, for nothing is so destructive of educational progress as the anxieties caused by uncertainty of the financial position of schools. The removal of European education from the list of Provincial reserved subjects is not preferential legislation, but a statesman-like attempt to secure to a minority community its elementary social and economic needs. How greatly these may suffer is instanced in the case of Bengal when the Budget allotments of the year 1926–27 fell short by a sum approximately Rs. 300,000 for grants in aid calculated by the Local Government's own principles and pledges of financial assistance to European schools. If this evil be not altogether removed, it will be mitigated if the finances of European schools are derived from one source, namely, the Government of India. But, financial stability requires to be supplemented by educational integrity. This will be impossible so long as different ideals and different systems of European education prevail in the different provinces. The assumption by the Government of India of responsibility for European education will enable the form and scope of European education to be unified and standardised for the whole country, and its schools to be granted some measure of financial stability.

For the reasons set forth above it is respectfully urged that European education be made a central non-votable subject.

Need for Survey of European Education.—Although a uniform system throughout India is possible, and not only possible, but also imperative for European education, hitherto it has been organised Provincially. No Province has co-ordinated it with what is being done in adjoining Provinces. The result is that there is no cohesion or inter-relation between the systems of European education in the various Provinces. It is designed and administered in each Province by the local Director of Public Instruction through the agency of an inspector, Gradually curricula and syllabuses, final Departmental and Public Examinations, have drifted further and further apart, to the detriment of pupils who go from Province to Province as their fathers or guardians are moved by their employers from one part of India to another.

A plea has been put forth above for European education to be allotted to the Central Government. If this prayer is granted, the first action of that Government naturally will be to take stock of the condition and systems under which European education is being imparted. If it continues a provincial subject, that does not remove the urgent necessity of introducing a symmetry and co-ordination in the planning and administration of European education in all the Provinces.

In 1876 Archdeacon Baly was deputed by the then Viceroy, Lord Lytton, to make a survey of European education throughout India preparatory to its being made a separate branch of Public Instruction. Since that date there have been several surveys of Indian education in all its stages and branches, but none of European education. Unless it is reviewed it will not be known what progress, if any, it has made during the last half century, nor what are its present needs, nor on what lines its development should proceed. It is therefore submitted that a small Committee, on which the community is adequately represented, be commissioned by Government to tour the Provinces to investigate European education, and make recommendations for its improvement and consolidation.

The points into which the Committee may enquire may be, among others :—

(a) The geographical distribution of European Schools relatively to European and Anglo-Indian centres;

(b) the internal organisation, curricula and final examinations;

(c) whether these correspond to the economic condition and occupational potentialities of the permanent British inhabitants of India, male and female;

(d) the financial problems of the schools; their financial stability; their incomes from fees; subscriptions and endowments; the rules relating to grants-in-aid and an educational cess;

(e) free compulsory primary education; vocational, industrial and technological education; professional education; university education;

(f) the place that should be given in European schools to Indian vernaculars and Oriental Classical languages;

(g) the correlation of Indian Universities and European Education;

(h) the provision of scholarships, sufficient in number and value, for study in India and abroad, stage by stage;

(i) the staffing of schools; the preparation and training of Anglo-Indian teachers and lecturers for all positions in European schools and colleges;

(j) the fostering of instruction in the physical sciences;

(k) the advisability of having selected schools with a bias in favour of special services—e.g., Army, Navy, Forest, Police, Civil Services (Imperial and Provincial), Commerce, Engineering, the Church, Education, etc.

Anglo-Indian Teachers.—The Anglo-Indian Community is fully conscious and appreciative of its debt to the devotion and zeal of members of the religious orders and men and women from England and America, who as teachers have done so much for European education. The time, however, has come when the Community should be allowed to take a more effective part in the education of its own children.

Teachers imported from other countries are naturally at a disadvantage in that it is difficult for them to establish that bond of sympathy and intimate understanding between themselves and children of this country, which, in the case of the Anglo-Indian teacher, follows without perceptible effort. In fact the idea that European teachers are imparting an English public-school tone to our schools is no longer true. The British teacher coming out to-day does not understand the psychology of Anglo-Indian children, the result being that a wide gulf exists between master and pupil to the benefit of neither and reacts on the children of the community by instilling in them the inferiority complex. Many of these Europeans are not superior to Anglo-Indian teachers. Yet, far higher salaries are given to them and, in certain well-known schools, the higher appointments are regarded as the close preserve for Europeans. The importance of the teaching profession to a community cannot be denied, and we would refer to the recent measures taken in England to improve its prospects and emoluments. So long, therefore, as the pay and prospects of Anglo-Indians are thus restricted, teaching can offer no attraction to them as a profession. It is for this reason that many Anglo-Indian teachers who might have done valuable work in moulding the character and increasing the self-respect and self-reliance of Anglo-Indian youth have resigned from European schools and joined other services.

In some schools, like the Martiniere Colleges, a hard-and-fast policy has been laid down by the Governing bodies insisting on the exclusive employment of Europeans with British qualifications in the higher appointments, which operates as a definite bar to the employment of the Anglo-Indian whatever his qualifications. We submit that since we provide the bulk of the pupils and more than half the funds, and there are eminent Anglo-Indian teachers available, we are entitled to a considerably larger share than we now have in the control and staffing of European schools, more particularly as it is the inalienable right of every people to fashion its education and mould its youth. We strongly resent such offensive resolutions as the one passed by the Standing Committee of the Government European Schools at Kurseong, excluding Anglo-Indian teachers from holding certain senior appointments and the continuance of the policy of deliberate exclusion of Anglo-Indians from the senior posts in schools like the La Martiniere College, Calcutta, St. Paul's School, Darjeeling, and others.

If results are any criterion of the efficiency of Anglo-Indian teachers, there are European schools, such as Christ's Church School, Jubbulpore, and Philander Smith's College, Naini Tal, entirely staffed by Anglo-Indian teachers whose results compare very favourably with schools under European management.

Be it said to the credit of the Roman Catholic Educational Institutions, to whom the Anglo-Indian Community owes a deep debt of gratitude, that these institutions have for years adopted the policy of freely recruiting into their orders men and women from the Domiciled Community, many of whom have occupied the highest positions in some of the leading educational institutions in India. The splendid work done by those Anglo-Indian teachers, who have been entirely trained and qualified in India, is proof enough that Anglo-Indians are fitted for the highest positions in European schools.

Here it should be mentioned that the Director of Public Instruction, Bengal, held a meeting of Headmasters of European schools in Bengal in January 1928, when, after a full and frank discussion, the following resolution was passed unanimously :—

> That this Conference is of the opinion that whenever appointments to the higher-paid posts in the European schools system in Bengal are being made, the claims of men and women of the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Communities, qualified in India or in England, should be considered before recruitment from England is definitely decided upon, and that the Department of Education and Governing Bodies of Schools be asked to reconsider their recruitment policy in the light of the recommendation.

Our own recommendation is that the recruitment from England of European teachers into the staffs of European schools should be stopped. The only schools to which it can be rigidly applied are the 14 schools maintained by Government. It is not Government schools alone, however, that we wish to affect; we desire that the spirit of our recommendation should also be observed by all schools, except such institutions as are governed by religious bodies where the staffs are employed on nominal salaries. We realise the difficulty in enforcing such a rule on educational institutions over which the Government has no direct control, but it would probably bring about the desired result if Government made grants-in-aid conditional on the more liberal appointment of suitably qualified Anglo-Indian teachers in sufficient numbers.

The Community has a right to greater participation in the management of European schools, and we desire that there should be an adequate number of Anglo-Indians on the Managing Committee of every European School in India.

We may here observe that the salaries now offered to imported European teachers, though comparatively large, are not large enough to attract men of superior attainments, although they would suffice to secure to education the best Anglo-Indian talent serving their community in their own country.

Our recommendation does not amount to the sudden displacement of the present European teachers, but we aim at it materialising within the next ten to fifteen years.

Financial Aid from Government.—We have so far only dealt with the readjustments that appear to be called for by our special educational needs. There is, however, a constructive scheme involving a special grant from Government which we believe will effectively and finally solve the problem of European education. As already indicated, we are doing everything in our power to improve European education on a basis of self-help. One of the chief activities of our communal organisations is to help children of the community with educational scholarships, and to-day we, a poor community, are ourselves giving over 100 such scholarships. We have established Higher Education Funds which are yearly increasing. We are prepared to submit to an Education Cess. There are a considerable number of parents to-day living lives of almost penury to be able to educate their children in England to qualify for employment in the higher services and professions. But we are a poor community and we fear too heavy a sacrifice in the cause of education might result in overtaxing our resources and defeat its own ends. When it is remembered that our community is not commanding the wages of former years and that the field of its employment is becoming more and more restricted, while the Provincial grants to European education have been reduced, it will be seen that this is not an imaginary fear.

In consideration of our peculiar difficulties and our great services to the revenue-bearing departments of the Government of India, we feel we should be given a reasonable chance of answering the call of the Reforms, and we might here point out that we are in no way responsible for this inasmuch as our education has been devised for and imposed on us by Government. The system has always made it difficult for the community to enter Indian Universities and it has given us qualifications which to-day are not in demand. A literate knowledge of the vernacular, so essential in a country like India, has never found its proper place in the curricula of our schools and has, in consequence, been badly neglected. Yet we are expected to-day to compete on equal terms with the Indian for the I.C.S. Competitive Examination in which an Indian vernacular forms one of the compulsory subjects (Honours Standard). Again, in the Indian Medical Department a knowledge of Physics and Chemistry is demanded from candidates, and yet there are very few European schools that possess laboratories, and even of these only a few are up to date. The present position of the education of the community, due to the action of Government, can only be corrected by intensive Government aid to the higher education of the Community, and we would suggest for the sympathetic consideration of the Commission that the Government of India do capitalise a sum of at least 50 lakhs for a period of thirty years, the interest from which to be utilised as scholarships and stipends for Anglo-Indian boys and girls to secure higher education, both academic and vocational, in India and Europe, and this without prejudice to the customary grants-in-aid. This demand may be novel, but we stand in need of special help from Government on such a scale as will undo the wrong done us by the imposition of a system of education which has rendered us incapable of competing with our fellow-subjects for admission into the Superior Public Services. We believe that, with this degree of financial aid, we will soon be able to make up for the backward condition of our higher education and enter into open competition with the other communities of India on terms of equality—all we ask is to be helped till we are able to stand on our own feet.

CONSTITUTION.

Since our problem is more an economic than a political one, we do not feel called upon to touch on constitutional issues, beyond indicating the directions in which they affect our special problems. We trust, however, that a brief statement of our preferences and persuasions may not be without its usefulness.

We assume the deliberations of the Commission will centre round the existing machinery and that any advance that may be made will be along lines of Western democratic institutions. On this assumption we would submit that the most reasonable development would appear to be in the direction of a Federated India, with the delegation of fuller powers to the Provinces under the Governors, and the reservation of important and vital issues under the control of the Governor-General in Council. We are not able to subscribe to the popular belief that democratic institutions necessarily require the entire control of the Executive by the Legislature. This we consider to be a complete misconception of the functions of Government, and we submit that, even in so-called democratic countries like Great Britain and America, the Executive tends to gain in power. It is worth noting in this connection that when the constitution of the United States was drawn up, whereas the President was "given" powers, the powers of Congress were "limited." No Government that is at the mercy of the Legislature can hope to do good work. If Government is to be efficient as well as equitable, representative bodies must be amenable to the guidance of the Executive, and our first care should be the devising of a stable ministry and a secure Civil Service.

The fundamental responsibility of any Government must be the administration of justice and the maintenance of law and order, for security comes before progress, and no constitution is worthy of respect that neglects a practical necessity like "self-defence" in the pursuit of an ideal like "self-government." However necessary it may be to relax the too rigid control of the Executive, such control must remain the pivotal point round which all reforms revolve. In a vast and heterogeneous country like India, so steeped in racial prejudice and wedded to communal strife, and at the same time so impotent to maintain law and order or to defend its frontiers or sea coast, it is more than necessary to create a sense of solidarity by the concentration of responsibility and directing power. This must continue until the acerbities of communal rivalry are reconciled in the performance of common tasks for the good of a united India and the interests of the dumb millions of this country can be adequately represented by the Indian politician.

The next indispensable requisite of good government is the protection of minorities, a protection which is provided for in the constitutions of all new European States. Indeed, the League of Nations stands as a guarantor for what are called the "Minority Clauses." The desire of Indians to assimilate Western methods of government does not entitle them to ignore the welfare of any section of the population. When Indian politicians claim the right to make mistakes, we are entitled to ask whether we have not an equal right to be protected from the consequences of such mistakes.

The attitude of the community is not opposed to the progressive realisation of self-government for India within the Empire, but our fears are that, until Indians find themselves equal to this great responsibility, communal jealousy, religious prejudices, lack of education in the masses and inexperience of the new regime, will render the position of a minority extremely precarious in the absence of measures designed for its protection. This apprehension is present not only to Anglo-Indians, but also to all other minority communities in India, though in the case of the Anglo-Indian, in view of his connection with the dominant power, the fear is accentuated by the consciousness of popular resentment. To us, therefore, even more than to other minority communities, constitutional checks and safeguards are a vital necessity. If we wish for adequate representation in popular bodies, it is primarily because we desire to be able to defend ourselves on the lower rungs of the ladder of government. If we seek representation in the second chambers, it is because we want to sway the second thoughts of our fellow-citizens. Our desire is to influence Indian opinion at every stage. At the same time it should be noted that the Anglo-Indian community is impelled, not only by the desire to protect its interests, but also by a sincere wish to serve a larger purpose in the body politic of India.

Central Legislature.—We consider that the present powers of the Governor-General should be retained.

Provincial Councils.—The present system is unworkable, in that it gives the Legislature power to obstruct without any effective power of performance, thus stimulating a sense of irresponsibility. To that extent it also handicaps the Government, who, instead of having to deal with a legitimate opposition pledged to carry out its own programme in the alternative, are confronted with a body of irresponsible critics such as has been, unfortunately, witnessed in various Legislatures.

Dyarchy.—The fundamental defect in the system of dyarchy is the lack of corporate responsibility. We are of opinion that the solution would mainly lie in :—

(1) The freedom of Ministers from the control of the Executive Council, though not from that of the Governor;

(2) The grant of equal status to the Ministers and Members of the Executive Council and of security of tenure for a stated period of service;

(3) The allocation of separate finances for Transferred Subjects;

(4) The appointment of an additional Minister in charge of the finances of the Transferred Subjects; and

(5) The creation of a convention of collective responsibility among the Ministers, with one of their number as Chief.

Residuary Powers.—If the veto of the Viceroy and Governors cannot be defended as an instrument of Government, the necessity for its retention cannot be questioned, and there are ample precedents in other countries that may be adduced in support of this claim. We admit the exercise of the veto should be infrequent and unobtrusive, and it is a realisation of this fact that leads us to recommend the establishment of Second Chambers to be interposed between the Governor and the popular House. We are emphatically of opinion that the residuary powers of the Viceroy and Governors should be retained; in fact, the delegation of more responsibility to popular bodies would appear to call for increased powers in such respect, and we would urge that in the Instrument of Instructions the Governor-General and the various Governors be specifically enjoined, particularly in regard to the Anglo-Indian community, to use their powers of certification or veto unhesitatingly in instances of obvious injustice or hardship.

Second Chambers—If greater autonomy is given to the Provinces, the necessity for Second Chambers becomes more pressing. In fact the Anglo-Indian community would view with considerable satisfaction the formation of such a body into which might be gathered persons who are eminent by their ability, knowledge or service to the country. Provided these Second Chambers are properly constituted, they would be an effectual brake to impetuous and irresponsible legislation, which would make for less friction between the Legislatures and the Governor. As Second Chambers may in time become the final Court of Appeal for disregarded minorities, their constitution should be strictly on a communal basis, and the Anglo-Indian Community should not go unrepresented on them. We attach special importance to the opportunity they would provide for a calmer and saner deliberation of communal issues, and contend that none but an Anglo-Indian could do justice to the case of the community at the critical stage of its passage through the Second Chambers.

Franchise.—It is generally agreed that the extension of the franchise to people not capable of using their votes with any sense of discrimination is always unsafe, a fact that must be kept prominently in mind when dealing with India, where illiteracy is so widespread and experience of Western systems of Government so limited. It is notorious that the average voter, even when he is keen and incorruptible, is incapable of appreciating the value of administrative or legislative skill, and to give a preponderating voice in public affairs to an uninformed electorate by widening the suffrage in an excessively illiterate country would be fraught with grave danger, for the more ignorant the masses are, the more they tend to fall under the sway of a few designing men and dominant personalities.

So far as the Anglo-Indian community is concerned, it is a cent per cent literate population, with a sense of responsibility which compares favourably with that of any Western community. And our submissions are that, in respect of the Provinces, adult suffrage on the basis of literacy may be extended safely to Anglo-Indians, and, in respect of the Legislative Assembly, payment of rates and taxes (including income tax) direct or indirect.

Considering, also, the important role Anglo-Indian women play, we recommend the extension of the franchise to them on the same basis as in the case of men in those Provinces, where the franchise has not so far been extended to women, as well as in the Central Legislatures. There should also be no bar to their election to seats on the various Legislative bodies. The point we here desire to emphasise is that the women, of any one community in India, if sufficiently advanced and able to undertake such work as awaits them in the Legislatures, should not be penalised because the women of other communities may be less advanced.

In concluding our submissions on the franchise, we would state, as a principle, that, in any general extension of the Indian franchise, a commensurate extension in the case of the Anglo-Indian community is sufficiently indicated.

Electorates.—The conditions that prevail at present in India make communal electorates imperative. Communal jealousies and religious prejudices are too pronounced to be safely ignored. We realise that when caste barriers are broken down and the peoples of India begin to show evidence of co-operation and to disassociate religion from politics and develop a national sense as a result of participation in common labours in the interests of a united India, it will be time to consider seriously the institution of common electorates. In the meantime, in the absence of any sense of responsibility, both to the electors and the Legislature, it would be unsafe to trust the interests of the minority communities to a hostile majority. We realise there is a disadvantage in the communal system, in that it inclines the representative to subordinate the interests of the country at large to those of his own constituency, but there is no alternative that is not attended with far more serious drawbacks under present conditions in India.

Election arrangements, from the point of view of the Anglo-Indian community, leave much to be desired. Owing to the widely scattered distribution of the community in India and the size of the Provinces, it is impossible for a representative to keep in close touch with every part of his constituency. A large proportion of the community who are employed in transport services or live in remote parts of the country find it difficult to attend at polling booths, and a very considerable number of our electors are lost to us in this way. We would therefore suggest that some method of voting through the post be instituted, with adequate safeguards against irregularities and malpractices; that more polling stations be provided; and that more days be given for the registration of votes.

The only figures we have to guide us at present are those given in the Government Census Report which we decline to accept, because we have good reason for believing that at least 50 per cent. of those who return themselves as Europeans are in fact Anglo-Indians. Owing to similarity in names it is always difficult to distinguish between Europeans and Anglo-Indians and many Anglo-Indians are therefore included in the European register thus depriving us of a considerable number of our votes. Although the inclusion of a name in the wrong electoral roll is open to challenge, it is well-nigh impossible to trace all such instances. This is a point on which the Anglo-Indian community feels strongly and the institution of measures calculated to correct the practice is essential.

MEMORANDA OF THE ANGLO-INDIAN AND DOMICILED EUROPEAN COMMUNITY OF INDIA. [Continued.

We desire to draw the attention of the Commission to the definition of a European as given in Schedule II of the Electoral Rules of the Legislative Councils which is as under:

"A European means any person of European descent in the male line, being a British subject and resident in British India, who either was born in, or, has a domicile in the United Kingdom, or, in any British possession, or, in any State in India, or, whose father was so born, or has, or had up to the date of the birth of the person in question such a domicile."

We would point out that liberally interpreted, this definition could be, taken to include almost the entire Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Community. As a result a large number of Anglo-Indians and Domiciled Europeans are borne on the European electoral roll. We consider that on principle all Anglo-Indians and Domiciled Europeans should be included in our constituency and that the definition of a European should be so modified as to exclude them. It may be argued that if a man has a legal right to claim his father's nationality, he should not be deprived of a similar civic or political right. But we submit that as Anglo-Indians and Domiciled Europeans are in certain matters indivisable and for economic purposes are classified together as Statutory Natives of India, and, as such, are occupying positions in Government reserved for Natives of India they should not be allowed to occupy a European status in the body politic of the country. We would instance the case of a German naturalised in England. An Englishman would not tolerate him securing a Britisher's economic rights while repudiating his political obligations. We would, therefore, futher suggest the constitutional remedy of making appointments of Anglo-Indians and Domiciled Europeans to posts reserved for Statutory Natives of India, conditional on their inclusion on the rolls of our constituency, which should be called the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Constituency and a suitable definition be formulated for it.

We also desire to emphasise the fact that we have suffered considerably from the imperfect, we should say obsolete, system of registration of those of our community who are entitled to a vote. Till 1926 the Income Tax Department of every Province furnished each electorate with a list of those who paid income tax and so considerably helped us to get into touch with our constituents. This was discontinued by order of the Government of India, though the order was suspended at the eleventh hour of the election held in 1926. We desire that the Income Tax Department continue to supply us with this information. Our complaint, however, is that the list maintained by the Income Tax Department is not complete and not kept up-to-date, especially with regard to Railways, Telegraphs, Customs and Mercantile services.

Another difficulty experienced by us is with regard to our constituents employed on Railways. When these men are recruited the custom is for the Railway Medical Officer to classify them according to what he thinks is their nationality, merely from their appearance and colour. In this way, hundreds of Anglo-Indians are to-day enlisted in Railways as Europeans, as this entitles them to a higher scale of pay and more liberal leave rules. At the 1926 election in many Railway Stations it was found that 50 to 60 per cent of Anglo-Indians, recognised members of our communal Associations, were classified as Europeans and borne on the European electoral roll. We suggest that all Railways should immediately call for a reclassification of such employees. Indeed, we would go further and suggest that the Government of India and the various Provincial Governments issue detail instructions to Heads of all Departments and Railways to see that none, but, those who are included in the Parliamentary Statute of 1870 Victoria 33, are employed as Statutory Natives of India.

Representation.—Communal representation is a necessity in a country where the lines of cleavage are so pronounced and where the ignorance of the electorates renders them liable to exploitation by the politician. While we recognise the need for making constitutional changes depends on general acquiescence so as to foster mutual trust, we consider the most careful adjustment is necessary where interests are so conflicting. Communal representation cannot safely be dispensed with in India for many years to come. In common with all minority communities we claim communal representation for the Domiciled Community. We cannot, owing to political and economic difficulties, safely allow our communal interests to be merged in any general scheme of representation. For this reason any system other than that based on communal grouping would result in our complete absorption, since, owing to our smaller and more distinctive grouping, we could never hope to secure the least measure of representation under any such arrangement. Such absorption, we fear, could never carry with it any prospect of sympathetic regard from the bulk of the Indian people. We, therefore, request that adequate communal representation be assured to us. Though numerically few, we are a larger community than the European and play no small part in the administration of the country. Furthermore, our economic interests are so insecure that we feel they can only be adequately represented by our own representatives.

If we take the Domiciled Community as a whole and postulate a cent per cent literacy, it forms nearly 3 per cent of the educated classes of India, which to-day only totals about 7 millions. The percentage would be much higher if those Indians possessing primary education only were excluded. On this score alone Anglo-Indians are entitled to better representation than they receive to-day.

Our present representation is as follows:—

Bengal Presidency	...	two elected seats.
Madras ,,	...	one ,, seat.
Burma ...	...	one ,, ,,
Bombay ...	...	one nominated seat.
Punjab ...	...	one ,, ,,
United Provinces	...	one ,, ,,
Central ,,	...	one ,, ,,
Bihar and Orissa	...	one ,, ,,

Central Government.—Assembly: No Anglo-Indian constituency. The Community is represented by a member nominated by the Governor-General.

Council of State: The Anglo-Indian has no seat on this body. He is included in the non-Muhammedan constituency and therefore the same franchise qualifications apply to him.

We are therefore in a worse position than the Sikh and Indian Christian Communities who are accorded representation on this body.

It is not possible, without knowing the exact composition and constitution of the future Provincial Legislative bodies, to say what the representation of the Anglo-Indian community should be, but, as a guide to the Commission, we indicate below what might be regarded as adequate, provided the present strengths of the various Legislatures are not increased. We submit that in view of its responsibility, education and economic importance, the community has a claim to the following minimum representation in the various Legislative Councils.

Bengal ...	...	4 elected members.
Madras ...	...	4 ,, ,,
Burma ...	...	4 ,, ,,
Bombay ...	...	3 ,, ,,
Punjab ...	...	2 ,, ,,
United Provinces	...	2 ,, ,,
Central Provinces	...	2 ,, ,,
Bihar and Orissa	...	2 ,, ,,
Assam ...	...	1 ,, ,,

In the major Provinces a larger number is indicated as the areas generally are too large to offer much opportunity to representatives for maintaining touch with their widely scattered constituents.

In the Legislative Assembly the Anglo-Indian community is at present represented by a single nominated member. We desire that our representatives be elected. We also realise that it entails a superhuman effort for a single person to keep in touch with a community widely dispersed as it is over India and Burma. Justice can only be done to the interests of the community by a weighty and influential representation. We suggest that the Anglo-Indian community be allowed to elect a representative to the Legislative Assembly from each of the following Provinces :

Bengal, Madras, Bombay, the United Provinces, Punjab and Burma, and that one additional member be nominated by Government to represent collectively all the other Provinces and those of our people resident in various large stations situated in special areas of Feudatory India as Ajmere, Hyderabad, and Kolar Gold Fields, where there are a few thousands of our people and in Bangalore where more than 15,000 of the Community reside and are, according to the present electoral rules denied, not only representation, but even a vote. While on the subject of representation it is necessary to explain that for purposes of election to the Legislative Assembly and the Council of State, Anglo-Indians are included in the non-Mahomedan electorate, but, whilst Indian candidates eagerly canvas Anglo-Indian votes and some of them have thereby secured their seats, when once elected their obligations to this section of their constituency are entirely overlooked. An Anglo-Indian has, of course, no chance of being elected in a non-Mahomedan Constituency.

In the Council of State we also plead for adequate representation.

Nomination.—We are in favour of a continuance of the nomination by Government of official and non-official members to all Legislative Councils and that they be given freedom of vote as otherwise they exercise no personal influence or power with the Indian members and are rightly considered the asphasic members of Government. With the progress of Indianisation the political prejudice against the official should disappear and a strong Indian Civil Service prove to be the most effective solution of our constitutional problems. We further consider that officials should be permitted to stand for election to all Legislatures.

Municipalities, District Boards and Union Boards.—The interests of the Anglo-Indian Community are generally not so great as to call for any special measures of protection or representation in the sphere of local Self-Government, except in the larger municipalities, such as those of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay and the larger towns in which the community is not adequately represented. However, it is not the intention or object of the Community to oppose the fulfilment of Indian aspirations and in these bodies where so much opportunity exists for real service to the country we would concede to them powers as wide as are consistent with the protection of vested interests and the preservation of Law and Order.

JURY RIGHTS.

The Code of Criminal Procedure as amended by the recommendations of the Racial Destinctions Committee gives to both the European and the mixed communities of America and also to the I. B. S. the right of trial by a jury composed of a majority of European and Americans in the case of the former and Indian British subjects in case of the latter. This equality of treatment was agreed upon as a compromise by the Committee because both Europeans and Indians felt that, if the ends of justice were to be fully served; it was imperative that the majority of a jury should consist of persons familiar with the manners, customs, habits, speech, etc., of the accused. Proof of legitimacy is not demanded from either the European, the Indian or the alien European. Yet such of the Domiciled Community as are included in the definition of E. B. subjects, sons of the soil and citizens of India, descendants of the Britisher, are treated in quite a different manner. Before these persons can claim a jury a majority of whom shall be European and American, the law demands that they produce documentary evidence in proof of (a) legitimacy (b) European descent in the male line, failing which they are tried by juries consisting of an Indian majority. In many families of this community, especially the offsprings of the pioneer Englishmen who came to India, such documentary evidence is impossible of production, and, yet, from other cumulative evidence, e.g., occupation, social status, military service, recognition by communal associations etc., it is undeniable that they are European British Subjects. There are other families descended from the early British Officers and soldiers who, when they came out to India to fight for King and Country, did not feel the need of bringing with them their birth certificates. Add to this the fact that many of the old Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European marriage and birth records were lost during the 1857 Mutiny, and that registration of births and marriages is a comparatively recent practice in India, and it will be obvious how difficult —nay, impossible—it is for most Domiciled Europeans and Anglo-Indians to produce the documentary evidence demanded by the Criminal Procedure Code. As the main and, possibly the only reason, for granting special majority juries to the European and the Indian was to afford the accused a trial by a jury of his own countrymen, best acquainted with his language, manners, customs, etc., and, as the Anglo-Indian Community, since its inception, is in these respects identical with the European, we submit, that for this reason, if for no other, an Anglo-Indian accused should be given a jury composed of a majority of members of his own Community and Europeans. To demand from the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European alone documentary proof of legitimacy and lineage, as a passport to justice, is we consider, not only unjust but insulting and cruel and, therefore, this demand should be deleted from the Section of the Criminal Procedure Code.

We wish here to emphatically state that it is not with any feelings of distrust towards our Indian brethren that we claim a special jury; our only desire is to place ourselves on a level with both Indians and Europeans and to obtain equal jury rights.

In establishing our claim to such equality of treatment it is not necessary to refer in detail to the recommendations of the Racial Distinctions' Committee or the anomalous positions it created by the introduction of certain important amendments into the Criminal Procedure Code in 1923. We desire however, to refer to only three sections of that Code. It will be noted that the Code contains no definitions of the terms "Indian British Subject," "European" (other than European British Subject), and "American." Nevertheless ample provision is made for every one of these classes. The term "European British Subject" is, however, defined in Section 4, Clause (1) of the Code as follows :—

> "(i) Any subject of His Majesty of European descent in the male line born, naturalised or domiciled in the British Islands or any Colony, or > (ii) Any subject of His Majesty who is the child or grandchild of any such person by legitimate descent."
>

This definition in its practical application is to our mind not only most unsatisfactory but very anomalous. The Anglo-Indian for practical purposes can come only under sub-clause (ii) of the above definition, but, in order to be accepted as such he is compelled to prove, by evidence (ample and conclusive), that he is the child or grandchild of any person named in sub-clause (i) and that "by legitimate descent." In no other part of the British Empire, nor, indeed, in any part of the civilised world, is anyone who claims the right of being tried by his Peers, ever asked to prove his legitimacy or "legitimate descent" from any particular class of person. We are also not aware of any Code of Criminal Procedure in any country, except India, that differentiates between legitimacy and illegitimacy in a criminal trial. It will be observed that in this section the European British Subject, as defined in sub-clause (i), is not called upon to prove his legitimacy in order to obtain what he considers to be, a fair jury trial.

Under the Code "Indian British Subjects," "Europeans" (other than European British Subjects) and "Americans" are given certain privileges, but, nowhere is the proof of legitimate descent required. We feel, therefore, that, as a bare measure of justice, the words "by legitimate descent" should either be deleted from this Section or that every member of every class which is accorded any special jury privilege under the Code should, likewise, be called upon to prove that he is of legitimate descent.

With reference to jury trials the Racial Distinctions Committee arrived at the following finding (Para. 25 of the Report):—

> "The same law as to the composition of the Jury shall apply to Indians as to Europeans; that is to say the majority of the jury, if the Indian accused so desires, shall consist of persons who are not Europeans or Americans. This is already the law in Sessions Court and Section 275 should be so amended as to make it apply to the High Court also."

Accordingly, by section 14 of the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 1923, both the European British Subject and the Indian British Subject were given the privilege of demanding that the majority of the jury shall be composed of Europeans or Americans for the former and Indian British Subjects for the latter, and, by clause (ii) of that section, this privilege was also extended to both Europeans (other than European British Subjects) and Americans; whereas, a British Subject of European descent is in a worse position than even an alien, unless he can prove that he is a European British Subject. Indeed the term American includes persons of any blood, European, American or African, or any mixture of the same, provided they are American citizens. In this connection it is necessary to emphasise the fact that, in order to claim this privilege, none of these alien classes are asked to prove legitimacy or "legitimate descent."

Provisions similar to the above are made for trials with the aid of Assessors for European British subjects, Indian British Subjects, Europeans (other than European British Subjects) and Americans in Section 284 (a) which were introduced into the Criminal Procedure Code by Section 16 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1923.

We have no desire to question the principle underlying these provisions, for, it is but right that the Indian should be tried by a jury the majority of whom are Indians and the European by a majority of whom are Europeans; but, it is quite possible also that an Indian may, in certain cases, prefer to be tried by a jury the majority of whom are Europeans.

We feel that if every accused were given a choice as to whether he preferred to be tried by a jury with an Indian majority or a European majority, it would not, in any way, prejudice the legal rights of anyone, while it would, at the same time, give the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Community the equal right of a choice of a jury a majority of whom shall be European or American. In order to equalise the position and place the Anglo-Indian on the same footing as other communities in India, as also to afford protection to Indians placed in positions of difficulty, we would suggest that the words "or Europeans as he may desire" be added to clause (i) of Section 257 and clause (i) of Section 284 (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code.

We would also like to point out that in accordance with the recommendations of paragraph 27 of the Racial Distinctions' Committee Report, a special procedure is prescribed by Chapter 33 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to be observed outside Presidency Towns, where the complainant and the accused are respectively European and Indian British Subjects or Indian and European British subjects or where it is expedient for the ends of justice that such a case should be tried under the provisions of that Chapter. We submit that this procedure not only overlooks the claims of Anglo-Indians and Domiciled Europeans as such, but, also omits to provide for cases where the conflict is, not between the European and the Indian British Subjects, but, between two communities, as has so often occurred recently in Hindu-Muslim riots; and, in this connection, it cannot be denied that the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Community is a distinctive community which is undoubtedly looked upon as such by both Europeans and Indians. We therefore feel that in all cases where a racial or communal conflict is involved, the accused, irrespective of his nationality or community, should be given the right of trial by a special procedure similar to the one in question.

In these circumstances we ask that—

(i) The words "by legitimate descent" in section 4, clause (i), sub-clause (ii) be deleted;

(ii) to Sections 275 clause (i) and Section 284 (a) clause (i) the following words be added "or Europeans as he may desire."

(iii) that Chapter 33 of the Criminal Procedure Code be so amended as to include cases arising out of racial conflict or communal antagonism.

SUMMARY.

In view of the peculiar position of our Community in India we have dealt, in the foregoing chapters, with our problems in some detail, we now summarise some of the salient features of our case.

Nature of our Demand.—We desire to stress first that, measured by their effect on the interests of the millions of India, our demands are negligible in extent and yet are of such consequence to our Community as to safeguard it from extinction. Because of our precarious position in India as a numerically insignificant community surrounded by teeming millions, who have in the past shown a marked hostility towards us, a claim for permanent protection perhaps would be as warranted as it would be justified by our past loyalty and service to Government and India. Nevertheless, we have endeavoured to approach our difficulties from a broader national outlook and have merely asked for a short period of protection to correct the disabilities of the faulty system of education imposed on us and to equip ourselves to take our place on equal terms with the other communities in India.

Status.—We accept and endorse the status that has been accorded to us of Statutory Natives of India; but, at the same time, we wish to be protected against the dangers of our indefinite position, which renders us liable to disinheritance on the score of being non-Indians for the purposes of Indianisation of the Services, and of being Indians for the purposes of enlistment into the Army.

Protection. In view of the fact that the economic position of our Community has been very seriously and prejudicially affected by the introduction of the Reforms and the progress of and misapplication of the policy of Indianisation, we urge that adequate safeguards be provided by statutory enactment for a stated period in the Provincial Civil Services, Provincial Judicial Service, Government of India and Provincial Government Secretariats, Salt, Forest, Survey, Police, and other such services.

We consider moreover that we have an ethical claim for many years to come on the Government, whatever form of constitution it may take, with regard to the Railways, Telegraphs and Customs, in view of the fact that these Departments have been practically built up and maintained since their inception by us, and because with the large number of our people employed in these services their displacement would seriously upset the whole economic organisation of the Community. We desire that adequate safeguards be provided in these Services and these facts be enacted in specific terms in the Statute that will be the outcome of the Simon Commission's Report.

We give below some of the particular recommendations in relation to the principal Services with which we are connected.

Railways :—(1) That the present number of Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European, lower and upper subordinates, be not reduced for a further period of 50 years.

(2) That owing to the manifest injustice consequent on the sudden change of policy in the matter of recruitment to the Superior Railway Services, which now demand a degree qualification, the I.A. or I.Sc., be accepted as a qualifying examination.

(3) That 15 per cent. of Superior Railway competitive appointments be reserved for nomination by the Government of India.

(4) That for the next 30 years at least special provision be made so that 50 per cent. of the 75 per cent. appointments in the Superior Services reserved for Indianisation be obtained by the promotion of approved Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European upper subordinates.

(5) That a certain number of Anglo-Indian officials or non-officials be appointed to every Selection Committee when subordinates are being selected.

(6) That any measure of protection afforded us be specifically included in any enactment that may be the outcome of the Indian Statutory Commission's report.

Telegraphs.—(1) We desire that the percentage of Anglo-Indians and Domiciled Europeans employed in certain sections of this Department be raised to the level of 66⅔ per cent. for a period of 25 years and that for the succeeding 25 years it should not be allowed to fall below 50 per cent. in those branches of the Service.

(2) In those Superior Service appointments to be recruited by open competitive examination 33⅓ per cent. be reserved for suitable members of the community by promotion from the subordinate ranks.

Customs.—That a fixed percentage of appointments for a period of 50 years be guaranteed to Anglo-Indians and Domiciled Europeans, viz., in the Preventive Branch 75 per cent. and in the Appraisers' Branch 50 per cent.

Postal Service.—That we be adequately employed in all branches of this service.

Indian Audit and Accounts Department.—(1) That Government should apply to the Principals and Headmasters of European Schools and Colleges for suitable candidates for the lower grades and, in this manner, remedy what is obviously a grievous wrong.

(2) That for the next 25 years, when we hope to be educationally fitted to run a level race with the Indian, and in addition to open competition, we suggest that 15 per cent. of the vacancies in the Indian Audit and Accounts Department be given to the community to be filled by nomination by Government and that Principals of Colleges be asked to submit the names of suitable students.

Police.—That we be more largely employed in a Department where employees without communal bias are of such a necessity in India to-day.

Indian Medical Department.—(1) That the I.M.D. be definitely classed as one of the Departments mentioned in Appendix XXVII Regulations for the Army in India.

(2) That Army Instructions (India) 286 and 287, as also 113¼, be made applicable in their entirety to the I.M.D. with equal retrospective effect.

(3) That the revised pension rates of the I.M.D. which have been sanctioned from 1.10.1927 be given with retrospective effect from the 1st October, 1925, as in the case of I.U.L.

(4) That, should the revised pension rates sanctioned to the I.U.L. from the 1st October, 1925, be given retrospective effect so as to include I.U.L. pensioners who retired on or after the 1st April, 1919, the same concession should be extended to I.M.D. pensioners who retired, or, who were in receipt of the present rates of pay on, or, after the 1st April, 1919.

(5) That the I.M.D. be granted a professional qualification or degree that is registrable in the United Kingdom as the present diploma is of no professional value outside the Department.

(6) That men in the I.M.D., especially those with a record of good service or with Indian degrees or British qualifications, should be allowed to enter the Civil Medical Services of all the Provinces and that Indianisation should not be allowed to prejudice their claim to such employment.

Army.—(1) That the formation of an Anglo-Indian Unit, Battery, or Signal Corps be sanctioned.

(2) That all the Ancillary Branches of the Army be thrown open to us.

(3) That we be granted 50 per cent. of commissions in the Auxiliary Force with a period of ten years.

Settlement Scheme.—That in view of our great services to the Empire and the closure of other avenues of employment to the Domiciled Community, Government do offer us special facilities for obtaining land on terms similar to those offered to Army men and others.

Education.—We desire that the British character of European Schools be protected as indicated in the Education section of our Memorandum. At the same time, in view of the hostile attitude of the Legislative Councils towards European Education and because of the diversity of codes and curricula which now prevails, we urge that European Education be made a Central non-votable subject, thus enabling our children to equip themselves for open competition with Indians in the Services.

We further suggest that a small Committee be appointed, on which the Community should be adequately represented, to tour the Provinces and make recommendations for the improvement and consolidation of European education.

We urge that recruitment from England of European teachers into the staffs of European schools be stopped. This does not refer to educational institutions governed by religious bodies where the staffs are employed on nominal salaries.

Finally, as a special measure, in view of our loyal services to the revenue-bearing services, and to enable the Community to make up for its backward condition in higher education and run a level race with Indians, so far as degrees are concerned, we recommend that Government do capitalise a sum of 50 lakhs for a period of at least 30 years, the interest of which be utilised as scholarships and endowments for Anglo-Indian boys and girls to secure, higher education, both academic and vocational, in India and abroad.

Constitution.—As one of the permanent communities of India, we affirm our loyal acceptance of, and support to, the Reforms, and our full sympathy with the progressive realisation of self-government on well-measured lines for India within the British Empire. We consider, however, that as security and fair play are the essentials of good government, the maintenance of law, order, justice and the rights of minorities should be protected from the caprice of the Legislature by being placed under the special care of the Governors and the Governor General.

With this proviso, we are in favour of the grant of greater powers to the Legislatures, as the present constitution is frankly unworkable, giving them as it does the right of obstruction without the power of performance. We consider, however, that Ministers, besides being freed from the control of the Executive should be protected from the wanton attacks of the Legislature and secured in their appointments for a stated period to enable them to carry out their programmes. They should further be encouraged to create a convention of responsibility by working together under a Chief.

The residuary powers of the Governors and the Governor General should, we consider, be retained, but Second Chambers should be established in all the Provinces to be interposed between the popular House and the Governor and as a check on irresponsible legislation. Communities and interests should be represented on these by nominated members; the Anglo-Indian Community having at least one nominated seat in each Province.

In view of the conflicting and heterogeneous interests of the peoples of India, we consider that communal electorates should continue, at least for the present, and until such time as a national consciousness is created through the sharing of common burdens.

In view of the illiteracy of the masses, we consider that the franchise should not be widened. At the same time, we suggest that for the Provincial Legislative Council, the basis of franchise for the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Community should be literacy; for the Legislative Assembly, the payment of rates and taxes, directly or indirectly. We are men also in favour of the extension of the franchise to women of the age of 21 and over and eligible for election to all Legislatures.

We urge that the Anglo-Indian Community be given 4 elected seats in the Legislative Councils of Bengal, Madras, and Burma, 3 elected seats in Bombay, 2 in the United Provinces, the Punjab and the Central Provinces, 2 in Bihar and Orissa and one in Assam, and that the Community be represented in the Legislative Assembly by an elected member of the community from each of the 6 major Provinces," the remaining Provinces being represented by a nominated member.

Further, that Municipalities, District Boards and Union Boards be given powers as wide as are consistent with the protection of vested interests and the preservation of Law and Order.

We urge that every British subject in India should have the right to choose whether he will be tried by an European or an Indian Jury, and that the Law be altered accordingly.

We also consider that Staff Selection Boards should be formed in every Province to deal with appointments to Provincial Services with a representative of the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Community on each body, and that a member of the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Community should be appointed to the Public Services Commission.

CONCLUSION.

(1) For the information and guidance of the Commission we desire to state that the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Conference of India at its final session on May 5th, 1928, recommended unanimously "that Col. Gidney, M.L.A., I.M.S. (retired), represent the case of the community before the Joint Parliamentary Committee when it meets in London and that he be given powers to associate with him, if necessary, one or two members."

(2) We desire to be granted the privilege of supplementing this Memorandum by oral evidence, in camera if required.

(3) The Conference of the Community in India authorised the Executive Committee to select persons to give oral evidence before the Commission on behalf of the Community. The names and addresses of these witnesses will be submitted at a later date.

* * * * * * * * * *

APPENDIX.

Statement showing the differences between Pay and Allowance, and Pensions, drawn by the Indian Medical Department and the Indian Unattached List.

1	2	3	4	5	6		7		8		9		10		11		12		13
ITEMS.	Corporals.	Sergeants.	Staff Sergeants.	Staff Q.M.S's.	Sub-Conductors.		Conductors.		Lieutenants.		Captains.		Majors.		Majors after 8 Years.		Lieut.-Colonels.		REMARKS.
					I.M.D.	I.U.L.	I.M.D.	I.U.L.	I.M.D.	I.U.L.	I.M.D.	I.U.L.	I.M.D.	I.U.L.	I.M.D.	I.U.L.	I.M.D.	I.U.L.
	M. UM.	M. UM.	M. UM.	M. UM.	M. UM.	M. UM.	M. UM.	M. UM.	M. UM.	M. UM.	M. UM.	M. UM.	M. UM.	M. UM.	M. UM.	M. UM.	M. UM.	M. UM.
A—Pay of Rank	155/- 155/-	200/- 200/-	250/- 255/-	275/- 275-	200 on 1st Apl. Rs. 275 after 7 yrs.	Rs. 340 after 8 yrs.	Rs. 350 after 12 yrs. Rs. 400 after 17 yrs. Rs. 450 after 20 yrs. for those in service before 1908.	Rs. 370 after 14 years.	500/- 500/-	560/- 560/-	650/- 650/-	650/- 650/-	700/- 700/-	710/- 710/-	No increase	840/- 840/-	Rank not sanctioned.	Three sanctioned.	1. An I.U.L. Corpl. gets more than I.M.D. Warrant Officer on first appointment, vide Cols. 2 and 6. 2. An I.U.L. Major with over 8 years' service gets Rs. 400 more than an I.M. Major, plus E.H. and I.
B—Indian Army Allowance.	10 10	20 20	30 30	35 35	Nil	40 40	Nil	50 50	Nil	50 50	Nil	60 60	Nil	70 70	Nil	80 80		80 30	3. No Lieut. Colonels allotted to I.M.D.
C—Lodging Allowance.	Free quarters.	Free quarters.	Free quarters.	Free quarters.	Free quarters or Rs. 20 in lieu.	Free quarters.	Free quarters or Rs. 30 in lieu.	Free quarters.	Free quarters or Rs. 50 in lieu.	50 25	Free quarters or Rs. 50 in lieu.	70 35	Free quarters or Rs. 50 in lieu.	90 45	Free quarters or Rs. 50 in lieu.	100 50	—	100 50
D—Marriage Allowance.	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	No	55	No	90	No	80	No	80	No	80
E—Separation Allowance.	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	No	55	No	55	No	Rs. 65 to 90	No	90 after 15 yrs.	No	100
F—Outfit Allowance.	Free uniform.	Free uniform.	Free uniform.	Free uniform.	At own expense.	Clothing allowance.	At own expense.	Clothing allowance.	At own expense.	£55 on 1st commission	At own expense.	At own expense.	At own expense.	At own expense.	At own expense.	At own expense.	—	—
G—Clothing Allowance.	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
H—Messing Allowance.	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	—	—
I—Free Fuel and Light.	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	—	—
J—Free Conservancy.	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
K—Staffing and Washing Allowance.	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	4. Not for I.M.D.
L—Free Passage to Hills.	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
M—Educational Training Grant.	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	No	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
N — Free Hot Weather Establishment.	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
O—Rations or Money in lieu.	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	—	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	—	—	5. I.M.D. revised pensions held back 2 yrs.
P—Free Education, Children between 6 and 14 years.	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Q—Pensions ...	N.C.O.'s not eligible for I.U.L. Pensions.				Revised pensions from 1.10.27.	Revised pensions plus "Indian element" from 1.10.25			See preceding Column 6 for dates of sanction of I.M.D. and I.U.L. pensions.
TOTALS ...	Rs. 165 p.m. + B to P.	Rs. 220 p.m. + B to P.	Rs. 280 p.m. + B to P.	Rs. 310 p.m. + B to P.	Rs. 200 p.m. + C or free quarters.	Rs. 380 p.m. + C to P.	Rs. 350-400 450 p.m. + C or free quarters.	Rs. 420 p.m. + C to P.	Rs. 500 p.m. + C or free quarters.	Rs. 715 p.m. + E.F.H.I. and O.	Rs. 605 p.m. + C or free quarters.	Rs. 825 p.m. + E.H. I. & O.	Rs. 700 p.m. C or free quarters.	Rs. 950 p.m. + E.H. I. & O.	No increase	Rs. 1100 p.m. + E.H. I. & O.	Rank not sanctioned.	As in Col. 11 + maximum Rs. 110 p.m. separation allowance.

SUPPLEMENTARY NOTE ON EUROPEAN EDUCATION.

There is no doubt that the views expressed in the note on European Education, as extracted from the Anglo-Indian Memorandum submitted to the Indian Statutory Commission, were bound to be opposed by European teachers in European Schools in India. It was never expected that every European teacher would agree with the demand to give Anglo-Indians a larger participation both in the training of their scholars in the higher posts as also in the administration of European Schools. Reason seldom, if ever, makes a strong appeal when self-interest is concerned. It is, therefore, not surprising to find certain European Headmasters of European Schools, as also Mr. Wordsworth, an ex-member of the Indian Educational Service, giving evidence before your Committee on this point of a critically disparaging nature. I do not wish to question the very dubious authority upon which Mr. Wordsworth claims the right to speak as he did, nor ask him to produce those Anglo-Indian parents whom he said would object to Anglo-Indian teachers training their children, but I take the liberty of quoting a few additional facts in support of the claim made by the community in favour of Anglo-Indian teachers being appointed to most of the higher posts in European Schools.

Comparisons are, I know odious, but if they are based on facts, they are not only very informative and instructive, but often necessary to disprove long cherished opinions and beliefs such as were expressed by Mr. Wordsworth in his comparison between European and Anglo-Indian masters and the wishes of Anglo-Indian parents. In refutation of his statement, I will draw a comparison between two schools only, although I could quote a good many others.

La Martiniere College and St. James' School, Calcutta.

La Martiniere, Calcutta, has a teaching staff of seven European masters imported from England, the highest paid receives a salary of about Rs. 1,200/- and the lowest paid receives, I believe Rs. 550/- per mensem; two Anglo-Indian masters drawing Rs. 480/- and Rs. 340/- respectively and two lady teachers drawing Rs. 250/- and Rs. 200/- per mensem. The total cost of the teaching staff comes up to nearly a lakh of rupees per annum. This school has been through many financial crises, but, it is to-day well off owing to the munificent gift of an ex-American pupil, the late Sir Paul Chater. In the days of its financial stress the Anglo-Indian teachers did most of the work and did it well and were considered fit and worthy of employment. Since it received this bequest however from Sir Paul Chater, Anglo-Indian teachers have been replaced by Europeans and to-day there are only two Anglo-Indian masters as compared with seven Europeans.

A few years ago, the total number of students on the rolls of this School was about 350. To-day, I believe there are about 220 and out of this number about 160 are Anglo-Indians, of which about 50 per cent. are in the junior and kindergarten classes, the latter under lady teachers, which means that the teaching of about 120 boys who are in the middle and upper classes, is done by seven European and two Anglo-Indian teachers at an annual cost of over Rs. 75,000/-. I am given to understand, I speak subject to correction, that the nationalities of the children attending the School are 15 to 20 per cent. Armenians, 0·75 per cent. Chinese (a fact which, I hear, is in direct opposition to the will of General Claude Martin), 5 per cent. Europeans and the rest Anglo-Indians. The Scholars are either foundationers, demi-foundationers, De Souza Scholarship holders, and Thadius Scholarship holders. I mention these details to show the Committee that although this School has a teaching staff of seven imported Europeans the number of students has declined considerably within the past few years, a period which, I believe, I am right in saying, synchronises with the increase in the European teaching staff. The various firms employ them as clerks and subordinate assistants—in short, they enter a calling in life that tends to kill all initiative, makes of them nothing else but automatons, and causes them to live their entire life in an atmosphere of utter subordination. I ask are European teachers on high salaries a real necessity for a School that, for the most part, trains its boys for nothing better than clerical employment in mercantile firms, while the School examination results are not better than those of the Roman Catholic Colleges and Convents in Calcutta.

I shall now deal with St. James' School, Calcutta. The entire staff in this School from the Headmaster downwards is Anglo-Indian; the Headmaster gets a lower salary than the most junior "Anglo-Indian" master in La Martiniere. A few years ago, the School had on its rolls about 150 students. To-day it has a total of over 600, and not one of the masters is an imported Englishman. Moreover, the fact that there is nothing to choose between the educational results of these two Schools and the steadily growing attendance at St. James', should certainly go to prove:

(1) That Anglo-Indian parents do not show any predilection for Schools where European masters are in the majority;

(2) That the popularity and growth of a School does not depend on having Europeans occupying senior positions on the teaching staff;

(3) That Anglo-Indian teachers are capable of filling the higher posts in any European School in this country as efficiently, if not better, than many imported European teachers;

(4) That European Education can be as efficiently and certainly more economically administered by a larger employment of qualified Anglo-Indians in the senior posts of our European Schools in India;

(5) That it is unnecessary, except for a very few specialistic appointments, to import European teachers from England, as the custom merely tends to inflate the already excessive cost of European education and which has to be borne by parents of an impoverished community; and

(6) That with the cost of European Education lowered a larger percentage of our children will be enabled to go in for higher education.

I would here also refer to the various Roman Catholic institutions in which many Anglo-Indians and Domiciled Europeans have held positions of Rectors, Principals, and Mother-Superiors, Educationists who have never left the shores of India, nor qualified outside of India, and yet have been the direct means of obtaining educational results that have rarely been equalled by other European Schools, whose pet creed seems to be that none but Europeans with English degrees are capable of holding senior posts or being Principals of European Schools, but, which literally translated means "No coloured person need apply, and if he is employed it must be on a lower salary." I would also draw your attention to the fact that Christ Church High School, Jubbulpore, and Philander Smith College, Naini Tal, two of the finest European Schools in India, have yearly to refuse admission to many students for want of accommodation, and both Principals and Staffs of these Schools are members of the Domiciled Community.

As a community we, therefore, maintain the right to train our own children and refuse to support the claims of superiority made by European educationists to-day, who, with all respect and gratitude for their past services, we submit are incapable of understanding the psychology of our children, while it cannot be denied that the inferiority complex is thus early developed in their minds, an inferiority which unfortunately governs most of their lives and leaves them content to work out their salvation in subordinate employment, barren of ambition to succeed in the Superior Services.

I venture this comparison to the members of the Education Committee in support of the demand made by the community in its Memorandum, and in refutation of the evidence given by Mr. Wordsworth and Mr. Holmes, Headmaster, La Martiniere, Calcutta, and others. It was therefore we demanded in our Memorandum a larger proportion of employment of Anglo-Indian teachers in European Schools.

The Appointment of an adequate number of Anglo Indians, at least 50 per cent., on the Governing Bodies of all European Schools.

Since making this demand, I have come to know that it has, in a large measure, the support of His Excellency Sir Malcolm Hailey, at present Governor of the United Provinces. In this connection, I would instance the firm attitude he adopted in Bishop Cotton School, Simla (another institution that has studiously ostracised Anglo-Indians from its higher staff) supported no doubt by that able and just D.P.I., Sir George Anderson, when there was a disagreement between him and the then Governing Body who resigned en masse and he (Sir Malcolm Hailey) appointed three members of the Domiciled Community on it. I would also instance the appointment of two members of the Domiciled Community, Mr. Prince and Mr. Percy, to the Vice-Principalship and Headmastership of one of the biggest and best European Schools in India, of which every Anglo-Indian is proud—the Lawrence School, Ghora Gali.

The Martiniere in Calcutta has not got a single Anglo-Indian on its Governing Body, and as this body has the giving of appointments it is not unnatural that an Anglo-Indian applicant stands very little, if any, chance of being selected for any of the higher teaching posts.

The personnel of the senior Governing Body I contend should be of men with a grasp and knowledge of the educational needs of the community which it is the purpose of the School to serve. Of what use are the Member in charge of Education on the Viceroy's Council, the Mayor of Calcutta and the Advocate General of Bengal, etc., all of whom are Indians, as members of this body? And yet, these very gentlemen are members ex-officio, though, as non-Christians they do not function. This body, which was constituted when Calcutta was the Capital of India, is to-day archaic and needs to be thoroughly overhauled.

In the Martiniere, Lucknow, I understand that the President of the Local Anglo-Indian Association is one of the Governors, but this gentleman also represents the Europeans in the U.P. Legislative Council and was certainly not selected to serve on that body as an Anglo-Indian representative. Another Anglo-Indian, an official on the Railway, is also on that body, but he also was not selected as an Anglo-Indian, but as a representative of the railway, and so it happens that in this institution also in which almost 80 per cent. of the students are Anglo-Indians and Domiciled Europeans, there is not a single member of the Governing Body representing the interests of the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Community. No such monopoly exists in the Governing Body of any Indian School or College, and I ask why should it be allowed in European Schools?

Centralisation of European Education.

In addition to the reasons already given for this, I desire to submit certain questions put and answers given by me on this subject, when the Anglo-Indian Deputation appeared before the Indian Statutory Commission on the 26th November, 1928.

> "Rao Bahadur Rajah: I see from your Memorandum that you desire European Education to be made a Government of India Reserved non-votable subject. Why do you ask this?
>
> "Colonel Gidney: To obtain one unified educational curriculum for all European Schools in India, and which itself will need Central control. At present, owing to our singular setting, the community is scattered all over India and Burma and is not concentrated in a few large towns as are the Parsis. As I told the Chairman, 80 per cent. of the community are employed in the All-India Services, which exposes the parents of our children to frequent transfers, often from the North to the South, or East to the West of India, and, as to-day each Province has its own educational code and curriculum as also final examination, the education of our children is seriously handicapped, interrupted and disjointed. Moreover, our European Education grants have been steadily reduced by the various Provincial Governments and Legislatures, and for these reasons the future of European Education is very insecure in the Provinces and offers a very serious drawback to our children, who desire to undergo secondary and higher education. We feel we would obtain unification of codes and control as also security of our grants-in-aid if European Education were made a Central Government of India subject, non-votable, the same as is European Army Education connected with such schools as Sanawar, Lovedale, Mount Abu, Lawrence Asylum, Prince of Wales' School, Dehra Dun, etc., whose grants and control are under the Army Department Government of India, and unconnected with Provincial Governments. If Centralisation is possible with these Army European Schools and which, after all, are not in any way dissimilar to the other Schools, why not to all European Schools?
>
> "Education, I understand, is a reserved subject in the Province?—It is a reserved subject in the Provinces under the Governor in Council, but its grant is subject to the vote of the Legislature.
>
> "What are your objections to continuing that as at present?—One reason is this, that it is unfair to ask the Provincial ryot or villager to pay for my education. We contribute very little to Provincial revenues. We pay most to the Government of India in income-tax and Customs duties.
>
> "Chairman: Because you are mostly an urban community, you mean?—In that way, too; moreover, I am not of the proprietor classes, nor am I a cultivator, and I do not think the Provinces should pay for my education; it is not fair to expect this of them. Moreover, 80 per cent. of my people are employed in the All-India Services. The Army is an All-India Service and its education is controlled by the Government of India Army Department; the Ecclesiastical Department is also under the Government of India; Income Tax is also a Government of India Department; so also is the Customs; the only Department that is not under the Government of India and with which our community is closely concerned is European Education.
>
> "Rao Bahadur Rajah: Am I to understand that you pay largely to the Education Department?—From the Income Tax point of view and the super tax point of view, I think we pay a considerable amount of money to the exchequer of the Government of India.
>
> "And do you ask on that score for these 50 lakhs?—I have an additional reason. The Community has in the past rendered exclusive service to the Government of India, e.g., in the Customs Department, which has added thousands of crores of rupees to the Government of India exchequer. Then, again, the Domiciled Community constitutes two-thirds of the Indian Auxiliary Force and has formed the major part of all such previous Corps for the past 60 years. The Auxiliary Force is the second line of defence of the British Army in India. This is a purely volunteer force, though the Railway Battalions are conscribed. Nevertheless, we are a source of great economy to the military expenditure of India, for, to replace us in the Auxiliary Force at least 15 to 20 British Regiments would have to be added to the present strength of the British Army in India. We, therefore, in this manner, constitute an annual saving of over two crores of rupees to the Government of India and, in return, surely, it is not an unreasonable request for 50 lakhs to be capitalised for 30 years for a community that has done so much for India and its development, and who, to-day, voluntarily and so materially help in the defence of the country and whose future economic salvation depends so largely on adequate higher and vocational education. We have served India and the British Empire loyally and well; we are the descendants of those Britishers who made the Indian Empire; we helped those pioneers and as their issue we, who are being as it were, discarded in response to Indian clamour and aspirations, feel that we have a moral claim on England and India to this help in our hour of need."

I should like to add that Sir Abdul Kerim Ghuznavi, speaking on behalf of the Muslims of Bengal alone, asked for the sum of one crore of rupees annually for 10 years for Muslim Education.

In this connection, I would draw your special attention to the point raised when I asked why, if European (Army) Education has, without any difficulty or question by the Indian Legislature, been permitted to be a Central Government of India non-votable subject, since the introduction of the Reforms, the same could not be done with European (Civil) Education in the remaining Schools in India; for, after all, it cannot be denied that those so-called Army European Schools which are under Central Government control are subject to the same educational curricula and inspections, and they recruit from the same class of boys as do the Civil European Schools, the difference being that, in the former, a child has to claim some military connection before he is admitted, a connection that can be and is established by at least 50 per cent. of the Anglo-Indian community, who, in addition can claim this privilege by virtue of being children of members of the Auxiliary Force.

I should also like to draw your particular attention to another point in my answers where reference was made to the fact that, as 80 per cent. of the Domiciled Community (who supply more than 80 per cent. of the children that attend European Schools in India) are employed in Central Government and All-India Services and it should be the duty of the Central Government to control and administer the education of this 80 per cent. of the Domiciled Community, the same as it does its religious education, its income-tax, its dues to the Customs, &c.

I might also add that an additional reason for asking that European Education be made a Central Subject, provided it be non-votable, is because I am not one of those who entertain the belief that the Central Legislature has, during its life, shown a greater sense of responsibility than the Provincial Legislatures; on the contrary, the work of the Central Legislature for the past few years has more than proved the very opposite.

H. GIDNEY,
M.L.A., J.P., F.R.S. (E), Lt.-Col. I.M.S. (RD.).
President, A.I. & D.E. Conference.

CALCUTTA,
5th January, 1929.

THE SURVEY OF INDIA, CLASS II SERVICE.

This is one of the All-India Gazetted Services recruited in India, in which the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European community has played an important and abiding part, but whose interests in it are to-day so seriously threatened that, if unchecked will end within a few years in its total exclusion.

History.—The year 1878 might be said to be the date of the inspection of the Survey of India Department, although, previous to this there were in existence the Great Trigonometrical, Topographical and Revenue Surveys which were all loosely connected together. From that year till 1891 the Service was entirely Anglo-Indian. From 1891, other communities were eligible for recruitment in the proportion of 25 per cent. In the year 1895, the Department was re-organised, and, whereas, up to this date members of the service were eligible for advancement to any of the higher posts of the department, this re-organisation closed the door to higher appointments and confined the service within subordinate limits, beyond which there were no prospects. It was not till 1919, as a result of the Public Services Commission of 1912–14, that this grievance was partially removed by the reservation of 10 posts in the higher service (Class I) for promotion from the lower (Class II). On account of unequal recruitment and the consequent block of promotion, 90 per cent. of the members of Class II Service (predominantly Anglo-Indian), recruited prior to 1919, are faced with disheartening prospects, whereas those members joining after 1919 have brilliant prospects. In spite of representation nothing has been done to improve the condition. In 1919, the recruitment of communities other than Anglo-Indian was increased in proportion from 25 per cent. to 60 per cent. thereby decreasing the Anglo-Indian proportion from 75 per cent. to 40 per cent.; but, actually, up to date, the number of officers in the service recruited since 1919 includes only 27 per cent. of Anglo-Indians, instead of 40 per cent. Government is under the impression that, in view of the comparatively liberal number of posts in the higher service thrown open to the Class II service, this service has been well treated; but, it is apparent that when the brighter prospects materialise the Anglo-Indian Community will be in a pronounced minority—the Community that has laid the foundations of the department and helped to build it up.

DEMANDS.—We, therefore, respectfully desire :—

(i) that a generous measure of relief be afforded to men who joined the service prior to 1919.

(ii) that the proportion of 40 per cent. in the recruitment of Anglo-Indians be maintained.

* * * * * * * * * *

Memorandum from

ANGLO-INDIAN AND DOMICILED EUROPEAN ASSOCIATION, ALL-INDIA AND BURMA.

I beg to place the following points for the consideration of Sir John Simon and the Indian Statutory Commission when they visit Bangalore. In this connection, I desire to draw your attention to page 299 of the Memorandum of the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Community of India. The matter refers to the town of Bangalore which is a British settlement under political control. The Anglo-Indian population of this town is larger than any other city in India and approximates to over 15,000. Most of these are retired Government pensioners, the majority of whom have held high Government posts. They are house-owners and are in every way qualified to vote but, being in a political area, not one of them enjoys the privilege of a vote and the community is thereby deprived of a very large number of votes—especially a very influential section of the community. Besides there are some of the best European Schools in this town. My request is that in the new constitution members of the Anglo-Indian community in the town of Bangalore be accorded the privilege of a vote.

DELHI.

Dated 26th November, 1928.

PRESENT :

ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION AND OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE (EXCEPT SIR ZULFIQAR ALI KHAN).

Deputation of ANGLO-INDIAN AND DOMICILED EUROPEAN ASSOCIATION.

The Deputation consisted of:—

Lt.-Col. H. Gidney, M.L.A., Calcutta.
Mr. L. T. Maguire, M.L.C., Calcutta.
Rev. W. A. Hobson, Madras.
Mr. C. S. Cameron, Calcutta.
Mr. E. T. McCluskie, M.L.C., Calcutta.
Rev. P. E. Curtis, Agra.
Rev. G. C. Rogers, M.A., Jubbulpore.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

3. Chairman : The first thing which strikes me about the Memorandum is this. This is a constitutional conference. It is not directly concerned with the precise form of the legislation or of the executive action which is taken by the legislative and executive authorities here, either in the Central Government or in the provinces. The primary concern of the Conference is with the constitutional structure of British India, both at the centre and in the provinces, and therefore, though it is very important for us to appreciate what are the points made in this Memorandum by way of complaint and grievances, and so on, we are more immediately concerned with the question of the constitutional remedies which you would propose. If I may put the thing in another way, it is not a bad test for the purpose of deciding what is most important for the Conference, to consider whether the witnesses who come before us are suggesting that the Government of India Act should be amended, or that the Rules made under it should be altered, in the interests, for example, of the Anglo-Indian community; and, therefore, I would draw a distinction in this memorandum between the matter it contains down to about page 296, which is a most valuable compendium of a large mass of facts and statistics and matters of complaint, and the part of it which begins on page 296, headed " Constitution," which is followed with some quite specific proposals for alteration in the representation, for example, of the community in the different legislatures, and so forth. You see what I mean ?—I do, sir.

4. May I just ask one or two questions about the earlier part, and then I will pass at once to the latter part, because that is the part about which we shall need, in the end, your special help. Will you tell me this. Where does one find, in the first place, in the statute book the expression " statutory native of India " ?—There is no such expression in the statute book. The expression " statutory native of India," has been applied to the classification given to us as natives of India by statute.

5. Where do we find that—the classification of the Anglo-Indian community as " natives of India " ? —In Parliamentary Statute Vic. 33, 1870.

6. You mean the Imperial Act ?—Yes.

7. Is it in the Naturalisation Act ?—I am not sure of that, but it is stated there that we are natives of India, and we are entitled to employment the same as every other class of Indian.

Chairman : That evidently is not the Naturalisation Act.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

8. Chairman : If you will turn to page 274 of your document, you quote there from the answer to a question in the House of Commons : " For purposes of employment under Government and inclusion in schemes of Indianisation, members of the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Community are Statutory Natives of India. For purposes of education and internal security, their status, in so far as it admits of definition, approximates to that of European British Subjects." And you tell me that the phrase " statutory natives of India " refers really to a definition to be found in the Imperial Act of 1870 ?—That is so.

9. Then at the bottom of the page, after pointing out that owing to this double aspect given to your community by these different points of view, there is a tendency, instead of getting the benefit of both aspects, for your community rather to be alternately prejudiced : is not that your point ?—Yes.

10. You go on to say : " For example, as members of the Auxiliary Force, we share the task of internal defence with the British Army, but, when it comes to a question of admission into the Army we are asked to accept the conditions of service of an Indian Sepoy." Will you excuse me for asking, is not that perhaps a little bit rhetorical ? Is not a member of the Anglo-Indian community eligible for a Commission ?—That is another question, sir.

11. Forgive me, I do not think it is, because if I read the phrase " when it comes to a question of admission into the Army we are asked to accept the conditions of service of an Indian Sepoy," it suggests to my mind a little that there is some disqualification for officer rank. That is not so, is it ?—It is so. I can only get in as a Commissioned Officer as an Indian.

12. Certainly. You mean that so far as regards the receiving of a Commission is concerned, an Anglo-Indian's claim stands on the basis that he is an Indian, not on the basis that he is a European ? —Yes, that is the only basis on which I can enter the commissioned ranks of the Army to-day, as an Indian. I do not object to that at all.

13. I am not asking for the moment whether the opportunities and facilities are sufficient; that is a matter which is not a constitutional point; but I wanted to be clear on the fact. Is not an Anglo-Indian open for a nomination to Sandhurst ?—No, there is no nomination to Sandhurst for an Anglo-Indian as an Anglo-Indian. He must enter as an Indian.

14. Is not he in that respect in the same position as an Indian ?—Yes, but he goes up for an examination, but by an examination, I mean a selection by a special committee.

15. I must have misunderstood your answer because my question seems to me to be right.

will put it again. Is not an Anglo-Indian qualified for admission to Sandhurst by nomination?—Yes, as an Indian, not as an Anglo-Indian.

16. As an Indian?—Yes.

17. The point really is that in these matters of military rank and officer-training a member of the Anglo-Indian community is regarded as an Indian?—Yes.

18. That is the point. I wanted to be quite clear?—But he cannot enter into the rank and file of the Army as it is constituted on the caste system; he cannot enter into any other rank of the Indian Army except as an Indian.

19. It was the use of the word "sepoy" I did not understand?—That is exactly what I meant. He cannot enter the British Army.

20. Your point is he cannot enter the British Army by enlistment?—Not as an Anglo-Indian. He has to say he is a European. If he seems a European by complexion he is accepted, but he is not accepted as an Anglo-Indian; he must say he is a European. During the War, however, he was taken in and classified as a European regardless of his colour.

21. Will you turn for a moment to page 275? I do not propose to go through the figures there, but you might tell me this. Are those figures in substance the same figures, or some of them, as were put before the Secretary of State before the despatch from the India Office which we know of, of last September, was written?—I do not follow.

22. On page 275 there is a series of figures showing the percentage of Anglo-Indians in the various services. There have been, have there not, some complaints made? I think there were two deputations fairly recently (one in 1923 and another in 1925) to the Secretary of State on behalf of the Anglo-Indian community?—Yes.

* * * * * * * * * *

28. Indeed the question * * * is not so much a constitutional question as an economic question and a social and official question, is not it?—I frankly admit that my problem is mainly an economic one.

29. I know you admit it most frankly?—It is for my life I am presenting this; indeed it is for my very existence.

30. On page 296 there is a passage which entirely justifies what you say; you say * * * * "Since our problem is more an economic than a political one . . ." and so on?—Yes.

31. I think you have been, if you will allow me to say so, entirely fair about that; you have stated it most straightforwardly and candidly. I follow that. I see this document which you have drawn up bears the date 25th June, 1928?—Yes.

32. Then we may take it, may we not, that your Memorandum was drawn up before the reply of the Secretary of State, which was communicated to you by the Secretary to the Government of India which was in September?—The 13th September, I think.

33. Anyhow, it was in September?—That is so. Our memorandum was presented to you before we received this reply, and this has seriously handicapped us in not being able to modify many of the views we have embodied in our Memorandum.

34. I do not think you have really suffered, because as you point out, constitutionally the question remains quite untouched. I do not see myself how you are prejudiced about that. Of course, as you will realise, the economic difficulties as such are not susceptible of direct treatment by an actual change in the constitutional structure?—With all respect to you, Sir, I am inclined to think they are very markedly affected.

35. You will show me exactly the way later. May we now turn, to save time, but not in the least to exclude intermediate matter, to page 296. In * * * * that page you speak of the necessity for the protection of minorities. Now, treating the thing for the moment as a question of constitutional structure, of revising the language of the Government of India Act or of the statutory rules made under it, are you able to tell us what is the form in which you suggest this protection of minorities should be secured for your own community?—I would have to make a specific claim for my community. I do not understand whether you want me to suggest a statutory protective measure for all minority communities or only for my own.

36. I mean, more particularly for your own community. What is the nature of the constitutional modification which you and your deputation suggest the Conference might consider for the protection of the Anglo-Indian community as a minority?—Briefly, my idea would be that a statute should be passed or some enactment made by which the Anglo-Indian community would be economically protected for a limited period of years, say 30 to 50 years, during which time it would be able to equip itself educationally; and at the end of that period the community could sink or swim with the rest of India.

37. I think we must get you to carry that a little further for us, because if you contemplate some statutory provision it has got to be put in language which can have a definite legal application. General phrases, of course, would not secure it. I follow you are saying you think the statutory protection should be for a period, which you suggest should be 30 or 50 years, but can you help me a little more and tell me, in the language of a legislator, what is the sort of clause or the effect of the clause which you have in mind (I do not want you to draft the words) when you suggest the statute should contain provisions for your economic protection?—I could only ask for a repetition with its more practical enforcement of paragraph 346 of the Montagu-Chelmsford report.

38. I think it is worth while reading this. It is paragraph 346 of the Montagu-Chelmsford report. The authors of the report say this: "Some reference is needed also to the case of the large Anglo-Indian community which on historic grounds has a strong claim on the consideration of the British Government. It is not easy for them, occupying as they do an intermediate position between the races of the East and West, to win for themselves by their own unaided enterprise a secure position in the economy of India. They have been hitherto to a great extent in political and economic dependence on the Government; and they would not be strong enough to withstand the effect of changes which omitted to take account of their peculiar situation. We think that Government must acknowledge, and must be given effective power to discharge the obligation to see that their interests are not prejudicially affected." Of course, we all have that paragraph in mind, and it is a very important one; but what one notices is that so far as the constitutional structure of British India following upon the Montagu-Chelmsford report is concerned, it is rather difficult to find a clause in the Act which can be said to provide this economic protection. I have not any doubt that you and others who work with you have thought this out very carefully. I wondered, therefore, whether you could make any suggestion to the Conference as to the form in which the statutory provision might be touched, or the substance of it?—(Mr. Maguire.) What I would suggest is that some definite clause should be inserted in the Act. After all, what we have there (in the Montagu-Chelmsford report) is merely a recommendation that there should be something definite in the statute which would give a period of protection to the Anglo-Indian community, purely on an economic basis.

39. Do not think I want to worry you at all; I only want your help. I do not think it is possible to write down a clause which would provide in those terms, or anything like those terms, that the Anglo-Indian community shall be economically protected. A clause in an Act of Parliament has to say something specific?—It would, of course, have to be carefully framed, but I think our general feeling is that up to now, though the intentions have been good, the effect as far as we are concerned has been rather disastrous, and unless we have something which is really binding in the Act—for a certain period, I do not say for all time—we should feel very insecure. If it could not be inserted in the Act itself, there might be something very specific in the Instrument of Instructions given under the Act itself.

40. Mr. Hartshorn : On page 55 of your Summary you ask that "the present number of Anglo-Indian and domiciled European lower and upper subordinates, be not reduced for a further period of 50 years." You have about 14,000 men employed, I think, out of about three-quarters of a million on the railways, and you are asking that that number should not be reduced, but that you shall continue to have at least 14,000 on the railways during the next 50 years. Is that the kind of thing you mean when you are asking for this guarantee?—(Colonel Gidney.) That is the kind of thing.

41. That would be one item that you propose?—Yes.

42. Chairman : I am obliged, Mr. Hartshorn. That helps to clear that up. What was in my mind was this. I do not want us to fail to consider very carefully and sympathetically any proposal which you would wish us to examine, and you suggest that something should be inserted by way of amendment into the Government of India Act, and I feel a great deal of sympathy with much of what you say. I think everybody feels sincere sympathy for the difficulties of your community, but I must tell you frankly that I see very great difficulty at present in knowing how to frame a clause in the Government of India Act. It may be that Mr. Hartshorn has put his finger on the real answer, that you do not expect to get the constitutional instrument, the Government of India Act, so revised as to contain a clause, but you would wish to secure protection by authoritative direction, if you like, such as this proposal that the present number of Anglo-Indians and Domiciled Europeans employed in the railway is not to be reduced for a period?—Yes. (Mr. Maguire.) It might find a specific place in the Instrument of Instructions rather than on such general lines as are there already.

Colonel Gidney : Might I just amplify that? At the bottom of page 300 of the Memorandum, I have stated that it is owing to the present constitution, in other words, the reflex action of reforms, that we to-day find our economic position so insecure, and, although it may not be embodied in a Government of India Act, I think you will agree with me that the Lee Commission enacted that a certain percentage of appointments be given to Europeans and a certain percentage to Indians, and since that has become operative as a part of the policy of the Government of India I beg that you will consider our case in that light, and legislate for us on similar lines.

43. We have that, of course, fully in mind, but you also have in mind that the recommendations of the Lee Commission primarily refer to All-India services, and, of course, the interests of your community are very largely tied up with recruitment to the provincial services?—No, Sir, forgive me. We are nearly 85 per cent. employed in the All-India services.

44. You say 85 per cent. of the Anglo-Indian community, so far as it is officially employed, is employed in All-India services?—Yes, that is the characteristic point about our employment.

45. I think what you mean is not All-India services; you perhaps mean Central services?—I mean by All-India services those that are controlled by the central Government of India. Might I amplify it? We have a population (I will put it roughly) of 50,000 employable men in the community, 14,000 of these, together with 4,000 domiciled Europeans, are employed on the railways, 2,000 more are employed on the telegraphs, about 2,000 more in the Customs, about 300 more in the Post, about 300 in the Survey, 600 in the I.M.D., in the Salt, etc. These are all Government of India services, and we have very few of the community employed in the provincial services; in fact, we may say that we are negligible in the provincial services, the only provincial service we have any concern with is Education.

46. Before passing it on to others, may I call attention to what you say on page 298. You refer there to the definition of a European as given in the Schedule 2 of the Electoral Rules of the Legislative Council?—Yes.

47. "A European means any person of European descent in the male line, being a British subject and resident in British India, who either was born in, or, has a domicile in the United Kingdom, or, in any British possession, or, in any State in India, or, whose father was so born, or has, or had up to the date of the birth of the person in question such a domicile." Then, I understand you to say that if that was liberally interpreted, the definition should be taken to include almost the entire Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European community?—Yes.

48. Just show me why you say that. Of course, the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European community is domiciled in India?—Yes.

49. What are the words, then, in the definition which would cover that?—Well, sir, take myself as an example; I can claim to be in the European electorate. It is the first generation of any mixed marriage or a marriage between a European and an Anglo-Indian lady who can be on the European electoral roll, and are entitled to do so. But I am not pressing that point to-day. My desire has altered since the receipt of the recent Government of India despatch, because, it has instructed me to take the status of a native of India, and I am prepared to do it.

50. That is a very important statement?—I am prepared to do that, and I do not desire to press this point of the European electorate definition except to impress upon you that by this elasticity of definition of a European the Anglo-Indian community is deprived of much of its strength. Then there are certain side factors, such as social advantages on which I shall not dilate, certain other amenities, and advantages, such as more liberal Railway leave rules and salaries for Europeans which bait the unpigmented members of my community to deny their nationality and enter the European classification, thereby depriving me of their numerical and financial strength

51. I am very much obliged to you, because that is a very important statement; I have not seen it in public before. Do I understand rightly that since the communication to you of the Secretary of State's despatch last September you are resolved to take up the position in the light of that despatch that you and those for whom you speak accept the position of native of India, and endeavour to protect your rights by a proper constitutional provision as such?—Yes, but as a special community. The only proviso make is embodied in * * * * page 298 of our Memorandum in which I have asked that a definition be formulated for the entire domiciled community and to embrace within it all those who can claim employment as natives of India under statute. I want to include in my constituency all those that should be in it. I do not desire, as prevails to-day, that any member of our community should secure economic advantages reserved for natives of India and at the same time be eligible to exercise his political vote in the European constituency.

52. That answers the only question I wanted at the moment to put. We all notice, of course, that you are urging that there should be extension of the method of election for Anglo-Indian representatives. I was going to put to you a question as to the principle on which you thought the list of voters should be drawn up, but your last answer really covers that point?—Yes

* * * * * * * * * * *

53. Sir Arthur Froom : * * * Arising from a reply to some questions put to you by the Chairman about the army, would you have any demand from your community for enlistment as private soldiers in the British Army?—Yes.

54. This is not a very great point, but I would like to clear it up. I think you put it as rather a grievance of your community that they are not eligible to serve in the British Army as private soldiers?—Yes.

55. Is that really a concrete grievance? Is there any demand in your community to enlist as private soldiers, on very poor pay per day? It is a small point?—It is a big point with us. In common with every other community we look upon this ostracism from the Army as an insult, as an unmerited communal insult. We are the direct issue of the pioneer Englishmen, and in the Great War you took of us freely; you enlisted our men and women in every branch of the British Army and gave us the pay of the European soldier; you enlisted our women as nurses on the European cadre; you employed us then in every sphere and capacity, while to-day we are offered admission into the Indian Army only as Sepoys on Indian wages, despite the fact that we are to-day employed in the Auxiliary Force as European British subjects.

56. That is perfectly true, that at a great crisis your community came forward to serve the Empire, but my point is that the prospects in the British Army as an ordinary private soldier are not very great; the pay is very poor and the duration of service is very short?—We have, to-day, Sir Arthur, 500 to 800 Anglo-Indians serving in the British Army who entered it during the War, and have been retained there, and are a credit to the British Army.

* * * * * * * * * *

57. You are a member of the Legislative Assembly, are you not?—Yes.

58. Elected or nominated?—Nominated.

59. Who do you regard as your constituency?—I have no constituency which elects me.

60. Except the Anglo-Indian community, perhaps?—I have got a seat in the Legislative Assembly by virtue of a nomination by the Viceroy, but I always consult my community, which is spread over the whole of India and Burma.

61. You told our Chairman that your community had accepted the status of statutory natives of India?—Yes.

62. That being so, in the Legislative Assembly you hold a nominated seat as a native of India—an Indian?—Yes, as an Anglo-Indian.

63. So your community is one of the many communities of Indians in this country?—Yes.

64. Has there ever been any attack on your community as part of the great population of Indians in India? Has there ever been any legislation, or anything of that description?—I say, with all respect to my Indian legislative brothers, that ever since I have been in the Assembly, i.e., for the last eight years, I have been subjected to almost daily attacks on the position the Anglo-Indian community occupies in the various services in this country. There has been a continual attack on us, by questions, by resolutions, by cuts in the budget and other such measures. I am, however, pleased to say that my Muslim friends have not as a rule participated in these attacks.

65. Is it for that reason that, having accepted the position of a statutory Indian, you fear for the future of your community?—Yes. You asked me just now, and Sir John Simon also asked me, whether I had "accepted" the position of a statutory native of India. In reply I should say I had no alternative but to accept that position—indeed, that status was imposed on me by parliamentary statute and has been recently reiterated by the Secretary of State and Government of India—and I am prepared to take it.

66. Chairman: I have the statute before me now, and it is always a good thing to look at the document. You, Colonel Gidney, were quite right when you said it was the Imperial statute of 1870. It is in the Indian Councils Act of 1870, 33 Vic., Chapter III. It is not in the Naturalisation Act (though it is the same year as that) but in quite a different statute. For the purposes of that Act there is a definition of the words "natives of India," and this is the definition: "For the purposes of the Act the words 'natives of India' shall include any person born and domiciled within the dominions of Her Majesty in India of parents habitually resident in India and not established there for temporary purposes only." What one notices is that that definition has got nothing to do with mixed blood; it would apply to a man whose ancestry was European on both sides, if the parents were habitually resident in India, for it says, "the words 'natives of India' shall include any person born and domiciled within the dominions of Her Majesty in India of parents habitually resident in India and not established there for temporary purposes only"?—Yes.

67. That is a rather striking thing?—That includes the Anglo-Indian community.

68. It includes them, but I wanted to point out that as a matter of statutory definition this phrase (which I can quite understand is carefully scrutinised by your community) is a phrase which is not directed in terms to what I may call mixed blood, but would apply equally to a gentleman whose ancestry on both sides was purely European?—That is why we include in our community the "Domiciled European" also. I accept that; that is so.

69. Sir Arthur Froom: In the letter which the Secretary of State addressed to the Government of India, and which the Government of India wrote to you in September last, there is some suggestion that the employment of Anglo-Indians should be safeguarded on the railways?—Yes. It is on page 278.

70. Are you satisfied with that suggestion?—Yes; if put into effect, and by statute, we should be quite satisfied.

* * * * * * * * * *

72. Sir Arthur Froom: Your reply is, you would like statutory effect given to it?—Yes, and it should be applied, among other services, to Telegraphs and Customs also.

73. I was coming to that. I think you mentioned to our Chairman that there are four great services in which your community have been employed in considerable numbers. Railways, of course, we know. Then we have the Customs, the Post Office and the Telegraph Department?—Not the Post Office now.

74. But you were employed in the Post Office?—Yes, very largely many years ago.

75. And the Telegraph Department?—Yes; also the Indian Medical Department.

76. My difficulty is this: Would you want something inserted in any future Government of India Act to provide for special employment of the Anglo-Indian community in all these departments?—Yes, if that is possible.

77. If it were possible; but as statutory Indians what would happen? Suppose the Mahomedans asked for something to be put in the Government of India Act of their community, and the Sikhs said: "We want some special employment." I do not know if they would like it put in, but suppose they did? I mean, if one class of the Indian community demands statutory protection for employment in certain of the Government services, would not it tend to make other communities emulate their example? I see some difficulties, and I want you to suggest how they may be got over in favour of your community?—At present I see no need for such statutory enactments for the other big communities, such as Muslims and Sikhs, because in all pacts—written or unwritten, provincial or Government of India—the question is always a settlement between the Government and the Muslims and Hindus, while the Anglo-Indian is a very remote afterthought. He is never considered in these pacts now. As a matter of fact his present position is in such jeopardy that he is being displaced from the Services owing to the clamorous demands of other communities, and there is no need for any special enactment for them. For example, if there is a High Court judgeship or other such appointment going vacant, a Hindu or a Muslim demands and gets it; but the claim of the Anglo-Indian is never considered. I can give you a recent instance of an Anglo-Indian who passed fifth in the last Forest service competitive examination. There were four vacancies, and he was the first Anglo-Indian who had ever qualified for entrance into this service by competition. Three of the four vacancies were given to the first three candidates; for the fourth vacancy, i.e., to adjust communal inequalities, the Anglo-Indian was overlooked, and either the twenty-ninth man, the twenty-fourth or twenty-sixth on the list, all of whom are Muslims, is, I understand, going to be selected. My claim is entirely overlooked. Here is a specific instance. There is also another specific instance in the Government of India Finance department, in which the Honourable Member was in need of an assistant financial advisor and asked for an Indian, overlooking the claims of a senior qualified Anglo-Indian, and it was only when he could not find a qualified Indian that he took an Anglo-Indian. It seems to me, that even the Government of India places us in the position of a very remote second thought in these settlements, and that is why I am so desirous of having some statutory protection for a certain number of years, until I am sufficiently educated to run a level race with the Indian.

78. Following up my point, let me say I am not trying to raise difficulties; I want to clear them up. It is within the knowledge of most of us that we frequently have questions put in the Central Legislature as to how many Mahomedans are employed in such-and-such services, and if the number is below a certain figure why more are not employed; so the various communities are not altogether satisfied with the proportion of their enlistment in the various services. My point is that if you demand some statutory protection, would not we get these other communities demanding statutory protection?—I have no objection to them doing so.

79. And where would the end be?—I quite see your point, and I do not think there is any objection, if their demand be made on the basis of their present employment, or to their protection for any limited period such as we have asked. Indeed, I should like to draw particular attention to page 278 of our Memorandum, which satisfies Sir Arthur Froom's questions. Although Government says we are Natives of India on page 278 of the Memorandum, we instance a Government member making a statement in the Legislative Assembly in which he creates a cleavage in as far as he calls Anglo-Indians one community and he calls the rest of the other communities "Indian communities." and he intensifies this further on by saying: "I have reduced the number of Europeans and Anglo-Indians, and those posts have been given to Indians." If, as an Anglo-Indian, I am a native of India, how can you Indianise an Indian? If I am an Anglo-Indian and a native of India, why should I be replaced by another Indian when I am doing a job well, especially in departments as the Railways, Telegraphs, Customs, etc., which we have built up? That is our difficulty; Government themselves create this cleavage. That paragraph is a very important one.

80. Chairman: Page 278?—Page 278. * * * Lower down the page * * * * you will find the following: "The Railway Board recognise that there are now members of other communities," so I am evidently separated from other communities; and further down it says: "The position actually is, therefore, that the Railway Board have informed Agents that they consider that Indians should be given the same opportunities of showing their aptitude and capacity for these posts as Anglo-Indians, with the result that they are obtaining an increasing number of these posts. The latest figures I have got show, for example, that in 1927 among the subordinates drawing Rs. 250 per mensem and over, there was a reduction of 50 Europeans, a reduction of 44 Anglo-Indians, an increase of 121 Hindus, an increase of 38 Muslims and an increase of 50 of 'other classes.'" I do not object to that at all, but if I am to be called an Indian, and if I accept the status of an Indian, why make this classification between me and other Indians? You do not make it between Parsis and other Indians. That is the insecurity of my position.

81. Sir Arthur Froom: I see your point, that in this Indianisation scheme the Anglo-Indians should be included. Is that your point?—Yes; but though by statute we are Indians, the Indian refuses to recognise this and looks upon us as aliens. This is our fear.

82. Chairman: Is not your real point this, if I may put it for you: You say that as things are, there is a very grave practical risk of the Anglo-Indian being squeezed out between the upper and the nether millstone?—Quite right.

83. From the point of view of one body, the body that calls itself thoroughly and completely Indian, the Anglo-Indian is treated as not being inside that body. From the point of view of the other body, which is called European, the Anglo-Indian is not treated as if he was of that body; and therefore, when you come to consider how the different communities should get their share, and none of them should be unduly excluded, there is a very grave risk that your community will be repudiated by each set in turn?—That is right.

84. That, I think, is your real point, is not it?—Yes.

85. Lord Burnham: But it is something more than that. From page 280 it appears that this is not only supported but proved by the figures—I will assume them to be correct—given by these gentlemen in their Memorandum, where the elimination of the Anglo-Indians is said to be concealed, I do not know whether truly or not, in a Note which says: "The number of Anglo-Indians was concealed under the guise of and together with 'Other Classes.'"—I might have used a better word when I said "concealed."

86. That is the word used here, and that is what I am asking about.—That was at a time when the fever of Indianisation was at a very high temperature.

87. Colonel Lane-Fox: Was not that written before you had accepted the full status of Indians?—No, sir, that was written before I received the recent despatch from the Government of India.

88. Therefore it was before you had accepted that status?—Yes. I again beg of you, Mr. Chairman and the Conference, to understand that the acceptance of that status is nothing new. It is an old discovery on new legs. I am taking it because it was imposed on me by Parliament in 1870, many years ago.

89. Chairman: Yes. I quite agree with you, Colonel Gidney, that you need not stress the word "concealed." All it means is this, that if you take the column headed 1925 the number of Anglo-Indians was not separated out, and other classes were therefore included?—That is right.

90. But when you come to the next year, 1926, the number of Anglo-Indians was separated out, and therefore you can see the number clearly?—Yes. But that separation was done in reply to a demand by the Indians.

91. I do not think you suggest that there was any attempt made to conceal it; it was merely that the figure was an inclusive one?—May I again repeat that that separation was again made in reply to a demand by the Indian Indian. When in 1925 Indian members asked, "How many of these are Anglo-Indians?" the Government member could not reply, and so in the next year Government showed Anglo-Indians and Indian Indians separately. I withdraw the word "conceal," as I did not use it in any derogatory sense.

92. What you meant was, it was a figure which included them?—Yes.

93. Sir Arthur Froom: Does your community find much employment in services other than Government services?—Very little at present.

94. Can you explain why?—My first explanation of that is that it is a poor community, and to launch out into independent vocations one must have capital to start with, and so we have for many years been employed as servants of Government.

95. I suppose the opening for clerks in commercial business, when all is said and done, cannot be very numerous?—No.

96. So that really leaves your position in the central services still more important?—Yes. And we cannot emigrate, because we are prevented.

97. Do you lay great stress on what you have headed in your Memorandum as jury rights? To put the question in another way, do you suggest that in a trial in which the jury are composed of Indians the members of your community might not get a fair trial?—I have reason to say so. I have reasons to admit that statement. I say it exists only in those cases where communal feelings run high, and I give as my reasons the same reasons as the European and the Indian have given, and that is, I want a jury who understands me. A jury is meant to give an accused a sense of confidence. If the Englishman has his customs, and if the Indian has his customs, and they can both demand a majority jury, I also want the right to demand a European or an Indian jury, and I want everyone to have a similar right. As the law stands to-day, I alone must prove legitimacy and my European descent before I can claim an European jury. My father might have been a soldier from England; he had no time to put his baptismal certificate in his pocket, or the records of my grandparents' marriage may have been destroyed during the Mutiny. I do not fear that the Englishman or the Indian would deliberately do me a wrong, but if an Englishman has a right to a majority European jury, and an Indian has a right to a majority Indian jury, why should I alone be denied this? Why should I be called upon to produce evidence of legitimacy? Unless I produce this I am denied a jury of people who know my customs. I claim the same right as Europeans and Indians. If they have got a right, why cannot I have the same? Extend the privilege to all, because then there will be no communal bitterness or mistrust.

98. Mr. Kikabhai Premchand: On page 300, under the head of "Nature of our Demand," you say that the teeming millions of India have in the past shown a marked hostility towards your community. What, in your opinion, are the reasons for this hostility?—The reasons for this hostility are endogenous and exogenous. They are partly due to us and partly due to the Indian.

99. You have said somewhere that it is more due to your supporting the Government. Is that so?—Very largely, for we are often placed in open hostility to the Indian.

100. And, of course, in supporting the Government when the latter went against the opinion of the people, you went in favour of the Government?—That is one of the main reasons.

101. Is there any opinion commonly held and expressed that the alleged hostility is due to the supercilious attitude of the members of your community towards Indians in general?—Had you said this ten years ago you would have been quite right. To-day it is practically dead.

102. It has changed?—To-day we are more together than we have ever been, and I hope we we will be closer, as brothers.

103. I am glad to hear that. Would you be content if your community was treated in all respects as Indians?—Yes, with certain safeguards for a limited period.

104. The safeguards that you mention here in the Memorandum?—Yes. My reason for that safeguard is that I have played a part that no community has done in the development of this country, and I say it openly. I say I have not only played that part; I have played it in every avenue of development of the country, and we feel that for that reason, if for no other, we are entitled to some protection for a limited period until we educate ourselves.

105. You say here that the railways, telegraphs, and so on, employ large numbers of your community, and you do not want your community to be displaced in the services. If the employments are thrown open to all Indians, and if qualifications are the sole test, do you think you will still require special protection for the interests of your community?—Yes, for that limited period.

106. If the test is qualification, even then will you require protection?—Yes. I will tell you why. My educational system with which we have already dealt in the Sub-Committee—the Chairman will know about that.

Chairman: Yes.

Witness: My education has been imposed upon me. My education is a system that is foreign to India, and that has placed me in hostility with the Indian universities, and I am handicapped. I was unprepared for this change in administration, for I was sitting in the lap of Government quite securely, I thought, and now I find I am forced to run a level race with you, and I am unprepared. That is why I want this grace; that is why I want protection for this time.

107. Mr. Kikabhai Premchand: I am looking at you proposal for protection for 50 and 30 years. What do you think will be the progress of Indianisation of services so far as communities other than yours are concerned?—I am not concerned with that progress, but I have no doubt that that progress will be very rapid.

108. Very slow, because you want a protection for 50 or 30 years?—After all, it would mean a drop in the ocean for the Indian community—a few appointments for your many millions—but for us it is our bread and butter. It is for another 30 years only that we seek this special economic protection.

109. Now will you turn to page 301 of the Summary. You say: In regard to the Indian Audit and Accounts department, that in view of your low level of education you want 15 per cent of the vacancies to be given to your community by nomination?—Yes.

110. Will you consider the claims of other educationally backward communities too?—I would not object to them having nomination.

111. And if all such communities are given direct nomination, what will be the standard of efficiency of the services?—The standard of efficiency was not lower before degrees were demanded as a qualification for these appointments.

112. What I mean is, if your community is given 15 per cent, and the Muslims and the Hindus and the Sikhs and the Jains are all given 15 per cent, the standard of efficiency will be affected, will it not?—I do not think so, because the standard here is based on a degree, and a degree is not always the only qualification for making a good officer; in fact, no degree is asked for from the same men competing for the same appointment in England; it is only asked for in India.

113. Then on page 301 you say you want 50 lakhs to be capitalised for a period of 30 years for the education of your community. Have you considered if there are other directions in which the revenues of India are more urgently required for expenditure, like sanitation, malaria, village dispensaries, elementary education?—I think those are all provincial subjects. This is a Central Government of India demand I am making.

114. In the Central Government services there are demands for the national-building departments?—I do not know that there are. I know there is some supervising control over them, but I do not know that there are any specific demands for them. We had a demand last year for 50 lakhs for the archæological department to unearth the remains of dead civilisation. My demand is for the living and needy.

115. Supposing there has to be some change in the Meston Settlement that will make a reduction in the Central Government's revenues, that will make a reduction in its expenditure too, will it not?—I see your point. I made this particular demand for education because I felt we had a claim, and I say here that we have a special communal claim on the Government of India for a certain period of years to equip us educationally so that we can do what we want to do, and what Government wants us to do, and what you, as a brother of mine, want us to do, i.e., to be an asset to India.

* * * * * * * *

121. Mr. Kikabhai Premchand: You say you want Law and Order to be placed under the special care of Governors and the Governor-General. Can you give me some instances where legislatures have proved themselves unfit to take care of these subjects?—I think the legislature broke down very seriously in the recent Calcutta Hindu-Muhammadan riots.

122. That means your objection is directed towards Indians being placed in charge of Law and Order?—No, not a bit.

123. Are you aware that in Madras an Indian held the portfolio of Law and Order?—We are well aware of it.

124. Did that break down?—I believe it failed towards the end of his tenure.

125. Raja Nawab Ali Khan: On page 296 you say: "If Government is to be efficient as well as equitable, representative bodies must be amenable to the guidance of the executive and our first care should be the devising of a stable ministry and a secure civil service." Do I understnad you to mean that in this country the legislature should be subordinate to the executive?—No! but my memorandum refers particularly to the Central Legislature.

126. You do not refer to the provincial legislatures?—No.

127. And your opinion is there should be no change at present in the Central Legislature?—I think there should be a marked change in the Central Legislature.

128. On page 297 you say: "In fact, the Anglo-Indian community would view with considerable satisfaction the formation of such a body into which might be gathered persons who are eminent by their ability, knowledge or service to the country." You refer to the formation of a Second Chamber?—Yes.

129. Do you contemplate that these members should come in by nomination or by election?—I should prefer it to be by nomination.

130. All these members are to be there by nomination?—Yes.

131. On page 297 you say: "The conditions that prevail at present in India make communal electorates imperative." I think you have in mind the Hindu-Muhammadan difference, have not you?—Yes.

132. I want to know how these communal feelings affect your community. If it is a quarrel between Hindus and Muhammadans, how does it affect your community?—I am a minority community too, and when I admitted just now it was mainly a communal issue between Hindus and Muhammadans. I included in that all minority communities. It is not a feeling of hostility but a feeling of unsecurity as a small minority community. I want the protection of all minority communities.

133. Have you anything to suggest to eliminate communal differences from the country?—As India is to-day I cannot suggest anything; I cannot suggest any alternative to communal electorate. I, however, hope that the time will come when this will not be necessary.

134. Sir Hari Singh Gour: In your memorandum you have said that you want a certain percentage of appointments in the railways, telegraphs and customs earmarked for your community? It is on page 301?—Yes.

136. You want a lower qualification provided so as to secure the admission of your community into these services?—No, I have not mentioned that at all.

137. I will read you the passage. "That owing to the manifest injustice consequent on the sudden change of policy in the matter of recruitment to the superior railway services, which now demand a degree qualification, the I.A. or I.Sc., be accepted as a qualifying examination." I understand this to mean that so far as members of your community are concerned, the lower qualification should suffice, whereas the general qualification is a degree?—I personally, am not prepared to admit that the Senior Cambridge is in some respects a lower qualification than the I.Sc. A Senior Cambridge Anglo-Indian has been hitherto accepted as the equivalent of the B.A. because he knows more English than a B.A.

138. I am dealing here with I.A. and I.Sc. Kindly read paragraph (2). The general qualification is a degree, but in the case of your community, I presume that an I.A. or I.Sc. is to be regarded as sufficient. That is what you have said?—I say it should be accepted as a qualification.

139. That is it. Your suggestion is that whereas a degree, which is laid down as a qualifying test . . .—You are right. I beg your pardon. I did not quite follow.

140. What you really want, so far as the railways are concerned, is that while the qualifying test in the case of other candidates should be a degree, as is provided, in your case a lower standard should, for a period, be regarded as sufficient?—Yes.

141. You know that introduces a disparity in the qualifications of candidates applying for admission to the railway service?—I do not think so, because on again referring to this part of the memorandum I find I make no separate communal claim for the I.Sc.

142. Do you think a member of your community who is an undergraduate and has passed only the I.A. or I.Sc. examination will intellectually be equal to one who has passed his B.A.?—He has done so for the last fifty years, and now you have this sudden introduction of a degree, which upsets us suddenly. Mr. Maguire: The position, I think, is this. Is it a necessary and absolutely essential qualification for these appointments that a man should hold a university degree? Is it so in any other part of the world? Our position is this. You are asking for a certain qualification which is not essential for efficiency, and what we say is this. If it pleases all other classes of Indians to place their qualifications for an appointment as high as a B.A., a university degree, inasmuch as our system of education has run in a different direction up to now, along the lines of the Cambridge University, we are not in a position to provide you with men with degrees, and you must give us some facility in that direction for a short time. I maintain it will not lower efficiency, because a university degree is not a necessary qualification for this particular appointment. I will give you a case in the Calcutta Corporation. It was suggested to make one of the qualifications for a lighting inspector that he should hold a university degree, and I opposed it on the ground that the degree was not an essential qualification.

143. Do I understand you to mean you think the qualification of a degree should be done away with as a rule, because a degree is not a good test of the intellectual ability of the particular candidate in the class of work for which a degree is now required as a preliminary qualification?—I say a degree simply shows the training of a man's mind in a particular direction, and cannot be used as a sort of universal test for his capacity in all directions.

144. Are you for the abolition of the degree test as a qualification? Do you advocate the abolition of the degree as a qualifying test as it is laid down now?—Colonel Gidney: Yes. Mr. Maguire: We want a man to be fit for the employment for which he is required.

145. You think the removal of the degree test would not tend to lower the standard of efficiency?—Not necessarily. It is not asked for in any other part of the world. Nowhere else in the world are these railwaymen required to be university graduates.

146. Suppose the Railway Board want to raise the standard of intellectual ability of persons employed on the railway, I suppose you would concede they have a perfect right to do so?—Colonel Gidney: Yes, they have a right to do so, but are they right in doing so?

147. And you would equally concede that if they require a university degree from candidates, you have no objection?—Mr. Maguire: There I disagree with you, inasmuch as a man may be a university graduate and certainly not be a suitable man for the particular appointment.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: I understand you to join issue with the Railway Board?

Chairman: May I suggest this? It is quite useful, I think, to bring this point out, but I do not suppose you, Mr. Maguire, or you, Sir Hari Singh Gour, suggest there will be a section in the Government of India Act about this, so I think it is not necessary to spend longer on it. However important it may be, it is a matter of internal regulation. It is quite right to call attention to it, but I do not think we ought to spend longer on it.

148. Sir Hari Singh Gour: You have said, Colonel Gidney, that in the Indian Legislative Assembly for a very long time past by resolutions, cuts, and so on, an attack has been directed against Anglo-Indians. Has not it been because up to very recently you, as voicing the sentiments of the Anglo-Indians on the floor of the House, were not quite sure what position you occupied, and you asked the Government again and again to declare what you were whether you were Europeans or Indians? Is not it in view of that uncertainty that the position of which you complain has arisen?—Colonel Gidney: My uncertainty of status had no connection whatever with the attacks of the legislature on my community. I can bring to your memory a speech you made when you supported the State Control of Railways, in which you, in effect, adduced as one of your reasons that the transfer of the railways to State Control would afford you means of preventing such a large employment of Anglo-Indians on the railways.

149. The question I put to you is this. Is not it a fact that the attack which has been directed against the members of your community has been mainly because you have been uncertain as to your nationality and you wanted the privileges of a European as well as the privileges of an Indian?—That has been my policy; one that has been forced on me; but it is no reason for the attacks by Indians on me.

150. That is the reason the Indians naturally complain?—No.

151. Please refer to page 299: you say that "in the Legislative Assembly the Anglo-Indian community is at present represented by a single nominated member. We desire that our representatives be elected." How would you constitute your constituency?—We have asked for representatives for certain provinces.

Chairman: It is all set out in the memorandum.

152. Sir Hari Singh Gour: Will you kindly refer to page 296. "The desire of Indians to assimilate Western methods of government does not entitle them to ignore the welfare of any section of the population. When Indian politicians claim the right to make mistakes we are entitled to ask whether we have not an equal right to be protected from the consequences of such mistakes." If I understand you aright, your claim is based on the fact that as you belong to the Anglo-Indian community, and the democratic institutions introduced by the British Government in this country require a knowledge of Western methods and Western habits of thought, your community possesses more of those qualities than Indians, and therefore by reason of that aptitude you should be given special facilities?—I have not intimated that at all, practically there is no democratic form of government that has been introduced, but if I might coin a word, I would say it is a "hypocritic" form of government, because we Anglo-Indians are not considered in that form of government at all.

153. You say as regards the management of Law and Order, you know that there are governments like that of the Central Provinces where the Indians have been in charge of Law and Order?—They are well-behaved there.

154. Consequently, the fact of Law and Order being in charge of an Indian does not necessarily mean giving rise to complaint?—I have not made such a complaint. I do not say that Law and Order should not be in charge of an Indian member.

155. Rao Bahadur Rajah: I see from your memorandum that you desire European Education to be made a Government of India Reserved Non-votable subject. Why do you ask this?—To obtain one unified educational curriculum for all European schools in India and which itself will need central control. At present owing to our singular setting the community is scattered all over India and Burma and is not concentrated in few large towns as are the Parsis. As I told the Chairman, 80 per cent. of the community are employed in the All-India services, which exposes the parents of our children to frequent transfers, often from the North to the South or East to the West of India, and, as today, each province has its own educational code and curriculum as also final examination, the education of our children is seriously handicapped and disjointed. Moreover, our European education grants have been steadily reduced by the various provincial governments and legislatures, and for these reasons the future of European Education is very insecure in the provinces and offers a very serious drawback to our children who desire to undergo secondary and higher education. We feel we would obtain unification of codes and control as also security of our grants-in-aid if European Education were made a Central Government of India subject, non-votable, the same as is European Army Education connected with such schools as Sanawar, Lovedale, Mount Abu, Lawrence Asylum, Prince of Wales School Dehra Dun, etc., whose grants and control are under the Army department, Government of India, and unconnected with provincial Governments. If centralisation is possible with these Army European schools and which, after all, are not in any way dissimilar to the other schools, why not to all European schools?

156. Education, I understand, is a reserved subject in the provinces?—It is a reserved subject in the provinces under the Governor in Council, but its grant is subject to the vote of the legislature.

157. What are your objections to continuing that as at present?—One reason is this, that it is unfair to ask the provincial ryot or villager to pay for my education. We contribute very little to provincial revenues. We pay mostly to the Government of India in income tax and customs duties.

158. Chairman: Because you are mostly an urban community, you mean?—In that way, too, and moreover, I am not of the proprietor class, nor am I a cultivator, and I do not think the provinces should pay for my education; it is not fair to expect this of them. Moreover, 80 per cent. of my people are employed in the All-India services. The Army is an All-India service; and its education is controlled by the Government of India Army department; the Ecclesiastical department is a Government of India one; Income Tax is also a Government of India department; so also is the Customs a Government of India department; the only department that is not under the Government of India and with which our community is closely concerned is European Education.

159. Rao Bahadur Rajah : Am I to understand that you pay largely to the education department ?—From the income tax point of view and the super-tax point of view, I think we pay a considerable amount of money to the exchequer of the Government of India.

160. And do you ask on that score for these 50 lakhs ?—I have an additional reason. The community has in the past rendered exclusive service to the Government of India, e.g., in the Customs department, which has added thousands of crores of rupees to the Government of India exchequer. Then, again, the Domiciled community constitutes two-thirds of the Indian Auxiliary Force and has formed the major part of all such previous corps for the past 60 years. The Auxiliary Force is the second line of defence of the British Army in India, and, as such, occupies a distinct place in the military defence of India. This is a purely Volunteer Force, though the Railway Battalions are conscribed. Nevertheless, we are a source of great economy to the military expenditure of India, for, to replace us in the Auxiliary Force, at least 15 to 20 British Regiments would have to be added to the present strength of the British Army in India. We, therefore, in this manner, constitute a saving of over 2 crores of rupees to the Government of India, and in return, surely it is not an unreasonable request for 50 lakhs to be capitalised for 30 years for a community that has done so much for India and its development, and who to-day voluntarily and so materially helps in the defence of the country, and whose future economic salvation depends so largely on adequate higher and vocational education. We have served India and the British Empire loyally and well. We are the descendants of those Britishers who made the Indian Empire. We helped those pioneers and as their issue we, who are being, as it were, discarded in response to Indian clamour and aspirations, feel that we have a moral claim on England and India to this help in our hour of need.

161. As regards the services, you are for the constitution of a Public Service Commission for the local councils also ?—I am in favour of there being a Public Service Commission or a selection board or some such institution, in all provinces, and I beg the Commission here to realise that considering my economic condition is so insecure we desire that Anglo-Indians be appointed to each one of these Commissions.

162. I suppose in case you have a member of your community in the Public Service Commission, your representation in the services will be safeguarded ?—Yes. We feel that, as things stand at present, unrepresented as we are on any of the Public and Provincial Service Commissions, our interests are overlooked—indeed, neglected, and so no matter how eligible any of our candidates are they receive scant consideration. The increasing exclusion, almost to extinction, of the community in the provincial services is abundant evidence of this belief.

Take the railways : It is known that the fireman and the ticket collector of today are the upper subordinates of tomorrow, and 15 per cent. of these people enter the official grades and in time become officials. Well, take the present system by which these subordinates are selected today on all railways. Every week a committee of railway officials meets and interviews a body of applicants and they select those whom they consider best. I do not object to this method, though even today the community is feeling the pinch of exclusion, but what of the immediate and especially the remote future ? The honourable member in charge of Railways takes great pride in the fact that he is today Indianising the railway official cadre at the rate of over 70 per cent. (vide his 1928 Railway Budget Speech)—I mean Indian Indians, for very few Anglo-Indians are being accepted into the official grades, and 40 per cent. of those in it are only officiating, and so exercise very little influence and have no say in the matter of selection of subordinates. At this rate of Indianisation it cannot be denied that 70 to 80 per cent. of these selection committees will very shortly be Indian officials and that Anglo-Indians will have no chance of being selected as subordinates, for it is only natural, blood being thicker than water, that these Indian officials will prefer to engage Indians as subordinates. This is my increasing fear of ultimate extinction from the railways, against which I urge for statutory protection.

163. Sir Hari Singh Gour : I have one short question to ask on page 278, where you refer to a speech by Mr. A. A. L. Parsons. Is not the statement that the same opportunities should be given to Indians, and so on, a reference to the fact that until recently there were two grades in the railway, one for Europeans and Anglo-Indians, and the other for Indians ?—No.

164. He is pointing out there that the reserved appointments for Anglo-Indians would be now available also to Indians ?—I might remind you that that remark was made in a demand for a cut that was made on the upper subordinates of the railways, those drawing Rs. 250/- and above per mensem.

165. Mr. Hartshorn : Could you tell us the kind of jobs on the railways for which a degree is required ?—For all the superior railway services today, even for an apprentice for the superior locomotive department. I am positive of my statement. An I.Sc. is required from an Indian or an Anglo-Indian before he is accepted as an apprentice for the superior railway services (transportation and power), and they allowed us to come in with the Senior Cambridge before. The door is closed to us today.

166. I see you have three tables here of the number of persons employed in the railways ?—Yes.

167. In the one you give an aggregate—this is page 279. I see your total figure is 14,007 Anglo-Indians ?—Yes.

168. You have only given the other statistics for three years ?—Yes.

169. In all your other statistics dealing with the Telegraph department and Customs, and so on, you have given a series of years ?—Yes.

170. Take, for instance, page 283. There you show that while the sanctioned strength is 254, the number of Anglo-Indians has declined year by year, and the number of Indians has increased until today you have a very different position from what you had nine or ten years ago ?—Yes.

171. Have you not similar statistics for railways ?—Unfortunately I cannot supply you with them. I asked for them, but the year 1925 synchronises with the time when the Government of India took over State Control of the railways. Before that year all were company managed railways, and they had their own statistics, and these I could not obtain from them. I tried my utmost to obtain these figures for the past ten years but failed.

172. You are not in a position to say whether hitherto you have had more than 14,000 on the railways ?—No, we have not had more than 14,000.

173. So you have about your maximum strength at present ?—Yes.

174. And that is what you are asking to be assured for the future ?—Yes. I am in no position to contradict a statement that I had more or I had less.

175. Because these figures as you have given them seem to indicate now that instead of your numbers going down in the last few years they have gone up ?—Yes, to a certain extent, but there has been an increase of a lakh of mileage in the railways. Taking communal totals of railway employees we have very little representation compared with the Indians, the Muslims have also suffered very much.

176. Major Attlee : What is the rate of growth of your community ?—Taking the census, it is 11 to 12 per cent. per decade, but we have had a tremendous increase in it lately.

177. Colonel Lane-Fox : Really what you ask is, as a minimum, that the Government of India Act should lay down, if possible, that Anglo-Indians should have the full rights of Indians according to the status which has been imposed on them?—Plus this protection.

178. Yes, but that is the minimum you ask—that they should not be deprived of any right which the Indian possesses?—Yes, but European Education, of course, is a different matter entirely because that is inseparably associated with my religion; European Education has been a separate thing from its very inception, and is based on our culture, etc.

179. Lord Burnham: With regard to Colonel Lane-Fox's questions, I understood from the evidence you had given that you asked for something more than statutory equality, you asked for a convention giving you the same proportion of posts as hitherto?—Yes.

180. With regard to the argument alleged in * * * * page 280 of your Memorandum, would it be fair to say you attribute a good deal of your present plight—if you can call it so—to the fact that the Government of India has accelerated the Indianisation of the superior railway appointments a good deal beyond the principle laid down by the Lee Commission?—Very much so, at a much faster pace.

181. You say on page 281 that Indianisation of the superior railway service will be 70 to 80 per cent. in the next ten to fifteen years, as against the Lee Commission report of 75 per cent. in about twenty-five years?—That is so. It is admitted by the Honourable Member. It is on account of the university degree they demand from us to-day that we are being shut out.

* * * * * * * * * *

195. Chairman: There is another figure in the census returns which interests me a little. I see that out of these 95,000 odd in British India there are 47,000 females. I imagine that in your community the standard of education among women is high?—Yes. In fact, I think it is almost higher now than with men.

196. I am a little sorry there is no lady in your deputation this morning.—I regret it very much. She is being sworn into the Punjab Council this morning. I wanted her to come here, but her date could not be altered. On her behalf I apologise for her absence.

197. I am very glad indeed the community should have that further representation. In the case of elected Anglo-Indian members, do women vote as well as men?—Very few. They are eligible, but only those who pay a certain tax and come within the electoral rules.

198. Mr. Maguire, you are one of the elected members for Bengal. Is your constituency the Anglo-Indians of the whole of Bengal?—(Mr. Maguire): Yes.

199. Although there are two seats, they do not divide them geographically?—No.

200. How is the election really worked? In Bengal you have some 22,000 Anglo-Indians of all ages and both sexes, and no doubt you have a constituency of a certain number of thousands. How many thousands is it?—I think our electoral roll worked our last time to about 4,000.

201. Here then are 4,000 Anglo-Indian adults (mostly men, but including a few women) spread over that enormous area of Bengal, and we are told they elect you as one of their two members. As a mere matter of machinery, how is it done?—Our population is more or less concentrated at certain points. Calcutta is a very strong centre for us. Asansol has a large railway colony, and also Kharagpur and the people in the mofussil are generally concentrated at the large railway junctions.

202. Do you happen to remember how many polling centres there were when the election took place for the Anglo-Indian representation in the Bengal Council?—At out-stations I think there were fifteen polling stations, and in Calcutta alone we had about seven.

203. Was there a contest?—A very lively contest.

204. How many votes did the successful candidates get out of the 4,000? I want to see how far the constituency really polls?—About 1,900.

205. Perhaps you will let me have a Memorandum which will show me. I did not want to know who voted for whom, but how many of the constituency were able to vote?—We have those figures.*

206. Do you think it would be an advantage or not if instead of having two members or more elected for the whole area, the area were divided up as far as electing Anglo-Indian representatives is concerned?—I do not think that would be very acceptable to our people, but what I would suggest as a matter of arrangement with the Government is that the period of polling should be extended and be longer than at present.

207. What is the period?—One day. As I have just explained, a large number of our people are workers on the railway and it usually is the case that half the running staff, both drivers and guards, are away out of their home station on the day the election takes place. If a man, for instance, gets his name registered at Kharagpur and suppose he is out of that station on the day of voting, Government does not allow him ot vote elsewhere; they say that he must vote only at Kharagpur and nowhere else.

208. Of course, there are obvious difficulties, you see, in the election machinery; it is to be seen that people do not vote twice. Let me ask you one other thing. Do you suggest that as far as Anglo-Indians go the franchise should be lowered?—I would suggest that the franchise should be based on, say, a man who has had primary education.

209. What does that mean?—I mean literacy. As a matter of fact all our people—every man—every adult—is capable of exercising a vote.

210. You mean to say that you desire for the Anglo-Indian community adult suffrage?—Yes, and I think they are quite capable of exercising a very rational vote.

Lieut.-Colonel Gidney: Including women, too.

Chairman: I am interested to hear that.

Lieut. Colonel Gidney; We are cent. per cent. literates.

211. Chairman: Does that mean that there is no Anglo-Indian who cannot read—(Lieut. Colonel Gidney): Yes, sir.

212. I see you suggest that for the future Assembly the Anglo-Indian member or members should be elected?—Yes.

213. I am not asking you at the moment how many there should be, but what sort of franchise do you suggest?—I suggest adult suffrage. There should be no restriction regarding the size of the electorate, it should be an entire communal electorate.

214. You said that the Legislative Assembly should have elected Anglo-Indian members—one for Bengal, one for Madras, one for Bombay, one for the United Provinces, one for the Punjab and one for Burma—and that there should be a nominated member to represent other areas. This would involve six elected members. Supposing for the sake of argument—I am not expressing any views at the moment—that claim was thought to be too big, but that this community of 95,000 people were none the less entitled to, say, two or three seats in the Assembly, do you see any difficulty in the matter of voting by constituencies which would be spread over a vast area?—I see your point and I see the difficulty. Might I, in reply, state that with the Anglo-Indian community it is quite a different matter. If you are to take education as the basis for the franchise in India then, out of the 350,000 Indians who are to-day studying in the middle schools the Anglo-Indian community supplies about 45,000, i.e., about one-eighth. If you take the secondary education out of 135,000 in this stage in the whole of India Anglo-Indians provide nearly 3,000. So then from the point of view of education, I submit very respectfully that we have a claim for larger representation in the Legislatures.

Vide Q. 215, p. 317.

215. I am afraid you have not understood my question. My question was, supposing that it turns out to be that the number of Anglo-Indian members in the Assembly was less than you propose, do you think that election could be done by electors posting their vote?—Yes, sir, I think in Madras voting is done by post. We have a very high sense of responsibility and it would be our greatest endeavour to facilitate elections.

Chairman: You know, gentlemen, we were asking Mr. Maguire about the voting figures in the Bengal legislative council. We know there are two Anglo-Indian seats for which four candidates contested. The total number of electors was 4,410 and the total number of electors who voted was 1,577; this comes to abour 36 per cent.

Mr. Maguire: May I add, sir, why we lost a large number of votes was owing to the difficulty which I just stated, men could not vote because they were out of station.

216. Chairman: I have got before me the comparative figures in the census report for 1921 and 1911. We have already noticed that in 1921 the total number of Anglo-Indians for the whole of India was 113 thousand and odd while it was 100 thousand and odd in 1911. Is it your impression that the number is still going up?—(Lieut. Colonel Gidney): I do not accept those figures. With all respect I tell you that those figures do not indicate the actual strength of the Anglo-Indian community. I make no hesitation in saying that to that figure should be added at least 40,000 more of those Anglo-Indians who for purposes of electoral rolls are classed as Europeans.

217. Still you see that when you told me that there was an increase of something like 10 per cent. you surely referred to the comparative figures of the census?—Yes.

218. Major Attlee: Do you think that in your opinion the census figures show a small increase?—(Lieut. Colonel Gidney): Yes, especially on the railways. But I would add that when a man is engaged on the railways, the medical officer who has got the power to classify men according to communities says, "you are a European," "you are an Anglo-Indian." and accordingly he is relegated to that category. I was closely associated with Mr. Maguire's election, and I then found that 60 per cent of the members of my Association on the Railways who were known as Anglo-Indians were classed as Europeans by their medical officers and were on the European electoral roll and so we lost their votes.

219. Your community has shown an increase from 100 thousand to 113 thousand. What I wanted to know was if, in your opinion, when the next census comes it will show something like 120 thousand or 130 thousand?—Yes, quite so.

Chairman: That is what I wanted to know also. I see the point is mentioned in Volume I of the Report on the Census of India. I will read a passage from page 231. After setting out the figures which Major Attlee was just quoting, the census officer says, "The actual figures of Europeans and of the 'Anglo-Indian Domiciled Community' are always somewhat doubtful, owing to the tendency of the latter to return themselves as Europeans and of Indian Christians to claim to be Anglo-Indians. In Calcutta European enumerators were employed wherever possible for quarters where Europeans or Anglo-Indians were in considerable numbers and this plan undoubtedly produced greater accuracy in discriminating between Europeans, Anglo-Indians and Indian Christians in Calcutta."

220. Would you tell me one thing more. I want to be quite clear on this point. I suppose a great bulk of your community class themselves, from the point of view of religion, as Christians?—Entirely.

221. We are going to hear this afternoon a deputation from the Indian Christian community, and would like to know how the two communities stand electorally speaking. Will the Indian Christian electorate be entirely distinct from the Anglo-Indian electorate.—It is distinct. I do not know whether they have an electorate at all; it is not based on religious classification.

222. I think they have it in Madras.—I stand corrected, sir. That is right, because they have a very large population there. May I add, sir, that the orders of Government on Indianisation have killed the desire of an Indian Christian to class himself to-day as Anglo-Indian because his chances of employment are considered to be higher as an Indian Christian than as an Anglo-Indian.

* * * * * * * * * *

Memorandum Submitted by the ALL-INDIA CONFERENCE OF INDIAN CHRISTIANS.

I—.Introduction.

This Memorandum is being submitted by the All India Conference of Indian Christians, and deals with some of the issues now before the Statutory Commission. It particularly attempts to examine the position of Indian Christians in the new constitution of India. The All-India Conference of Indian Christians was organised in 1914 in Calcutta, and has since then met every year in different cities of India. The last Session, which was the Fourteenth Session in succession, was held in Allahabad in December last year. Some of the most prominent Indian Christians have been called upon to preside over its deliberations, namely :—

Late Dr. George Nundi, M.A., LL.D., of Hyderabad, Deccan.
Hon. Raja Sir Harnam Singh Ahluwalia, K.C.I.E., Member of the Council of State, Punjab.
Mr. M. S. Das, C.I.E., M.A., B.L., for some time Minister in Bihar and Orissa Government, ex M.L.C.
Hon. Mr. Justice M. D. Devadoss, now of Madras High Court.
Rai Bahadur A. C. Mukerji, B.A., United Provinces.
S. C. Mukerji, Esq., M.A., B.L., M.L.C., Bengal.
Dewan Bahadur W. L. Venkatramiah, Madras.
Dr. S. K. Datta, B.A., M.B., Ch.B., ex M.L.A., Bengal.
K. T. Paul, Esq., B.A., O.B.E., Madras.
Dr. J. R. Chitambar, M.A., D.D., United Provinces.
Mr. K. L. Rallia Ram, B.A., Punjab, ex M.L.C.
Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram, B.Sc., B.T., Punjab.

This Conference is composed of delegates of the Indian Christian Associations representing all provinces in India.

The Conference appoints a Council and an Executive Committee annually.

This Memorandum is based on the resolutions passed at the different Sessions of the Conference. The present Memorandum has been prepared by a Special Sub-Committee.

II.—Dominion Status, the Accepted Goal.

The famous pronouncement of August, 1917, declared that the goal of the British Administration was the establishment of responsible Government in India within a measurable time. The Indian Christian Community shares with the rest of the country the desire to see responsible Government established as early as possible. It accepts Self-Government within the British Empire on Dominion lines as the goal to be achieved. It desires to maintain its connection with Great Britain, and is convinced that the partnership of India in the Commonwealth of Nations will be for the mutual good of all concerned. The Community also welcomed the introduction of Reforms as the first stage towards the attainment of this ideal.

III.—System of Diarchy.

In its opinion the principles underlying diarchy were sound as a step towards full responsible Government provided they could have been put into practical operation. Diarchy contemplated that certain departments of the Administration should be under the direction of the elected representatives of the people and administered by Ministers responsible to the Legislatures. In our opinion this system has partially failed for various reasons. Among others, the following :—

1. The inter-relation of reserved and transferred subjects at many points makes the exercise of full responsibility by Ministers over their departments extremely difficult, as is clear from the evidence given by several ex-Ministers before the Muddiman Committee. Unless the Executive which is responsible for the administration of transferred subjects is given freedom to exercise its powers to the fullest extent with as few restrictions as possible, and unless it is permitted fuller control over the services which administer those departments, it cannot be expected to discharge its duties effectually. It is not necessary that the services should be recruited by the executive, or that it should have over them the right of final decision of appointment or dismissal—the interests of the superior services may need to be safeguarded—but at the same time Ministers should be allowed the greatest amount of liberty in choosing their own officers to carry out their policy. The appointment of Superior Services should, in our opinion, be with Public Service Commissions.

It is contended that the Secretaries to Government have had direct access to the Governor and in some cases have been able to carry their point as against their own superiors the Ministers. This procedure is at variance with the spirit of Diarchy. The Electorates and the Ministers should learn by successes as by failures and risking experiments. We recognize that in extreme cases when law and order are likely to be seriously affected, extraordinary powers must rest in the hands of the Governor.

2. The system of joint responsibility or what may be termed the cabinet form of Government has been absent in most Provinces. The real training in Self-Government can only come when party system on inter-communal lines is established and a cabinet form of Government can be introduced, so that the Governor will call upon the leader of the majority party to recommend the names of the members of the cabinet which in the ordinary course should be accepted by the Governor. It has even been contended that in certain cases Ministers have worked at cross purposes and have not acted as a team with joint responsibility for the policy of their administration. Only with the introduction of a cabinet form of Government will real responsibility rest on the Executive and the Legislature on whose will the Executive is dependent. These are some of the reasons why we contend that Diarchy in the provinces should be abandoned.

IV.—Provincial Autonomy.

The All-India Conference of Indian Christians at its Twelfth Session held in December 1925 passed the following resolution :—

> Resolved that the time is ripe for the granting of autonomy to the provinces and for the introduction of responsibility in the Central Legislature.

We believe that the time has come when the unitary system of government should be introduced by the grant of provincial autonomy in all the major provinces. This seems to us to be the solution of the problem. Any subject which cannot be transferred at this stage in the provinces might be controlled and directed by the Central Government, the provinces being given full power over the remaining subjects.

It is necessary, however, in our opinion to introduce joint responsibility and a cabinet form of Government along with provincial autonomy.

V.—Diarchy in the Central Government.

While we have advocated the abolition of Diarchy in the provinces, we desire its introduction in the Central Government as the only means of advance at present possible. Unlike the provincial autonomy, it may not be possible for India to assume full Dominion Status at this stage. For one thing it will be necessary, when that step is taken, that the armed forces of the Crown should have been considerably Indianised. If we may be permitted to interject at this stage, we cannot but express our sense of the keenest disappointment at the decision of the Government in not giving effect to the recommendations of the Skeen Committee, modest as they were. We regard the broadening of the Government's Military Policy towards rapid Indianisation, and the training of Indian nationals for all ranks of combatant warfare, as an essential and integral part of any policy of enabling India to assume full responsible Government. The attitude of the Government in this connection is capable of much further advance, and we draw the attention of the Commission to this very vital subject.

Having accepted the position that complete Dominion Status at this stage may be outside the domain of practical politics, we urge that as many departments as possible should be handed over to Ministers in the Central Government, who will be answerable to the Legislative Assembly, and will hold office at its will. We are unable to examine in detail the implication of this suggestion. Roughly, Defence, Foreign and Political relationships will remain the responsibility of the Reserved Half of the Central Government. There may, however, be other subjects in the first instance that cannot be transferred.

If any subject or subjects are retained by the Imperial Government which ultimately should be passed on to the provinces, they can be transferred to the provinces by stages. From the nature of the case some kind of Federal System will have to be adopted for the future Government of India. As in the Canadian and Australian constitutions, the domain of the Provincial, Central or Federal Parliaments will have to be clearly laid down, the residuary power vesting with the Federal Legislature. While subjects in India must of necessity vary, we will suggest the demarcation on Canadian lines. It may be that in the beginning more subjects will have to be allocated to the Federal Parliament than in Australia or Canada. This division of subjects should be periodically reviewed till final adjustments have been arrived at, and a full blown Federal System has been evolved.

VI.—Representation of Indian Christians in the Legislatures.

This is the main subject with which the Memorandum deals, from the particular point of view of the Indian Christian Community. It is fully recognised that there are far more important and far-reaching issues before the Statutory Commission than the position of a particular minority in the civic life and the future constitution of India. Many important and influential organisations and qualified individuals will address the Commission on those momentous questions. Some members of our Community will have taken a share as members of those organisations in the formulation of those memoranda for submission to the Commission. We, therefore, refrain from submitting at length our views on such general questions in detail. However, we do not desire to give the impression that we are only concerned with the position of our own Community and are not interested in the larger and more vital problems of the nation. We deal mainly with this subject because it particularly affects us.

At the same time, the Indian Christian Community is greatly interested in the future constitutional development of our country, and will watch with interest the report of your Commission.

1. Communal Representation is not the Ideal.—We desire at the outset to state that the ideal constitution for India is one in which representation on civic bodies is not based on communal considerations and where sectional interests are subordinated to a common loyalty to the nation as a whole. If India is to attain Self-Government, the only Self-Government worth working for will be on that basis. Holding this view, we recognise that the only logical position for us is to advocate the abolition of all forms of communal representation, and indeed we are prepared to accept this position even though in some ways our own interests as a community may for a time be endangered. All the same, we shall be most happy if it is decided to do away with the system of representation by communities. We are afraid, however, that sentiment in the country may make this achievement impossible for the present.

As a matter of fact, it is now generally accepted by a majority of our leaders that the only advance possible at the present time is by the representation of communities through reservation of seats in a system of Joint-Electorates.

2. Common Electorates for Indian Christians.—In case communal representation is retained for any section, we do not see any other alternative but to press for adequate representation of our Community in the representative institutions of our country. We are therefore constrained to ask for the recognition of our Community as a unit whose interests must be borne in mind when this question is discussed and a solution is arrived at.

There is a section of our Community, including a few leaders of prominence, who hold that in no case should we ask for a separate representation through separate electorates. But to the best of our knowledge the majority of the Indian Christians do not agree with this view. They will welcome reservation of seats in general electorates if this system is adopted for all communities, but, if this method is not found possible of general introduction, they are constrained to ask for separate electorates and that only in the last resort, and in preference to nomination.

In case there is to be a continuance of the system of communal representation, the Indian Christians as a whole consider it more advisable to ask for the same method to be applied to them. In a system of real general electorates, an Indian Christian, if he has identified himself with the interests of the nation, may successfully contest a seat, obtaining votes from all sections of the communities. In the case of the present type of pseudo-general electorates, which comprise one very large and one or two smaller communities such a happening, if not impossible, is very unlikely, In reality, the term "general electorates" as applied to present constituencies is a misnomer. For instance, in the Punjab where Sikhs and Mahomedans are in separate compartments, the Indian Christian can hardly hope to capture a general seat, as Hindus must always think of themselves and their interests as opposed to Muslim and Sikh interests. They cannot afford to let a seat go to a minor community. The same is true of most of the other provinces.

In the case of genuine general electorates, even at a time of communal clash, an Indian Christian may capture a seat, as many Muslims might prefer to vote for him in preference to a Hindu, and vice versa.

Some members of our Community desire that, if the present system is not to be disturbed, our case might be met by reservation of seats in what are at present termed general constituencies. We must however, state that there is a sharp and wide divergence of opinion on this point. A considerable number among us feel that reservation of seats can only be effective in general constituencies comprising of all communities.

At this stage we cannot but protest at the artificial division of the country into Muslims and non-Muslims. We are as much non-Muslims as non-Hindus. We have our connection with both communities, and our membership consists of converts from both. We are Indians and not non-Muslims or non-Hindus. The present division therefore is unsound and unfair to us. We can, however, understand a division whereby in each province the majority community forms one group of constituencies and all minorities are grouped together in a second set of constituencies with reservations for various interests within it. In this way the division will not be between Muslims and non-Muslims, but between the majority community and the minorities in each province. Thus Indian Christians will be grouped with the Muslims where the latter are in a minority, and with Hindus where these are in a similar position. This will be a logical and reasonable division. We do not, however, advocate this course unless it is absolutely impossible to go beyond the status quo in the matter of communal representation. All that we desire to submit is, that the suggestion we make is more logical and based on at least some definite principle as compared with the present practice.

VII.—Safeguard for Minorities in a system of Representation by Communities.

In the parliamentary type of democratic government, it may be contended that minorities have really no adequate safeguard. They must submit to the rule of the majority. So long as the majorities are changeable and derive their power from a powerful electorate which changes its opinions from time to time, thus presenting an opportunity to the minority to become the majority at some future time, the system can truly be called democratic. But, if majorities are to be permanent and based on religious convictions or affinities, it is idle to claim that responsible democratic Government has been evolved in such a society. It may, however, be decided that India is to pass through a transitional stage when representation by communities is deemed necessary.

In a system of representation by communities one way of mitigating the rigours of a permanent communal majority is by making the voice of the minorities more effective by giving them larger representation than they are entitled to on the basis of their numerical strength. The smaller the minority the larger ought to be the proportional representation given to it within, of course, reasonable limits. This principle was recognised by the Congress-League Pact of 1916, known as the Lucknow Pact, formulated under the sagacious leadership of one of the greatest leaders of political thought in India, the late Gopal Krishna Gokhale. When the new constituencies were fixed under the Reforms, this principle was also accepted by the framers of the Chelmsford-Montagu Report and put into practice in the present constitution.

We believe that, under the circumstances, the Lucknow Compact is on the right lines, if representation by communities is to continue.

VIII.—Are Indian Christian sentitled to Separate Representation?

The chief defect of the Lucknow Pact lies in the fact that it confines itself only to the two major communities, and entirely ignores other minorities whose numbers justify a separate representation in the civic bodies. It has already been recognised that Sikhs are such a minority, and practical recognition has also been given to Indian Christians by allotting to them five elected seats in the Madras Council and one nominated seat each in five other provinces. We beg to submit that the Indian Christian Community is entitled to a separate representation, or, if the system of joint electorates is accepted, to a "reservation" of seats. Some of the reasons in support of this position may be stated as follows:

1. We are the third largest community in India, and we are found in an appreciable number in almost all the major provinces of the country. Our number was 47 lakhs (nearly 5 millions) in the Census of 1921, out of which about 29 lakhs (3 millions) are in the British provinces alone. It may be pointed out that the figures in subsidiary Table 2, page 124 of Census Report, Volume 1, part 1, are a little higher for the British provinces, which are our main concern, than those given in part 2 Table VI, page 40. The total for whole India remains unaffected.

2. Fortunately or unfortunately we are organised socially as a separate group with our own institutions, social and educational, and possess a distinctive life of our own. We are genuinely desirous of maintaining intimate contacts with the other communities at all points, but we cannot ignore the fact that we are more or less a separate entity.

3. We are keenly interested in Christian institutions being maintained for the good of the country by Christian Missionaries, and are intimately and constitutionally connected in their running. These interests are by no means small; their value and importance to the problem of national reconstruction and social and moral advancement have been fully recognised by leaders of Indian thought of all ranks. To give an instance, according to the Directory of Christian Missions, the Protestant Missions alone are maintaining:

6 Homes for women,
89 Agricultural Settlements,
51 Colleges,
247 High Schools,
170 Industrial Schools,
475 Middle Schools,
76 Teachers' Training Institutions,
205 Dispensaries,
213 Hospitals,
60 Leper Institutions,
8 Tuberculosis Sanatoria,
11 Homes for the Blind.

To this must be added a very large number of institutions of the Roman Catholic Church. We have not included them because we have been unable to obtain full figures.

Through the agency of these Institutions our community has rendered and is rendering useful public services to our country. The service and care of the depressed classes in various directions has become the particular concern of Christian Institutions. The intimate contact that we have thus established with these classes fits us in many ways to interpret their needs and problems in public bodies.

4. The right of separate representation, as pointed out above, has already been conceded to us, though inadequately and indirectly.

5. The Community is playing an important part in the national economy and public weal proportionally much more than is indicated by its numerical strength. In more than one province Indian Christian women are holding a very large percentage of appointments in the Educational and Medical Departments.

A well-known Hindu firm of publishers has the following comment to make in advertising a book of Indian Christian Biographies:

> "Once a negligible community, both socially and numerically Indian Christians have now attained a position of considerable influence and conscious strength. And the pick of them have shed lustre on the country in their several avocations. For, poets like Michael Madhusudan and Narayan Vaman Tilak, educationalists like Krishna Mohan Banerji and Principal Rudra, scholars like Professor Ramchandra and Mr. Swamikannu Pillai, Ministers of the Church like Lal Behary Dey, Nehemiah Goreh, Satthianadhan and the Bishop of Dornakai, publicists like Kali Charan Banerji, mystics like Sadhu Sunder Singh, social servants like Pandita Ramabai, and public workers like Dr. S. K. Datta and Mr. K. T. Paul—to mention only a few names from different parts of India—are ornaments to any community, nay, to any country, to which they may belong. Indeed, the days are long gone by when to be a Christian was to be outlandish in spirit and in mode of life. Indian Christians now happily feel the country to be their own, quite as much as members of other communities; and in fact some of their leaders have been in the vanguard of our struggle for political emancipation."

6. In the census of 1921, Indian Christians had the highest percentage of literacy as compared with other communities. The proportion of literacy for Christians was 285 per mille. In the British provinces it was 355 for males and 210 for females. This includes Europeans and Anglo-Indians, no doubt, but they form only seven per cent. of the total population of Christians. Even if their numbers are excluded, the percentage of literacy in the whole of British India remains considerably high. Another fact that needs to be borne in mind is the high literacy of women.

In this connection it should also be pointed out that a large proportion of those who are annually joining our ranks are illiterates, and come from the so-called Depressed Classes. It is the privilege of the Christian Church to uplift them and to help them to enter into the fullness of human life. But for this factor, our progress in literacy would have been proportionately much larger.

This intimate contact with the depressed classes gives us a first-hand knowledge of their needs and their disabilities. In many ways an Indian Christian can speak on their behalf, and interpret their innermost feelings.

IX.—Constitutional Safeguard for Minorities.

One other matter concerning the protection of the rights of minorities needs to be mentioned. It has been proposed in certain quarters that in the constitution of India definite clauses should be inserted safeguarding to the members of minority communities their exercise of citizenship without any hindrance or obstacle. These safeguards will have the sanction of the British Parliament. In some countries of Europe like Poland, Czechoslovakia, etc., such statutory provisions have been provided. In most cases they have been of very great value, though in one or two instances they may have broken down. We consider that on the whole such a provision will be very welcome, and, so long as the British Parliament has the responsibility for the Government in India, it shall be its duty to see that the provisions are carried out in spirit as well as in law. Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan of Allahabad has dealt with this question in his book What are the Rights of the Moslem Minority?

The rights on which we lay emphasis are as follows:

1. Free and unrestricted right to perform religious rites and ceremonies and freedom to follow religious beliefs. Religious liberty is a most important right from our point of view. This also includes the unalienable right of every citizen to propagate his faith unfettered and unhindered, without of course assailing wantonly the sacred beliefs of others, a spirit of genuine enquiry and research or the right study of comparative religion should be freely allowed.

2. Religion should not constitute a disability in the exercise of his vote by a citizen in representative institutions—local, provincial or central. In some Municipalities where communal representation prevails, constituencies are divided into Hindu, Muslim and Sikh, with the result that an Indian Christian is deprived of the right of contesting a seat, or in some cases that of voting. This deprives the Indian Christians of their right of citizenship which is the birthright of every subject of His Majesty.

Whatever the system, every citizen who is qualified to vote should not be debarred from the exercise of his right merely because he is the follower of a particular religion. This is a fundamental basis of all democracies, and we cannot conceive of Responsible Government in India unless this disability is removed.

3. All offices, ranks, and positions in the country should be open to all citizens without discrimination. It should be clearly stated that religion ought in no way to stand in the way of appointments to public services. At this stage a word needs to be said concerning the reservation of posts for a particular community. We believe in the policy of the open door. We hold that merit is the sole criterion by which posts in the public services should be given. It is contended that, for the encouragement of backward classes, it is necessary in the beginning that a certain number of posts may be earmarked for them. We can only subscribe to this doctrine to a very limited extent. Whenever there are applicants, who, after any tests that may have been applied, are of equal or nearly equal merit, preference may be given to those who belong to backward communities.

X.—Communal Representation in Services.

But there is an aspect of the matter to which we desire to draw the pointed attention of the Commission. If posts or admissions in Educational Institutions are based on communal considerations, small minorities like ours are likely to suffer most. Numerically small communities by the very nature of things must lie under disabilities and handicaps. But they have the consolation that they can partially make up by quality what they lose by the smallness of numbers. They must correspondingly work harder and be prepared to compete on terms of equality with larger numbers. If by their numerical strength they are entitled to one place, they may by their sheer merit obtain ten. So we look with a great deal of misgiving on any system that apportions seats in public services on numerical strength. Such a system is highly unfair and detrimental to small minorities. At any rate it should be clearly laid down that, even if seats are earmarked for a comparatively large minority, it shall be open for smaller minorities to claim as many seats as they can by merit alone. For instance, if there are forty per cent. positions reserved for, say, community B, and if an Indian Christian is more qualified than the fortieth person of that community who has been appointed under that fixed ratio to a post, he must give place to an Indian Christian or to a member of another small minority who on merit is adjudged better. This is a real safeguard, and we cannot but strongly press for it.

XI.—System of Nomination should be abandoned in any case.

With the exception of Madras, in all other provinces the representation of our Community in Provincial Councils is by nomination. There is a unanimous agreement on the part of Indian Christians that this method of representation is extremely unsatisfactory and should be done away with. The reasons for this conclusion are obvious. In the first instance, the very fact of nomination is a considerable handicap to our representatives in the Council. On one hand, there is a pressure on them from the side of the Government Whip; on the other hand, if they conscientiously vote with the Government, truly representing the feelings of the Community, their vote is discounted in the public eye as being the result of an undue Government influence; so their motives are very often questioned and their influence considerably curtailed. In the second place, like all other human institutions, the Government in nominating persons is prone to keeping its eyes on the number of votes it can command in the Legislatures. It naturally hesitates before nominating a man of absolute independence of judgment. Cases have happened in the past when according to public opinion nominated members who have exhibited any large measure of judgment and independence have not been renominated. Whatever reasons there may have been for this action on the part of the Government, it cannot but lend colour to the feeling that a nominated member is more or less under the thumb of the Government. In the eye of the general public, a nominated member is considered more the representative of Government than of the community. We therefore unanimously and strongly urge on behalf of the Indian Christian Community that nominations, as far as the representatives of the Community are concerned, should altogether be abolished. As a matter of fact, we will go further and say that in the new constitution the number of seats available for nomination should be decreased. In case, as we hope, the number of the members constituting Legislative Councils is enlarged, we would suggest that, while the number of elected members is increased, the number of nominated members should remain as at present, with the result that they will form much smaller proportion of the Councils than they do at present.

In this connection, it may also be pointed out that, as long as Indian Christians in certain provinces can mainly come through nomination, they are entirely deprived of any chance of being appointed Ministers, whether there may be an opportunity in this direction for an Indian Christian or not. It is a serious disability on theoretical grounds, and on this ground alone nominations should be rejected.

XII.—Methods of Representation.

1. We have already stated that we would be happy if the system of communal representation is abolished, because in that case the question of our representation will not arise and we will be prepared to take our chances, if we have any, in the general electorates. At the same time we desire to make it clear unmistakably that, in case representation by religious communities is to be retained, we are fully entitled to a representation in the same way, and, under the circumstances, that is the only way open for any community which is large enough for claiming representation.

2. Joint Electorates.—Having laid down the principles above enunciated, viz., (i) that the Indian Christian Community would gladly vote for the adoption of general electorates all along the line, embracing all voters, whatever their religious faith, and (ii) that it desires that, in case this principle is at present unacceptable to major communities or is not given effect to, in that case during the transitional period Indian Christians are also entitled to a separate representation.

The problem then arises, should communal representation be through separate electorates or through reservation of seats in joint electorates? Though we hold the view that separate electorates have been the source of friction and have done harm to the growth of real national life in the country, we are not convinced fully that the system of joint electorates is the right solution of this vexed problem. For, after all, the real problem is not of the system or of the method through which representation is secured but of the mentality that lies behind it. If the citizens of India begin to think nationally and place national interest before sectional and communal interests, the danger will be considerably minimised. If however the mentality remains unaltered, joint electorates may easily be worked in such a way as to promote discord and disharmony. If the other communities or the Government come to the conclusion that joint electorates would tend to lessen friction and bring about a better relationship, we as a Community would welcome this system, and indeed there are arguments in favour of this experiment being tried. It should, however, be pointed out that in actual practice this system of joint electorates will be very difficult to apply to Indian Christians, and some special means will have to be devised other than those of nomination, for ensuring that our voice is not altogether mute in the councils of our country. Before we proceed further, however, we have two suggestions to make for the consideration of the Commission.

1. That a mixed system of joint and separate electorates be tried, viz., that both the Imperial and Provincial Legislatures should consist of a majority of such members who are elected through joint electorates, but there should be also representation of the various communities through separate electorates so that special interests of points of view of the orthodox section of the community are also fully represented. In this way it might be possible to throw more and more seats open to general electorates, and to eliminate separate communal representation by such stages as may be clearly laid down in the very beginning.

2. That in each province a Bicameral System be adopted, and that the popular house consist of the representatives elected through joint electorates only, preferably without any reservation. If possible, some form of voting by proportional representation may be adopted for this house. In adition to this house, there may be a second house where communities may be represented through separate electorates, and also other interests like Commerce, Industry, Labour, etc. Since a Bill will have to be passed by both the Houses the communities will have their safeguards in the second house. The constitution of these houses should come up for consideration at every appointment of a Statutory Commission, and would therefore provide a natural means of progress towards a system of general electorates throughout.

We wish to make it clear however that we are not advocates of a Bicameral System in the provinces on general grounds. Our advocacy of the second house is limited to the use of this system for the safeguarding of communal interests. In case this suggestion is adopted, other vested interests can also be accommodated in the upper house. Apart from this we prefer a single chamber system for the provinces.

XIII.—Principle of Representation by Communities.

1. We have deliberately and consciously set out ourselves against making any exorbitant or excessive demand for our Community. We have tried to study the problem as impartially as is possible for us, in the light of the principles on which the constitution is based. The claims we now put forward are to the best of our belief equitable and just. They are based on the principles enunciated above and generally accepted so long as representation by communities is deemed the only practical way, namely, all important minorities should be represented in excess of their numerical strength with due regard to the position and the interests of the majorities.

It cannot be denied that the application of this principle is often very difficult and hazardous. On examining the present ratio of allotment of seats to various communities in various legislatures, it is our considered opinion that the division is just and equitable; all that we urge is that this principle should be extended to our own Community as well. We have examined this question in greater detail later on. We should state, however, that there is no one general principle which can apply to all the provinces. It cannot be contended that, because community A, which forms such and such per cent. of the total population, is given N number of seats in Province B, therefore the community C in Province D bearing the same proportion relative to other communities is entitled to the same number of seats in its own province. The question can only be settled in each province on its own merits. In our opinion this is the only practical way of solving the problem.

2. Representation on Population basis.—While the principle enunciated above is in our opinion equitable it may present difficulties in its practical application It has been contended that the simplest solution is to give every community representation on a purely numerical basis. There is no doubt that, from the point of view of simplicity, this principle has got a great deal in its favour. We understand that the Indian National Congress has agreed to this formula, but it has also laid down that the minorities should be willing to give mutual concessions to each other in various provinces As soon as a reservation of this description is applied, this simple formula becomes at once complicated, and, in other words, gives recognition to the principle of excessive representation of minorities indirectly. If the representation by numerical strength is to be recognized as the guiding principle of the future constitution, we as a community will gladly accept it, though we do not consider it sound in the present condition of the country. We would suggest that in this case small minorities may be given a seat by allotment or by reservation, wherever they are in appreciable numbers, with a further provision that, wherever the community is entitled to a one-third seat, the fraction should always be converted into a full seat.

3. Our growing numbers should be taken into consideration.—One further factor in regard to our Community needs to be taken into consideration when proportional representation of various communal groups is being worked out. In the case of our Community our numbers have been growing much faster than other communities. This enquiry is being held three years before the next census is due. New figures will not be available till one or two years after 1931. By that time the proportion of seats in different legislatures will have been determined as a result of the Commission, and will have been fixed for ten years. This fact needs to be borne in mind in order that our just claims may not be overlooked. Our progress in the past will appear from the following table. We would once refer to the observation of the Census Commissioner to the effect that the number of Indian Christians in some provinces were considerably underestimated.

We notice that the Buddhist is the only other community which has increased in the same or to a greater degree, but Buddhists are mainly to be found in Burmah, and therefore any problem that may arise on account of them is only confined to that province.

Proportion per 10,000 of population :

	1921	1911	1901	1891	1881
Hindus ...	6,589	6,688	6,835	7,014	7,197
Sikhs ...	96	89	68	64	63
Muslims ...	2,407	2,351	2,324	2,240	2,260
Christians ...	123	102	82	68	58
Buddhists ...	465	436	406	321	172

XIV.—Our Representation in the Legislatures.

We now proceed to examine our representation, as compared with other communities, in the Central and Provincial Legislatures. The percentage of communities is based on the Subsidiary Table I in the Census Report, India, 1921, and is further in agreement with the proportions given in the latest publication India, 1927-28, by Mr. Coatman. The percentage of the Muslim Community is also incorporated in a table given in a pamphlet entitled What are the Rights of the Muslim Minority in India, by Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan of Allahabad.

The percentage of various communities in British provinces is as follows :—

Hindus (including Jains and Buddhists)	70·8
Muslims	24·01
Christians ... ... over	1·23
Sikhs	·96
Tribal Religions and others	3·0

A word of explanation is required as to the use of the term Hindu in place of general constituencies throughout this Memorandum. In most of the provinces the general constituencies are in effect Hindu constituencies so long, at any rate, as they are separate constituencies for Muslims and others. For a member of a minority community, except in very exceptional cases, it is practically impossible to be returned from these constituencies. There have been exceptions that only prove the rule.

1. Council of State.—In the Council of State the seats are distributed as follows :

	Table A (Including the special constituencies.)	Table B (Excluding the special constituencies.)
Hindus ...	50 per cent.	59 per cent.
Muslims ...	32 „	37·5 „
Sikhs ...	3 „	3·5 „
Special ...	15 „

No Provision for Indian Christians.

There is no statutory provision for the nomination of an Indian Christian. In the last two Councils of State, however, an Indian Christian has specifically been nominated.

We are entitled to One Seat.

By virtue of our numbers we, like the Sikhs, are entitled to at least one elected seat. The exact method of election for one seat for the whole of India is not easy to determine, but we have further on suggested one or two ways of indirect election, and the Commission through their wider experience may be able to devise some other suitable method.

Suggestion for an Enlarged Council.

We regard the present constitution of the Council of State to be unsatisfactory. The proportion of nominated and official members to the elected element is too high. We suggest a Council of State of at least 100 elected members roughly divided as follows :—

Hindus	... 50
Muslims	... 32
Sikhs	... 3
Christians	... 3	(One to be reserved for South India and two for the rest of India.)
Special	... 12

The Franchise should be extended to—

(i) All members of the Municipalities and District Boards.

(ii) All M.A.'s or holders of equivalent degree, and B.A.'s of not less than ten years' standing.

(iii) The Land Revenue qualification should be reduced to Rs. 500 per annum and Income Tax to Rs. 10,000 per annum.

2. Legislative Assembly.—Seats in the Assembly are at present distributed as follows :—

Table A
(Proportion of the Communities in the Assembly including special constituencies.)

Hindus	... ...	48 per cent.
Muslims	... ...	30 ,,
Sikhs	... ...	2 ,,
Special interests	...	20 ,,

In case the special interests are not reckoned in the percentages and only such seats are considered as are apportioned to the various communities, the percentage works out as follows :—

Table B
(Including the special constituencies.)

Hindus	... ...	61 per cent.
Muslims	... ...	36·6 ,,
Sikhs	... ...	2·4 ,,

Representation of Europeans and Anglo-Indians.

It should be noted here that merely on the numerical strength Europeans and Anglo-Indians are hardly entitled to any seat in the legislatures, but on account of their vested interest and their peculiar position they have been given special representation; so we have included their representation in the class of special representation along with land holders and special interests, such as Commerce, Industries, Labour and Education.

The principle of excessive representation of minorities.

The principle of excessive representation of minorities has been duly kept in view in making this apportionment. To our mind the present proportion is equitable and just except in regard to our Indian Christian Community. At present there is only one Indian Christian who is a member of the Assembly, and that also by nomination. There is, however, no provision in the rules for the nomination of an Indian Christian.

Our Suggestion.

Our suggestion is that the Assembly should consist of about 300 elected members as this would make the Assembly much more representative and would also decrease the size of the constituencies. In our opinion the present size of the constituencies is very large and needs to be curtailed. In an Assembly of about 300 elected members we suggest the following apportionment :—

Hindus	145
Muslims	100
Indian Christians	9
Sikhs	8
Special interests	38

If the present numbers are maintained, the Indian Christian Community would be entitled to three seats, This will be in keeping with the principles on which we have emphasized. It may be pointed out that, with less than one per cent. of population, the Sikhs have two seats in the Assembly, while, with over one per cent., Indian Christians have no elected seats. The number of Indian Christians is likely to be considerably larger when the figures of the next Census will be available. In support of this contention we have not only the past rate of progress but also the Mission and Church statistics which are tabulated from time to time.

The Method of Election.

The problem, however, to be considered is, how are our representatives to be returned ? We have already stated that the system of nominations, as far as the representation of our Community is considered, should be entirely eliminated. We cannot too strongly emphasize this point. There is a unanimous and strong opinion of the Community behind this feeling.

In case the separate electorates are retained, then the matter is simple. Out of these, three seats should be reserved for South India and two seats should be apportioned to various provinces or groups of provinces on an alternate rotating system. For instance, we would suggest the following groupings :—

1. Bengal, Assam and Orissa.
2. Bihar and the United Provinces.
3. Delhi, Punjab, N.W. F. P., and Baluchistan.
4. Bombay Presidency, Central Provinces, Central India, Ajmere-Mewara and Berar.

Each of these groups could elect one candidate to an alternate Assembly. In case the Assembly is enlarged, as we hope it will be, and our modest and just request for nine seats is accepted in an Assembly of 300, three seats should be reserved for Madras Presidency, and six should be divided among the other Provinces of India.

Qualifications for Voters.

We suggest the modification of qualifications on the following lines :—

1. All graduates of recognized Universities;
2. Payment of Income Tax ;
3. House rent of Rs. 300 a year, or ownership of a house of that value;
4. The "payer" of Land Revenue assessed at Rs. 100 per annum;
5. All members of Municipalities and District Boards;
6. All Chairmen and Vice-Chairmen of Central Co-operative Banks.

In making these suggestions we are aware that some of these qualifications vary in different provinces. Some of them will be of general application, others will have to be adjusted, i.e. (3) and (4) according to the conditions of the provinces. This particular suggestion is based on Punjab standard and will have to be varied for other provinces as in the present rules. (1) and (2) are of general application.

Reservation of Seats.

In a system of joint electorates, we find a great deal of difficulty as to exactly how our representatives can be elected. But if any workable system can be evolved whereby seats can be reserved for our Community, we shall welcome this sytem. We would be even prepared to accept an indirect method of election if the system of joint electorates is decided upon as an advance on the policy of communal electorates. Two possible methods, though we cannot regard them as entirely satisfactory, suggest themselves to us.

First Method.

That the Council of State and the Assembly themselves should elect the nine Indian Christian members from different provinces as specified above, or, to use another phrase, may co-opt nine Indian Christians. We would, however, desire in that case that the candidates should be nominated by at least 50 Indian Christian voters to the Council of State, and by 100 voters in the case of the Assembly. Thus, while they will be nominated by 100 Indian Christian voters, they will be actually ballotted upon by members of the Assembly. In this case, the voting should be on the system of proportional representation by single transferable vote.

Second Method.

Elected Indian Christian Provincial legislators might, out of their number, elect nine, and the vacancies thus created might be filled by a bye-election, or a system might be evolved where from the very beginning alternate candidates are elected. This system is not a new one and was in vogue in the Legislative Councils of Pre-Morley-Minto Reform period. These methods can only be temporary and transitional, and can gradually be eliminated. It may be that in certain cases direct election may be possible through reservation in joint electorates. Provincial legislators would themselves have been returned by some sort of joint electorates.

MEMORANDUM SUBMITTED BY THE ALL-INDIA CONFERENCE OF INDIAN CHRISTIANS. [Continued.

3. Provincial Legislatures.

(A) MADRAS PRESIDENCY.

(a) The proportion of population is as follows :—

Hindus	88·7 per cent.
Muslims	6·7 ,,
Christians	3·2 ,,
Tribal Religions	1·4 ,,

(b) The proportion of seats is as follows :—

	Table A. (Including the special seats.)	Table B. (Excluding the special seats.)
Hindus ...	65·5 per cent.	78 per cent.
Muslims ...	13·5 ,,	16 ,,
Christians	5·5 ,,	6 ,,
Special constituencies	15·5 ,,

(c) We are already entitled, on the principles stated above, to at least seven seats in the Madras Presidency on the present basis. We would however suggest that the Council should be enlarged so as to have about 200 elected members, which we suggest should be distributed on an equitable basis as follows :—

Hindus	125 seats.
Muslims	30 ,,
Christians	15 ,,
Special constituencies	30 ,,

(B) THE PUNJAB.

(a) The population of the Punjab is as follows :—

Hindus	31 per cent.
Muslims	55·3 ,,
Sikhs	11·1 ,,
Christians	1·6 ,,
Others less than	1 ,,

(b) The seats at present are distributed as follows :—

	Table A. (Including the special seats.)	Table B. (Excluding the special seats.)
Hindus ...	28 per cent.	31 per cent.
Sikhs ...	17 ,,	19 ,,
Muslims ...	45 ,,	50 ,,
Special constituencies	10 ,,

(c) The Punjab problem is in many ways a difficult one, particularly as the problem is affected by the presence of a strong minority like the Sikhs. We understand that the Muslims claim that they should have a majority of seats in the Punjab Council. In our opinion, however, the decision of the Lucknow Pact was a fair one, namely, that they should have 50 per cent. of the elected seats allotted to the various communities. The problem is, however, that of the Sikhs, who are 11 per cent. of the population and consider themselves entitled to 25 to 30 per cent. of the seats. Such an arrangement is practically impossible, unless the interests of other communities are unfairly dealt with.

(d) Indian Christians on the present basis are entitled to three seats. We feel, however, that it may complicate matters if our representation is to be taken into consideration when calculating the percentage. We therefore suggest that three seats be reserved for the Indian Christian Community outside the seats allotted to communities, and be included along with the special constituencies.

(e) Our suggestion is that, out of an increased total of about 175 elected seats, the proportion of various interests be somewhat as follows :—

Hindus	48
Sikhs	27
Muslims	75
Christians	7
Other Special Constituencies ...	18

(C) UNITED PROVINCES.

(a) The population is divided as follows :—

Hindus	84.8 per cent.
Muslims	14.2 ,,
Christians	.5 ,,
Others	.5 ,,

(b) The seats are divided as follows :—

	Table A. (Including the special seats.)	Table B. (Excluding the special seats.)
Hindus ...	60 per cent.	67 per cent.
Muslims ...	29 ,,	33 ,,
Special Constituencies	11 ,,

(c) In considering the claims of the Indian Christians in the United Provinces, and in putting forward our claim, attention is drawn to the following remarks made by the Census Commissioner in the Census of India, 1921, Volume 1, Part I, page 116, para. 93 :—

> " On the other hand, in the United Provinces and the Punjab, apparently a deliberate attempt was made by members of the Arya Samaj to induce Christian converts from Hinduism to return to their former religion. Enquiry in various villages in the former province showed that the census record has been falsified in this respect in a considerable number of cases. Mr. Edye believes that this was done throughout the province, and that the increase, which according to the figures was from 179,694 to 203,179 or 13 per cent. was really considerably greater, and that the actual number of Christians in the province may be about 2,50,000."

(d) We would suggest an elected Council of about 200 seats, which may be distributed somewhat as follows :—

Hindus	124
Muslims	52
Christians	4
Special Constituencies ...	20

(e) If the present strength of the Council is retained, we ask for two seats.

(D) BENGAL.

(a) The population is divided as :—

Hindus	43·7 per cent.
Muslims	54 ,,
Christians	·3 ,,
Others	2 ,,

(b) The seats are as follows :—

	Table A. (Including the special seats.)	Table B. (Excluding the special seats.)
Hindus ...	40 per cent.	52 per cent.
Muslims ...	34 ,,	48 ,,
Special Constituencies	26 ,,

(c) We would submit that Indian Christians are entitled to two seats in this Council as their number is over one lakh. 22,000 Anglo-Indians have been given two seats in the Council. We believe our interests demand no less. We are five times as large as Anglo-Indians.

(d) We advocate an elected Council of about 200 with five Indian Christian seats as follows :—

Hindus	78
Muslims	78
Christians	5
Special	39

(E) BOMBAY.

(a) The distribution of the population is as follows :—

Hindus	77·7 per cent.
Muslims	19·7 „
Christians	1·4 „
Others	1·2 „

The proportion of Indian Christians in the population would be much larger if Sind is converted into a separate province, and the question will then assume a different aspect.

If Sind is excluded, the proportion is: Hindus 89 per cent., Muslims 8 per cent., Christians 1·5 per cent., others 1·5 per cent. Muhammadans have got 11 seats for Bombay.

We believe that the Indian Christian Community is at least entitled to two seats in the Bombay Presidency. We again suggest that the Council should be enlarged and should consist of at least 200 elected members of whom at least five should be Indian Christians. We, however, refrain from giving any other proportions owing to the complications arising out of Sind. We ourselves are in favour of the reorganization of the provinces on a linguistic basis, and, therefore, in our judgment, Sind should be made a separate province. At this stage it may also be stated that we are in agreement with the proposal that the reforms may be introduced in the North Western Frontier Province, due regard being had to the defence of India.

(F) BIHAR AND ORISSA.

(a) The population is as follows :—

Hindus	82·8 per cent.
Muslims	10·85 „
Christians	·75 „
Tribal Religions ...	5·6 „

It is noteworthy that there are about three lakhs of Christians, according to the subsidiary Table 2, page 124, Census of India, Volume I, part 1, Report. It may be pointed out that in Chota Nagpur alone there are 2¼ lakhs of Christians who form a much larger proportion in that sub-province than the percentage in the province as a whole. It should be noted that there is considerable difference between the figures given in subsidiary Table 1, page 124, Census of India, Volume 1, part 1, and the population by religion, Table 11 on page 40 of Volume 1, part 2. In the case of Bihar and Orissa the discrepancy is very marked indeed, the figures being 257,129 and 303 358. The former table gives for Chota Nagpur 223,578. The figures are probably larger. However, taking this figure, the population in Chota Nagpur works out as follows :—

Hindus	72 per cent.
Muslims	6 „
Christians	4·5 „
Tribal Religions ...	17·5 „

(b) The seats in the Council are as follows :—

	Table A. (Including the special seats.)	Table B. (Excluding the special seats.)
Hindus ...	63·5 per cent.	73 per cent.
Muslims ...	23·5 „	27 „
Special constituencies	13 „

(c) Two seats by election fall to the legitimate share of Indian Christians in this province.

(d) We would, however, suggest a Council of about 200 elected members in the following proportion :—

Hindus	125
Muslims	45
Indian Christians	5
Special constituencies	25

(G) CENTRAL PROVINCES.

(a) The population ratio is as follows :—

Hindus	84 per cent.
Muslims	4 „
Indian Christians ...	·3 „
Tribal Religions ...	11·7 „

The number of Indian Christians is about 75,000, and is probably larger at the present time. Four per cent. Muslims are given 12 per cent. of elected seats allotted to communities. The Indian Christians should be given at least one elected seat. At present there is not even one seat—not even by nomination.

(b) We would suggest a Council with 100 elected members somewhat distributed as follows :—

Hindus	73
Muslims	12
Christians	2
Special constituencies	13

XV.—Method of Election for the Provincial Legislatures.

Now the question to be considered next is the method by which our representatives in the Provinces may be elected. In the case of separate electorates there is no difficulty. If separate electorates are introduced it might be more advantageous to have as few constituencies as possible but to have plural constituencies with single transferable system of proportional representation. In some of the provinces like the Punjab, the United Provinces, Bihar, Bengal, Bombay and the Central Provinces, it may even be possible to have one constituency with the plural system of voting for the whole of the province.

But the problem is, what should be done in case of joint electorates? Reservation of a seat in general constituencies is evidently out of the question, except perhaps in a very few cases. The real point in joint electorates is that the representative should be elected with the voice and support of others than that of his own co-religionists. This can be accomplished through specially devised constituencies. We will suggest that in these constituencies the voters should be all Indian Christians who are qualified electors for the provincial Legislatures, and such members of other communities who are voters to the Council of State. The Indian Christians will continue to have the right to vote in other constituencies but will not be eligible to stand as candidates.

XVI.—Franchise.

At this stage a few words regarding franchise will not be out of place. The growth of democratic institutions on parliamentary lines is very largely dependent on the proper exercise of vote by electorates, and it is therefore with considerable apprehension that we have been observing certain tendencies which were manifested in the last elections. The amount of money that was spent in the last election is said to have been an enormous sum, and we have reason to believe that these reports are not altogether without foundation. We strongly urge that all forms of corruption should be carefully guarded against, and every effort made to check this tendency. The first and the foremost step necessary for responsible Government is the creation of an intelligent electorate, and this cannot be accomplished unless education becomes universal. While considerable progress has been made in the spread of primary education, we urge that this progress is not commensurate with the needs of the country. We strongly urge that the Commission should make a special point of laying emphasis on compulsory education for six years for every boy as well as for every girl. This, however, is a question which we understand would come up separately before the Commission, and we hope to lay our views before the Commission, in a subsequent Memorandum. At this stage we are only concerned with the bearing of this subject on the question of franchise. For this reason, we are not able to recommend the widening of the franchise on property basis at the present time. It will be more effective if the percentage of the population which has got the franchise at present uses its vote more intelligently. We desire that some sort of literary qualification be also added, for instance, all Vernacular or Anglo-Vernacular Middle passed persons be included in the franchise for provincial councils.

XVII.—Conclusion.

In conclusion, we beg to submit that we have, in the course of the present memorandum, endeavoured, to the best of our power, to present our case in a moderate, equitable, and practical manner. We ask for no special concessions or favours, either on the side of representation on the Legislatures, or in the Public Services; we only ask for the application of such principles to our Community as are found best in the interest of the nation in the present condition of the country and its future progress.

We desire to subordinate our communal interests to the wider considerations of national advancement.

We do not wish to separate ourselves or to hold aloof from the rest of our countrymen. We share with them all legitimate and constructive schemes for the attainment of self-government within the Empire.

In obedience to the teachings of the religion that we profess, our highest ambition should be to work for the good of our country and to render service to our nation without distinction of caste or creed.

DELHI.

Dated 26th November, 1928.

AFTERNOON.

PRESENT:

ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION AND OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE (EXCEPT SARDAR SHIVDEV SINGH UBEROI).

Deputation of INDIAN CHRISTIANS.

The Deputation consisted of:

Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram, Lahore.
Mr. S. C. Mukerji, M.L.C., Calcutta.
Professor Ahmad Shah, M.L.C., United Provinces.
Rev. J. C. Chatterji, M.L.A.
Mr. K. L. Rallia Ram, Lahore.

1. Chairman: We are very glad to receive this deputation. I think Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram is going to act as the principal spokesman, are you, sir?—(Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram): Yes.

2. I may just state for the information of my colleagues who else are here. Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram is the president of the All-India Indian Christian Conference and comes from Lahore?—Yes.

* * * * * * * * * *

4. There is Mr. S. C. Mukerji, who is a member of the Bengal Legislative Council, a nominated member, I suppose?—(Mr. S. C. Mukerji): Yes.

5. Rev J. C. Chatterji, whom I have the pleasure of knowing, is a member of the Legislative Assembly. Mr. Chatterji, you are also nominated?—(Rev. J. C. Chatterji): Yes.

6. Prof. Ahmad Shah is a member of the Legislative Council of the United Provinces?—Prof. Ahmad Shah: Yes.

7. That, again, is nominated?—Yes.

8. Mr. K. L. Rallia Ram is the president, are you not, of the Punjab Indian Christian Conference?—Mr. K. L. Rallia Ram: Yes. I am also an ex-member of the Punjab Legislative Council.

9. There does not happen to be a representative from Madras. In Madras, I think the Indian Christian members of the council are elected?—Rev. J. C. Chatterji: Yes, that is the only province where they are elected.

* * * * * * * * * *

22. You might just tell me this, gentlemen. We have not got here a representative directly from Madras; but I think I can ask you this question. As far as this deputation is concerned, supposing that representation from the Indian Christian community, as such, is adopted, have you any desire to see the representation further sub-divided, for instance, as between Roman Catholic Christians and Protestant Christians?—No, sir. Our Conference admits and invites Christians of all denominations to become members of it and we have had Roman Catholics as members of this Association and nobody has suggested this.

* * * * * * * * * *

31. Do I sum up this document correctly on general facts when I say this, that this deputation, speaking on behalf of the Indian Christian community, expresses itself as quite willing to see communal electorates abolished everywhere, and if they were it would not ask for a separate electorate for Indian Christians, though I gather that you still ask for seats to be reserved?—Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram: No, sir. Our position is, in the first place, we would advocate that communal elections be entirely abolished without any reservation of seats. Our second submission is that in case that is not done, and if seats are to be reserved, then we would want some indirect method of representation.

32. You see one possible system is a system which would preserve in some cases communal electorates and another possible system would be to get rid of communal electorates altogether, but it would still be possible for seats to be reserved for candidates of particular communities, so that even if they do not come to the top of the poll, nonetheless there would be a seat for such candidates. What I wanted to know first of all was, if there was an abolition of communal electorates, do the Indian Christians ask for seats to be reserved for them in general electorates, or are they prepared to take their chance of being elected?—We are prepared to take our chance. We feel that it is the best thing for the country. We would rather have abolition of communal electorates in any form. We advocate that as our first choice.

33. At page 319 of your Memorandum you say:—"There is a section of our community, including a few leaders of prominence, who hold that in no case should we ask for a separate representation through separate electorates. But to the best of our knowledge the majority of the Indian Christians do not agree with this view." There you say that the majority of Indian Christians "will welcome reservation of seats in general electorates if this system is adopted for all communities, but if this method is not found possible of general introduction, they are constrained to ask for separate electorates." When I read that I thought it meant that you would be willing to see separate electorates dropped if everybody else dropped them; but then, if they were dropped, and you had general electorates, you would still think it right to reserve seats for Indian Christians?—Our position is that if seats are to be reserved for communities, then we would ask for reservation, and if no seats are to be reserved, then we do not put forward any claim. We would rather see the entire communal elections altogether abolished. But we want to be treated just as the other communities are. If there is a reservation, then we would have our seats reserved. If there are separate electorates, then there is no other alternative for us but to ask for them, but if both are abolished, we will be happy. Rev. J. C. Chatterji: We say that with full realisation of the fact that if we had purely general electorates, none of our community will be elected, or will stand practically any chance of being elected, but the majority of our community are prepared to accept that gladly, because we feel that it is in the interest of the community as a whole. That is the ideal and the right thing.

34. That is to say, if I have followed you correctly, the Indian Christian community as represented by you generally takes the view that its higher duty is to seek to represent and share the fate of all who live in this country and not merely to seek to represent their own exclusive body?—Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram: That is exactly our point.

35. Then another point which you make is, you point out at page 198 that as long as you are specifically represented by nomination, those members of your community who have been qualified for a vote are classed as belonging to what is called the non-Mahomedan general constituency?—Yes.

36. If I follow you rightly, you say you rather regret that because while it is quite true that you are non-Mahomedan, it is equally true that you are non-Hindu?—Quite so, sir.

37. I believe a good many of those who become Indian Christians are members of the depressed classes. Is that not so?—Yes, sir.

38. When that happens and a member of the depressed class declares himself an Indian Christian, I want you to tell me, does he cease so far as his classification is concerned to be a member of the depressed class?—Rev. J. C. Chatterji: That is the point made out by the census commissioner. He classes them all as Indian Christians, and we do not admit any caste distinction within our community. But the tendency is that other people still class them, at any rate, in the first generation, as members of the depressed class, and sometimes enumerators, too, persist in putting them down as members of the depressed class rather than Indian Christians. Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram: But very soon they get out of that.

39. What occurs to me is that as long as a representative of the depressed class is nominated, it does not very much matter whether a particular citizen is classed for electoral purposes as depressed class or as Indian Christian, because he does not cast a vote. But the moment you say that these communities are to elect their members, then it is important to be sure that the list of electors is correctly made up, and if it is true that people who are still counted as members of the depressed class are also Indian Christians, one might think that sometimes they got on both lists?—Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram: No, sir. Directly a man gets a franchise, he is classed as an Indian Christian.

Rao Bahadur Rajah: In Madras, sir, they have got separate electorates for Indian Christians, and the Indian Christians of depressed class origin exercise their franchise in the Indian Christian electorate.

* * * * * * * * * *

45. Mr. Cadogan: I only want to ask a question on the representative character of your deputation. You say that you invited all sects of Christians to participate in your conference. Did you follow it up? Had you a satisfactory response? Can you say that you represent all Christians fully?—We cannot say that we represent the Roman Catholics fully, because so far the Roman Catholics have only come in as individuals. Only a few of them have come in, but the bulk of the Roman Catholics have kept aloof from the All-India Conference of Indian Christians, and they have now a separate organisation of their own. The real trouble began with the religious devotions. They objected to have religious devotions at the beginning of the Conference, and there was some feeling over it, and then I understand that after some careful consideration they came to the conclusion that as a body, they would abstain. But we have invited them year after year and some individuals have come and joined us, but very few.

46. But for political purposes you are working together. You can say that; can you?—As far as our membership is concerned the number of Roman Catholics is very limited. Rev. J. C. Chatterji: Politically, our interests are more less or identical.

47. That is what I am asking?—Mr. K. L. Rallia Ram: As for instance, if we take a deputation to the Viceroy or the Governor, they join us. Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram: We have had a few Roman Catholic Christians present in our annual Conference, but no Roman Catholic is a signatory to this document.

48. Major Attlee: I am not quite clear as to your organisation. Is your organisation an organisation of individuals or of churches?—Of individuals. In each province we have an Indian Christian Association and the membership of that Association is open to every Indian Christian, and then we have an annual gathering to which these provincial organisations elect delegates. This All-India Conference then elects a council which works throughout the year.

49. I see you work up from the individual to the All-India organisation?—Yes.

50. Can you tell me at all what your membership would be, how far you have your organisations in the provinces and so on? What sort of proportion of Christians belong to your Association?—In the Punjab, for instance, there will be over 500 members. I cannot say of other provinces.

51. Say Madras?—Mr. S. C. Mukerji: I know in Bengal the number is rather small. It is between 100 and 150 and is confined more or less to Calcutta.

52. What about Madras?—Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram: In Madras there is a Madras Association. There is also an Association in Tinnevelly. So, there is not one All-Madras provincial Association. The membership of the Association in Madras will be fairly large. I could not tell you the exact figures.

53. Taking your membership in the Punjab, for instance, you have about 500. Who are these 500 members who actually belong to the Association? Do they belong in any representative capacity, or are they leading individuals in the community, or what?—From every city there will be a few members.

54. Chosen?—Not chosen. They have to fill in a form and become members paying an annual subscription.

55. What I want to get at is really this, as to how far these members of your Association are representatives of the rank and file of the community? For instance, we have this very able document here. That has been discussed no doubt by your Association, but has that question been brought to the knowledge of the other members of the community, all those members who have taken out forms and become members of your Association?—Prof. Ahmad Shah: To give you an example from the United Provinces, they held their annual conference last year at Gorakhpur, and the members living in the rural areas came to the conference and participated in all deliberations and exercised their votes. From this instance I can indicate that the members living in the districts and the cities are also in touch with the movement.

56. That is an important point. I wanted to know how much you use the method of election, as to how far your members were capable of using the vote. In your community, for instance, you have a large number of members of the depressed classes. Is there anything like representative Church councils and so on, in which they use their vote?—Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram: Yes, in that way we are very fortunate, because in most of our churches the members elect the Church council, and then we have also what we call district church councils. These church councils elect representatives to the district church council and sometimes to the provincial and All-India organisations. So we are used to the method of voting of members from the Church, from a village upwards to the whole country.

57. You claim then that as far as your community goes they have had a considerable practical experience of voting?—Yes.

58. Chairman: Are you speaking of Anglicans or of all denominations?—Of all denominations. I am an Anglican. There are Presbyterians also here.

59. Is there a church council which includes different denominations?—You mean all of them together? We have what we call provincial Christian councils. They are made up of the representatives of these churches—only of the Protestants. And then we have also got a National Christian Council composed of the representatives of the provincial Christian councils.

60. Major Attlee: Do you find that your members are able, even the least educated members, are able to exercise their franchise well? Do you think that they elect the best people?—Yes, sir. Rev. J. C. Chatterji: I can give you an instance of that in our city. We have got an Anglican congregation of 2,000 people. The electors there range from the most illiterate people up to the members of the Imperial services. That is one Anglican church. There are so many Anglican churches belonging to Europeans, but that one church has obtained self-government to an extent that the Bishop of the diocese permits them to nominate their Vicar by means of election by the general body. They submit two or three names to the Bishop for him to appoint the Vicar from amongst them, and the Bishop accepts that nomination. That is an instance, sir, to show you that our people have become well versed in the matter of exercising votes on matters which are of very vital importance to them.

61. There is one other point, one last question. You have not found that the exercise of the vote in your various organisations has led in any way to schisms in the churches?—Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram: In some churches they begin by party feeling, but generally we have been able to overcome it. But there are instances where there is bad feeling.—Rev. J. C. Chatterji: We have noticed that they improve from year to year. On one occasion we may have trouble, but on the second occasion things work out very much better. They get educated in the method of self-government.

62. It has never led to secession?—Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram: We have no secessions.—Mr. S. C. Mukerji: We have local disagreements.—Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram: In Tinnevelly district one small section seceded from the Church, but that was only for the time being.

63. Lord Burnham: I understood you to say that there was only a small portion of the Roman Catholic community with which you come into contact, or at any rate in your Association?—Mr. S. C. Mukerji: The matter ought to be made perfectly clear that the Roman Catholics as a community have not joined us. That ought to be made perfectly clear. An individual here and an individual there has joined us, but as a community they have deliberately abstained themselves, because there is the priesthood there and they will not allow individual members to exercise their discretion in the matter.

64. As we all know, they are the oldest Christian community?—Perfectly so.

65. What I was going to ask you was this, whether you said, if I heard you say, that caste distinctions were not perpetuated beyond the second generation. Does that apply to the Roman Catholics as well as to the various Protestant denominations?—Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram: Not in the north. There is no caste in the Church at all in the north. I am afraid in the south there is partly in the Roman Catholic church, from what we know of it, and also to some extent even in the Protestant churches. In some places there is a very strong feeling against it.

66. Then the evidence you have given applies really to Christian denominations other than Roman Catholics?—Yes.

67. Colonel Lane Fox: The Roman Catholics will still be registered as Indian Christians for the purpose of voting?—Mr. S. C. Mukerji: Yes, they register themselves as Indian Christians, but they will not combine with us.

68. But they are registered as Indian Christians virtually?—There is no doubt about that.

69. Lord Burnham: Is that so in spite of the perpetuation of caste distinctions?—Rev. J. C. Chatterji: That is on a very small scale, sir.

70. I am trying to get at the facts?—That is only in the south, and is confined within certain limits. I do not think the majority there recognise caste distinctions.—Mr. S. C. Mukerji: There is no caste system in the Roman Catholic community throughout the north.—Mr. K. L. Rallia Ram: This question is only acute in the south. In the north the Roman Catholic community is a minority and they always join us when they think they will get some advantages; for instance, when we are trying to get land, or things of that sort they join us, but when other important questions come up they say, "We must ask our Padre Sahib."

71. On page 326 of the Memorandum you say: "The amount of money that was spent at the last election is said to have been an enormous sum, and we have reason to believe that these reports are not altogether without foundation. We strongly urge that all forms of corruption should be carefully guarded against and every effort made to check this tendency." Of course, we all sympathise with the sentiments, but on what is this statement founded?—Rev. J. C. Chatterji: It is a matter of common knowledge. Everybody knows that. There is no secret about it.—Mr. K. L. Rallia Ram: We have heard statements from their friends and from those who work for them. For instance, one man told me that a man who got elected spent about Rs. 80,000. Of course, the figure might have been exaggerated. Another gentleman told me that he had spent about Rs. 36,000. Of another gentleman who was supposed not to spend anything, who was considered very progressive, a very intimate friend of his, who was supposed to be intimately connected with his family, told me that he spent the least of all, and that was Rs. 6,000.

72. This gentleman spent it himself?—The man who spent it himself did not say, but the man who was working as an agent for that man and who was connected with that family told me privately that they had to spend about Rs. 6,000. Another gentleman came to me for my vote and I saw he was running a number of motor cars. Naturally I concluded it must cost him something. After the election was over his friends told me that it cost him Rs. 36,000.

73. Chairman : I would like to ask you one question about that. When you say there is corruption, what is the money spent on?—Mr. K. L. Rallia Ram : It is generally spent, sir, on entertaining the voters and in some cases in buying the votes.

74. In buying them?—Rev. J. C. Chatterji : In some form or other.—Mr. K. L. Rallia Ram : It is not actually paid.

75. I think Mr. Chatterji's answer is quite clear.

* * * * * * * * * *

81. Witness (Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram) : We wish to say, sir, with all the emphasis we are capable of, that we are not in the least desirous of any separation of interest between Roman Catholics and non-Roman Catholics. We entirely believe that our interests in this matter are identical with them and that we do not want any separate electorates.

82. Chairman : I am much obliged to you. I put the question merely because when we were in Madras last February we learnt, privately, of course, that there was at any rate some part of the community there which thought that there might be a question of separating out Roman Catholics from the Protestants. You oppose it?—We entirely oppose it. Mr. K. L. Rallia Ram : The figures are based on the census taken in 1921. The other census will be taken in 1931. It is very unfortunate so far as we are concerned, that this Commission has come just at the end of the period. We can safely say that our number will increase and we do hope that in the case of a minority like ourselves the increase makes a tremendous difference. We can say that the increase will be 35 lakhs in British territory. In the Punjab at the time of the last census we were only 315,000, whereas, according to our own calculation, we have gone up now to 4 lakhs.

83. Chairman : Can you tell me what the figures were or the percentage indicative of the increase in the ten years 1911–21?—(Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram) : I can give you the figures, sir. They are given in the Punjab Indian Christian memorandum. In 1881 we were 3,796; in 1891, 19,547; in 1901, 37,980; in 1911, 163,964 and in 1921, 3,15,031.

84. One gets the percentage by comparing the two figures on page 323. It rises from 102 per 10,000 population to 123?—May I say, sir, that that includes Europeans as well?

85. Rao Bahadur Rajah : At present you exercise your franchise in all the provinces except Madras in the non-Muhammadan electorates?—Yes.

86. Even in municipal and district board elections?—I can speak of the Punjab. There are some districts in the Punjab where the big communities have been given separate representation and in those districts the Indian Christians have no vote. Rev. J. C. Chatterji : I can speak of Delhi. No man who is not either a Hindu or a Muhammadan can stand for the membership of the Delhi municipality. For instance, I have been a member for many years of this municipality but only as a nominated member representing minorities. I am, however, disqualified for standing as a candidate for the municipality.

87. Rao Bahadur Rajah : Have you not got a vote in the Municipal election?—I can vote but I cannot stand. The city is divided into twelve wards and each ward can only return one Hindu and one Muhammadan member. A Muhammadan can vote for a Muhammadan and a Hindu can vote for a Hindu while a Christian or a Sikh may vote for either candidate but cannot stand himself.

88. Chairman : That is perhaps the only instance, is it not? Is there a similar rule anywhere else?—In the Punjab, sir, various communities have been given representation on the municipalities but the Christians there can neither stand for election nor vote. Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram : I believe that until the new order under which Indian Christians are classified as non-Muhammadans was issued, the Indian Christians had no vote.

89. Rao Bahadur Rajah : I suppose, generally in other municipalities Indian Christians can stand for election. What about Bengal?—Mr. S. C. Mukerji : Bengal is an advanced province.

90. Taking the advanced province of Bengal, I should like to know if you ever got any member of the Indian Christian community returned by a non-Muhammadan electorate?—This very year Mr. J. C. Datta for the Calcutta Corporation was elected by a non-Muhammadan constituency.

91. That is the only case in the whole of Bengal?—Yes, otherwise in two cases members were nominated in two successive years.

92. I am talking of election?—I have already replied to that question.

93. Generally speaking, it is very difficult for a member of your community to get elected from a non-Muhammadan electorate?—Yes.

94. And still you are against separate electorate?—That is because of the general interest of the country. We are prepared to sink our individual existence if that will bring out the general building up of national life in this country.

95. That is only an ideal, not practical?—That is what I have said; that is purely ideal and theoretical; we know that that is not going to be realised soon.

96. Am I to understand that the Indian Christians of the Madras presidency who have now separate electorates for them are also one with you in this suggestion?—Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram : You will see this Memorandum is signed by the Right Rev. Dr. V. S. Azariah, the Lord Bishop of Dornakal, Dr. A. C. Asirvadha Nadar, President, Indian Christian Association, Madras, and Mr. J. R. Isaac, member, Bangalore municipality. All these are gentlemen from the south. At the All-India Conference to which the delegates were mostly from South India, this resolution was passed by a large majority. Mr. S. C. Mukerji : I understand that a memorandum has been submitted to this Royal Commission by the Madras Christian Association. I have not got a copy with me, but I think that will give you their latest views on the subject.

97. Rao Bahadur Rajah : Since you represent the All-India Christians I wanted to ask you that question. You are against the system of nominations?—(Mr. S. C. Mukerji) : Yes, because even though we vote most conscientiously we do not get any benefit from it.

98. On page 322 of your Memorandum you say that nominated members are entirely deprived of any chance of being appointed ministers. Supposing the disability against appointing non-official nominated members, who represent special communities, as ministers is removed, will you then agree to nominations?—Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram : That is only one disability. That is not the chief objection. The chief objection is this : If Government nominates a man and even though he were to honestly support the Government, people say that he supported the Government because he was a nominated member, but, on the other hand, if he does not support Government he is pulled up by them. So you see his position is difficult both ways.

99. Even with reference to the Legislative Assembly you are against nomination?—Yes.

100. You demand three seats?—Yes.

101. How do you propose to allot the three seats for the whole of India? Do you want to have one general electorate for Indian Christians for the whole of India?—We have suggested two or three methods. If there are three seats one seat will be given to the Madras presidency because there the number of Indian Christians is large. The other two seats, we propose, might be given to the other provinces by rotation. Another method we have suggested is that the elected Indian Christian members of various provincial legislatures should elect out of themselves a member to the Assembly; after he is elected his seat will, of course, be declared vacant in the provincial legislature and another one elected instead.

102. Even in the case of the Legislative Assembly, you are against separate electorates?—Yes.

103. How do you propose to assign this one seat to the Madras Province?—In case there is no reservation of seats, the question does not arise.

104. You know that the Madras Province is divided into different units for the Assembly?—My point is that in case communal electorates are abolished and there is no reservation of seats then the question does not arise. The question only arises when there is reservation of seats; then there will be serious difficulty as far as Indian Christians are concerned. We have suggested that some indirect method of election will have to be adopted in that case and that Indian Christian members in the provincial councils will form a panel and elect a member to the Assembly from amongst themselves.

105. Have you any disabilities as regards public service?—Oh, yes. Mr. Chatterji has got in his possession a letter in which an official of the Government says, "I am unable to have this man because under departmental rules I cannot recruit Indian Christians."

* * * * * * * * * * *

107. Dr. Suhrawardy: Am I right in saying that Dr. Datta was a representative of the Indian Christians in the second Assembly?—Yes, he was a nominated member.

108. Is it not a fact that on more than one occasion he voted against Government?—Yes

109. There is therefore no substance in your suggestion that nominated members cannot exercise their free discretion in the matter of voting?—His case is the very case which suggests to us that nomination is not right. For instance he was not re-nominated for the third Assembly.

110. The appointment of Rev. Chatterji is a sort of punishment to Dr. Datta?—Rev. Chatterji was not nominated after Dr. Datta; another gentleman, Mr. Ratnaswamy was nominated.

111. Ex-President of the Madras Council?—Yes. I say that was the prevalent feeling amongst Indian Christians that Dr. Datta was not nominated because he voted against Government. Rev. J. C. Chatterji: I have myself voted against Government more than once.

Dr. Suhrawardy: You know, Rev. Chatterji, that on an important occasion like the one when the Public Safety Bill was debated, which was defeated by the casting vote of the president, prominent nominated gentlemen absented themselves and their absence practically helped the Opposition.

Chairman: How does it touch the question of Indian Christians?

112. Dr. Suhrawardy: I was referring to that because the suggestion of the Indian Christians is that nominated members are not free to vote. Anyhow I pass on to the other point. You have said that your community is quite willing to see communal electorates abolished and that you are prepared to take your chance without any reservation of seats. Why then do you ask for special representation for your community?—We ask in case this system is retained.

113. I know that. In case this system is retained, do you consider it an evil which ought to be confined within the narrowest limits?—I am afraid it cannot be confined within the narrowest limits.

114. It is not a question whether it can be done or not. Do you consider it a necessary evil which ought to be confined within the narrowest limits for the attainment of the great ideal which you and your community have at heart?—I am afraid I cannot answer that question. But I do not think that it can be confined within the narrowest limits.

115. Have you got any special interest to be protected so far as your community is concerned?—We have.

116. Let me make my question clear. You have got the Europeans who are Christians; there are Anglo-Indians who are Christians. What is the special interest of the Indian Christians which demands a special representation and special protection especially in view of the fact that you are prepared to take you chance in the general electorate without reservation of seats.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: The same interest as Mohamedans have.

Dr. Suhrawardy: Let the witness answer, Sir Hari Singh.

Witness (Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram): Apart from this fact that Europeans and Anglo-Indians are also Christians, our society is separate; we have got our own institutions and, as a matter of fact, we are organised as a separate community socially and therefore our interests are to be protected.

117. Dr. Suhrawardy: I meant in the Legislative Assembly. What are the special interests which you wish to be protected by special representation of the Indian Christians?—Mr. S. C. Mukerji: It is not a question of special interests. Any interest of the country is an interest of the Indian Christians as citizens of the Empire.

118. Then why do you demand special representation?

Chairman: Forgive me for my intrusion. Dr. Suhrawardy has, of course, put it forcibly. Perhaps I may just say that I really think the position of the deputation is clear. They take up the view, right or wrong, that it would be far better if representation was not based on communal considerations, and they say that if that could be done they would gladly acquiesce. Then they say at the same time, they are afraid that that is an ideal not likely to be realised now and so we should ask for representation not for some section or some division of the Indian Christian community but for the Indian Christian community as a whole. After all, do you not think, Dr. Suhrawardy, that we are more concerned to understand the point of view of these gentlemen than to argue?

119. Dr. Suhrawardy: I am not arguing, Sir. Is it out of jealousy and envy of the Mohamedans or because they have any special interest to protect that they are asking for representation? If they have any special interests, what are they?

Chairman: I think you had better give a short answer to that.

Witness (Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram): Our answer is given on page 319 of our memorandum. "In the case of genuine general electorates, even at a time of communal clash, an Indian Christian may capture a seat, as many Muslims might prefer to vote for him in preference to a Hindu, and vice versa." Our position is that in general electorates we have nothing to lose. Even if we have to lose we will ultimately gain. We will get our rights if we organise ourselves. In a system where communal feeling is in the front we have everything to lose, and therefore we say that in that system we must be protected. But if the system is abolished we are prepared to take our chance for fighting the places when communal feeling will not be uppermost. We are sure that in that case we will get votes both from the Hindus as well as from the Mohamedans.

120. Dr. Suhrawardy: Are you prepared to take your chance in the general electorate?—Yes. We do not belong to any one community; there are both Muslim converts and Hindu converts in our community.

121. Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan: Can you tell me whether I understand you correctly that in the Punjab council, consisting of 100 members, you want 7 seats?—Not out of 100, but out of 200.

122. Seven out of 200?—Yes.

123. Is that your ratio?—No. The principle on which we have based the figure is this. We have accepted the principle that the minorities should have an excessive representation to a certain extent, not very much, and we have gone on the assumption that the Lucknow Pact is on the right lines. I have applied the same principles to the Indian Christian community and we have arrived at this figure.

124. Do I understand you to say that you want to carve a share for yourselves out of the majority community in the Punjab?—No. In the Punjab we have suggested that as far as the division of seats between the major communities is concerned, it will not be disturbed. Let them divide the seats between themselves and then add to that number an adequate number of Indian Christian representation. We do not want to complicate the matter further by coming into the share of the other communities.

125. Then how can you fit in your representation?—Supposing there are 100 seats, we suggest that out of these 100 seats 50 should go to the Mohamedans.

126. But the Mohamedans demand 56 per cent. of the seats?—We are not concerned with the demand of the Mohamedans.

127. Why should you fix 50 seats arbitrarily?—That is a matter which you can decide or whoever it be who is going to divide the seats. We suggest this as being a fair representation.

128. I want that it should be definitely stated so that the matter might be quite clear. Supposing the Mohamedans get their seats according to their population ratio, that is, 55 to 56 per cent., then how can you get your 7 seats?—We are 1·5 per cent. of the total population.

Chairman: I think I can state their position quite clearly. If the deputation does not agree they may say so. They say that in the Punjab they will be willing to see or they suggest that the Lucknow Pact should be applied in this sense, that the Mohamedans should have as many seats as the Hindus and the Sikhs combined and they say that the Christian seats should be additional seats outside that. It is not quite correct to say that they want 7 seats out of 200, but it is 7 out of 175. Their figures would then be, as they have suggested, as follows:—Muslims would have 75 seats; Hindus and Sikhs 75. These two make 150 and then they suggest there should be added 7 extra seats for the IndianChristians. That is their suggestion. It is open to comment. According to their scheme the Mohamedans do not exactly get 50 per cent. of the elected seats; but they get as many seats as the Hindus and Sikhs combined have. This is their suggestion.

129. Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan: I want this to be made quite clear to me. Supposing that the Mohamedans do not accept the Lucknow Pact, then what happens?—We have suggested that if all the communities are to have the seats on the population basis, then we are prepared to accept the same basis for us also.

130. Sir Hari Singh Gour: You say you have no direct representative of the Roman Catholics here; but do I take it that the Roman Catholics such as are members of your Association are in sympathy with your views?—Mr. S. C. Mukerji: They have not repudiated us. Rev. J. C. Chatterji: Summaries of this memorandum have been published in the Press and we have sent circulars to all the provinces and we have not received any contradiction to our views.

131. Consequently, you are in a position to say that in spite of all the circulars you have issued and the publication you have given to this memorandum you have received no protests against your views?—Yes; no protests from the Roman Catholics.

132. So far as you are able to ascertain, you are prepared to state that your views are shared by many of the Roman Catholics?—Yes.

133. On page 327 of your memorandum you say: "We ask for no special concessions or favours, either on the side of representation on the legislatures, or in the public services." I take it that your view is that you are for fair field and no favour to anyone?—Yes.

134. Both in the legislatures and in the public services?—Yes.

135. The next question I wish to ask you is this. You have emphasised the necessity of a joint electorate without reservation of seats. What is your experience of communal electorates during the last eight or nine years?—Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram: We had been out of them. Our vote has been with the non-Muslims and, as a matter of fact, the Indian Christians have not taken any interest in them because they have been in one groove.

136. As observers of public life, what is your view?—Mr. K. L. Rallia Ram: It has been a question of sub-communalism, Arohras and Khatris and so on. Every one appeals to his own caste.

137. Nationalism has been forgotten and communalism has become rampant?—Yes.

138. With the result that peace and order in the country has been in serious jeopardy?—Yes.

139. In order to restore the confidence of the people in the Government and in the legislatures you want to go back to the system where Indians will feel as Indians and not as Hindus, Arohras, Khatris and so on, is it so?—Yes.

140. Your community is the most literate of all the communities in India?—Yes.

141. You are in favour of a literate vote?—Yes, we have stated so on page 327 of our memorandum. "We desire that some sort of literary qualification be also added, for instance, all vernacular or anglo-vernacular middle passed persons be included in the franchise for provincial councils." Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram: You will also notice that in each province where we have advocated an expansion of the franchise we have also included the literary test as a qualification.

142. Mr. Kikabhai Premchand: On page 318 of your memorandum you say: "It accepts self-government within the British Empire on Dominion lines as the goal to be achieved." But, in the latter part of the memorandum, on page 326, you say that an intelligent electorate is a necessity. May I know when do you think India will be fit for self-government?—Rev. J. C. Chatterji: In what sense?

143. Dominion Status, as you have mentioned?—We have had a definite resolution on that subject in 1917. Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram: Our position is this: We want provincial autonomy at once and a considerable advance in the Central Government. We have not asked for Dominion Status at once. We hope that by the end of another ten years when we get the next instalment of Reforms we will be in a position to demand full Dominion Status.

144. When you say that diarchy has failed in the provinces why do you advocate its introduction in the Central Government?—We see no other alternative.

145. If diarchy is introduced in the Central Government, do you think that any single party will be powerful enough to support the minister to the extent required?—We hope so.

146. Sir Arthur Froom: Arising out of the question of Mr. Kikabhai Premchand and your statement that you are of the opinion that diarchy has been a failure, might I draw your attention to page 318 of your memorandum wherein you say: "We believe that the time has come when the unitary system of government should be introduced by the grant of provincial autonomy in all the major provinces. This seems to us to be the solution of the problem. Any subject which cannot be transferred at this stage in the provinces might be controlled and directed by the Central Government, the provinces being given full power over the remaining subjects." That statement, I suppose, is following out your idea of getting rid of diarchy. The question I want to put to you is this. When you say, "Any subject which cannot be transferred at this stage in the provinces might be controlled and directed by the Central Government," have you got any subjects in mind?—The committee and the council of the All-India Conference were divided on this question. There were some people in the council who thought that at this stage Law and Order should not be transferred. As there was this difference of opinion on the subject among us we could not say that our entire community wanted it. But the members of this deputation are unanimous in recommending that Law and Order should also be transferred.

147. You are not unanimous on the subject?—Yes. some consider that Law and Order should not be made a transferred subject.

148. And you recommend, rightly or wrongly, that it should be given to the Central Government?—Yes.

149. Lord Burnham: On what grounds do you base the statement that diarchy has been a failure in the provinces?—We cannot say that we have first-hand experience. But the members of our council feel so from what they have heard and seen of it. Mr. S. C. Mukerji: I may be permitted to state what I think about it as I have been a member of the Bengal Legislative Council since the beginning of the Reforms, that is since 1921. During the first Council, that is, for three years from 1921, it did not fail. We had then Sir Surendranath Banerjea as one of our ministers. During the second council, 1924–25–26, diarchy failed because of two or three reasons. Firstly, it was due to the incessant opposition of the swarajists who thought that Government should be opposed on any account, good, bad or indifferent. Secondly, we did not get competent ministers. We had sometimes ministers who could not put two sentences together in correct English and sometimes we had ministers who could not follow the questions that were asked in the council in quick succession by the swarajists and whenever they could not answer they got rid of the difficulty by saying: "I want notice."

150. Dr. Suhrawardy: In the second council you cannot say that you had ministers who were not capable?—I think so In this third council again the ministers had no following. They were practically kicked by the swarajists and some of their own party men even disowned them and they had to fall back on the support of the executive Government where they did not get any favour. So diarchy has absolutely failed in Bengal; there is no doubt about that. My view is that we should not have diarchy in the Central Government also.

151. Sir Sankaran Nair: If diarchy is to be abolished, would you have further Reforms or would you go back?—Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram: Notwithstanding the failure of diarchy I should like to see unrestricted provincial autonomy in the provinces, including the subject of Law and Order.

152. Chairman: Just let us deal with a set of figures. There have been some questions asked about literacy. I have been looking into the census returns for India and I find that if you take the men of twenty years old and over, the figures according to the last census stood thus:

Among Parsis 918 were literate out of every thousand; among Buddists, 692 were literate out of every thousand; Jains, 666; Christians, 415; Hindus, 158; Sikhs, 135; Muslims, 122.

I gather that the figure 415 for Christians would include for this purpose the Europeans and Anglo-Indians?—Yes.

153. You talk about a literacy test. Remembering that it involves making a list of voters who are qualified, what is the literacy test which you suggest might be applied?—Mr. S. C. Mukerji: In my community in Bengal—I am a Congregationalist—I find that people with primary education can exercise their vote with a certain amount of discretion. I have personally seen the electors who come from the villages.

154. What I mean, Mr. Mukerji, is this: After all, if you are going to lay down a test to determine whether a man is on the list or not, either it depends upon the consideration of his having passed some examination or else it depends upon some test applied for the time being. You state it as being the fourth standard?—The vernacular or anglo-vernacular middle test, for instance, which is recognised all over the country We mention it on page 327.

155. Chairman: Would there be any difficulty in practice in ascertaining whether a voter had or had not passed that test?—Rev. J. C. Chatterji: They receive a diploma for that. Everybody who passes the Anglo-Vernacular Middle receives a departmental certificate for that purpose, and there is a thorough system of registration of those people and they can at any time be challenged to produce evidence.

156. I see. Is it not a fact that you have got a very large membership of women among the Indian Christians?—Mr. B. L. Raillia Ram: Yes.

157. Are not the women part of your organisation?—Yes.

158. Then why are they not here?—The only reason, Sir, is that three of us are members of the legislative council, from Bengal, the United Provinces, and the Punjab. The present Punjab member could not come; one of us is our representative in the Legislative Assembly and I am the president of All-India Conference. So we were selected on that basis, and there was no lady holding any office.

* * * * * * * * * *

Witness (Prof. Ahmad Shah): May I be permitted to say a few words, Sir, in conclusion? The Indian Christian community is suffering under certain disabilities which are very outstanding in the whole of India. Our first disability is that we are debarred from entering the Army service as a whole. In the army no entrance is permitted to the Indian Christians. Secondly, we have till recently, held police ranks, but the Indian Christians are not now allowed to be taken into that service. Thirdly, there has been a definite example of a man who before he embraced Christianity was holding the post of a non-commissioned officer in the army. But as soon as he became a Christian he was discharged and that for no other reason than that he became a Christian. And we will ask this Commission to keep this in mind that our Indian Christian community should not be debarred, because they are Christians, from entering any service in India.

* * * * * * * * * *

Memorandum from HER HIGHNESS THE DOWAGER RANI SAHIBA OF MANDI.

The Government of the United Provinces, acting on a Resolution passed in the Legislative Council on February 1, 1923, removed the franchise disqualification based on sex, and women were enabled thereafter to exercise the vote. The total adult population of males and females in the province is about 25 million, out of which male adults are estimated at 13 million. The number of male electors in 1926 was 1½ million, and that of female electors 50,000. This female electorate works out at .4 per cent. of the population of female adults of 20 years and over. This glaring disparity between the proportion of male and female electors to actual population is due to the fact that the same qualifications have been prescribed for females as for males. These qualifications differ for urban and rural constituencies. For the urban constituency an elector must have a place of residence in the constituency and he must be the owner or tenant of a house or building of a certain annual rental value or be assessed to a certain amount of Municipal tax or pay a certain amount of income tax. In the case of a person qualified as an elector for a rural constituency the qualification consists of the possession of a house or building of a certain rental value, payment of a certain Municipal tax, ownership of land in respect of which a certain minimum amount of land revenue is payable, tenancy of land in respect of which a certain amount of rent is payable. It will be seen that women are placed at a great disadvantage if the above qualifications are applied to them. The result is seen in the very small number of women electors, which the removal of the sex disqualification has produced. Women do not ordinarily possess property in their own names nor do they pay income tax or house rent. They generally share the property with the male member of their family, the name of one or more of whom appears in the electoral roll. With the awakening which has now come about in the women, this state of affairs has handicapped them in their taking part in the political activities of the country. It is proposed that in order that women may possess the franchise which would bear some reasonable ratio to their numerical strength, the franchise should not be based only on the property possessed by the woman herself. The suggestion which we wish to put forward in outline is that if a father or a husband possesses qualifications which are, say, at least twice in excess of the minimum qualifications prescribed for men, the daughters or the wife of such a father or husband, respectively should ipso facto acquire the franchise. This would be in addition to those women who at present possess the franchise by virtue of their possessing the necessary qualifications in their own right. This suggestion, if accepted, would mean a numerical increase of the electors, but it is believed it would not make them unwieldy or unworkable. It may be argued that to record the votes of so many women voters would not be an easy thing; but since a machinery already in existence for recording the votes of those women who are at present enfranchised has worked quite smoothly, it should not be a difficult matter to apply the same machinery for registering the votes of a larger number of women. Anyhow, difficulties of manipulation and procedure should not be allowed to come in the way of granting to women this privilege which is their right. Of course, under this scheme the electorates would be communal if it is decided to continue the present system of communal electorates in the case of men.

Quite apart from the above it would be necessary for some time, at any rate, to have at least four separate seats reserved for women. These seats might be served by special electorates of educated women. The province should be divided into four suitable territorial constituencies in each of which a woman who should have reached a certain standard of education (say, an upper primary or middle class school certificate) should be registered as an elector. The voting might take place by post as is done in the case of certain constituencies like the two Chambers of Commerce at Cawnpore. This privilege would be a great help to purdah women, and there would be no danger of the concession being abused, since it would be made use of by educated women. By this scheme the educated women of the province would be able to return four members to the Council, who would be of great help in all matters in connection with women's movements.

As regards Local Self-Government, both the above suggestions may be applied in the form proposed for the Legislative Council or in a suitably modified form so that women may also take their share in the spheres of Local Self-Government.

LUCKNOW.

Dated 5th December, 1928.

PRESENT :

ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION, OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE (EXCEPT MR. KIKABHAI PREMCHAND), AND OF THE UNITED PROVINCES PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE.

Deputation consisting of the MAHARANI OF MANDI, Mrs. AHMAD SHAH and Mrs. CHITAMBER.

1. Chairman : The members of the Conference will be interested to see that we are receiving a deputation which is led by the Maharani of Mandi. With the Maharani is Mrs. Ahmad Shah, who I think was formerly a member of the legislative council ?—(Mrs. Ahmad Shah) : Yes.

2. And also Mrs. Chitamber. We are very glad to see you and to hear what you would like to say to us. Perhaps I may point out that the Conference is dealing with very important constitutional questions and therefore we all felt we should be glad to receive a deputation such as this, in order that we might have put before us the views of a deputation of women on some of the constitutional questions that arise, perhaps more particularly questions of franchise and the like. Would you like to read a document to us or address us, or shall we begin at once by asking you a few questions ?—(The Maharani of Mandi) : I should prefer it if you would ask questions.

3. I will do so. We have already had the information that out of a total adult population in the United Provinces of about twenty-five millions there are now about one and a half million electors, and of those about fifty thousand are women. Would you tell us how your deputation feels about the present franchise for women. Do you think it is based on proper principles or do you wish to suggest any change?—(Mrs. Ahmad Shah): We want the franchise extended. We feel that the present franchise, in which the qualifications for women are on the same basis as the qualifications for men will not do in the conditions which prevail at present in India. We feel the franchise will have to be extended for women in rather a different way, in order that more women who can exercise the vote may do so. Fifty thousand is a very small ratio to our population, and we can do practically nothing with that.

4. At present, of course, a woman has a vote in this province for the council only if she happens to have in her own right the qualifications that a man voter would have; she must herself be a tax-payer or a rent payer or herself be the owner of property assessed to land revenue. Do I understand the point is that you think the franchise for women should be based on some test which is appropriate to a woman, instead of being based on a test which was originally devised for a man?—In India very few women are property holders in their own right. Most women are joint sharers in property, through their fathers or through their husbands. We feel it would be more equitable for women if the property rights of a father to some extent should be recognised as giving a vote to his unmarried daughters, or the property rights of a husband might ipso facto confer the right of franchise on his wife.

5. That would mean, would not it, that a lady would have the right to vote because she was the wife of a man who had the right to vote—something of that sort?—Something of that sort, yes.

6. As things are at present, are these fifty thousand women voters for the most part married ladies, or would most of them have the qualification because they are widows or because they are unmarried?—The right is based on property, and I believe partly on literacy, and of course a great many of the property owners are married, although some of them may be widows. I do not think that has very much bearing on it.

7. We had a similar difficulty, I may say, in England when women's suffrage was first introduced there. The difficulty to begin with was that a test like the test, for instance, of being the occupier of a house, was a test which was very difficult for a married woman to fulfil, because it was in most cases her husband and not herself who had the qualification? —That is our trouble.

8. It seems to be a rather similar difficulty here Have any of you ladies been able to suggest the sort of qualification which you think would be more suitable for women?—We feel there should be a literacy test; not, perhaps, the same as for men, but slightly less; a test of literacy of, say, at the lowest the upper primary here. That might be the literacy test for women.

9. Chairman: I do not think there is at the moment a literacy test here for the council elections, except of course for the university seat, is there?

Mr. Srivastava: No, there is not.

10. Chairman: It has been suggested, but I do not think there is. You suggest there should be such a thing?—We feel there ought to be.

11. That would mean, of course, the holding of some educational certificate, would not it?—Yes, it would have to mean that, I am afraid.

12. Tell me this. The numbers are not great but do you think that in this province the women voters have begun to take a real interest in political affairs and current affairs? You are one of the pioneers, Mrs. Ahmad Shah, because you have been a member of the council. What is your feeling about it? Do you think an interest in political affairs among women is beginning to arise?—I think it is undoubtedly beginning to arise, but at the present time women do not go to the polls to vote very much, either here or perhaps in any province.

13. No. We have had the figures. When you were a member of the legislative council yourself, did you find there were women in the province who were interested in political matters and who appealed to you or turned to you specially, as a woman member, on political questions?—Yes. There was a constituent conference of women held in April, and I was given a mandate to represent to the legislative council the desire of women for two seats to be reserved for women members. This mandate was given to me by the ladies attending this constituent conference at Lucknow.

14. If I may refer to England again, those of us who are members of the House of Commons know quite well that the women members of the British House of Commons are the members to whom a great many women's organisations specially appeal for help and advice in various political matters which specially affect women. I did not know whether that has begun to arise in the United Provinces?—It has begun.

15. You think it has?—Oh, yes.

16. Is there a woman member of the legislative council at the moment?—No, none.

17. Let me just follow up another suggestion which you mentioned. You spoke of a possible plan, I think, of reserving two seats for women members?—That was a resolution passed by the constituent conference to which I have referred, it was suggested that two seats should be reserved. We are at the present time asking for a reservation of four seats.

18. You mean that is what this deputation is suggesting?—Yes.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: Four out of a total of how many?

19. Chairman: I do not think they give the total. It is suggested by these ladies that it would be necessary, for some time at any rate, to have at least four seats reserved for women. Of course, as you know, ladies, there is a large body of opinion in India —one of the many bodies of opinion—which does not look with great favour on the idea of making special provisions for special classes or sets of people, and no doubt it is a very good thing to develop the idea that all citizens should be interested together in public questions as far as possible; but I suppose it is very unlikely for some time to come, is not it, that under the conditions of India men voters, having to choose between a man candidate and a woman candidate, would vote for a woman?—There is that point, and there is another point as well, namely that at the present time and for a few years to come we feel that very few women would wish to go and canvass for votes from men generally They will canvass the women, but generally speaking, they will not care to go round to all the men and canvass them.

20. What are the public questions (the political questions, that is; I am not speaking of social questions) in which you think women are taking a special interest? What are the questions which affect politics and legislation which you think women in this part of India are beginning to take an interest in? For instance, do you think there is beginning to arise among women citizens an interest in public education?—Yes, there is a great interest in public education, and especially in the education of girls. We feel that perhaps women can at least suggest a good deal for the betterment of the education of girls, more than has been done at present.

* * * * * * * * * *

22. Do you think that women who are taking an interest in politics here are getting a growing interest in and knowledge of such things, for example, as the organisation of medical relief and of maternity work—I mean by the State, by public authorities?—Yes. I think that women's chief interests are for social betterment in every direction, in the realm of education, in the realm of medicine and in the realm of social welfare.

23. Passing from the council elections to the local bodies, like district boards and municipalities, do you know if women in this province have got a vote for the district boards?—I do not know.

Mr. Srivastava: Yes.

24. Chairman: And for the municipalities?

Mr. Srivastava: Yes.

25. Chairman: Again, I suppose, if they happen to have the qualification which is the qualification for men?

Mr. Srivastava: Yes.

26. Chairman: Can any of you gentlemen of the Provincial Committee tell me this? You probably know. Is there any case in which there is a woman member of a district board or a woman member of a municipality?

Witness (Mrs. Ahmad Shah): No, they are absolutely unrepresented.

Mr. Srivastava: At Allahabad there was a woman member.

27. Chairman: That seems to be an instance. You say that in the Allahabad municipality there was a woman municipal councillor?

Mr. Srivastava: Yes. She did very good work in various directions.

Witness (Mrs. Ahmad Shah): I should like to ask whether there is any woman member of any board at the present time. I do not think there is.

28. Chairman: Perhaps that was the meaning of your answer. There has been such an instance in the past, but there is not now. Have you anything at all to tell us as to the interest or want of interest which women take in these local elections for municipalities and district boards?—Just recently there has sprung up a great deal of interest; in fact, I was canvassed for a vote for a woman the other day, and interest is springing up; but I think in the past we have felt that we could not secure a place, and that it was practically useless to try and do so, though we feel the need of women representatives on these boards.

29. Again, if we may think of the history of women's work in public affairs in England—though I do not say it is a guide anywhere else—in England women have taken a part in local affairs for a much longer period than they have in Parliament, and one rather wonders whether, if women are going to play an increasing part in public life here, and to help India to progress, their sphere may not be, at any rate at first, quite as much in the local bodies as in the central or provincial legislatures?—Yes, we do feel that; we feel that we can do a lot on the local bodies if we get a chance to be there.

30. Lord Burnham: I would only ask this one question. You said, I think, that women were increasingly interested in medical education. Could you tell me whether in this province there are women practising as doctors, or acting as medical officers of health under local bodies?—There are certainly many women doctors. I have no figures about there being medical health officers who are women.

31. Have you any figures as to the number that are practising as doctors?—No, we have had no time to prepare statistics.

32. No. I did not know whether you knew that?—I do not know exactly.

Mr. Srivastava: There are quite a large number of women doctors, particularly in the city.

33. Major Attlee: Are there a growing number of women taking up teaching now?—Yes, the number is increasing very rapidly.

34. And they would be likely to be interested in political matters?—Yes, I think so, as far as I have been able to judge.

35. Chairman: Just one further question. Is it your idea, when you speak of four separate seats for women, that those seats should be filled by the votes of women electors?—For the present, yes. You might limit the period, perhaps, but for the present as an experimental measure, at any rate, yes.

36. I mean, you are not suggesting that the four seats should be filled by women who are nominated?—No.

37. The four seats to be filled by women who are elected?—Women elected by constituencies of women.

38. And that is the connection in which you suggest that there might be introduced an education test such as a school certificate?—Yes.

* * * * * * * * * *

39. Mr. Desanges: * * * If the franchise was extended to women, do you think that women in purdah would take the trouble to come to the polling booths and vote, or would that be wasted?—We propose to meet that difficulty by some such procedure as is followed in the two Chambers of Commerce in Cawnpore, that is, to register the votes by post.

40. Sir Arthur Froom: Have the women of India always taken a keen interest in the Government, or the political side of India, in their homes? I mean, do you consider that the women of India have brought influence to bear on their menfolk in their homes on great political questions?—There cannot be any doubt of that, I think.

* * * * * * * * * *

41. But now you wish that the opinions women hold on political questions, or questions in connection with the advancement of India, should be expressed by representatives of themselves in the provincial councils rather than through their menfolk?—I think all women are feeling that there are many disabilities which have been suffered by women in the past through being represented only by menfolk, however good their intentions may have been.

42. Raja Nawab Ali Khan: You have suggested a literacy test for the franchise. Do you want that a certificate from certain educational institutions should be produced, or do you simply want that a woman should be able to read and write? What is your idea—that she must produce a certificate?—I think the ability to read and write one language at least should be sufficient.

43. Sir Hari Singh Gour: I just wish to ask you one question, and it is this. I understand your deputation's point of view is that the disabilities from which your sex suffers cannot be removed unless you have women representatives in the legislature to present the women's point of view, and that the legislature at present are apt to voice the men's point of view rather than the women's point of view; is not that so?—Well, we acknowledge the great generosity of our menfolk in this matter, but——

44. For instance, as regards the age of consent, and the marriage laws, men want to tell you what they would like to do, but they forget altogether what the women would like: is not that so?—Yes.

45. Consequently you want that your point of view should equally be represented?—Yes, directly represented.

46. And as regards the qualifications, that, of course, is a matter of detail?—Yes.

47. What you really want is your effective representation. How it is going to be done is a matter which you want others to settle?—Yes.

48. Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan: Mrs. Ahmad Shah, you have just told the Conference that in India there are very few women who have property in their own right?—Yes.

49. Do not you think the Muhammadan women have the right by law to hold property in their own right?—Yes, we acknowledge that, but Hindu women have very few rights in that respect.

50. What about Christian women?—Christian women have rights under Christian laws, but Christian women are a very small proportion of the population.

51. Sir Hari Singh Gour: And are comparatively poor?

Witness : The ratio bears no proportion to the actual numbers.

52. Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan : But if this right is maintained, that is to say, if the franchise is only granted to those women who possess property, then you think Muhammadan women will be the only women who would exercise the right of franchise ?—I had not looked on it in that light particularly, but we feel that that should not be the only test because it will certainly deprive a great many women of the vote.

53. But if you relax this rule, do not you think there will be some confusion ? For example, supposing in a household there were husband and wife and four or five daughters, do you think that the wife should be entitled to vote, and not the daughters ? —We said in our memorandum that we desired that the daughters of the age of 20 and over should exercise the right through their father's property, and the wife through her husband's.

54. Do you think that the Muhammadan women, although they desire the right to vote on account of property rights, will be able to exercise this right on account of the purdah restrictions ?—Gradually.

55. That, of course, remains to be seen, but we want to visualise as to the near future. What is your idea ?—I think that they will exercise the right to vote, particularly if we have it through the post, if they do not have to come to the polling station, or if special purdah arrangements are made.

56. You have suggested voting by post ?—In case the constituencies are unmanageable otherwise.

57. Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan : But voting by post especially in the case of purdah women, would become rather difficult, because who is to verify whether the right person has voted ?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : How do they execute documents ?

Witness : How is it done in the Chamber of Commerce ?

Chairman : That is a difficulty, is it not ? At least from a small knowledge of Indian litigation I think it must be. I know that cases have arisen, have they not, where there has been a good deal of dispute as to whether a document which is said to have been executed by a lady in purdah was really the document executed by the particular lady.

Sir Hari Singh Gour : That is so.

58. Chairman : That would have to be thought out, would it not ? Would your idea be that there would be a woman scrutineer, a woman who would, as it were, see to the vote being got in the residence ? —I think that would meet the situation.

Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan : Yes, but by post it is very difficult.

Dr. Suhrawardy : In Bengal we have separate polling booths for women, with lady presiding officers and polling officers, and Muhammadan purdah ladies of high family take advantage of it, and I know that they actually exercise the right of voting.

59. Chairman : Would that be a practical way ? It seems to be the way they do it in Bengal ?—I think so, because at our conferences which are held in purdah practically all the ladies come and register their votes with the other ladies.

60. Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan : It is not so in all the provinces. I do not know about Bengal, but in other provinces I dare say the women are not so courageous as to go to the polling stations, so you cannot establish one rule for the whole of India ?—We are not establishing one rule for the whole of India. At the present time we are only speaking for this province.

61. But do you think in this province Muhammadan women will go out to vote ?—(The Maharani of Mandi) : Yes. (Mrs. Ahmad Shah) : I think a few of them will, and we will try to educate the rest.

62. Why not prepare them first, before asking for this right ?—How long are we to wait ?

63. Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan : You said one of the qualifications should be a literacy test, and you say the upper primary standard may be accepted ?—The memorandum says that, yes.

64. If, for example, a woman who has qualified herself only up to that standard is elected a member of the council, do you think she would be able to take an intelligent part in the debates ?—In that case we can only say we hope we will be allowed to have the use of vernaculars in the council ; otherwise you must have an English literacy test, but we do not want that.

65. You want only an Urdu test ?—Urdu or Hindi.

Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan : But the language of the council is English.

Raja Nawab Ali Khan : This is a test for franchise, not for the council.

Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan : My point is this. If a woman is elected as a member of the council, and she has only qualified herself up to the standard of primary education, I was asking whether that would be enough to enable her to take an intelligent part in the debates.

66. Chairman : Forgive me for putting another question, but are you satisfied, in the absence of any literacy test, that there is any security that a man who is elected to the council will be sufficiently well educated ? There is no literacy test for a man.

Dr. Suhrawardy : As a matter of fact, in Bengal in 1921 we sent a cobbler to the council who knew nothing.

Chairman : I am not criticising anybody, but, in fact, in the Madras legislature, I have heard members —men—take part in the debates who spoke in the vernacular, presumably because they could not speak English.

Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan : Is not that rather a handicap ? The community which sends up that kind of representative has always to suffer.

Chairman : I think it may be so, though I am not convinced that literary education is always the final test. May I point out there is also a second confusion, which is this. What these ladies are suggesting is that the right to vote should be given to women citizens who satisfy a particular examination test. The question as to what women they would vote for is a different question, is not it ? This is merely determining who is to vote. If there are thousands and tens of thousands of men in this country who vote though they are quite illiterate, it does not seem to me these ladies are asking anything very outrageous when they say that in the case of women voters there should be a literacy test.

Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan : I quite see that, but once a lady has that right she can also stand for election.

Chairman : Certainly, just as an illiterate man can stand.

Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan : That is so, but an illiterate man is always a great drag.

Chairman : I think I would trust these ladies to choose somebody who could represent them properly.

67. Dr. Suhrawardy : Mrs. Ahmad Shah, did women exercise their right of voting in the last general election in this province ?—Not to any great extent.

68. Did you have any special arrangements for ladies ? Did you have a lady presiding officer ?—No.

69. Dr. Suhrawardy : I made a mistake when I said that in Bengal that was done ; I meant in Calcutta. It is confined to Calcutta ; in the mofussil they have not got it. (To the witness.) : My friend, Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan, has suggested to you that women should be educated first before they are given these rights. Am I right in saying the political education of women has already begun here in Lucknow, and they exhibit a keen interest in politics ? On the day of our arrival, I believe I saw the shadow of a lady with a black flag. Am I right ?—(Mrs. Chitamber) : And there were men, too !

Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan : One swallow does not make a summer.

70. Sardar Shivdev Singh Uberoi : Would you like the idea that the property qualification for women should be entirely removed, and only the qualifications of literacy and age demanded?—Mrs. Ahmad Shah: We prefer to have both. There are some ladies who have property in their own right, and we do not wish to debar them.

71. But if they are also educated they would have the right to vote?—Yes.

72. Do you wish the property qualification to remain as it is or to be altogether removed in the case of women voters?—We wish it to remain as it is so far as holding property in their own right is concerned, but we wish it to be extended to cover those whose fathers or husbands own property.

* * * * * * * * * *

Letter from Mrs. AHMAD SHAH dated 5th December, 1928.

WITH reference to the evidence of the Women's deputation, given before the Commission on December the 5th, we omitted to state one most important point, which we consider to be an indispensable factor in our Country's advance toward universal adult suffrage: namely, that in any future constitution it is an absolute necessity that adequate provision shall be made for the free and compulsory education of both boys and girls, at least between the ages of six and ten. On behalf of the deputation, therefore, I beg that Sir John will very kindly take note of this fact, and that he will give it a place among the claims of Indian women when the case of India is represented before the British Parliament.

Summary of the Memorandum submitted by the MUSLIMS of the UNITED PROVINCES.*

Provincial Government. Representation to the depressed classes should be given from among the constituencies termed "Non-Muslim." The elections to all the legislative bodies should be by method of direct election.

We regard separate electorate vital to our political existence as our experience of those constituencies where the general electorate obtains has convinced us that Muslims will disappear from all legislative bodies unless separate electorate is guaranteed to us. We are convinced that separate electorate precludes all chances of communal bitterness. Joint electorate with fixed reservation of seats is totally unacceptable to us as only dummy Muslims will be returned. They will be under the influence of Hindus. It is not separate electorate which is responsible for the present tension but the struggle for power waged by the majority community as a result of the Reforms and the activities of the Hindu Maha Sabha and Shudhi and Sangathan movements. But separate electorate is barren and hollow unless it is combined with the protection of the interests of our community in education services, local bodies, and the Cabinet. The U.P. Muslims deem the following points to be essential. We will oppose all changes in the constitution unless and until these demands are embodied in a parliamentary statute. We advocate the widening of the franchise for the Legislative Council, the Assembly, and the Council of State. Details will be found on pages 1–2, and 140 of our Memorandum. We advocate the enlargement of the Legislative Council. It should consist of 201 members, in which various communities and interests should be represented. Please see pages 12–13 of the Memorandum. We also advocate enlargement of the Assembly and the Council of State. Please see pages 137–140. Most of us are of the opinion that all subjects except Law and Order, including general administration, should be transferred. Others think that land revenue should be reserved. The subjects that are not transferred should continue to be administered by an Executive Councillor. We think that if, and when, the official bloc is removed from the lower chamber, a second chamber should be established in these provinces. We are of the opinion that sections 45 and 65 of the Government of India Act, 1919 should be retained. We think that the powers enumerated in these sections should be exercised as sparingly as possible. We are of the opinion that the principle of classification of subjects into central and provincial which is applied at the present time is fairly satisfactory.

WE DEEM THE FOLLOWING SAFEGUARDS TO BE ESSENTIAL TO OUR EXISTENCE, AND WE WILL NOT AGREE TO ANY CHANGE IN THE CONSTITUTION UNLESS AND UNTIL THEY GUARANTEED TO US:

(1) Representation of community by separate electorate in the legislative bodies as embodied in the Government of India Act, 1919.

(2) Representation of our community in all local bodies, by separate electorate.

(3) Separate electorate in Universities, Board of Intermediate Education, and other statutory and autonomous bodies. The amount of our representation in these bodies should be the same as that of our representation in the Legislative Council.

(4) Representation in the public services maintained by the Government and local and other autonomous bodies. The amount of our representation in the Government departments should be determined by the amount of our representation in the Legislative Council. In local and other autonomous bodies our representation in the administration should be in proportion to our representation on that body.

(5) Representation of Muslims in the Cabinet should in no case be less than 33 per cent.

(6) Adequate safeguards for the Urdu language in the courts, Government Departments, educational institutions, local and other elective bodies created and controlled by the legislature.

(7) If three-fourths of the members of a community object to the introduction of a Bill, resolution or motion on matters affecting the religious or customary rights of our community, in the legislature, or any other elective body, such a Bill, or resolution, shall not be allowed to be moved, discussed or voted upon in any such body.

(8) Thirty-three per cent of all grants-in-aid of education, religion, charity, and for social purposes whether given by the Government or a local body to be reserved for Muslim institutions.

(9) Full religious liberty, liberty of belief, worship, observances, propaganda association and education shall be guaranteed to our community. The general laws of the states shall remain unaffected thereby.

We regard these rights to be fundamental. Unless and until we are granted these safeguards, we will determinedly oppose all schemes for the rearrangement of the constitution. We are strongly of the opinion that no legislature, and no administrative or elective body in India, should be given the power of modifying these safeguards. We are of the opinion that the British Parliament, through the Secretary of State for India, should be given the power of framing rules in accordance with a statute of the British Parliament, for the purpose of enforcing these safeguards. We would have had no objection to this power being conferred on the Governor of the province, but for the fact that his position would be a delicate one, and he should not be involved in matters in which members of various communities are deeply concerned.

* The full Memorandum, comprising 290 pages, with 214 pages of appendices, is too long to reproduce.

We may refer you to pages 111–112 of the Memorandum for details of the scheme whereby we desire these safeguards to be enforced.

That most of these safeguards are by no means new, but are actually embodied in the constitutions of many of the new states of Europe, will be clear from the perusal of pages 65–111 of our Memorandum; while pages 113–133 show how they are being worked in many European countries at the present time.

Muslims in the Administration.—In no country in the world are the services as important an agency of public good as they are in India. The reforms have precipitated the struggle for power and emoluments of office, and for control of the entire machinery of Government. The present tension is due not to the communal electorates, but to the struggle on the part of the majority community for wresting from the Muslims their positions in the administration, education and local self-Government. Unless a free and frank ratio in the services is settled between at least the two communities who aspire to Swaraj, and accepted and legalised in a parliamentary statute, not only will constant bickerings soil our record of self-Government, but clerical castes, with special aptitude for passing examinations, will dominate the country. We are strongly of the opinion that a Provincial Public Services Commission should be established in these provinces and that the ratio of Muslims in every department of the Government and autonomous bodies created and controlled by the Legislative, should be fixed. The amounts of our representation in the Government services should be determined by the extent of our representation in the Legislative Council, while the amount of our representation in elective bodies created and controlled by the legislature should be determined by the amount of our representation on such body. We are of the opinion that there should be a competitive examination, for all public services, and that Muslims and Hindus should sit for the same examination; but Muslims should be selected out of Muslim candidates, and Hindus out of Hindu candidates. We think that minimum qualifications should be laid down for all examinations, and no person should be admitted to any examination who does not satisfy these qualifications.

In our opinion, there should be no change in the parliamentary statute which embodied the recommendations of the Lee Commission. We think that the percentage of Europeans and Indians fixed therein should be maintained for the present. We want to make it clear that this is only temporary. We look forward to the period when this state of things will disappear. We are strongly of the opinion that some of the important posts maintained by the local bodies, such as Secretary, Executive Officer, Engineer, Public Health Officer, should be taken away from the control of such bodies, and should be filled by the Provincial Public Services Commission, after such tests, etc., as the latter may impose. We feel strongly that the Muslims should be guaranteed a percentage in all appointments under the control of provincial government or other elective bodies. We may refer you to pages 148–178 of the Memorandum for a discussion of the various problems concerning this subject.

Local bodies.—We are strongly of the opinion that the local bodies should be left comparatively free in the sphere which is allotted to them. But if they are inefficient or partial, and slack in the discharge of their duties to the public, it is the duty of the Government to remove their defects. While Municipal Boards are comparatively efficient, the District Boards have not worked well. The voters are illiterate. On the Boards have been conferred powers which they do not know how to use properly. This does not apply to every District and Municipal Board in these provinces. Some have done well. But the fact remains that the majority of these bodies have not worked smoothly, and some had to be superseded. Their treatment of the Muslim minority has been such as to call forth protests from Muslims all over the province. There are some honourable exceptions to this. But it must be stated frankly that a number of local bodies have subjected our community to a species of treatment which it has never experienced in the history of these provinces. The number of Muslim employees has been reduced. Muslim contractors have been reduced in a number of cases, while the percentage of Muslim teachers in rural areas has been reduced to alarming proportions. They have, in many cases, been Hinduised, and Muslims feel that they are helpless in the matter. For details of the policy pursued by the local bodies we refer you to pages 30–54 of our Memorandum.

We are strongly of the opinion that the Chairman of every Board should alternately be a Hindu and a Muslim, and the Boards should have only deliberative functions, and not executive power. Certain posts under the Boards should be provincialised; the control of the Government should be exercised in all cases where interests of minorities are affected; and the inspection of the finances and working of local bodies by heads of Government Departments, or others under them, should be undertaken. Urdu language should be allowed in all bodies, and Muslim children in schools maintained by these bodies should be given facilities for learning the Urdu language; and the appointment of Muslims in the services maintained by the bodies should be guaranteed. Separate electorate in these bodies should be guaranteed for Muslims. Muslims should be given by statute right to the exercise of their religion. Grants-in-aid for Muslim institutions should be fixed, and should not be left to the mercy of each Board. The Collector of a district should not merely be a critic, but should help the Boards with his advice. Anything done by any local body which violates these safeguards should be declared null and void.

Judicial.—We strongly recommend the appointment of thirty-three per cent of Muslims in all grades of the Judicial Department, and the use of Urdu in all the courts.

Education.—We have already given evidence on education before the Education Committee of the Statutory Commission, through our representatives, Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan, Litt. D., M. L.C., Chairman of the Committee, and Hafiz Hidayat Husian, M.L.C., and endorse all that they have stated before it.

NOTE :—The references to the Memorandums are to the Memorandums submitted to the Statutory Committee, at the end of July, this year.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Yours most obedient servant,

SHAFAAT AHMAD KHAN,
M.L.C., LITT.D., F.R.HIST.S.

Chairman, Committee for the Demand, U.P. Muslims, November 15, 1928.

LUCKNOW.

Dated 6th December, 1928.

PRESENT :

ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION, OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE (EXCEPT MR. KIKABHAI PREMCHAND), AND OF THE UNITED PROVINCES PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE.

Deputation of the MUSLIMS OF THE UNITED PROVINCES.*

The Deputation consisted of :—

Khan Bahadur Masud-ul-Hasan, Barrister-at-Law, M.L.C.

Mr. Zuhur Ahmad, Barrister-at-Law, M.L.C., Secretary to the Committee.

Shaikh Adullah, M.L.C., Advocate, Treasurer, Muslim University, Aligarh.

Khan Bahadur Fasih-ud-Din, B.A., M.L.C., Retired Collector.

Raja Ejaz Rasul Khan, C.S.I., of Jehangirabad.

Nawab Jamshed Ali Khan, M.B.E., M.L.C., President, Zamindars' Association, Muzaffarnagar.

Munshi Ihtisham Ali, President, U.P. Muslin League.

Saiyid Habibullah, M.L.C.

Khan Bahadur Fax-ur-Rahman Khan, M.L.C.

Khan Bahadur Shah Badre Alam, M.L.C.

Mr. Abdul Bari, Barrister-at-Law, M.L.C.

Nawab Sajjad Ali Khan, M.L.C.

Khan Bahadur Saiyid Zafar Hussain, Barrister-at-Law, M.L.C.

Khan Bahadur Ubaid-ur-Rahman Khan, M.L.C.

* * * * * * * * * *

1. We propose to ask our colleague, Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan, to put questions to you in the first place, and afterwards, other members of the Conference will very likely have some questions to put.—Khan Bahadur Masud-ul-Hasan : I will reply with regard to constitutional questions, and Khan Bahadur Fasih-ud-Din will reply with regard to the Services.

Chairman : Very well.

2. Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan : In what capacity do you appear before this Conference ?—We appear as representatives of the Mussalmans of the United Provinces.

3. Is your Memorandum supported by the Muhammadans of these provinces ?—Yes.

4. Would you kindly tell us, as briefly as possible, what the demands of the United Provinces Muhammadans are ?—They are given in our Memorandum on pages 109 and 110.

5. Would you kindly read them out ?—Yes. They are these : "1. Representation of our community by separate electorate in the United Provinces legislative council as embodied in the Government of India Act of 1919. The Act embodies the solemn, clear, definite and unambiguous pledge which the British public gave, through the Imperial Parliament, to the Muslim community. That pledge, we hope and believe, the British Parliament will redeem. Separate representation in the legislatures has been guaranteed to us by all responsible British statesmen. We are convinced that these promises shall be kept. 2. Representation of our community in all local bodies, by separate electorate. 3. Separate electorate in the Universities, the Board of Intermediate and High School Education and other elective bodies created and controlled by the legislature. The amount of our representation in these bodies should be determined by the amount of our representation in the legislative council. 4. Representation in the public services, whether maintained by the Government or local and other autonomous bodies. The amount of our representation should in no case be less than thirty-three per cent. in each grade of every department, maintained by the Government. In the local and other autonomous bodies our representation in the administration should be in proportion to our representation in that body. 5. Representation of Muslims in the Cabinet should in no case be less than thirty-three per cent. 6. Adequate safeguards for the Urdu language in the Courts, Government departments, educational institutions, local and other elective bodies created and controlled by the legislature. 7. If three-fourths of the members of a community object to the introduction of a Bill, resolution, or motion, on matters affecting the religious or customary rights of our community, in the legislature, or any other elective body, such a Bill, resolution, or motion, shall not be allowed to be moved, discussed or voted upon in any such body. 8. Thirty-three per cent. of all grants-in-aid of education, religion, charity, or for social purpose, whether given by the Government, or a local self-governing body, to be reserved for Muslim institutions. 9. Full religious liberty, liberty of belief, worship, observances, propaganda, association, and education shall be guaranteed to our community. The general laws of the State shall remain unaffected thereby."

6. On page 110, in the first line after these safeguards, these words occur : "We regard these rights to be fundamental." What do you mean by "fundamental" ? How are you going to get them effectuated ?—What we mean by this is that these rights to protect the interests of the Mussalmans should form part of the fundamental rights attached to the Statute.

7. Chairman : You wish to have them expressed in the language of the Government of India Act ?—Yes.

8. Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan : Could you kindly tell us how these safeguards are going to be enforced in India ?—Well, the suggestion that we can make at present is that these safeguards should be enforced through the Governor-General and the Governor of the province. It is open to the Governor either to decide himself or to refer the matter to a judicial tribunal, whether the safeguards affecting the minorities have been acted upon in the spirit of the law or not, and he should carry out the decision of the judicial authority.

* The references during the examination of this Deputation are to the full Memorandum, a summary only of which has been printed (vide p. 338).

9. You say on page 109 that the Muhammadans of these provinces desire to reserve the amount of representation in the legislature which they have got now. On what ground do you demand your present proportion in the legislature?—The reasons are that we have got our political importance, we have got our social importance in these provinces. We have contributed largely to the culture and advancement of these provinces. The fact of our importance was recognised by the Government of India in their despatch of 1907, which you will find at page 266 of "Indian Constitutional Documents," by Mukerjee.

10. Would you kindly read that portion?—Yes. "The Government of India concur with the presenters of the Address that neither on the provincial nor in the Imperial legislative councils has the Muhammadan community hitherto received a measure of representation commensurate with its numbers and political and historical importance, and they desire to lay stress upon his Excellency's observation," and so on. Further on, they say: Under the system of election hitherto in force "——

11. Excuse me; the word "hitherto" means separate electorates?—Yes.

12. Chairman: Let us identify the document. Are you reading from a despatch?—Yes. It is a despatch of 1907, at page 266 of "Indian Constitutional Documents," by P. Mukerjee, Volume I. "Under the systen of election hitherto in force, Hindus largely predominate in all, or almost all the electorates." Further on, in the 5th despatch of the Government of India, the Government has recognised the special representation of the Muhammadans. This is "The Indian Constitution," by P. Mukerjee, page 460: "Past history and the presence of Muhammadan centres count for much. Fourthly, it might be argued that inasmuch as a majority can always impose its will upon a minority, it does not greatly matter whether the Muhammadans, in places where they are in a conspicuous minority, are awarded, for example, 15 or 20 per cent. of the seats. But we think it a valid answer to observe that the effectiveness of a minority depends upon its being large enough to have the sense of not being entirely overwhelmed. Finally, we should have to remember that whatever advantage is given to the Muhammadans is taken away from some other interest or interests."

13. Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan: So I take it you want representation in excess of the population?—Certainly.

14. On the ground that if the amount of the Mussalman representation remains as it is, it will have the feeling of being entirely overwhelmed. If we keep our representation according to population, even under the Government of India Act, there will be a sense of being overwhelmed?— That is exactly the idea.

15. Can you give me any other ground for maintaining their present proportion in the legislature besides the ground you have alleged?—Well, there is the Lucknow Pact.

* * * * * * * * * * *

16. Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan: Is it a fact that a separate electorate intensifies ill-feeling among various communities in this country?—No, not at all. On the contrary, the separate electorates have avoided occasions for further bitterness.

17. How?—Because when you have the mixed electorates the Hindus have a greater chance of fighting the Mussalmans to obtain their object as far as the elections go.

18. Khan Bahadur Fasih-ud-Din, you were a member of the Provincial Executive Association for the Islington Commission, I understand?—Khan Bahadur Fasih-ud-Din: I was a co-opted member of the Islington Commission to represent the provincial executive services in 1913.

19. And you have been a Collector of a district in this province?—Yes.

20. So you have a sufficiently long experience of public service?—Yes.

21. What are your reasons for demanding representation in the services?—My reasons are the same as have been given for our representation in the legislative bodies. The legislative bodies dictate the policy, and that policy is carried out by the services. We do not want this representation for the sake of the loaves and fishes of the office, but for the sake of having an adequate share in the administration of our province.

22. Have you heard that some people say that if you had representation in the services the efficiency of the various departments where this rule obtains will suffer?—Not in the least, because hitherto the Muslims have been working with very great efficiency, and their efficiency has been admitted by all the heads of the departments and by the heads of the provinces also, in spite of the fact that they have not come into the services through competitive examination.

* * * * * * * * * * *

29. Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan: (To the witness.) Khan Bahadur Sahib, I will confine myself to the provinces of India. I should like you to tell the Conference what regulations or rules provinces in India have made for the representation of various communities in the public services.

Chairman: Shall we start with this province? I know about some of the others.

30. Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan: Start with the United Provinces?—In the first place, the Lee Commission has fixed the representation of Indians and Europeans, and also of Muslims and non-Muslims.

31. Chairman: Has it? Where shall we find that in the Lee Commission's report?—This is the practice of the executive Government.

32. Chairman: I want to be clear about this. I may have misunderstood it, but up to the present I have never heard that the Lee Commission dealt with the distribution of services as between Muslims and non-Muslims. Surely that is so?

Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan: Quite.

33. Very well; it is a mistake. What you wish to refer to is a practice (it may even be a rule) which has been laid down, I think, in more provinces than one, that while the Government does not undertake to secure a particular distribution of offices according to communities, they do endeavour to follow the rule that no community shall fail to be represented to a reasonable degree. Is that the sort of rule you have in mind?—(Several members of the deputation.) Yes, exactly.

Dr. Shafat Ahmad Khan: For the deputy collectors in this province the ratio as between Hindus and Muhammadans is fixed in the competitive examination. If there are six vacancies, two are offered to the Muhammadans and four to the Hindus.

34. Chairman: What sort of posts is that for?

Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan: The provincial executive service—deputy collectors.

35. Chairman: You are speaking of the provincial service?

Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan: Yes.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: The provincial executive service.

Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan: For the excise inspectors, which is also by competitive examination, the ratio of Muhammadans and Hindus is also fixed.

Witness (Khan Bahadur Fasih-ud-Din): May I explain?

Chairman: The doctor sahib is putting it quite plainly, and I am interested to learn. You are referring to recruitment for the provincial service?

Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan: Yes.

36. Chairman: Can you tell me this. Has a document been issued, coming from the United Provinces Government, which lays down that proportion? Is there a published document which does so?

Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan : Yes. I could give the reference to it later on.

Witness (Khan Bahadur Fasih-ud-Din) : It is in the Manual of Government Orders.* I could submit that later on. What I wanted to submit, sir, was this : that the Lee Commission fixed the proportion of Indians and Europeans in each province.

37. Chairman : For the All-India services ?—For the All-India services.

38. Excuse me if I correct you, but we must get it right. They did not fix the proportion for each province; the proportion was fixed for the All-India services ?—Yes, and subsequently the local Government fixed the proportion in the services under its control—the proportion of Muslims. It fixed the proportion in the Police department and in the executive provincial services and in all the other branches of the services, even in the case of services the recruitment to which was made by competitive examination.

39. Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan : How would you secure representation of the Muslims in the services consistently with efficiency ? Have you any scheme ? —Yes. I should like to lay down the minimum qualification and then I would reserve seats. There should be competitive examinations for the Muslims and non-Muslims separately, and I would take the requisite number of Muslims on the basis of the result of the competitive examination, as is done in the case of deputy collectors now.

40. What is your experience of the working of local bodies in these provinces ?—(Khan Bahadur Masud-ul-Hasan) : My experience of the working of local bodies in these provinces is that generally the working has deteriorated and the efficiency has suffered, but there are honourable exceptions to this general rule.

41. Can you tell me how the local bodies have treated the minorities ?—That is rather a difficult question, but as a matter of fact I know that generally the minorities have not been properly treated. Their interests have suffered, and in spite of their separate representation they have not been able to protect their interests.

42. What interests ?—As a matter of fact, we find that Muhammadans have been eliminated from the services; slaughter houses have been closed, and various obstacles have been put in the way of their exercising their civic rights; for instance, in the schools their education has suffered; Muhammadan teachers have not been fairly treated, and grants have not been made sufficient to save their interest in education.

42. Is any check imposed by any instrument or statute whereby the local bodies can be controlled in their treatment of minorities ?—Unfortunately, in India, and especially in our provinces, the check from above is very limited; but in European countries rules have been laid down by statutes whereby the local bodies are compelled to protect the interests of the minorities according to a certain standard.

* * * *

46. Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan : Khan Bahadur Masud-ul-Hasan, will you kindly tell me why the safeguards in Europe to which you have referred have not been so effective ?—As a matter of fact, the execution of these safeguards is entrusted to the League of Nations, and the League has exercised only the right of advice and persuasion; no force has been brought to bear on these States to enforce these rights. In the case of the British Empire it would be entirely different. If the British Parliament has to see to the enforcement of these minority rights, the British Government can exercise physical and other force to make the provincial Government carry out what the law lays down for minorities.

47. Chairman : We need not go into this at length, but perhaps you will allow me to point out to you what is the real difficulty, as it strikes some of us, in this line of suggestion. It is not that any fair-minded man would not wish to see the rights of a minority protected. Every fair-minded man, of course, ought to want that. The difficulty is not a theoretical difficulty but a practical difficulty. You do not get any practical protection merely because you have a general phrase put into an Act of Parliament; the practical protection arises if the language of the Act of Parliament is such that it can be enforced in detail. You said just now, by way of example, that you thought that in some of the district boards where there was a Hindu majority the Muslim teachers did not get a fair chance. Let us take that as an illustration. I can understand that Muslim teachers would be protected by the growth of a public opinion which felt that one ought to do what was fair by everybody, whether the person concerned was a Hindu or a Muslim; but what sort of clause do you think could be put into an Act of Parliament which would secure that a Muslim teacher got a fair chance ? What is your idea ?—This is a matter of drafting. What we want is that the principle should be settled and recognised, and it should be left to the Government of India and the local Government to lay down rules by which that principle could be translated into action.

48. Yes, I quite understand it if what you suggest is what you have mentioned already, namely that there should be a rule, backed by Statute, that appointments of a particular sort should go to members of different communities in a particular proportion. There may be objections and difficulties in regard to that, but at any rate I understand the suggestion. What I feel some difficulty about is in understanding the suggestion that over and above that there is something which can be put into an Act of Parliament which is going to secure that people are fairly treated. You see, representative institutions necessarily mean that you leave a great deal of discretion with the body that has been appointed; and if at the same time you require that at every moment in every individual case some superior authority is to intervene, how much have you got left of representative institutions ? That is the practical difficulty. I am not saying this in the least to criticise what you say, but to get your help ?—As a matter of fact we feel that if safeguards and guarantees were provided in the Statute with regard to the principle, the representative of the King in India will see that they are properly executed.

49. There are many Constitutions which begin with the words "All men are equal." Is it your reading of history that the countries whose Constitution begins with those words have in fact secured equal treatment for all men ? That is the difficulty. I am not in the least criticising you; I want your help ?—Yes. What we feel is that once these principles are recognised and incorporated in the Act, the Muhammadans themselves will exert themselves to protect their interests; the Government, on the other hand, will see they are executed, and the majority will also realise that if these provisions are not executed they stand to lose a great deal of power.

* * * * * * * * * *

51. Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan : * * * (To the Witness) : What would be the policy of the Muhammadans if their demands are not granted ? —This is a most serious question. We feel that if our demands are not granted, or we are deprived of those privileges which we exercise to-day, we shall immediately ask His Majesty's Government to scrap the existing Reforms, because if safeguards are not provided for the interests of minorities our position will be jeopardised, and not only our community but we feel India as a whole will suffer.

Chairman : Forgive me. We none of us want to carry these statements further than, on reflection, the deputation really intends. Turn to page 110 of your book for the moment please. I read there : "We regard these rights to be fundamental. Unless and until we are granted these safeguards, our community will determinedly oppose all schemes for the rearrangement of the Constitution." That is not the same thing as asking the existing Constitution to be scrapped.

* Vide Appendix, p. 346.

52. Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan : But your point is that the present arrangement has not secured your rights ?—That is so.

53. And therefore unless these rights are further secured, you will be quite prepared to see the whole of the present Reforms scrapped. Is that what you mean ?—That is exactly what I mean.

54. Mr. Desanges : You have seen this book, the " All-Parties Conference of 1926," I take it ?—Yes.

55. Do not you think that the demands made by your community will not strengthen nationalism in this country ?—Most certainly, because it will remove the causes of friction and it will afford an opportunity to co-operate for the well-being of the country.

56. But why are you not in favour of the government of India by Indians—that is, the Muhammadans fusing with the Hindus ?—At present I feel that the nationalism in India means nothing short of Hindu communalism. If we were satisfied that our rights were protected by parliamentary enactment, and if the British Parliament has guaranteed to us those rights and enforcement of those rights, we certainly would have advocated full responsible government in India; but until our rights are protected we cannot take the risk.

57. Khan Bahadur Hidayat Husain : Do you think that communal tension would be intensified by the substitution of joint electorates for separate electorates ?—Most certainly. That is what we are afraid of.

58. Your opinion is based on what ?—On experience.

59. What do you say as to the reservation of seats from a joint electorate in order to foster nationalism in India ?—We feel that by substituting a mixed electorate with the reservation of seats for the separate electorate, Muhammadans will not be able always to return their true representatives to legislative bodies, and that those who would be returned in the majority of cases would be the dummies of the majority community.

60. In these provinces even in 1924 the Hindus generally supported separate electorates. Since when do you think there has been any organised opposition to separate electorates in these provinces ?—Well, it started after 1924, as a matter of fact, with the advent of the Mahasabha.

61. When was that ?—When the activities of the Mahasabha were intensified.

62. Chairman : I think perhaps time might be saved if I say this. We had a very careful and full statement on this side of the matter when we were in Lahore, and this particular point when there was a change in the view taken by those who spoke for the Hindu community about separate electorates was very carefully gone into. Sir Muhammad Shafi went into it with us, and I may tell you at once the conclusion which seemed to be historically correct to most of us. It seemed to be established. as you have just said, that at one time there was not an objection to separate representation, and I think you are correct in saying the change began to come about the year 1923 or 1924, or thereabout. I think it would be difficult to say it is quite as late as you suggest, for this reason, that as a matter of fact the objection is mentioned in the report of the Muddiman Committee, and the Muddiman Committee signed its report in December, 1924; so it appears that it arose before then. On the other hand, we need not go over the ground again. It is fair to remember that the difference of view which undoubtedly has grown up on the part of a large part of Hindu political opinion may be said, perhaps, to be due in fact to experience of the actual working, because, of course, in the days when there was a general agreement that there should be separate electorates it was before they had been used in connection with the present Constitution. There had been some use of the system of special communal electorates, but the actual experience of working of them on a large scale, of course, only took place lately. Do not you think that fairly states what the history is, as you understand it ?

Khan Bahadur Hidayat Husain : Yes.

Chairman : I only wanted to save your time, because we have had it before.

63. Mr. Srivastava : Khan Bahadur Masud-ul-Hasan, you say yours is a representation of the Mussalmans of the United Provinces. How do you call it so ?—This is the most representative deputation that could be had in the United Provinces. It consists of the elected representatives of the Muhammadans in the Council; it has got the President of the Provincial Muslim League; it has the representative of the Muslim University; and besides this, when we prepared our memorandum we consulted the representatives of the local bodies, and we also discussed the principles in the All-Parties Conference that was held at Cawnpore; so our representation and our memorandum represent the whole Muslim community of the United Provinces.

64. There are no exceptions ?—There are exceptions who do not count.

* * * * * * * * * *

94. Mr. Srivastava : * * *, Khan Bahadur Masud-ul-Hasan, are you an elected member of the council ?—(Khan Bahadur Masud-ul-Hasan) : I am a nominated member of the council.

95. Nominated by Government ?—The nominations are made by the Government.

96. Have you anyone else in your deputation who is a nominated member ?—There is one other.

97. Chairman : It seems to me this deputation is a deputation which contains two nominated members of the legislative council and I think nine or ten others ?—(Several members of the Deputation) : Eleven.

98. Mr. Srivastava : On page 3 of your memorandum you make a complaint about the special constituencies. You say there are six constituencies in the United Provinces which could return a member of your community, or rather of any community. Do you stand by the statement that those constituencies could return a member of any community ?—If they wished to they certainly could.

99. Are you aware that the Upper India Chamber of Commerce has not got a single Muhammadan member ?—I am not aware of it.

100. Mr. Srivastava : You did not verify that fact ?

Chairman : Is that so ?

Mr. Srivastava : That is so.

101. Chairman : The Upper India Chamber of Commerce does not contain any Muhammadan member ? Is that by its rules ?

102. Mr. Srivastava : No, but no Muhammadan has cared to join the Chamber. (To the Witness.) Are you aware that the United Provinces Chamber of Commerce has got only two Muhammadan members out of a hundred and six ?—It may be so, but if they wanted to give an opportunity to the Muhammadans they would certainly elect one of them.

103. Do you know whether any Muhammadan has stood in these constituencies ?—They had no chance.

104. Do you ascribe this definitely to a determination on the part of the Hindus not to let the Muhammadans get in for these constituencies ?—If we are to judge the sympathetic spirit of the majority community by their actions in the United Provinces, we can certainly infer it was on account of this that no Muhammadan was elected. We also find that in the district boards in the whole of the United Provinces only a solitary Muhammadan has been elected as chairman.

105. I am not concerned with that; I am asking only about these constituencies. Will you please keep to my question?—I am trying to prove the spirit which is behind all this.

106. My question is this: Have the Hindu members of these constituencies made a definite "dead set" against the Muhammadans, so that they shall not get in or is it only a matter of chance that they have not got in?—We have to infer the motives from the results.

107. You cannot say they made a "dead set" against the Muhammadans?—I cannot say what was in their minds, but we have to judge their motives by the results.

108. You demand 33 per cent. representation in all services and you want 33 per cent. of grants-in-aid for education, religion and so on and so forth Will you be willing to pay for this in the shape of taxes? Will you be willing, as a community, to pay for these things in the shape of taxes?—We have been paying. Our population is only 14·8 per cent., but we have been paying 23 per cent. of the revenue in the United Provinces.

109. Chairman: 23 per cent. of what?—Of Government revenue.

110. You mean of land revenue, do not you?—Yes.

111. You see, there is also income tax?—Muhammadans have been paying income tax on their incomes as well.

112. I am not disputing with you; I only mean that what you refer to is land revenue?—Land revenue, yes.

113. Mr. Srivastava: My question is this. If it be found that the taxes which you pay come, say, to only 20 per cent., would you still insist that you should get 33 per cent. of all these "loaves and fishes" as you have called them in one place?—The taxes and the revenues paid into the Government exchequer become the property of the State, and it is the duty of the State to distribute them to the various interests according to their requirements.

114. I am not concerned with the duty of the State, but would you regard it as fair that if you are paying only 20 per cent. of the taxes, you should get a bigger share in the emoluments which accrue from those taxes?—Most certainly it would be fair. If capitalists pay a large amount of income tax, it does not follow it should all be spent on them.

115. You said that in a number of local bodies the slaughter-houses have been closed. Can you give instances?—Take the case of Jhansi; in spite of the protests on the part of Muhammadans the slaughter-houses have been closed and the Muhammadans made to suffer. We have given instances in our memorandum also.

116. But does it not rest with the Government not to accept a proposal like that?—The Government cannot interfere; the Municipal and District Boards Acts have not given them sufficient power to intervene.

117. You want separate electorates and you have stated in various portions of your memorandum that separate electorate is only a modification of the system of proportional representation. Would you be content with proportional representation?—According to the Nehru Report proportional representation is not practicable in India.

118. I am not talking of the Nehru Report. Would you be content with proportional representation?—No, we cannot.

119. Chairman: I understand your question is whether the Muhammadan community as represented by this deputation will be content with having the same proportion of elected seats in the council as Muhammadans are of the whole population.

Mr. Srivastava: No, Sir. My question is that if the single transferable vote system is adopted whereby the minorities are automatically protected

---

Chairman: I do not think it works quite automatically; it is rather elaborate.

120. Mr. Srivastava: It is elaborate, but supposing the difficulties of working it could be solved, would you be content with that system?—We will not be satisfied because that would not give us sufficient representation.

121. Would you refer to pages 116 and 117 of your memorandum? You have described this proportional representation at great length and you have said how it is worked in different countries. At page 117 you say "the difference between separate electorate and proportional representation is one of method and not of principle"?—Yes.

122. It seems that you regard separate electorate to be the same thing as proportional representation—it varies only in the method?—The result of the two is practically the same.

123. Well, then, will you not be content with that system?—No, because it would not give sufficient representation, and in India the system of proportional representation is unworkable at present.

124. Then your objection to proportional representation is that it will not give you weighty representation?—Yes.

125. Chairman: If you look at page 117 you see a further point has been made. It says: "In the former (that is the separate electorate) the minority is organised in a separate electoral roll, in the latter (that is, proportional representation) it is organised in well-disciplined, well-trained and intelligent, political parties." If you turn over to page 118 you see it is stated: "We may point out that in India parties are not often formed, and elections are rarely fought, on political issues, as it is the personal influence of the candidate and his friends which is the determining factor in all contests." I am not saying whether it is right or wrong, but assuming, for the moment that it is right, it does seem rather that in the present circumstances of India it might be difficult to work the system of proportional representation.

Mr. Srivastava: It may be difficult, but I am asking whether the deputation will be content if the difficulties can be got over?

Witness (Khan Bahadur Masud-ul-Hasan): No.

126. Kunwar Bisheshar Dayal Seth: You have said that in spite of separate electorates your interests have suffered a great deal in the local bodies. Then do you think that separate electorates have failed in this respect and that therefore some other system should be substituted in its place?—Without safeguards separate electorates cannot secure our protection. As a matter of fact, in the Lucknow Pact we had provided for a proviso that if three-fourths of the members of the minority oppose any resolution or a Bill affecting that community it should not be proceeded with. But that part of the Pact was not accepted by the British Parliament and therefore we are left only to protect our interests by means of separate electorates. They give us representation but for want of safeguards in the Statute or the rules our interests have not been sufficiently protected.

127. You have complained a great deal about the Hinduisation of local boards. Has any representation been made to the minister of Local Self-Government about that?—It would have been utterly useless because he has no power to interfere.

128. Was any representation on behalf of your community ever made to the minister of Local Self-Government about this matter?—Complaints have been made in the Press; we have made complaints from our platforms. We have brought it to the notice of the minister but he is helpless.

129. That was only in an indirect way. Did you make any direct representation?—Yes. A direct representation was made to the minister in Lucknow with regard to the Melad controversy, but the minister could not do anything in the matter.

130. It was only on one occasion about the Melad controversy that you made that representation?—That was on a very serious occasion. If on such an occasion he could not interfere I do not know how he can interfere on other occasions.

131. Now about the second paragraph on page 186 dealing with the courts and the judiciary in the United Provinces?—That paragraph has been deleted.

132. I want to know how is it that you had to withdraw a thing which you had originally included? —It does not affect one way or the other since it has been withdrawn.

133. Raja Nawab Ali Khan: May I draw your attention to page 18 of the green book wherein you say: "We have said before that the peace and the future of the country are . . . at stake, and it therefore grieves us beyond all description to say that if no adequate safeguards for the proper Moslem interests are guaranteed by the British Parliament and made an organic part of the Constitution, we will not only say halt to all further Reforms, but we would strongly advocate going back to the pre-Reform days." If proper safeguards are not provided you would rather have the Reforms stopped?—Yes.

134. On page 4, paragraph 3 you say: "The Moslem public strongly feels and the realities of every-day life demonstrate it beyond any shadow of doubt that the Hindu cannot be trusted with Moslem rights." Do you consider that in an atmosphere of this kind it is possible for responsible government to flourish?—Certainly not.

135. Will the result of communal electorates not be to encourage the growth of parties based on religion and not on politics?—As a matter of fact in our own council the parties are not formed on religious grounds. Muhammadans belong to various political groups.

136. But do you recognise the desirability of forming parties on political lines or not?—Most certainly.

137. Is it possible to form those parties under these communal electorates?—Certainly; we have got parties even now in the legislature.

138. Mr. Srivastava: What parties are you referring to?—There is the Progressive Party, there is the Swaraj Party and there is the Nationalist Party.

139. Chairman: I understand what the witness means in his answer is this, that when you look at the political alliance of different Muslim members of the Council you will find that all the Muslim members do not belong to one party and act together but some of them act with one political group while others with some other political group. But you see Khan Bahadur that there is a very good point in the question put to you by the Nawab Sahib. What do you contemplate for India? Do you contemplate a future in which Muslim members will be elected by Muslims to look after Muslim interests and Hindu members will be elected by Hindus to look after Hindu interests, or do you contemplate a future in which citizens will be elected to look after the interests of the country as a whole?—Our ideal is that, till such time as the electors feel their full responsibility and we have developed our political conception, separate electorates will have to be maintained to protect our interests. But we look forward to a time when all the various interests will unite and work for the United India.

140. Raja Nawab Ali Khan: Can you visualise the time?—The time will come.

141. When?—I cannot answer.

142. On page 16 of the green book you say; "We have no doubt that the time has long arrived when joint responsibility of the ministers in the administration of transferred subjects should be enforced." How do you think that this can be achieved when ministers are drawn from communal parties?—If it is possible for the Muhammadans and Hindus to co-operate with various political parties in the council the ministers could certainly co-operate with each other.

143. You recommend on page 20 that "In cases in which the interests of the Moslem community are involved, the minister belonging to that community need not be bound by the majority if he commands a majority of three-fourths of the Moslem members of the Council." How then is joint responsibility possible under these circumstances?—This is an exception to the general rule. Cases may arise when a Muhammadan minister possessing the confidence of the majority of Muhammadans may not possess the confidence of the majority of the Hindus and he may be a very good minister from the point of view of the Muhammadans.

144. My point is how joint responsibility is possible under those circumstances?—It may be limited, but all the same it will be a joint responsibility. Such cases may arise, if at all, very rarely.

145. You say on page 8 that the Lucknow Pact has the sanctity of contractual obligations. If so, it is binding on both parties, the Hindus and the Mussalmans?—Certainly.

146. Then you do not agree with the demand of the All-India Muslim League, Lahore, that representation should be on population basis? It follows, if the pact is binding on both parties, that you do not agree to the demand of the Muslim League?—The case of the Punjab is absolutely different from the case of the United Provinces. The case of the United Provinces has to be determined on its own merits.

147. If it is a contract it is binding on both sides. Both the Hindus and the Muslims entered into the contract which is known as the Lucknow Pact. If it is binding on the Hindus it is binding also on the Muslims?—As far as the Muhammadans of the United Provinces are concerned they feel that it is a pact binding on all.

148. Therefore, I say, you do not agree with the view held by the All-India Muslim League, Lahore? —We have no right to express the view one way or the other.

149. It therefore follows that you do not wish to see the Muslims in a majority anywhere, in any province in India?—I do not say that.

150. If you think that the pact is binding, it follows because the Lucknow Pact gives the Muhammadans a minority in every province?—Yes, it does.

151. And you want that it should be given effect to?—I have not stated that the Muhammadans should remain in a minority in every province. We are dealing with our position in this province.

152. On page 6 of the green book you say: "The Hindus have so far done nothing and they refuse to do anything, as the course of negotiations during the last few months has shown, to win the confidence of the Muslim minority." Is it not a fact that in the Lucknow Pact they allowed the Muslims more than double their representation? They allowed you 30 per cent. representation and yet you say that the Hindus did nothing to win the confidence of the Muslim minority?—This does not refer to the conditions prevailing at the time of the Lucknow Pact.

153. There is a specific charge made against the Hindus that they have done nothing to win the confidence of the Muslims?—They have done nothing to win the confidence of the Muslims after the Lucknow Pact.

154. You say that the Hindus have so far done nothing?—It means that.

Chairman: I think it is fair to say that at least to my mind this refers to the period after the introduction of the Reforms. I think that is what he means. I do not say anything at all about the merits.

155. Raja Nawab Ali Khan: You say, on page 7 of the memorandum: "It is clear that if joint electorates are alone restored, Moslems will be wiped out of the legislatures." Are you aware that in the Punjab——

Dr. Suhrawardy: He is talking of the United Provinces.

156. Raja Nawab Ali Khan: I am giving an instance. Are you aware that in the Punjab in the 29 district boards the Muslims secured 45 seats in excess of the number to which they are entitled?—I have not studied the Punjab figures because we are only concerned with our province.

157. But you have not got a mixed electorate in the district boards or in the municipalities?—No, we have not. We have got it in the Taluqdars' Association where not a single Muhammadan was elected last time.

158. Do you attribute it to communal differences?—Most certainly. Otherwise there is no reason for not electing a competent Muhammadan taluqdar.

159. Sir Sankaran Nair: You said you looked to a time when the Muhammadans and the Hindus in this province will be able to co-operate. Will the acceptance by the Muhammadans of joint electorates be a test that the time has come to co-operate, that you are willing to co-operate?—Sir, the moment we find that the majority community is treating us on the principle of equality and fraternity, we would say that the time has come.

160. You would be willing to accept joint electorates?—Certainly.

161. Then that may be taken as a test that you feel that the Hindus will co-operate with you?—Certainly.

162. Supposing an absolute majority of the Hindu members of the legislative council and an absolute majority of the Muhammadan members of the legislative council pass a resolution pledging to dispense with separate electorates and to accept joint electorates, do you think you can accept that as a test that the time has come for you all to work together and when separate electorates could be dispensed with?—It is rather a difficult question. It depends on whether the majority of the Muhammadans would be prepared to repose the same confidence which a few of their representatives do in the majority community. Therefore, I think that in a case like that the best thing would be to have a plebiscite and find out the view of the majority of the Muhammadans themselves.

163. Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan: We hear a great deal about Indian nationalism and about the identity of interest of the different elements of Indian population. Do you think that when it comes to practice the Hindu majority is willing cheerfully to concede to you your rights with regard to services, separate electorates, etc.?—Unfortunately, our grievance is this, that so far they have not cheerfully done so.

164. Then under these circumstances do you think that in order to preserve your existence you must demand separate rights?—We only want safeguards to protect our rights with separate electorates.

165. With a provision for adequate representation in the services?—Yes, certainly.

166. Please let me know also whether you agree with the Nehru Report?—No, we do not, because we find the Nehru Report in many respects is injurious to the interests of the Muhammadans as a whole.

167. Could you tell me whether in your province there have been many communal riots?—There have been a large number of communal riots in the United Provinces.

168. Which community suffers on account of these riots?—Mostly the Muhammadans.

169. Could you please tell me if under these conditions you want Law and Order to be a transferred subject?—We are not in favour of the transfer of Law and Order until such time as normal conditions are restored and the communities start dealing with each other as rational beings and as equals.

170. Could you tell me whether when you want your increased or enhanced share in the services you feel morally certain that in other provinces where the Muhammadans are in a majority the Hindus will as a matter of reciprocity get this privilege?—Certainly.

171. I find from my honourable colleague's question that you have got more than your due share in the services. I want to know whether it is due to any favouritism on the part of the Hindus or whether you have got this against their wishes?—We have not got our due share in the services and whatever we have got is only through the efforts of the British Government.

172. Sardar Shivdev Singh Uberoi: May I know whether the safeguards mentioned in your memorandum on page 109 to be laid down in the future Constitution of India are for a certain fixed period or for ever?—If the Act is to be passed we urge that they should be incorporated in the Statute. I cannot say what will happen in the future because the future will take care of itself.

* * * * * * * * * *

Appendix. (Vide Q. 36, pp. 341–2.)

Secretary, Indian Statutory Commission.

When the Muslim deputation were giving evidence before the Joint Conference I was asked whether this Government had ever issued any announcement or resolution declaring their general policy in the matter of the representation of minority communities in the public services. I informed the Chairman at the time that no such announcement or resolution had been made. There is in the Manual of Government Orders (para. 345A) a paragraph drawing attention to the necessity of securing a due admixture of castes in Government service in order to prevent a monopoly of Government employment by particular sections of the community and to secure the admission to the services of castes hitherto either unrepresented or represented only to a small extent. That paragraph is based on an order of the Governor-General in Council dated January 20, 1911. The object of the order was, I think, to prevent caste cliques in Government departments rather than to secure representation of minority communities such as the Muslims.

2. While, however, no general policy has been announced there is a well recognized practice of securing a certain proportion of representation to Muslims; in regard to certain services the practice is authorized by definite rules. In other services it would seem to be on convention rather than definite rule. I give below examples from different services:—

(1) In the United Provinces Civil (Executive) Service one-third of the vacancies to be filled by competitive examination is definitely reserved by Government order for Muslims (para. 38 of the Manual of Appointments and Allowances). A proportion of the numbers of this service are appointed by promotion from the rank of tahsildar, and the generally recognised distribution of appointments so made is five Hindus to three Muslims.

(2) United Provinces Civil (Judicial) Service; rule 4 of the rules regulating appointment to this service prescribes that in making appointments endeavour should be made to secure the due representation of the different classes and communities. No definite proportion of vacancies is, however, laid down for any community.

(3) United Provinces Police Service—Under rule 4 of the rules regulating appointment to this service the Governor in Council is empowered to announce, with a view to prevent the preponderance of any community in the service, the number of vacancies which shall be reserved for particular communities. No definite proportion is laid down. As a matter of fact, the Muslims actually preponderate in this service.

(4) Recruitment to the Provincial Forest Service is at present in abeyance but the rules prescribe that the names of candidates who head the list at the examination up to double the number of vacancies are to be submitted to Government for final selection in order, so far as possible, to give effect to the principle of adequate representation of different communities.

MEMORANDUM SUBMITTED BY MR. RAMA CHARANA, B.A., LL.B.

(5) In the Subordinate Revenue Service it is laid down that not less than two and not more than four Muslims shall be taken for every five Hindus, the ratio being determined in each year according to the comparative merits of the candidates.

(6) In the case of sub-registrars there is no rule nor definite order prescribing the representation of minority communities, but in the last four years Muslims and non-Muslims have been appointed in the following proportion :—

1925	...	...	3 to 5
1926	...	...	2 to 3
1927	...	...	6 to 12
1928	...	...	4 to 6.

(7) In the Subordinate Educational Service there is an established convention that 30 per cent. of the total number of appointments are made from the Muslim community provided that qualified candidates are available.

(8) In the Excise department there is an order that in the recruitment of excise inspectors 30 per cent. should be Muslims.

(9) In the Co-operative department there is a definite order that one-third of the new appointments of inspectors and assistant registrars should be given to Muslims.

(10) In the Agriculture department the usual rule in making appointments to the subordinate agricultural service is to appoint one Muslim to every two Hindus.

(11) In the Subordinate Police Service there is a regulation that Mohamedans shall not be allowed to absorb more than half the appointments.

3. These examples are sufficient to show that while Government policy has never been announced in general terms, the practice in the various departments has been to secure either by definite rule or by convention a proportion of Muslims which in most departments has been fixed at 30 per cent.

T. SLOAN,
10.12.28.

Memorandum submitted by Mr. RAMA CHARANA, B.A., LL.B., Advocate to Chief Court of Oudh, and M.L.C. of U.P., Daliganj, Lucknow.

The problem of the uplift of the depressed classes is one of vital importance and requires immediate attention of the Government. Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru once aptly remarked as follows :—

"I do say what is my most sincere conviction, that unless you are able to solve your own social problems about the depressed classes and the untouchables I do not see any real prospect for real genuine constitutional advance, and any constitution that you may get will certainly not arouse any interest in me, because I do feel, howsoever good, howsoever perfect, howsoever ideal your constitution may be, unless you have got the support of the minorities and unless you command the confidence of those whom in your vanity you may describe as depressed classes, your constituion will not be worth a day's purchase."

What is the root cause of the degradation of the depressed classes? Is there any inherent defect in them or have they been brought down to this state by others? The root cause of depression may safely be described as follows :—

The so-called high-class Hindus religiously believe that the depressed classes are Sudras and as such their duty is to minister to the wants of the three regenerate classes. They are not entitled to acquire any sort of education. They are lowest in society. They have no right to enter the public services of the Government. They have no right of representation in the provincial and central legislatures, in the local bodies, in the cabinet of the Provincial and Central governments, in the grants-in-aid of educational and other institutions, in the Universities and in the secondary, primary and other types of schools maintained by the State. As to the causes which have led the so-called high-class Hindus to entertain such belief I will refer you to the address which I delivered as president of the Special Session of the Audi Hindu (Aborigines) Conference held on the 29th January, 1928, at Lucknow. (Copy herewith enclosed.)*

The next question is as to whether the high-class Hindus have conceded or are they likely to concede any status of equality to them. That they have not, is patent from the fact that the depressed classes have not even acquired bare literacy equal to the high-class Hindus. While literacy among the high-class Hindus is 4.5 per cent. in these Provinces it is only .5 among the depressed classes, vide page 67 of Wetherill Committee's Report, 1927. It is admitted in the report that this backwardness is due to strong social prejudice and to economic causes, vide page 8. This prejudice is to be found not only in those high-class Hindus who are admittedly too conservative and too orthodox to allow any sort of equality to the depressed classes but also in those who pose themselves to be the accredited representatives of the depressed classes in the local bodies and the legislatures. The District and Municipal Boards are charged with the duty of diffusion of primary education. But even these bodies discourage depressed class education, vide General Report on Public Instruction in the United Provinces for the year ending 31st March, 1926, at page 41. About Rupees 80 lacs are granted by Government to local bodies for primary education, but only a little over a lac is spent for depressed class education and this pittance is year by year approved in the budget by the members of the Local Legislature, and Hindu members who are, as a rule, high-class Hindus, have never raised their little finger against this unequal distribution.

The few qualified men belonging to the depressed classes try in vain for admission into the public services maintained by the Government and by the local bodies. What is the reason? The reason certainly is that the self-styled guardians of the depressed classes are interested in excluding these men from all share in the services. The few depressed class students who pass upper and lower primary Examinations after surmounting all obstacles are not given chances in the teaching staff with the result that no impetus is left for parents of these classes to send their children to school. Even purely depressed class schools are staffed by high-class Hindu teachers and they manage to discourage the students of these classes. Some District and Municipal Boards have appointed supervisors of the depressed class schools but in spite of the instructions of the Divisional Commissioners to appoint men of the depressed classes in these posts we find that these instructions are disobeyed on some pretext or another.

No member belonging to the depressed classes has so far been elected to any Municipal or District Board or to the Local Legislature with the result that Government has been compelled to nominate a member of these classes. But even these solitary nominated seats have been in many cases usurped by the high-class Hindus, the reason being that the Minister-in-charge of Local Self Government is either a high-class Hindu or if a Moslem he is under the influence of the other ministers and official and non-official members of the Legislature who are generally high-class Hindus.

I am decidedly of opinion that so long as the depressed classes are politically associated with high-class Hindus it would remain a mere pious wish on the part of the Government and the Indian leaders to democratise the country. If you really desire to establish democracy, grant them separate electorates not only in the local bodies but also in the local and Central legislatures. Give them effective representation in the services maintained by the government and the local bodies, in the cabinet of the local and central legislatures, in the grants in aid of educational and other institutions, in the universities and in the secondary, primary and other types of schools maintained by the State.

* Not printed.

Hitherto a member here and a member there has been nominated by the Government to represent the depressed classes in the local bodies. Local and central legislatures have each a nominated member of these classes. In the Council of State no representation has been given to the depressed classes. That this is not adequate representation is obvious. Moreover, there are disadvantages under which a nominated member labours. In the first place he is either a high-class Hindu or if a depressed class man he is generally a hanger-on of the high-class Hindus and does not voice the opinion of the depressed classes. He is a mere puppet in their hands. Secondly, if he is a right sort of man and works for the good of his class he is at once condemned as a government man.

The present method of election will not be suitable to the depressed classes seeing firstly, that they are economic, and social slaves of the high-class Hindus, and secondly, that most of them are too ignorant to realise the value of their votes. Therefore in their case only those persons should be enrolled as electors who have certain educational qualifications as well as those who may be nominated as electors by the organisations of the depressed classes. The number of electors will no doubt be limited but only such electors will choose the real representatives of the depressed classes.

Should for any reason election be not desirable the depressed classes must get as many nominated seats as they are numerically entitled to. Any less number will not give them effective representation.

There should also be at least one member belonging to the depressed classes in the ministry of the Local Government and in the Cabinets of the Provincial and Central Governments. Transferred departments are in charge of Ministers who if Hindus are as a rule high-class Hindus, it is only just and proper looking to the treatment meted out to the depressed classes, that one Minister should be recruited from the depressed classes. On the same ground there should be one member each in the Cabinets of the Provincial and Central Governments.

Supplementary Memorandum submitted by Mr. RAMA CHARANA, B.A., LL.B.

In continuation of my memorandum on the subject of the "depressed classes," I beg to submit the following as a supplement thereto in view of the fact that I have not given the strength of the depressed classes of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh in that memorandum.

The necessity of mentioning the numerical strength of the depressed classes becomes all the more important in view of the facts:—

(a) that all the estimates hitherto made are open to the common objection that they include untouchable classes only in spite of the admitted fact that in the United Provinces at least the extent of the depressed classes includes many touchable classes who are generally regarded as Sudras like the untouchables;

(b) that the United Provinces Government have always shrunk owing to "the extreme delicacy of official sentiment" from attempting even a rough estimate;

(c) that the Government of India have observed in their "Note on the Depressed Classes" prepared at the request of the Statutory Commission that "there has accordingly been no official definition of any castes or tribes of the community as depressed classes and the question whether or not any group of the community is socially depressed or treated as untouchable is a matter of local custom. If therefore the Commission desire to investigate the question whether any particular caste or tribe should or should not be described as 'depressed,' their enquiries would presumably be made in the provinces concerned";

(e) that the estimates in the Quinquennial Review of the Progress of Education, 1912–1917 are open to the objection that "we are left without precise information of the particular date on which Mr. Sharp relied when reaching a decision whether to include or to exclude any particular caste";

(f) that the estimates based on the Census Report, 1921, according to Mr. Marten "do not include (1) the full strength of the castes and tribes concerned and (2) the tribal aborigines more recently absorbed in Hinduism, many of whom are considered impure";

(g) Mr. Bajpai's figures were contested by Rao Bahadur M. C. Rajah, M.L.A. in a letter to the "Times of India," dated the 15th May, 1928; and

(d) that the Franchise Committee's estimates of 1919 are inaccurate due probably to the fact that the Committee "were not setting themselves to the task of reaching any authoritative total of what might be called the Depressed Class. They made a very rough division of Hindus into Brahmans, non-Brahmans and others."

I have stated above that the United Provinces Government have always shrunk from defining the extent of the "depressed classes." The reason is not far to seek. the word "depressed" does not literally mean untouchable but in course of time it has associated with it the idea of untouchability. It is because of this idea of untouchability in the term "depressed" that the Government shrink to call any castes "depressed." Many castes also who are undoubtedly depressed in the proper sense of the term do not like to call themselves depressed for the same reason. It is imperative that a suitable term acceptable to all concerned be coined. I would suggest that the term "Hindu backward classes" be adopted.

We all know what castes in these provinces are considered as depressed classes by "champions of these classes and by Government itself." It is in its original literal sense that the word has been used by the Government of these provinces. This Government has never used untouchability as the test of depression, and rightly too. In other words, political as opposed to social depression has been the test with the U. P. Government. If the Government were to adopt untouchability as the test many castes who though not untouchable but who are as depressed as untouchables, would not be covered by the term. What the Government wants to do is to give special protection to the classes who are politically backward either due to untouchability or any other causes. Political rather than social reform is the aim of us all.

Leaders like Mr. Jayakar, M.L.A., also used the term to include both touchables and untouchables as is apparent from his resolution in the Assembly to the effect that special educational facilities be given to untouchables and other depressed classes.

The next question that arises is whether there are concrete instances in which this Government has actually acted upon its secret definition i.e., have regarded as "depressed classes" both touchable and untouchable classes, generally regarded as Sudras. To answer this question we shall have to refer to the nominations the Government has made from time to time from the depressed classes. Take the instance of the village Panchayats. I reproduce below the question which I put to the Government on the 20th June, 1927, in the Legislative Council and the reply of the Government given in its answer :—

Question No. 101—Will the Government be pleased to state the total member of Village Panchayats in the different districts of these provinces? How may Panches and Sarpanches out of these belong to the depressed classes in each Panchayat? Will the Government be pleased to give the names and castes of such depressed class Panches and Sarpanches.

The Honourable Nawab Mohammad Yusuf :— A statement (not printed in the proceedings) containing the information is laid on the honourable member's table.

It would appear that the statement was not printed in the proceedings of the Council because it is very big and unwieldy, containing 102 foolscap pages. It was put on my table and I will place it in original before the Commission at the proper time. I give below the principal castes of the different panches and sar-panches of the depressed classes mentioned in the statement. They are as follows arranged in alphabetical order according to the arrangement of castes given in Table XIII A and C, Part II, Vol. XVI, of the Census Report, 1921 :—

(1) Ahir	(18) Faqir	(35) Kumhar
(2) Ahar	(19) Gadariya	(36) Kurmi
(3) Baghban	(20) Gond*	(37) Lodha
(4) Barai	(21) Goria	(38) Lohar
(5) Barhai	(22) Gujar	(39) Luniya
(6) Bari	(23) Habura*	(40) Mali
(7) Bhangi*	(24) Halwai	(41) Mallah
(8) Bhar	(25) Kachi	(42) Murao
(9) Bharbhunja	(26) Hill Depressed Classes	(43) Nai
(10) Bhoksha*	(27) Kahar	(44) Nat*
(11) Chamar	(28) Kalwar	(45) Pasi
(12) Darzi	(29) Kewat	(46) Saini
(13) Dhanuk	(30) Khatik	(47) Sainthwar
(14) Dhobi	(31) Kisan	(48) Sonar
(15) Dhunia	(32) Koeri	(49) Tamboli
(16) Dom (Plains)*	(33) Kol	(50) Teli
(17) Dusadh	(34) Kori	(51) Tharu*
		(52) Thathera

(53) Others

I have not mentioned in the above list the names of sub-castes and minor castes entered in the Government statement as they are covered by one or other of the castes mentioned above or are covered by No. 53. The castes marked * are not in the Government statement because no menber of them has been admitted to any village Panchayat as their position in society is very low and some of them are gipsies and considered as criminal tribes. The Hill Depressed classes mentioned at No. 26 are not included in the Government statement because the Government have not nominated members of the hill depressed classes to any panchayat about which there is a just grievance and a point has actually been made by Munshi Hari Tamta, member, District and Municipal Boards Almora, and Chairman of the Kumaon Shilpkar Sabbha (Union of Industrial workers) Almora, U. P. India, in Para. 4 of his memorandum submitted to the Commission.*

Similar instances are found in the nominations made by Government to District and Municipal Boards and also to the Council, e.g., my question No. 90 put on the 4th March, 1927, in the Legislative Council and its answer by Government reproduced below :—

Will the Government be pleased to state the castes of the depressed class nominated members shown in the statement of the said answer for 1924–25? (The answer referred to is starred question No. 1 of Khan Bahadur Hafiz Hidayat Husain of June 25, 1926, regarding the strength of the Hindu, Muslim, Indian Christian and Depressed class members of different local Boards, which is printed in Appendix A, pages 1 to 3, of the Representation of the Muslims of U. P. to the Commission.)

The Honourable Nawab Muhammad Yusuf :— Kumhar, Jatiya, Kachhi, Pasi, Teli, Chamar, Nai and Bhangi.

Of these 1, 3, 5 and 7 are touchable and the rest untouchable depressed classes.

As regards instances of the nominations to the Legislative Council the rule is that the Governor will nominate a member representative of the classes who in his opinion are depressed classes. Here again the rule has been framed in such language because of the delicacy of official sentiment. I am the present member of the Council and I belong to the Mallah caste which is touchable. Mr. Khem Chand who preceded me belongs to Jatiya, a sub-caste of Chamars.

Thus there is no doubt that the castes given above are depressed classes. None of these castes except Bhangies are strictly speaking untouchables. In these Provinces untouchability of the type obtaining in Madras is unknown. Here nobody considers himself polluted by the shadow of anybody nor even by touch except that of Bhangies. Here we have very little or no untouchability and that also is fast dying out. But the privilege of touch has nothing to do with political rights. Kahars have been touchables always but they are as backward politically and economically as are the Chamars. Then again the same caste which is touchable in one place is untouchable in another place. In the Kumaun division all castes except Brahmans, Thakurs and Baniyas are untouchables while most of these are touchables in the plains. In this connection the following remarks in the memorandum of Mr. Ram Prasad, Ahir, Pleader, Tulsi Ram's Compound, Sultanpur, Oudh,* are very important :—

"(1) The majority of the population of India is made up of Hindus which consist of various castes, which can easily be divided politically into two classes—the higher (i.e., those who wear sacred cord) and the lower (i.e., those who do not wear sacred cord) including Chamars and sweepers.

"(2) (a) Really speaking the Lower classes as defined in para. 1 above, have politically the same disabilities, as against the Higher Classes such as Ahirs, Gadaryas are labourers in the field just as a Chamar is; they are all subject to 'begar' the former are in this line put to more work than the latter, because they can touch and carry eatables and draw water for the higher classes.

"(b) It may be said that the Lower classes are made up of the middle classes and the Lower castes —amongst the former may be mentioned the Ahirs, Gadariyas, Kurmis, etc., and among the latter the Chamars, Sweepers, Dhobis, etc., but this classification is a thing of the past and cannot be made cast-wise now-a-days, for :

"Now the Brahmans and Kshattriyas have taken to agriculture leaving their own occupation—the major portion of the land in the villages is under their cultivation, the Lower classes have usually small holdings.

"The British Officers in the Civil and Military employ employed sweepers and Chamars as their bearers and 'Ayahs' and thus raised the status of many of their families.

"On the other hand Chamars have thriven by Hide work and many of them are amongst the first class rich families—such as in Cawnpore Rai Sanwal Dass family and others."

* Vide pp. 353–4.

* Vide p. 354.

These castes are considered depressed not only by Government but by the so-called untouchables and the so-called high class Hindus. Dr. Dhan Singh L.H.M.S. (Homeo), President, All India Jatao (a sect of Chamar, who are untouchables) and other Depressed Classes Association, Shaghanj, Agra, in his memorandum to the Commission at page 4 remarks :—

"As a matter of fact there does not appear to be any earthly reason why 60 per cent. of the total Hindu population will allow themselves to be ill-treated by 40 per cent. caste Hindus." The 60 per cent. Depressed Classes referred to in the above observation are composed of as follows according to Census of 1921 :—

Touchable Depressed classes, e.g., Tamolies, Kachhies and Kahars, etc.	13,973,188
Untouchable Depressed classes, e.g., Doms, Bhangies, etc.	14,693,816
	28,667,004

Raja Bahadur Kushal Pal Singh, M.A., LL.B., M.L.C., Minister for Education, and member, U. P. Simon Committee speaks exactly of the same percentage 60 in his memorandum at page 12 to the Statutory Commission.

It will thus be seen that both touchable and untouchable castes mentioned above have been considered as depressed classes in these provinces both by champions of these classes and also by Government itself and census authorities.

The enumeration of castes given by U. P. Government published at page 5 of the Note on Depressed classes submitted by the Government of India* is admittedly a list of untouchable depressed classes only vide page 2 of the note. Secondly it does not exhaust all the castes that are considered untouchable in these provinces, e.g., Pasi Dusadh, Habura, Gond, Kol, Nat, etc., have been omitted.

I have said in my previous memorandum that the depressed classes are regarded as Sudras by the so-called high-class Hindus, but as a matter of fact they are the descendants of the aborigines of India who had a civilization of their own. All the castes which make up the Sudra class have certain customs which are common to them all, but they have nothing in common with the high class Hindus.

The custom of widow re-marriage, the Panchayat system and worship of family gods is common to all the so-called Sudras but is not found among the high classes. Widow re-marriage is actually prohibited by the religious books of Hindus. It is true that a few men of some of these castes have recently started Sabhas and claim to be Kshattriyas, Vaishyas and even Brahmans, e.g., some Jatiya Chamars have started their Sabha under the name of Jatava Maha Sabha and claim to be Kshattriyas. Some members of Nai (barber) caste claim to be Brahmans. Some Telis and Bhurjis claim to be Vaishyas. But these claims have never been accepted by the high class Hindus. Only recently at Rajapur in the district of Banda some Kalwars who claim to be Kshattriyas had put on sacred thread in obedience to a resolution of their Maha Sabha. They were subjected to various sorts of indignities by the high class Hindus, a report of which appeared in several newspapers. I myself had put certain questions about it in Council but they were disallowed on technical grounds. In this connection the remarks of Mr. Ram Prasad Ahir, Pleader, of Sultanpur (Oudh) are pertinent and are quoted below :—

"(2)—(c) All the castes which make up the lower classes, as defined in para. 1 above have certain customs (social and religious), which are common to them all, but they have nothing in common with the higher classes.

"These are as under :—

"(a) All these castes (e.g., those who do not wear the sacred cord) drink wine. I mean by usage there is no prohibition and consequently no fear of being out-casted like the Higher castes. It is quite a different matter that some personally for some reason or other may not drink.

(b) "Remarriage (widow) is allowed.

(c) "There are caste Panchaiyets.

(d) "Twice at harvest season each of these castes worship their family gods which is mostly common to each. At this worship no Brahman can preside and the gods worshipped find no place in the Brahmanical dictionary.

"The question then arises why others are regarded (socially) to be a little better than the other. The reason is not far to seek—and it is that the former have placed themselves a little under the Brahman influence the latter did not yield to Brahmanical pressure—the former invite Brahmans to solemnise marriages, the latter perform marriages by themselves.

"All these settle their matrimonial and social disputes by themselves by their caste 'Panchayats' and a Brahman has no hand in it. Supposing a Ahir Panchayat admitted a Chamar into his brotherhood, all that a Brahman or with him the higher castes now can do is that they may refrain from drinking water touched by the Ahirs, and the Brahman may refuse to solemnise marriages, none of which would be of any consequence whatsoever, for that is the case with Mohammadans and others as well.

"It is true that some selfish persons instigated by the like of the higher class, have started Sabhas wherein some of these castes claim to be 'Kshattriyas.' To make claim on religious grounds is one thing, the present worth, the present position as acknowledged by the rest of the population is another and is what has to be taken into consideration.

"It is clearly to the advantage of higher classes that when the question of entry into Legislature comes they may tell that some of these castes are 'Kshattriyas' because in that way they would be able to go there to the entire exclusion of these castes who are far inferior to them in education, money and other requisites, and cannot compete with them, and thus they would succeed in keeping these castes behind as before.

"If these castes were acknowledged to be Kshattriyas, the Kshattriya Sabha would have absorbed their Sabha, and they would exist no more. On the contrary in the Kshattriya Sabha, no Ahir, Gadariya, Kurmi or any member of the Lower class was ever invited. There is a proverb running :—

"Ahir, Gadaria, Pasi"
"Tinon Satya Nasi."

meaning Ahir, Gadariya, Pasi, all the three are the destroyers of the truth.

"Those who do not wear the sacred cord are enjoined not to read the Vedas and are classed as 'Sudras.' There is a proverb running :—

"Gagri Dana"
"Sud Utana"

"As soon as a Sudra has a goblet full of corn he becomes proud, that is to say, he must be constantly kept to live from hand to mouth (lest he might go on strike).

"Born and brought up with these ideas, how can the higher classes have any sympathy with the lower classes?

"It would be worth while to enquire what treatment is meted out to these castes by the higher classes:—

"(a) In villages.

"(b) By the higher class men, who alone occupy the public offices when they deal with the lower class men in their official capacity.

"(c) In how many cases when redress is sought by the Lower classes against a Higher class man, the case never comes to court at all, owing to undue pressure of the higher classes."

* Vide Vol. V., p. 1345.

SUPPLEMENTARY MEMORANDUM SUBMITTED BY MR. RAMA CHARANA, B.A., LL.B. [Continued.

I have said in my previous Memorandum that the root cause of the degradations of the depressed classes is not due to any inherent defect in them. They are as strong in intellect as the high class Hindus and the Muslims are. Very little or no opportunity of education has been given to these classes, yet I can point out scores of graduates and at least about two dozen lawyers. It is an indication of ignorance or even selfishness on the part of those who say that they are not strong in intellect. Even in British Raj the depressed classes have been given very little opportunities for education and the high class Hindus have not failed to discourage their education whenever and wherever they can. I quote below the remarks of Rai Sahib Pandit Sukhdeo Tewari, B.A., a member of the Educational Services of these Provinces and a gentleman of the Brahman class. The remarks quoted below were made by him as a member of the Committee appointed by the United Provinces Government to inquire into and report on the state of primary education of boys of the Muslim community and of educationally backward communities in the United Provinces :—

"As the development of education in any country depends on its special circumstances such as old tradition, public opinion, etc., education both in rural and urban areas here was confined amongst the literary classes only. The backward communities were allowed to remain in ignorance as they were before .....The high class and literate Hindu communities, particularly the Zamindars, discouraged the backward classes to educate their boys as they did not like the latter to become more learned and question their authority over them. The teachers who happend to belong to literate communities did not admit boys of untouchable classes for one reason or another. Only a few boys of Kahars, Ahirs, Nais, etc., were taken in to serve them as menial servants."

Add to this the instance from the Government Report on Public Instruction in the United Provinces for the year ending 31st March, 1926, page 41, mentioned in my previous Memorandum, showing that even District and Municipal Boards, who are charged with the duty of diffusion of education among depressed classes, discourage the same. There is another instance of a member of the Legislative Council publicly ridiculing the attempt of the nominated depressed class representative to get a resolution passed through the Council recommending the grant of certain scholarships for the children of the depressed classes. He considers the imparting of education to depressed classes as objectionable as it is to put on foot leather dress on head and the head dress on foot.

Therefore the charge of weakness of intellect in the depressed classes is unfounded. They have not been given opportunities of developing their intellect.

It has been suggested by some that depressed classes are a disorganized body. Cohesion is wanting in them. No one man can represent their views. To such criticism my answer is that this ground is directed against suitability of democracy itself to Hindus in general. Hinduism is only another name of communalism. A Brahman cares for a Brahman, a Kshattriya for a Kshattriya and a Bania for a Bania. Nepotism is the rule with Hindus. Sanghatan movement is a proclamation of want of homogeneity among the Hindus.

Then it is said that depressed classes will be in the hands of Swaraj-cum-Nationalist party if they are given separate electorates. My humble submission is that the depressed classes want their separation from Hindus, who are mainly responsible for suppression of these classes even according to the Nehru Committee it is unreasonable to suppose that they will side with Swaraj and Nationalist parties which are composed mainly of high class Hindus.

STATEMENT SHOWING THE POPULATION OF THE DEPRESSED CLASSES IN THE UNITED PROVINCES (BRITISH TERRITORY) ACCORDING TO THE CENSUS OF 1921, VOL. XVI, PART II, TABLE XIII A. AND C.

I.—DEPRESSED CLASSES
(TOUCHABLES AND UNTOUCHABLES).

(a) Brahmanic Hindus.

No.	Castes.	Total.
1.	Ahar	398,939
2.	Ahir	3,647,022
3.	Baghban	114,489
4.	Barai	141,230
5.	Barhai	458,730
6.	Bari	55,218
7.	Bhangi*	343,245
8.	Bhar*	419,413
9.	Bharbhunja	263,844
10.	Bhoksha*	7,490
11.	Chamar*	5,749,971
12.	Darzi*	73,273
13.	Hill Depressed Classes* ...	231,547
14.	Dhanuk*	122,721
15.	Dhobi*	602,394
16.	Dhunia*	22,437
17.	Dom (Plains)*	14,082
18.	Dusadh*	72,860
19.	Faqir	104,792
20.	Gadariya	924,088
21.	Gond*	105,887
22.	Goria	80,825
23.	Gujar	267,995
24.	Habura*	1,509
25.	Kachhi	679,000
26.	Kurmi	1,726,632
27.	Kahar	1,064,618
28.	Kewat	464,655
29.	Khatik*	175,992
30.	Kisan	316,785
31.	Koeri	433,077
32.	Kol*	68,211
33.	Kori*	789,513
34.	Kumhar	689,422
35.	Kalwar	264,373
36.	Lodha	1,012,492
37.	Lohar	478,942
38.	Luniya	417,981
39.	Mali	184,036
40.	Mallah	211,422
41.	Murao	598,805
42.	Nai	621,664
43.	Nat*	40,014
44.	Pasi*	1,320,506
45.	Saini	57,908
46.	Sainthwar	123,424
47.	Sonar	248,521
48.	Tamboli	62,579
49.	Teli	703,590
50.	Tharu*	28,930
51.	Thathera	17,217
52.	Others*	1,965,523
	TOTAL ...	29,016,893

(b) Arya Hindus.

No.	Castes.	Total.
1.	Chamar	6,398
2.	Others	81,974
	TOTAL ...	88,372
	GRAND TOTAL ...	29,105,265

MEMORANDUM SUBMITTED BY THE ALL INDIA SHRI JATAV MAHASABHA.

II.—HIGH CLASSES.

(a) Brahmanic Hindus.

No.	Castes.	Total.
1.	Agarwal	301,105
2.	Agrahri	78,170
3.	Bhat	70,465
4.	Bhuinhar	187,184
5.	Brahman	4,343,786
6.	Goshain	108,132
7.	Halwai	51,999
8.	Jat	686,889
9.	Kayasth	442,950
10.	Rajput ... ... / Thakur ... ... / Kshattriya...	3,051,521
11.	Taga	94,530
	TOTAL ...	9,415,731

(b) Arya Hindus.

No.	Castes.	Total.
1.	Brahman	25,668
2.	Jat	29,378
3.	Rajput	39,927
4.	Vaish	22,228
	TOTAL ...	117,201
	GRAND TOTAL ...	9,532,932

RAMA CHARANA, B.A., LL.B., Advocate M.L.C., Member of the Committee of the U.P. Legislative Council, to work in joint Conference with the Indian Statutory Commission.

Memorandum submitted by the ALL INDIA SHRI JATAV MAHASABHA.

The problem of the representation of the depressed classes is one of vital importance and requires to be attended to very thoroughly without any further delay. It is of paramount importance that the term "depressed classes" be defined and the meaning of the expression be fixed once for all. The vagueness of the expression has been most prejudicial to the interests of the classes who ought really to have been covered by it and the efforts to ameliorate their condition by allotting seats to them in the District and Municipal Boards were neutralised by the specious claims of other communities to be included among them on the score of their backwardness in education. The Mahomedans, for instance, would like to have their full share as a separate community and yet take a share out of the small slice of rights given to the depressed classes. All India Shri Jatav Mahasabha which is an association of the Jatav community—otherwise known as Chamars—urges the necessity of confining the use of the term to such classes among the Hindus from whose hands the upper classes of Hindus would not take anything to eat or drink.

Our Mahasabha is fully alive to the fact that there can be no advancement so long as there is no real improvement in the political status of a community. Much of the degraded condition of the depressed classes would disappear as soon as the Government would improve their political status—a fact which would favourably affect their social, intellectual and economic condition. It is idle to attribute the depression of the depressed classes to the religious and social system of the Hindus. If Government were to improve their political status by giving them honorary offices, adequate representation on local bodies and legislatures and in public services, commensurate with their numerical strength, their social position would automatically improve and social injustice would become a thing of the past. For the social position of the depressed classes would rise pari passu with the rise in their economic condition—a thing which is inconceivable in the case of any community without an advancement in its political status. It is not enough for Government to make them equal in the eye of law or to give them equal opportunities with caste Hindus, Muslims or Christians. It is the duty of the Government to place them in such a position as would enable them to avail themselves of these opportunities. In order to bring about the above result our Mahasabha would place before you the following recommendations in the hope that they would be adopted by you in your report to be submitted to His Imperial Majesty in the near future.

1. It is absolutely necessary that seats in every Council and Assembly, in every Municipal and District Board, and in every Town and Notified Area should be reserved for the depressed classes in proportion to their numerical strength.

That it appears from the Census report of 1911 that the community of Jatavs, more generally known as Chamars, is regarded as a depressed class and that it is numerically the most important among the depressed classes.

That out of a total non-Muslim population of 33 millions of these provinces the depressed classes roughly claim 9 millions and of these again Chamars alone number more than 6 millions.

Our Mahasabha is not very keen about the method of filling up those seats so long as they can be certain of those seats—though it undoubtedly realises the necessity for giving them some training in the elective system. We leave it to you to judge for yourselves as to whether there was any connection between the system of separate electorates and the present communal unrest in India, and in the light of that opinion to decide whether it would be to the advantage of the depressed classes to have a separate electorate for themselves.

2. Our Mahasabha strongly recommends the necessity for giving Honorary Magistracies, Munsifships and other superior posts—honorary and stipendiary—to the depressed classes just as they are given to the other communities in India. We do not know if you are aware that there is not a single magistrate or judge, a single civil, military or police officer from among the truly depressed classes in the whole length and breadth of India. It is impossible for the depressed classes to make any advance so long as the inactivity of the Government resulting in their non-recruitment in any of the superior grades of service or office allows the people at large to think of them as degraded, depressed and incompetent. So, it is absolutely necessary that recruitment from among the depressed classes be made in all the public services of the land including the Army, the Police, and the Executive.

3. The growth of education is a factor which you are going seriously to consider while making recommendations for the future. Our Mahasabha is fully alive to the value of education and regrets that it cannot give a good account of the depressed classes owing to the various handicaps under which they have been working for generations together. It is most unfortunate that communities who form numerically a majority of the Hindu population and count themselves by tens of millions should have been in such collossal ignorance even after the most benign rule of the British Government for over a century and a half owing to the grants for education being generally utilised for other communities, who are more powerful and favourably situated. Our Mahasabha submits that ample and special provision be made for the education of the depressed classes, that free education—primary, secondary, and high—be provided for them, and that an additional impetus be given to it by providing special scholarships for them

MEMORANDUM SUBMITTED BY MUNSHI HARI TAMTA.

The above are the points to which our Mahasabha begs to invite your attention inasmuch as they fall clearly within the scope of your enquiry. There are, however, many other important things to which the Mahasabha has been drawing the attention of the Indian Government and to some of which our Mahasabha would like to make a passing reference in the course of this Memorandum of theirs.

(a) The Mahasabha requested the Government to pass laws declaring the right of the depressed classes in general to the use of common and public wells, tanks, etc.

(b) The Mahasabha requested the Government to appoint a committee for enquiring into the hardships to which the depressed classes are subjected at the hands of the upper classes in the rural areas by being forced to do "Begar" and to submit to other iniquities.

Our Mahasabha would request your commission to direct the Indian Government, if possible, with reference to the matters mentioned above.

In conclusion our Mahasabha hopes to deal more fully with the aforesaid matter through their representatives in the course of their evidence before the commission as also before the Indian Committees, if and when they are appointed.

Memorandum submitted by MUNSHI HARI TAMTA, Member District Board and Municipal Board, Almora, and Chairman of the Kumaon Shikar Sabha (Union of Industrial Workers), Almora, United Provinces, India.

As representing the union of Industrial workers in the Alomora district of the province of Kumaon, who number some 130,000, I beg to bring to the notice of the Commission certain facts regarding the community for which I speak, and to submit with great respect some demands and requirements that we feel to be matters of simple justice and expediency with regard to our claims and rights as loyal subjects of the King-Emperor.

1. We welcome with cordial goodwill and earnest hopes the Commission and its members trusting that it will set right many ancient wrongs that have long afflicted the depressed classes who have been for so many centuries treated as outcast, "untouchable" and less than human, indeed as mere slaves and chattels, by the superior caste. As a community we have one and all joined in welcoming the coming of the commission to this country, and have not joined in any "boycott" of the same.

2. While disclaiming any feelings of hatred or active enmity towards other classes, we would point out briefly that, as an historical fact, the community to which we belong represents the aborigines of India who were conquered and enslaved in early times, and in the ancient writings are spoken of with contempt and opprobrium as "Disgris" (conquered people) and "Nishadas" (unconquered wild tribes) and comprehensively as "Shudras" or inferior people. The scorn which is reflected in those scriptures has been our lot through all the ages and we have become only too well accustomed to be treated with spite and contempt, while at the same time made to bear the burden of every menial and toilsome labour at the mercy of our masters and employers the members of the superior castes. Books of modern historians impress us that as a people we once lived free and untrammelled with civilisations of our own, which in some cases were learnt and borrowed by the conquerors, who in course of time reduced us to a state of slavery and weakness from which we have never been permitted to rise. Our lot has been to a great extent like that of Pasis, Pariahs and Panchamas, Maharas, Chamars, etc., of the rest of India, though in this hill province we have laboured under some special disabilities which I will endeavour to point out for your kind consideration.

3. The population of the Kumaon province, of which the Almora district forms a part, consists of three main classes, the Brahmans, Rajputs and the artisans and labourers to whom the name "Dom" has up to the present time been usually given. (It may be mentioned that by an order of the United Provinces Government in last year this opprobrious name is no longer to be applied to us in any public document.) There are in addition some Mohammedans, numbering not much more than a thousand of the three classes mentioned above, the first two, namely, the Brahmans and Rajputs (a general name applied to farmers in Northern India without reference to race) were immigrants from the plains, who gradually dispossessed the original inhabitants and reduced them to a servile condition. We have no desire to embarrass the Government by excessive claims, but your petitioners humbly desire to maintain their rights to that ordinary justice and humane consideration on the part of the superior castes, which are nowadays extended to all classes of the people in modern states but which are in many ways denied to the members of our depressed community by custom and practice which require to be modified in several directions. We beg to point out that the artisan class to which we belong in this province are in the peculiar position of being considered outcaste or "untouchable" while in other parts of India the members of our class such as masons, carpenters, blacksmith, workers in copper and farm labourers enjoy a better status and public esteem. It seems hard that useful workers of every kind should thus be included in one low and despised class of "Doms." We cannot, of course, expect Government at one stroke to remove social stigmas of this kind, which are of ancient local origin, but we hope to be relieved of invidious burdens and tyrannies which have no foundation in law, and to have our share of ordinary advantages such as those of Education, in proportion to our numbers and general usefulness.

4. We also beg to point out that, partly as a result of this general outcasting of the artisans class in this province, the whole community forms a remarkably united body as is shown by their unanimity in making the present appeal, in contrast with the position in other parts of the country, where each craft is more or less isolated from others.

5. As examples of the treatment of which we complain the following may be mentioned :—

(a) The Punchayat system recently established was no doubt intended to secure the ends of justice and fairness, but actually has resulted in hardship to the unprivileged classes. The members of the "Punch" are always men of higher castes—we know of only one case of a "shilpkar" member of a punchayat. The treatment we receive from those bodies is often most unfavourable. Claims are made against us regarding old debts and the like, which are often decided against us without proof. Fines are often imposed for various inadequate reasons, and we have no redress, although the system of "Begar" or forced labour has been abandoned by Govt. in these hills yet unpaid labour is often exacted from us by the superior castes. When disease has occurred disinfection is often carried out by the simple plan of burning houses or driving the family concerned out of the village. In many places we suffer greatly from not being allowed access to wells. The majority of our people have to live in hovels on the outskirts of the villages and as they are landless, even the hovels in which they live are built on land which does not belong to them. The agricultural labourers can get work only at sowing and harvesting seasons, and with regard to others, such as carpenters, masons and smiths, the work is irregular and the wages generally insufficient to support the families. Most of the people are in a half-starved and semi-naked condition, in a tract of country which has severe winter seasons. Much has been done of late by the Government to remove grievances connected with the forests and the supplies of fodder and fuel, but we are sorry to say that the existing rules make it impossible for members of the depressed classes to gain any advantage from the new arrangement. We are kept in a state of abject subjection by having to depend solely upon the high-caste Hindus for food and shelter. We are always liable to be turned out of our homes by the ground landlords. There are many compulsory duties which we have to perform on occasion of marriages, funerals, etc. of the higher castes and fines and dues are taken from us on many pretences which it would be tedious to relate.

(b) Another cause of dissatisfaction is the inadequate provision for the education of our children. It is true that a beginning has been made by the District Boards, but it is quite insufficient for our members and requirements. There are at present 2,005 scholars from our community in primary schools under the Almora District Board. Twelve depressed class schools have been started at an annual cost of Rs. 5000/– only eleven of our children receive scholarships. No lad of our community has ever graduated or even passed the Entrance or High School standard though one is now studying at Almora in class XI. We need a large extension of educational advantages, increase of special schools (if the caste people continue to debar us from the ordinary schools) and more encouragement in the way of scholarships and in general, due opportunity for our children to gain the necessary equipment for being useful workmen to form an intelligent electorate and for boys of superior ability to better their position.

(c) It has to be further pointed out that none of our community are now able to hold land in their own right. Some are Sirtans cultivating ground, which they took over from their forefathers or others, and paying the ground rent for the same, but having no rights securing occupation. We understand that, elsewhere, twelve years of occupation is held to confer permanent right, and if such a rule were introduced here it would be felt as a great boon by our people. If grants of "Nayabad" land could be made to us in proportion to our members it would also be a great advantage.

(d) We would humbly remind the Government of the part played by our community in the recent war when large numbers of our men were enlisted in labour corps and we believe rendered valuable assistance in the operations. It would be a great help to our community if some of them could find a useful sphere of work in permanent body of the kind as part of the Indian army and Defence forces.

(e) Again, we venture to remind the Commission that without proper representation we cannot hope to make known our claims and enjoy our rights. We of the hill province of Kumaon and Garhwal require a representative in the Legislative Council to attend the interests of our community which number altogether about three laks. We also need to be represented on District Boards and other committees in proportion to our numbers, as unfortunately experience has taught us that we cannot look to the member elected from the higher castes for the understanding and sympathy that we need.

I would now ask permission to put into brief form our various requests.

(1) Special representation by election on the Legislative Council, District Boards and other public bodies.

(2) If the plan commends itself to the authorities a special Commissioner to guard the interests of the Depressed classes as in Bombay might be appointed for our province.

(3) Increased provision of schools, and scholarships for the depressed classes.

(4) Grants of Nayabad land to be sanctioned for applicants from these classes, and rules for reasonable security of tenure on the land.

(5) Abolition by law of all oppressive dues, fines and compulsory services demanded by the higher castes from members of the depressed class.

(6) The formation of a local company of sappers and miners drawn from this community for general military service, or failing that, permission to enter the army and serve in suitable capacities.

In conclusion we your humble petitioners beg to assure the Royal Commission of our unswerving loyalty to the Government of the King-Emperor and to pray for a divine blessing on your present labour.

Memorandum submitted by Mr. RAM PRASAD AHIR, Pleader, Sultanpur.

I beg to make the following representation with respect to the inquiry to be made by the Simon Commission for consideration :—

(1) The majority of the population of India is made up of Hindus, which consists of various Castes, which can easily be divided politically into two Classes—the Higher (i.e., those who wear sacred cord) and the Lower (i.e., those who do not wear sacred cord) including Chamárs and sweepers.

(2) (a) Really speaking the Lower classes as defined in para. 1 above, have politically the same disabilities, as against the Higher classes : such as Ahirs, Gadaryas are labourers in the field, just as a Chamár is : they are all subject to "Begar"; the former are in this line put to more work than the latter, because they can touch and carry eatables and draw water for the higher classes.

(b) It may be said that the Lower classes are made up of the middle classes and the Lower castes —Amongst the former may be mentioned the Ahirs, Gadariyas, Kurmis, etc. and amongst the latter the Chamárs, Sweepers, Dhobis, etc., but this classification is the thing of the past and cannot be made castewise now-a-days; for,

Now the Brahmans and Kahtreyas have taken to agriculture leaving their own occupation—the major portion of the land in the villages is under their cultivation, the Lower classes have usually small holdings.

The British Officers in the Civil and Military employ employed sweepers and Chamárs as their bearers and "Ayahs" and thus raised the status of many of their families.

On the other hand, Chamárs have thriven by hide work and many of them are amongst the first class rich families—such as in Cawnpore, Rai Sanwal Dass family and others.

(c) All the castes which make up the lower classes, as defined in para. 1 above, have certain customs (social and religious), which are common to them all, but they have nothing in common with the higher classes. These are as under :—

(a) All these castes (e.g., those who do not wear the sacred cord) drink wine—I mean by usage there is no prohibition and consequently no fear of being outcasted like the Higher Castes. It is quite a different matter that some personally for some reason or other may not drink.

(b) Re-marriage is allowed.

MEMORANDUM SUBMITTED BY THE KAHAR SUDHARAK MAHA SABHA.

(c) There are castes Panchayets.

(d) Twice in every year at harvest season each of these castes worship their family god, which is mostly common to each. At this worship no Brahman can preside and the gods worshipped find no place in the Brahmanical dictionary.

The question then arises why others are regarded to be a little better than the untouchables. The answer is not far to seek—and it is that the former have placed themselves a little under the Brahman influence to Brahmanical pressure—the former invite Brahmans to solemnise marriages, the latter perform marriages by themselves.

All of these settle their matrimonial and social disputes by themselves by their caste "Panchayats" and a Brahman has no hand in it. Supposing a Ahir Panchayat admitted a Chamár into his brotherhood, all that a Brahman or with him the higher caste men can do is that they may refrain from drinking water touched by the Ahirs and the Brahman may refuse to solemnise marriages, none of which would be of any consequence whatsoever, for that is the case with Mdus and Xus as well.

(3) It is true that some selfish persons instigated by the like of the higher class have started Sabhas where some of these castes claim to be "Kshtriyas." To make claim on religious grounds is one thing, the present worth, the practical position as acknowledged by the rest of the population is another and is what has to be taken into consideration.

It is clearly to the advantage of higher classes that when the question of entry into the Legislatures comes, they may tell that some of these castes are "Kshtariyas" because in that way they would be able to go there to the entire exclusion of these castes who are far inferior to them, in education, money and other requisites and cannot compete with them, and thus they would succeed in keeping these castes behind as before.

If these castes were acknowledged to be Kshatriyas, the Kshtraya Sabha would have absorbed their Sabhas and they would exist no more. On the contrary in the Kshtreiya Sabha, no Ahir Gadariya, Kurmi or any member of the Lower class was ever invited. There is a proverb running :—

"Ahir, Gadariya, Pasi"
"Tinon Satya Nasi."

meaning Ahir, Gadadiya, Pasi, all the three are the destroyers of the truth.

Those who do not wear the sacred cord are enjoined not to read the "Vadas" and are classed as "Sudras."

There is a proverb running :—

"Gagri Dana"
Sud Utana."

As soon as a Sudra has a goblet full of corn he becomes proud, that is to say, he must be constantly kept to live from hand to mouth (lest he might go on strike).

Born and brought up with these ideas, how can the higher classes have any sympathy with the lower classes.

(4) The self-elected Congressmen who claim to represent us, often accuse the British Government for doing nothing towards the uplift of the teeming millions of India. I submit what have the higher classes done for them? They opposed the education off and on and when the Education Bill was introduced there was some opposition.

Have any of the Higher class men ever opened a school for the Lower classes, or provided for scholarship for these castes during all the time that they have been with us?

The British Government has certainly done a lot to these castes. A Barber in Calcutta is man of high status and a free citizen whereas a Barber in a village is a poor slave with no liberty.

Similarly a Dairyman in Calcutta is a higher standard gentleman as against the cowherdsman of a Higher class Zamindar or Taluqdar or the poor milkman of the village.

The Railways introduced by the British Government, their waterworks, the Municipal and District Board and the Law Courts are imparting daily lessons to the ignorant masses and teaching them the idea of equality of the various caste-men.

It would be worth while to inquire what treatment is meted out to these castes by the higher classes (a) in villages (b) by the higher classmen who alone occupy the public affairs when they deal with the Lower class man in their official capacity.

(c) In how many cases when redress is brought by the Lower classes against a Higher Classman, the Case never comes to court at all, owing to undue pressure of the higher classes.

(5) The present system of electing a representative for the Legislatures does not at all represent all interests. There is the Taluqdar or Zamindar who by custom wields a considerable influence over the Lower classes who are generally poor and are at the mercy of their Landlord. They dare not vote against his will. If they did their cattle would be impounded, their holding gone, sooner or later, according as they happened to, or not understand the new Act and their houses dislocated.

I submit these castes together should have reserved seats in the Legislatures in proportion to their population and these should be filled in by nomination by the Government or the higher classes can set up some one best suited for their purposes and would help him through.

Memorandum submitted by THE KAHAR SUDHARAK MAHA SABHA, Cawnpore.

This Memorandum is submitted by the Kahar Sudharak Maha Sabha which represents the communities known as Mallah, Batham, Bot, Bhoi, Dhiwar, Dhuriya, Dutia, Guriya, Gond, Gharuk, Jaiswal, Khairwal, Raikwal, Mahur, Rawani and Turah. This Sabha has its branches not only in different districts of these Provinces but it has its organizations as well in Central Provinces and Berar, Bihar and Orissa, Bengal and Bombay Presidencies and the Punjab. It is fully representative of so many souls of these Provinces as 28,57,650.

We came from the original people of India. We have been described in the Vedas as the fifth Varna the Nishadas or Panchamas. We may not be understood to mean that we are the only descendants of the aborigines of India but we believe that we are part and parcel of the 60 per cent of the population of Hindus in these Provinces regarded as Shudras by the so-called high class Hindus.

As is the custom with every invader the Aryans when they conquered our fore-fathers about 5,000 years ago, they reduced most of us to the status of veritable slaves. Our position was no better than the serfs of Europe. We were bought and sold. We could own no property. Vedic injunction "Stri Shudrau na Adhitiyam" (Women and Sudras should not be educated) was applied to us in full force. Our fore-fathers—the aborigines of India—were too powerful and too numerous to be enslaved en masse and therefore with those of our fore-fathers whom they could not subdue completely, the Aryan invaders made a treaty based on the policy of divide et impera. They gave certain rights to such of our ancestors, whom they could not control, such rights as are given to feudatory chiefs in British India at the present time. The Guhraj (Nishad) of Shringverpur near modern Allahabad is a glaring instance. He was a powerful king and Ram Chandra, the king of Ayodhiya, had to make an alliance with him. Those of our ancestors who were subdued were reduced to slavery and included in the fourth class known as the Shudra class.

The policy of the "divide and rule" was applied to such an extent that we find to-day numerous castes and sub-castes which go to compose the Shudra class.

Kahar, Kurmi, Kachhi, Ahir, Gadariya, Nai, Bari, Kalwar, Kori, Chamár, Teli Tamoli, Dhobi, Dhanuk etc., are principal castes into which we were divided and were taught to hate each other as if we were not of the same stock. For if the Aryans had not done so they stood in constant fear of being turned out of India.

Our condition remained unchanged till the advent of Musalmans in India during whose rule at least one caste of us, namely, Kayestha, had the wisdom of gaining the favour of the Musalman rulers with the result that they acquired education in Urdu, Persian and Arabic. Even to this day the majority of Kayesthas are more learned in Urdu, Persian and Arabic than in any other Indian language, only because they being Shudras according to the Aryans could not read and write Hindi and Sanskrit.

But to our great misfortune the Musalmans also made their alliance with the so-called high class Hindus and neglected us badly. Not only this but they also treated us in almost the same manner as our Aryan superiors did.

With the advent of the British Raj in India, it is to the credit of the Britishers that we were given equal opportunity so far as the "eye of the law" is concerned. But the Britishers either deliberately or through their ignorance little thought that a high class Hindu in whose hands the whole of the machinery of Government has been put will use it as a means to enforce their own constitution embodied in the "Manusumirti" and other religious books of the Hindus and the result is before our eyes to-day. Not a single man has ever been returned even to a local body, much less in legislatures. We are absolutely debarred from public services.

Till only about 10 years ago the British Government did not raise its little finger to see that we were subjected to the rigours of the Brahmanic Laws, in fact, and that their own laws were disregarded with impunity. All the high public services of the country are the monopolies of the so-called high class Hindus and Musalmans.

The department of education and of law and order being in the hands of the so-called high class Hindus, they have been in a position to govern us according to their own laws. We could not make our voices felt before the Government as in the first place we were too ignorant to do so and in the second place our representation could not be made direct to the British element of the Government and even if our cries reached the British officials they turned a deaf ear to them. The reason is obvious. Every conqueror—and the Britishers are not an exception—cared more for the stability of his Government than for the uplift of his subjects. So long as his Government is safe, he does not care if majority of their subjects are depressed and oppressed. The Britishers, like the Musalmans, made their unholy alliance with the so-called high class Hindus and let us Shudras remain where we were.

In course of time, with the advancement of education among the so-called high class Hindus and the Musalmans, a sense of foreign domination developed in them and to-day we find even the Indian Statutory Commission being boycotted by the so-called high class Hindus. The Britishers losing every hope of support from their favourites the so-called high class Hindus and the Musalmans now turned their attention towards the Shudras (depressed classes) and so it is that we find the education in these classes received any attention only about 10 years ago. We may not be misunderstood by the above narration of facts. We do not mean any disloyalty to the British Government in whom we have always placed our implicit faith for our regeneration and advancement in every sphere of life.

There is a proverb in India, that, if a misled man realises his mistake before it is too late, he should not be called misled.

The Britishers ought to have realised earlier that we being the real children of the soil ought to have become the object of their attention in preference to any other class and for this gigantic mistake, the so-called high class Hindus are responsible.

When about 50 years ago some of our community (the so-called Shudras) began to make a beginning in education there came a Braman, with his new Gospel of "Gun, Karma and Swabhava" (merit, action and nature) and wanted to perpetuate the brahmanic institution of slavery of the Shudras forged by their ancestors in a cleverly disguised fashion.

To-day organisations going in the name of "Achhutuddhar and Dalituddhar" sabhas are a camouflage. Their aims and objects are the removal of untouchability only, but the privilege of touch will not any more improve us than untouchability will degrade the Musalmans. Whether the Shudras are touchables or untouchables is of no consequence so far as political regeneration is concerned.

We, the Kahars, have always all along been touchables but our social and economical condition is worse than the Chamars, who are untouchables. It may be borne in mind at this stage that there is no parallel in these Provinces of untouchability which prevails in Madras and Bombay Presidencies. Here nobody considers himself to be polluted by the touch of shadow of the Shudra nor is physical contact odious except with Bhangies and that also in the conservative and orthodox quarters and not in the educated and enlightened circles. So if untouchability is removed it will not bring anything to the Shudras but still stalwart leaders of the Hindu Community will go on with their ostentatious show.

We beg to warn the Commission against these forces of hypocrisy and lip-sympathy. What is needed for our regeneration is the grant of political status equal to the so-called high class Hindus, and we are sure that social and every other progress will follow in its train.

It is futile to expect any material change in the angle of vision of the so-called high class Hindus in whom the conservative and orthodox element still predominates. Our customs and manners are also materially different from those of the so-called high class Hindus, e.g., we have always had our Panchayat System and Widow Remarriage Custom from time immemorial which the so-called high class Hindus have never had. They have only recently begun to copy our example. There is no love lost between us and the so-called high class Hindus. Therefore the only course open to us is to have a complete separation from that of the so-called the high class Hindus insofar as political rights are concerned.

Under the circumstances we make the following demands in the hope that the Commission will be pleased to approve of them :—

(1) That the so-called the Shudra Community be named as The Hindu Backward Classes. The term depressed being a misnomer and the term Shudra is not acceptable to any of us.

(2) That 60 per cent representation by means of separate electorates or by Electoral College System or by proportional representation in all the representative bodies.

(3) That at least one minister in the Provincial Government should be recruited from amongst the touchables and the untouchables depressed classes.

(4) That at least one member in the Cabinet of the Local and the Central Government should be drawn from the touchables and untouchables depressed classes.

(5) That adequate and effective representation should be given to the touchables and the untouchables depressed classes in the public services and in the different grants-in-aid of the country as well as of the local bodies.

(6) That the provision of the above safeguards should be made in the constitution itself.

We consider this occasion to be most opportune to express our heartfelt gratefulness to Providence for sending a power which is likely to raise the fallen.

LUCKNOW.

Dated 6th December, 1928.

AFTERNOON.

PRESENT :

ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION, OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE (EXCEPT MR. KIKABHAI PREMCHAND AND SIR HARI SINGH GOUR) AND OF THE UNITED PROVINCES PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE.

Deputation from DEPRESSED CLASSES.

The Deputation consisted of :—

Babu Rama Charana, B.A., LL.B., M.L.C., Advocate, Chief Court, Oudh (Member of the United Provinces Committee), (Spokesman).

Babu Khem Chand, Ex-M.L.C., President, All-India Shri Jatav Mahasabha, Agra.

Babu Nanak Chand Dhusya, President, Adi-Hindu Sabha, United Provinces.

Munshi Hari Tamta, Member, District Board and Municipal Board, Almora, and Chairman of the Kumaun Shilpkar Sabha (Union of Industrial Workers), Almora, U.P.

Bhagat Mulluram, Member, District Board, Fatehpur, Representative of the All-India Adi-Hindu (Aboriginals) Mahasabha, Cawnpore.

Babu Sheo Dayal Chowrasia, B.Sc., LL.B., Chhotwapur, Lucknow.

Babu Ram Prasad Ahir, Pleader, Oudh.

Babu Chet Ram, Member, Municipal Board, Allahabad.

Babu Raja Ram of Kahar Sudharak Mahasabha, Cawnpore.

* * * * * * * * *

151. Chairman : Do you more or less agree—please correct me if I am wrong—would it be right to say generally that we might take the figure of untouchables as something like 12 or 13 millions? * * *

Rao Bahadur Rajah : Yes, I agree.

152. Chairman : What do you think, Raja Sahib?

Raja Kushalpal Singh : I agree.

Kunwar Bisheshar Dayal Seth : I also agree.

153. Sardar Shivdev Singh Uberoi : May I know whether the untouchables as given here are not touched by the high class Hindus at all? What is the proper definition of untouchables?

Rao Bahadur Rajah : It is given in the note itself.

Witness : The nature of untouchability in this province is very mild I should say; but all the same there is untouchability.

154. Chairman : Does it come to this, that these castes, broadly speaking, are those who would not ordinarily be admitted into the interior of the Hindu temple, is that correct?—Generally it is correct.

Chairman : Because I have understood and I think the Sardar Sahib suggests that, that in the United Provinces in contrast for instance with some parts of Madras, you do not get that degree of untouchability which causes the high class Hindus to object, let us say, to the shadow falling on them and things of that sort.

155. Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan : May I know whether they are allowed to draw water from the same well?—In some places they are allowed and in others they are not allowed.

Rao Bahadur Rajah : Mr. Rama Charana represents the touchables.

156. Chairman : The question is whether these particular castes are allowed to draw water from the ordinary well.

Rao Bahadur Rajah : My information is that they are not allowed to draw water from all the district board wells.

Kunwar Bisheshar Dayal Seth : It is not correct.

157. Chairman : I know the evidence is that in some places there are people who have not got the same rights to wells as the high caste people; but it is a mistake to suppose that it always happens to everybody. It is not a fair view to take that in some parts of the province you will find there is a less strict view and there you will find that people are allowed to take water; they do not make any trouble. On the other hand there are places where the people are more strict; is not that correct?

Kunwar Bisheshar Dayal Seth : I never heard that there is any restriction with regard to the drawing of water.

Rao Bahadur Rajah : May I draw your attention to page 636,* Sir? There the position is explained.

* Vol. IX.

158. Chairman : Yes; I shall read from the previous sentence: "The rules observed in Madras regarding pollution by coming within a certain distance cannot be said to have force in the United Provinces. Members of the untouchable castes are, however, often not permitted to draw water from the ordinary village wells and either have to provide their own well or place their vessels near the village well in the hope that some person of higher caste when drawing water will fill them." Does that give us a fair idea?

Raja Kushapal Singh : Yes, Sir.

Rao Bahadur Rajah : And further on, Sir, at the end of that paragraph we find, "Direct contact with them should be avoided."

159. Chairman : I must confess the impression that I have got from a little reading and from the help that I have from my friends here is that the problem here in the United Provinces is not so serious as it is in Madras. But I am inclined to think after reading these documents that it is true in many cases that there are low caste people here who are not expected to use the ordinary village wells for water. Is that not a fact?

Rao Bahadur Rajah : Yes. In this connection may I also cite another instance? In the district board of Fatehpur a member representing the depressed classes moved a resolution to throw open all the wells to the untouchables also, but that resolution was defeated.

160. Chairman : Anyhow we are not concerned to investigate social customs, but how political rights are treated. What is it that you would like to say on the subject of the political representation of the people you specially speak for?—We want representation according to our population.

161. At present in the legislative council I understand that there is one member; he is a nominated member and he is chosen because he is intended to represent the classes which in the Governor's opinion are depressed classes?—Yes.

162. And you are that member, I know?—Yes.

163. Do you regard yourself then as representing a wider range of people than the untouchables?—Yes.

164. You mean the depressed classes as well?—Yes.

165. How is it determined? How far up in the list of castes you have given will those whom you say you represent come?—I have given all the castes in the first place and I have also given the higher castes separately in the list I have furnished.

166. If I may say so without offence, I have heard the Muhammadans contend that for certain purposes they are backward. I have heard of a committee being appointed in this province to consider the question of education of the backward communities and they considered the question of advance of education among Muhammadans. Of course you do not claim to represent Muhammadans?—No, sir. I am speaking of the castes of the Hindu communities who are backward.

167. And you claim to represent every class except Brahmins?—Not only excepting Brahmins but also excepting all the high classes given on page 352 of the printed list I have submitted to-day.

168. Everything else?—Yes; depressed and backward classes.

169. It could not be that. There must be a large number of intermediate castes, such for example as the Rajputs, the Jats?—They go in as Kshatriyas.

170. What I do not follow is this. I do not quite understand where you draw the line?—Well, sir, the fact is that practically no member of this class has ever been elected to the local legislature.

Rao Bahadur Rajah : May I intervene, sir? In some of the documents and memoranda placed before us I see the division is drawn between the threaded and the non-threaded castes.

Witness : (Babu Rama Charana): But there are many classes among the depressed classes who wear sacred threads, and yet they are called backward.

171. Chairman : Let us ask the minister. What is your notion as to where the line is drawn where backward classes begin for the purpose of this representation?

Raja Kushalpal Singh : I do not think it is impossible to describe the exact line in so far as they are given in the district list as backward. But castes like Ahirs are not really depressed because in some parts of the province they are classed as Rajputs.

172. Chairman : Then does it come to this, that the representative of the backward and depressed classes in the legislature is expected to represent those lower castes who could not otherwise hope to get their representative elected and who need not in any way be members of his own caste?

Raja Kushalpal Singh : Yes.

173. Chairman : (To Babu Rama Charana): Do you agree with that?—There is only one distinction, sir, namely, the high caste people and the low caste people.

174. That makes it very difficult, Babu Rama Charana, to imagine that they could vote, because when those people could vote, you must be able to make a list of the constituency. To take only one instance, you would include the Ahirs among the depressed classes?—Yes.

175. But the minister tells us that members of the Ahir class are not treated as a depressed class?—The majority of them are treated as a depressed class; some claim to be Rajputs.

176. What I understand the Raja Sahib says is that in this province the members of the Ahir caste are certainly not regarded as being depressed because they are treated as Rajputs?—They claim to be Rajputs, but they are not treated as Rajputs. And there are even many others who claim to be something higher, but it does not follow from that that their political and economic condition is not backward.

Raja Kushalpal Singh : In their letter to the secretary to the Government of India in the Home department, dated the 16th March, 1908, this Government stated that: "It must be remembered that the mass of the Hindu population is to be found in the lower castes, Chamars, Ahirs, Pasis and the like."

Chairman : I think it is agreed that in the United Provinces a larger proportion of the Hindus falls into the category of depressed classes.

Rao Bahadur Rajah : May I draw your attention, sir, to memorandum from Ram Prasad Ahir, pleader, Sultanpur*?. He says in para (1): "The majority of the population of India is made up of Hindus, which consists of various castes, which can easily be divided politically into two classes—the higher (i.e., those who wear sacred cord) and the lower (i.e., those who do not wear sacred cord) including Chamars and sweepers."

Witness (Babu Rama Charana) : It is one thing to claim to wear a sacred cord; it is another thing that he is recognised as being entitled to wear a sacred cord. The Ahirs, the Malas, the Jatavas (a sect of Chamars) many of them do claim to be twice-born as the Brahmins, the Kshatriyas and the Vaishyas, but they are never recognised.

Raja Kushalpal Singh : B. Khem Chand of the deputation who is Chamar wears sacred cord.

177. Chairman : May we sum it up as far as we have gone?—The first point I think is this, that in the United Provinces the castes which may be regarded as untouchables in the sense that they sometimes are not given the full opportunity for using the ordinary village wells, or admitted into the interior of the temple are a very large body and amount to something like 12 millions. And in addition to that there is another very large body which is not untouchable in that sense, but none the less belongs to the lower class and included in the depressed class in a wider sense. There seem to be cases where members of the same caste in one part of the United Provinces are treated as quite depressed people although educationally they may not be so and some of them succeed in maintaining a better position. That seems to be the first point. Then what Mr. Rajah said about the attempt to get constituencies which would elect representatives. Do I understand, or do I not understand, rightly, Babu Rama Charana, that your deputation wishes to have any election of its representatives?—Yes, there is unanimous demand for election.

* Vide p. 354.

178. Is that so?—Yes.

179. Do the other members of your deputation endorse this demand?—Yes.

180. I am not asking you whether you want to have more members to represent you. But I am asking you whether you think that in the United Provinces the time is come for the members whom you represent here to be elected by going to the poll and voting and all that? What do you gentlemen think?—(Babu Ram Prasad Ahir): Sir, I think the time has not yet come when we can seek election because there is in the villages the landlord who is generally of the higher caste. He has got all the influence over these lower castes and if he sets up somebody who is of his calibre, he can carry the day and our own candidate cannot be elected. So, for the time being we should be given representation by nomination.

181. What strikes me, gentlemen, is this. It might be that if you start election too soon you will find that the candidate who gets elected is not always the person who is the best. I do not want to persuade anybody, but I want to find out what you really think. You know in India there are people who say that when it comes to electing a member a great deal of influence is used by, let us say, the landlords or money-lenders, or by various other people to secure that a particular candidate that they want returned is chosen. Now for the purpose of election you may have of course that sort of influence used. On the other hand, if you think you can stand by yourself and elect the man you want, then I understand you like election. Now, which is it you want. That gentleman (Ram Prasad Ahir) I think would prefer nomination?—(Ram Prasad Ahir): Yes, Sir. (Other Witnesses): We do not want nomination; we want separate election.

182. Then the gentleman who spoke first wants nomination. What about the others? Do they want election, or nomination?—(The other Witnesses): All want separate election. (Witness—Babu Nanak Chand Dhusya): May I say, Sir, that some call themselves depressed classes, but they are not. Depressed classes are those people who have already been enumerated in Resolution No. 4 passed by the All-India Adi-Hindu Depressed Classes Conference held at Allahabad in 1927. It is clearly shown there that Chamars and others mentioned there are the depressed classes, and not those people, Sir, whom Babu Rama Charana has mentioned now, that is, the Ahirs and other persons. He is representing simply the depressed classes who are mentioned here, Sir. (Witness Babu Khem Chand): The definition of depressed classes is this, Sir. They are those from whose hands the higher castes do not eat food and do not drink water. Those are the real depressed classes, and not the Ahirs, Malis, etc. Those are backward classes. (Witness Babu Ram Prasad Ahir): Then the Christians and Muhammadans are also untouchables.

183. Chairman: I am not quite sure that I have understood you. Are you urging that the proper view is this, that the depressed classes are not as numerous as we thought, but they are certainly a small number of them?—(Babu Nanak Chand Dhusya): Their number is not small, Sir. They number about 60 millions.

184. I am talking about the United Provinces. The population of the United Provinces is only about 48 millions?—In this province it is about 12 millions.

185. I have not quite followed you, Mr. Khem Chand. What do you want to say?—(Babu Khem Chand Bahore): I want to have separate election.

186. How do you propose to decide which the classes are, or who the individuals are that can vote? I want you to tell me if the depressed classes are going to elect their own members, how you think the list should be made up of the voters? You would have to have something to decide who the voters were, would you not?—All the adults. No qualification should be fixed for the depressed classes, educational qualifications or other qualifications.

187. I do not mean that. I mean this: how are you going to decide whether a particular caste votes or does not vote? Are the dhobis depressed classes?—Yes, sir.

188. Are Ahirs depressed classes?—No.

189. Who is going to decide which classes will have a vote?—Only those people from whose hands the high classes do not eat food, for example, the Chamars, Koris, Bhangis, Mahars, Pasis, etc.

190. Mahar is not a United Provinces caste?—Yes, Sir.

191. Are there Mahars in the United Provinces?—Yes, Sir.

192. I do not think there are very many Mahars in the United Provinces?—There are in the Central Provinces.

193. I am talking about the United Provinces. I was saying that I did not know that there were Mahars in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh?—I think there are none.

194. As I understand, you, gentlemen, except for one of you, think it will be better to have your member or members elected?—Yes.

195. Did I understand you to say that you do not think that there ought to be any test for a vote, but that every adult man should vote?—Yes.

196. Do you think that ought to be the rule all over India?—Yes, Sir, for depressed classes.

197. For other people?—I cannot say for other people. I only speak for the depressed classes.

198. There may be some difficulty in saying that there was to be a vote with a lower qualification for the depressed classes than for other people?—I have prepared a written statement here, Sir. (The statement was handed over to the Chairman.)

199. Would you tell us this, please? In the United Provinces, I am not speaking of anywhere else, but in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, supposing that the legislative council remains of about the same size, how many members do you think the depressed classes ought to have?—According to their numerical strength, Sir.

200. According to population?—Yes, sir. (Babu Rama Charana): Looking at our backward condition I am content myself to have a lesser number.

201. How many do you think would be right, yourself?—Not less than 30 per cent.

202. You think 30 per cent. of the total number of members should be returned by the depressed classes?—Depressed and backward classes.

203. When you say that you are including not only the untouchables but also the depressed touchables?—Yes.

* * * * * * * * * *

204. Mr. Cadogan: On the question of election as opposed to nomination I did not quite follow your answer to the Chairman. You say that your constituencies should be made up not only of the depressed untouchables but also of the depressed touchables?—Yes.

205. Would it not be very difficult to make out the electoral rolls?—Already many of them are in the electoral roll. It would be quite easy to make out a list of the depressed touchables and untouchables.

206. Then I wanted to ask you about this, I am not expressing any opinion, I want your opinion, with reference to the question of election as opposed to nomination. It is the ambition of the representatives of the touchable classes to merge the untouchable classes into the general community by doing away with all these distinctions which you yourself object to?—Yes.

207. Then, if you have constituencies of untouchables would not that tend to perpetuate those distinctions?—It is not like nominated members whose business will be to vote for education, and so on?—But I want constituencies of touchable and untouchable classes jointly.

208. You think that election would effect your ultimate aim of merging the depressed classes in the general community? You prefer it to nomination?—Yes, Sir.

* * * * * * * * * *

213. Major Attlee: In this statement showing the population of the depressed classes Hindus are seen divided into two classes, those in Table I and those in Table II. Have you left out any intermediate class?—No.

214. You call them either high or low? There is no intermediate class?—No.

215. Now, as regards the economic position of these classes in Table I; are they generally landed classes or landless?—They are generally cultivators, tenants. There are certain exceptional cases in which they own land also.

216. In the main are they tenants, or are they landless workers?—They are tenants, but most of them work for others too.

217. They own small plots of land, but they work for others?—Yes.

218. And you also include, I suppose, in these depressed classes, factory workers?—Of course, they have gone from these classes. They all come in there.

219. Have you any well-to-do people among these classes?—No, no class as a whole is well-to-do. Some individuals in exceptional cases are well-to-do.

220. There are some?—One or two here and there.

221. Do they work with the rest of their class or go to work with the other classes?—They are working with the same classes. I can give you an example. The Chamars in Cawnpore are doing business in leather. They are rich there, but elsewhere they are poor.

222. Politically they stand with you?—Yes.

223. Chairman: If you take one of the members of the depressed classes who has become rich, he has a vote now in a general constituency. Now, supposing you give votes to the depressed classes to elect their own members, what would happen to such a man according to you? Would he vote in the general constituency or would he vote in the depressed classes constituency, or would he vote in both?—Why should he remain in the general constituency at all?

224. Then, your view is that if a man has now got a vote in a general constituency, and you made a list of depressed class voters, he would cease to vote in the general constituency and would only vote in his own depressed class constituency?—Yes.

225. Lord Burnham: Might I ask what proportion of the depressed classes would be in the general electorate at the present time, under the existing franchise?—I have not got it. That can be obtained from the Government.

226. You cannot form any opinion?—I can in individual cases. I can say about the municipality of Lucknow. There about one-fourth of the electors are depressed classes.

227. You cannot say whether there is less or more in the mofussil districts?—No. In the rural areas also I think their proportion will be about that.

228. Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan: Mr. Rama Charana, has there been an organised attempt to elevate the lot of the depressed classes in this province? To what extent have various institutions contributed to the establishment of equality between various classes?—In the first place the organisations that have been established to ameliorate the condition of the depressed classes aim at the removal of untouchability only, social disabilities. They do not want to give any political status to any of the depressed classes.

229. Do you think then they are all paper resolutions?—I should think so.

230. They are not carried into effect?—No, they are not.

231. My second question is, do you require separate electorates because you have not got the same economic, educational and social level as other communities?—Exactly.

232. But when you reach that level ultimately you will relinquish them?—Exactly. I want them as a temporary measure.

233. To be dropped later on when the same level is reached?—Yes.

234. Have you made considerable progress during the last eight years in education?—No. Literacy is ·5 among our classes as against 4·5 among the higher classes according to the latest report.

235. You think that unless and until separate electorates are guaranteed to you your interests will not be safeguarded?—No. There is the Government report which says that district boards which are entrusted with the business of diffusion of education have actually discouraged it. Here I may refer to page 41 of the general Report on Public Instruction in the United Provinces for the year ending March 31, 1926.

236. Chairman: The report of the director of education?—Yes.

237. Would you just read the particular passage if it is not too long?—Yes. "Inspectors of all divisions except Benares and Rohilkhand report an increase in the number of schools and scholars. In Rohilkhand a decrease of 288 in the number of scholars has occurred, but in Benares the decrease amounts to the large figure of 3,070. To some extent the appointment of unsuitable supervisors is responsible for the decrease, but in the Benares division it is reported to be due to discouragement of this class of education by the boards, the Jaunpur district board in particular, and that of Ghazipur in a less degree, obtaining discreditable mention."

238. Is that referring to schools for the depressed class children?—Yes.

239. Dr. Shafa'at Ahmad Khan: Mr. Rama Charana, you are aware that from 1921 down to the present day the legislative council of this province has created several autonomous institutions, universities, district boards, intermediate education boards, and so on. Do you think that these self-governing bodies have really safeguarded your interests?—No, sir.

240. Do you think then that there ought to be some safeguard in those autonomous statutory bodies for the protection of your interests?—Certainly; we cannot do without safeguards.

241. Mr. Desanges: What is the percentage of educated people in your community, those who have passed the matriculation examination or its equivalent examination?—I cannot give you the exact percentage, but I might state that there are at least two to three dozen graduates and a dozen practising lawyers.

242. You cannot give us any idea of the percentage?—It is very small.

243. You said that in certain districts in this province some classes do not like to be classed under depressed classes. Supposing you want to represent them and they disclaim you, will you not be in a very difficult position?—The trouble lies with the word "depressed" which is associated with the idea of untouchability.

244. But anyway you have to face the difficulty at present, at least?—Yes.

245. Raja Kushalpal Singh: Do you know if zamindars and money-lenders influence voters residing in their villages?—Certainly; they take them to be a mere herd of cattle.

246. If this is the case, do you not think that the person elected would be the person who is the nominee of the zamindars and money-lenders and not the person whom the depressed classes think to be the best representative of their class?—I do not think so.

247. Why not?—He may not be a bold representative, but all the same he will be our representative.

248. But he will not be one who will be voicing the feelings, the views and the opinions of the depressed classes. He will express the views of high castes who have put him forward and whose nominee he will be?—There will be some influence, no doubt, but that influence will not, I think, make him disregard the interests of his own class.

249. Why will he not disregard when he thinks that he has got into the local body or the legislative council through the influence of high caste zamindars and money-lenders?—I do not think that they are slaves of ancient times.

250. Is it not your experience that depressed class tenants are more subservient to zamindars and money-lenders than high caste tenants?—Yes.

251. Are not the tenants voting according to the bidding of their zamindars?—Yes.

252. Why do you think that the person who is elected and whom the zamindar has put forward as his candidate will reflect the opinion of the depressed classes and not that of the person who got him elected?—In that case we will carry on propaganda and see that the right sort of man is elected who will certainly voice our views.

253. That will be the state of things when a certain amount of propaganda has been carried on and that propaganda has proved a success, but what do you think would be the result just at present?—With the system of nomination it is still worse. It is these very zamindars and money-lenders who are in the Government who nominate us; even there there is the same influence.

254. How can zamindars nominate you now?—They have got their influence with the nominating agencies.

Chairman: It seems to me that the view of the deputation, subject to one gentleman, is this: They say that, notwithstanding the risks of richer people influencing the elections, they would prefer to come through elections rather than through nominations.

255. Raja Kushalpal Singh: Will you adopt the system of adult suffrage?—I will not go so far, but I will certainly advocate some lowering of the franchise.

256. Can a stable electorate be formed from the heterogeneous group of depressed classes?—I see no difficulty.

257. Taking, for instance, the case of Agra district, the chamars number 1,51,000 which is more than the number of all other depressed classes put together. Will not the chamar candidates swamp the election?—If they will swamp the election at one place they will be swamped in other places by other classes. Anyhow, the net result will be the same.

258. In that case there will be injustice done to the depressed class communities in every district?—One caste is not segregated at all places; all these persons are scattered.

259. But are you not aware that the chamars are numerically the strongest in the United Provinces?—Yes, they are.

260. And the number of the real agriculturists like Kachhis, Lohars and Kurmis is small and therefore these persons will not get representation in the council and local bodies?—But all these chamars will not go into the electoral roll.

261. If adult suffrage is adopted then all of them will get in?—I am not talking on that assumption.

262. Then what qualification will you lay down?—I would suggest that instead of Rs. 3/- rental qualification it should be Rs. 2/-.

263. That is in urban areas?—Yes. And instead of Rs. 50 rent, it should, in my humble opinion, be reduced to Rs. 25; if a tenant pays Rs. 25 per annum he should be entitled to be an elector.

264. Have you considered another difficulty? In the district of Agra, for instance, the number of chamars is 1,51,000 and the number of other depressed classes is also a little less than that figure. There will be serious difficulty in staffing the polling stations because in that case the Government will have to make arrangements for recording votes of about three lakhs of persons?—If our rights are more precious than the expenditure, I think Government would incur that expenditure.

Raja Kushalpal Singh: It is not a question of expenditure. Will it not be a physical impossibility?

265. Chairman: It depends, does it not, on how many of these people would become voters. I see that the witness is suggesting that there should be some lowering of the franchise. He suggests that in towns it should be lowered to a rental payment of Rs. 2 a month instead of Rs. 3 and that in the country the tenant should have a vote if he pays Rs. 25/- rental instead of Rs. 50. Supposing the franchise is lowered in the towns, would it not bring in a great number of depressed class members?—No, Sir.

266. It will bring in some at least. Will it not bring in a good many of the leather workers?—They are very few.

267. I think in Cawnpore there are many leather workers who pay a rental of Rs. 2?—Most of them are already on the list. The conditions in Cawnpore are of course exceptional.

268. Lord Burnham: I have this difficulty and I would like you to solve it. I see that there are certain castes here enumerated who do not wish to be reckoned with the depressed classes. How can you count these amongst the depressed classes when they do not want to be counted?—As I have submitted already, the word "depressed" is almost a misnomer in this province. Certain castes who are as backward as the untouchables resent the epithet of the depressed class because the idea of untouchability is associated with it. They do not regard that "depressed classes" refer to those who are politically backward but they think that by classing themselves under depressed classes they might be lowered in society. That is the reason why I have suggested another name.

269. But they may still say that they do not want to be classed with you. I gather that these castes keep rising in the social scale?—There is no question of rising.

270. But they are making their claims?—In the first place, only a handful of these persons are making a claim, and in the second place I doubt very much whether their claim will ever be recognised.

271. Khan Bahadur Hidayat Husain: I take it that all these sub-castes, chamars, ahirs and so on, are based on the professions they follow?—Yes.

272. Do you not think that there is a conflict of interest between all these sub-castes? For instance, a chamar has got no confidence in, say, an ahir or a kachhi?—To a lesser degree the same applies to higher castes.

273. Would this not prevent the formation of electorates?—No.

274. Can you cite any instance in which a member of the depressed class has stood from the general constituency for the council or for the local bodies and has not been returned because he was a member of the depressed class?—(Babu Sheo Dayal Chawrasia): I was one of the candidates who stood for the municipal elections at Lucknow. Many people were asked not to vote for me because I belonged to the Tamboli caste. Even many people of my own community did not vote for me because they were under the influence of higher castes.

275. Chairman: The last thing you said bears very much on the question which has been put before by the Honourable the Minister. I understand you to say that you stood as a candidate and you being a sudra people went about and said to those who are also depressed class people "Do not vote for him, he is a sudra, but vote for somebody else," and they did so. Does this not rather show that it may perhaps be dangerous to say that the time has come for the depressed classes to have their members elected?—We have already done propaganda work sufficiently and we have got organised bodies who explain to our people what voting actually means and how we will safeguard their interests if we are elected. I think if I were to stand this year I have got a better chance of succeeding than I had before.

276. Are you going to stand for the next council?—Yes, if separate electorate is granted.

277. Khan Bahadur Hidayat Husain: There are many rich people amongst kurmis, for instance. Do you not think that they would resent coming down to the level of the chamars and being formed into that electorate?—(Babu Rama Charana): I do not think they will. Many of them are members of our organization.

278. Mr. Srivastava: In view of the difficulties which have been just pointed out by various members of the Conference regarding the formation of separate electorates, would you rather not be content with reservation of seats with the present electorate?—If separate electorate is not practicable I should certainly be content with that.

279. That is to say seats (whatever be their number) are reserved for you and members of the depressed classes are returned to those seats by the present Hindu electorate in which you are in a majority or at least you are very well represented?—As I said, if it is not possible to have separate electorate, I would certainly prefer reservation of seats.

Chairman: I have not followed. In the United Provinces, at any rate as things are, the elected members, nearly all, sit for single-member constituencies. I do not think you could combine single-member constituencies—could you?—with reserving seats. You would have to start with a system by which you would have several members elected for an area of whom one should be a member from the depressed classes.

Mr. Srivastava: Something to that effect. I am only suggesting that there are great difficulties in devising separate electorates.

* * * * * * * * * *

280. Kunwar Bisheshar Dayal Seth: Is it not a fact that distinguished politicians and social reformers are now doing a great deal to do away with the distinction of depressed classes and untouchables?—They are, but my own view is that their influence has very little or no effect.

281. Has that brought about any change whatsoever in the general outlook?—Not at all so far as the political field is concerned.

282. Chairman: Let us not get too gloomy a picture. You have said "not at all so far as the political field is concerned." But let us take the time during the last 15 or 20 years. Here in the United Provinces has not there been some improvement?—In what direction?

283. I mean, for example, as compared with how things were 15 years ago?—So far as the social conditions are concerned, certainly they have improved.

284. They have improved?—Yes.

285. I am very glad to hear that. You mean there has been a better feeling in giving the depressed class people a fair share of the ordinary public rights?—No, nothing of that sort. The Kahars and other touchable classes have always been touchable: they have never got any political rights.

286. Political rights are mostly, not entirely, means to an end. Political rights are pressed firstly because they give the citizen the opportunity of doing his duty towards the place where he lives and secondly because they give him power to enable him to protect himself and to secure his rights. Duty first and rights afterwards, is not that so?—Yes.

287. I am not talking about political rights. I am talking about the social position. Has not there been some improvement as a result of these efforts for the last 15 years?—In social position there has been, but not beyond that. If I may say so they are not going to give us any political status.

288. Rao Bahadur Rajah: Mr. Ram Prasad Ahir, you have given the definition of the two classes, the touchables and untouchables, in your memorandum. You say on page 355, "The question then arises why others are regarded to be a little better than the untouchables. The answer is not far to seek—and it is that the former have placed themselves a little under the Brahmin influence, the latter totally refused to yield to Brahminical pressure—the former invite Brahmins to solemnise marriages, the latter perform marriages by themselves" Is that right?—(Ram Prasad Ahir): Yes.

289. So you want to place those communities that are under the Brahminical influence and who wear the sacred thread under the category of touchables, is it not?—No.

290. What we call at present as touchables are those classes who wear sacred thread and who are under the Brahminical influence. Am I right?—Yes.

291. I suppose you have seen this journal, Adi-Hindu, evidently published by Babu Rama Charana It is stated in it that the journal is published for the advancement and protection of the rights of the so-called 15 crores of untouchables and sudras, qualifying the word "untouchables" by the word "depressed" and "Sudras" by the phrase "backward classes." Do you then agree that those touchables come under the term backward classes and the untouchables come under the term depressed classes? Is that your view?—You may call them by any name you like. But I have given certain usages in my memorandum to show wherein the disability they suffer from arises. If you read my memorandum you will know it.

292. I quite agree with all what you say in your memorandum and it is about that I am asking you?—I may suggest this. In ancient India they were the rulers and they were intermixing with each other. Later on when they were conquered the depressed classes, the untouchables, refused totally to come under the banner of the Brahmin. Others who came are the touchables.

293. Mr. Rama Charana, you are for separate electorates for the depressed classes?—(Babu Rama Charana): Yes.

294. It is stated that it is very difficult to form a separate electorate for them?—There is no difficulty at all.

295. But there will not be any such thing as untouchables electorate?—No, no such thing.

296. You have stated that public opinion in this province is almost in favour of the depressed classes. Will you kindly tell me what is your experience of the Hindu members of your legislative council with regard to their attitude towards the depressed classes?—I can only say that there is much on paper and very little in action. They may make speeches. I give you an instance. Out of 80 lakhs of rupees allotted for education, only over a lakh is given to the depressed classes although the illiteracy among them is very great and the other classes who are already sufficiently literate get a lion's share.

297. Chairman: You say that 80 lakhs is voted for education in the province?—It is granted for primary education to the local bodies.

298. Grants-in-aid about 80 lakhs?—Yes.

299. Can you tell us how much of it goes to support the education of the depressed classes?—A little over a lakh of rupees.

300. 1/80th of the whole?—Yes and even that we are getting since the last two years. Before that we were getting much less.

Kunwar Bisheshar Dayal Seth: I think this one lakh is intended specially for the depressed classes. As for the other amount that is spent on education, there is no bar for the depressed classes taking advantage of it. This one lakh is only in addition to what is being spent generally on education.

301. Chairman: I rather thought so. Is it the true position, that some years ago there was an effort to start schools specially for the depressed classes children and it may be that the depressed classes children who went to school went for the most part to these special schools? But is it not this what is happening, that more and more depressed class students are going to the ordinary schools? —That is true so far as the urban areas are concerned.

302. In some areas at any rate they are going. So the depressed class children get the advantage of the grant-in-aid given for the ordinary schools because many of them go there?—It is not so with regard to the rural areas where most of these classes live.

303. In cases where it is so. When you speak of the one lakh out of 80 lakhs being provided for the depressed classes education, that means, I think, does it not, that it is provided for these special schools for the depressed class children?—Yes.

304. Of course all the depressed class children are entitled at any rate to go to the ordinary schools?—Very few of them go because most of these people live in rural areas.

305. There are a lot of these depressed class children in Cawnpore?—Yes.

306. They do not all go to the depressed class schools, do they?—In cities there are very few depressed classes schools.

307. Rao Bahadur Rajah: It was said that the money allotted for education is for the welfare of all the communities including the depressed classes. Is it a fact that the high caste Hindus in this province have been totally against the aspirations of the depressed classes so far as education is concerned?—For a reply to that the report of the committee may be referred to.

308. May I refer you to a paragraph in this report, written by Rai Sahib Pandit Shukdeo Tewari of the educational service, wherein he says, "Education both in rural and urban areas here was confined amongst the literary classes only. The backward communities were allowed to live in ignorance as they were before. The high caste and literate Hindu communities, particularly the zamindars, discouraged the backward classes to educate the boys as they did not like the latter to become more learned and question the authority over them. The teachers who happened to belong to the literate communities did not admit the boys of untouchable classes for one reason or another"? Is that right?—Yes, that is right.

309. Will you tell me if these boys are admitted into the public hostels?—I think there is no provision for them. They are not admitted. I myself recall a case of Mohanlalganj where a boy of the Kori caste aged 13 years was not allowed to remain in the hostel but was asked to cook his food in a maidan in this cold weather and was asked to lie down in a verandah open to cold. I myself went to that place and learnt this.

310. Chairman: If I may say so it may help you and the witness. I think probably we all of us feel that the claim that the depressed classes should have adequate political representation on the ground that they need amongst other things the protection is a claim which appeals to many of the people. I think that is quite a reasonable thing to say. The real question is not so much whether it is proved that they need protection because I am pretty sure many of them say they do. I notice that some of us who are Indian members of the Conference agree with this view. But the real question is what is the best way of doing it. Do you not think so?

Rao Bahadur Rajah: Yes.

Chairman: If anybody comes and says that the depressed classes do not suffer from any grievance and they are treated like everybody else, I should not believe it.

Rao Bahadur Rajah: I am placing these facts before the Conference to press my case definitely for adequate representation in the councils.

Chairman: I think that is very important.

Rao Bahadur Rajah: The moment we get adequate representation to these councils and we are represented there by our own community itself, I think all these political rights will follow easily.

311. Chairman: Would you just tell me this? I have carefully looked into this. It is a little difficult, is it not, how it is to be done? Do you think yourself you would be disposed to recommend that there should be an attempt made to draw up a separate electoral list or do you think that for the time being it will be better to provide representation by nomination and to make sure that the members nominated were untouchables as well as backward classes?

Rao Bahadur Rajah: I think there will be no difficulty in framing an electorate, Sir, because these untouchables in almost all the villages live separately in what are called mohallas or tolis. They are a homogeneous group and not a heterogeneous group as stated by somebody. They live separately and therefore it is very easy to carve out an electorate for them.

Chairman: One of the difficulties which I feel myself is this. One is rather sorry for a man who has improved his social position and perhaps is already qualified to vote in a general electorate and to take part in it, if arrangements are made which almost seem to throw him back. I hardly think that you propose to have two votes. Therefore you will see that he will have to lose his vote in the general electorate.

Rao Bahadur Rajah: He will have the option to choose the one or the other. I think he will choose the electorate containing his own people. I will bring out this point.

312. Mr. Bahore, you were a member of the legislative council?—(Babu Khem Chand Bahore): Yes.

313. You are a very rich man in Agra?—Yes.

314. I am told you are worth property to the extent of two or three lakhs?—Yes.

315. You pay a house rent of Rs. 200 to the municipality?—Yes.

316. When you perform marriages are you allowed to take the marriage procession to the Hindu public streets?—No.

317. If a separate electorate is formed for the depressed classes and if you are asked to vote either in the depressed classes electorate or the Hindu electorate, which will you prefer?—The depressed classes electorate.

318. Chairman: To help your own people?—Yes.

319. Rao Bahadur Rajah: Mr. Rama Charana, the Chairman of the Indian Central Committee, wants to know whether you have included the hill tribes also in the list which you have given?—(Babu Rama Charana): Yes, I have. It is No. 13 in the printed list.

320. Have you included the criminal tribes?—Everybody comes in there. The criminal tribes are also included.

321. As touchables or as untouchables?—Some of them are touchables and others untouchables. They are untouchables in one place and touchables in another.

322. Mr. Srivastava: What hill tribes do you mean? —The depressed classes of Almora and Nainital, etc.

323. What are the castes?—Other than the Brahmins, the Rajputs and Vaisyas.

324. Chairman: Give me an example out of this list of 52 different castes, of a criminal tribe?—The Pasis, the Nats, the Haburas.

Memorandum submitted by the COMMITTEE OF THE UPPER INDIA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

The Committee of the Upper India Chamber of Commerce desire to avail themselves of the invitation to submit a memorandum on the subjects which fall within the limits of the enquiry which is being undertaken by the Indian Statutory Commission. They have framed this memorandum generally and serially on the lines of the Appendix to the Invitation to Submit Memoranda. They do not propose to deal with the whole field covered by the heads set out in the Appendix and their purpose particularly is to state their views on the problems affecting the Provincial Governments. They propose, as far as possible, to avoid those matters more directly relating to the Central Government and will touch on them, only where they are believed to affect the question of Provincial Government.

In dealing with the matter of Provincial Government they naturally base their conclusions and recommendations more particularly on the conditions obtaining in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh.

As a preliminary it is necessary to inform the Statutory Commission in regard to the status of the Chamber. The Upper India Chamber of Commerce was established in the year 1889 and is believed to be the first Chamber of Commerce established in the interior of India. The Chamber concerns itself more particularly with the industrial and commercial interests of the United Provinces, within which area the large majority of its members have their activities. It has, however, a few members in the Punjab, Marwar and Bhopal.

It may be said that the Chamber represents practically the whole of the major industrial interests in its area and its membership includes the majority of the Banks doing business in this area, the whole of the Railways serving the area, and a very large proportion of the European, and a lesser proportion of the Indian, commercial interests in the area.

In close connection with the Chamber, through its membership, is the Indian Sugar Producers' Association which represents 90 per cent. of the white sugar manufacturers of India and whose office is conducted by the Chamber.

The Chamber is represented on the United Provinces Legislative Council by two members, one Indian and one European. A member of the Committee of the Chamber, himself an ex-President of the Chamber, represents the European Constituency of the United Provinces in the Legislative Assembly. The Chamber also returns three members to the Municipal Board of Cawnpore, and is represented on the Advisory Committees of most of the Railways serving the Province and on the various Government Boards and Committees acting in an advisory capacity to the local Government. The Chamber therefore claims to speak as a thoroughly representative body.

1. The representative system as applied to British India

(a) The basis of the Franchise.
(b) Methods of Election.

The Committee of the Chamber are satisfied that the present bases of franchise extended to British India under the Government of India Act, 1919, and the methods of election now obtaining, do not, in practice, supply the country with a representative system. They do not desire to stress the fact that the present Indian electorates represent only a very small fractional proportion of the peoples of India. The facts and figures demonstrating this are too obvious and too well known to require any emphasis. But they do desire to insist that the results of the elections by the present electorates are wholly misleading in that they have not brought in to the Legislatures the representatives of the people. The land-holders are represented but the vast agricultural population of India is believed to be almost entirely without adequate representation. A proof of this may be deduced from the fact that in the United Provinces Legislative Council, out of 100 elected members there are 41 urban lawyers, whereas there are only 12 urban constituencies, not all of which are represented by lawyers. A lawyer represents the European Constituency, one represents a Chamber of Commerce Constituency, and one represents the University Constituency. The great majority of the lawyers are therefore returned by the rural constituencies and in their return the rural population has had very little voice.

It is generally admitted that this state of things is due to the appalling lack of education prevailing in India and especially in the rural areas. The remedy for this lack of education must of necessity be slow in its application and operation, but it appears to the Committee of the Chamber to be sufficient to realise that this remedy cannot at present, or for some considerable time to come, be effective and that in its absence it is fallacious to describe the present system as "representative." The Committee of the Chamber believe that it would be more honest to India wholly to abandon the present bases of franchise and the present methods of election in the rural areas and to substitute a method which would, it is believed, result in an actual extension of the franchise by indirect means to the rural population. They consider that the machinery for this actually exists in some Provinces and might be established in others by means of the development of the Panchayat system. This system has developed in the last ten years and in its further development and extension my Committee see some chance of a solution of an otherwise impossible problem.

The present functions of the Village Panchayats, where these exist, are (a) Magisterial and Judicial, to a necessarily very limited extent, (b) Civic, to the extent of aiding in the improvement of education, public health, water supply, village communications and works of public utility, (c) the conduct of inquests, (d) affording assistance to officers of Government in the performance of their duties, and (e) assisting, by enquiry, Magistrates and competent Revenue Officers. To these functions it would, the Committee believe, be feasible to add the function of electing members to District Boards, or Local Boards, or other equivalent bodies now created on an elective basis. But as a preliminary step the election of the Panches, or members of Village Panchayats, should, and could, be made more representative by insisting that all adult male inhabitants of a village should be permitted to vote, in some summary manner, for the election of the Panches.

The members of the Panchayats would be the lowest grade of electoral college and would elect, not necessarily from among their own members, the District Boards in rural areas.

It is regarded as an incontestible fact that at present, and for many years to come, communal representation must be resorted to in India, and it is believed that it would not be difficult to introduce a communal system, correctly based on the communal population, into the election of Village Panchayats and, as a second step, into the election, by the members of these Panchayats of the members of District Boards or equivalent rural bodies. In urban areas, where educational conditions are better and where the significance and importance of the elective system is better understood, direct election to Municipal Boards should continue.

The District Boards and Municipal Boards, once elected, should be constituted electoral colleges for the election, again not necessarily from among their own members, of members to the Legislative Assembly and to the Provincial Lower Houses—it being, as will presently be shown, a part of the Chamber's proposals that provincial Upper Houses should be established.

Functioning with the District and Municipal Boards as electoral colleges there would be other properly constituted elective bodies such as (a Chambers of Commerce and similar trade associations, (b) Registered Workmen's Unions, (c) Associations of land-holders, (d) the Provincial Branches of the European Association, (e) the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Association and (f) the Indian Christian community (in certain Provinces).

These several electoral colleges would form the general electorates for the Provincial Councils and Legislative Assembly and, in addition, there would be special electorates. These will be referred to subsequently under the next sub-head.

The Council of State and the Upper Provincial Chambers would be formed by direct election on a uniform and comparatively high and restricted franchise.

There is no inconsistency in this proposal since the restricted electorates for these Upper Chambers do exist, possessed of sufficient political education.

The Committee are aware that their recommendations for a reversion to an indirect method of election may be regarded as retrograde. They do not wish to be considered as labouring the point, but they desire to make it clear that, while they hold the view that it is certainly desirable to extend the bases of franchise, the problem is, in the present state of education in India, actually insoluble, if by solution be meant the infusion, within a reasonable time, of political education and the development of the political capacity of the masses and, in particular, of the rural population.

The difficulties in the way of educating politically these masses and this population were recognised by the authors of the Joint Report on Indian Constitutional Reforms, but an attempt was nevertheless made and has continued for nine years.

During this period those who have been returned to the Provincial Councils and the Central Legislatures have made little, if any, effort correctly to educate their constituencies or to develop the potential capacity of the rural classes for politics, and for all practical purposes the situation, as far as it concerns the suitability of India for a direct popular franchise, is exactly where it was when the Montagu-Chelmsford Report was issued. This being so it is the opinion of the Committee of the Chamber that it is useless to place a vote in the hands of people who are incapable of understanding its value or its use. In the circumstances resort to indirect election is the only solution.

Nothing can be more certain than that the Legislatures of to-day have not grown and are not being developed scientifically and symmetrically on their present franchise. The present electoral structure has been erected on an inadequate foundation, top-heavy and ill-balanced and with every proof afforded of its instability. The comments of the Government of India in their Fifth Despatch of 1919, forwarding the Southborough Committee's Report on Franchises, show quite clearly that the recommendations of the Southborough Committee were not based on principle but rather on a facile acceptance of the views of Local Governments. It may be that this was the inevitable result of the hasty forcing through of the Reforms by the then Secretary of State, but the fact remains that the methods of election finally adopted for the Legislative Assembly and the Council of State were not those recommended by the Southborough Committee and accepted, in a very lukewarm manner, by the Government of India. The recommendations of the Southborough Committee as to the methods of election for the Provincial Councils were certainly adopted finally, but even these were regarded, by at least one member of the Government of India, as experimental and the Committee of the Chamber hold the view that the experiment has not succeeded.

The methods of election for the Provincial Councils and the Legislative Assembly were changed under the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms of 1919 from a system, at least partial, of electoral colleges to a system of direct election, and it became necessary, after the decision to make this change was known, very hastily to devise the electorates to which the franchises were to be extended. The actual result was that the electorates and their franchises were not such as would form a secure foundational basis for the Legislatures, but were built in or thrust in under them, none too confidently or securely. The result is a conglomerate of property and other qualifications, communally most uneven and educationally most unsound.

The Committee of the Chamber therefore put forward their recommendation that this unsound structure should be replaced, at any rate for the present and for several years to come, by the system of electoral colleges which they have endeavoured to sketch out.

(c) In considering the methods whereby particular interests, communal, local, social and economic, may obtain adequate representation on local self-governing, Provincial and Central Representative Bodies, the Committee of the Chamber desire to put forward the following recommendations :—

In regard to local self-governing bodies the powers now afforded under the Municipalities Act for giving communal and other special representation on Municipal Boards appear to the Committee to be sufficient save possibly in regard to the Depressed Classes, and they consider it necessary only to recommend that the present representation of special and minority interests should not be reduced.

In regard to District Boards it has already been recommended that Panchayats should be elected so as to preserve the correct communal proportion and if this desideratum is similarly secured in the election, by Village Panchayats, of District Boards, no other particular interest in rural areas, again save perhaps that of the Depressed Classes, seems important enough to require special representation.

In regard to Provincial and Central Representative Bodies the Committee of the Chamber recommend that the communal interests of Moslems should be protected in accordance with the formula enunciated by Sir William Vincent in para. 5 of his Minute of Dissent to the Government of India's Fifth Despatch, forwarding the Report of the Southborough Committee to the Secretary of State, on the 23rd April, 1919. Sir William Vincent said: "What is wanted is a sliding scale in which the weighting given to Mohammadans increases as their numerical weakness does . . . . . Where the Mohammadans are in the census majority let them get representation in that proportion; where they are the weakest," (i.e., at their weakest) "let us double that proportion . . . . Between these extremes let us multiply the census ratio of the Mohammadans by a factor greater than one and less than two."

The Europeans should certainly have communal representation, both in the Central and Provincial Legislatures, and this should be distinct from and in addition to the special representation necessary for European Commerce.

On the 13th of August, 1924, the Chamber, in addressing the Reforms Enquiry Committee, made a similar recommendation and a copy of the Chamber's letter of that date is attached as Annexure A to this Memorandum, and particular attention is invited, in the present connection, to the concluding paragraph of that letter and to the criticisms made by the Chamber in November, 1918, of the Montagu-Chelmsford Report, and which are quoted in the letter.

The Anglo-Indians should continue to be recognised as a separate community and should be given a franchise to function as an electoral college and to elect a representative to the Central Legislature and also representatives to the Provincial Councils of Bengal, Bombay, Madras, and the United Provinces in which Provinces the strength of the Anglo-Indian population is considered to justify their separate representation.

Indian Christians should also be given a franchise to elect a representative to the Central Legislature and representatives to the Councils of such of the Provinces as contain a sufficiently large Indian Christian population to warrant separate representation.

In the matter of local interests the Committee are not able to envisage any interests which would not be adequately represented by one or other of the special interests separately treated.

As far as social interests are concerned the Committee of the Chamber hold the view that the Depressed Classes are quite inadequately represented in the Central and Provincial Legislatures, and that their representation should certainly be increased considerably. The comments of the Government of India, in para. 13 of their Fifth Despatch of 1919, furnish an eloquent condemnation of the neglect of this interest.

Owing to the backwardness of these classes and their lack of education any system of direct election would be unsuitable, but it is felt that a system of electoral colleges could be established in each Province among the Depressed Classes and that they should be given a right of election on this system.

The large proportion of this class to India's population renders a system of representation by nomination alike inadequate and unsuitable.

Dealing with economic interests the Committee of the Chamber are of opinion that European Commerce and Indian Commerce should be accorded separate representation in both the Central and Provincial Legislatures. They consider that it is wrong that European Commerce should be denied representation in the Legislative Assembly, save by the nomination of one representative of the Associated Chambers of Commerce, while on the other hand Indian Commerce is, in certain Provinces, privileged to elect members to the Assembly.

In the Chamber's letter of the 13th August, 1924, to the Reforms Enquiry Committee, which is attached as Annexure A to this Memorandum, reference was made to the claim for the representation of European Commerce on the Legislative Assembly, and it is pointed out that the European Chambers of Commerce, while representative of European commercial opinion, do not represent European communal opinion. It was there stated that these Chambers include Indians in their body and that in many of them a certain proportion of Indians is on the Committee of the Chambers.

It is in the Legislative Assembly that legislation affecting Commerce is mainly initiated and it is in the Assembly that the main discussion on the Budgets takes place. It is therefore all the more necessary that both European and Indian Chambers of Commerce should be constituted electoral colleges to return members to the Legislative Assembly.

Representation should be accorded to Commerce by means of election by Chambers of Commerce constituencies, but in order to ensure that commercial interests are truly represented the Committee of the Chamber consider that it is necessary for the purposes of the governing Act so to define Chambers of Commerce as to ensure that the membership of the Chambers shall be confined to genuine representatives of trade and commerce.

Considerable dissatisfaction has been expressed during the past few years by the Chambers of Commerce with the methods of election which have been laid down under the election rules of the various Provinces for Chamber of Commerce constituencies and the Committee of this Chamber strongly urge that the difficulties which have been experienced and complained of should be removed. They urge that the necessity for nominating an individual to represent a member of a Chamber of Commerce, and whose name must appear on the electoral roll, should be done away with and that the member, when a firm or corporate body, should be given power to vote in its own name. Alternatively, the electoral rolls of Chamber of Commerce Constituencies should be revised semi-annually, if not quarterly. Under the present rules many members are deprived of their votes and are also prevented from nominating persons connected with their business as candidates for election by the fact that the person whose name appears on the electoral roll, prepared perhaps two or three years previously, has severed his connection with the member's business or is deceased or is absent on leave. Members of Chambers of Commerce, should be permitted to nominate any duly accredited person connected with their business as a candidate and also to nominate any similarly accredited person to exercise the vote on behalf of the member. In short, the membership roll of the Chamber should be the electoral roll.

It has already been recommended that land-holders should be recognised as one of the electoral colleges for the representation of land-holding interests in the Legislatures.

In regard to the representation of Universities the Committee of the Chamber desire to record their opinion that there is now no need for granting special representation to Universities. The reasons for their exclusion are amply stated in para. 14 of the Government of India's Fifth Despatch of 1919.

(d) In dealing with the relationship between representatives and constituencies the Committee of the Chamber desire to state that if the reference to this subject is to the relationship which has in the past been maintained by the elected representatives with the constituents who have, or are supposed to have, elected them, the only criticisms which the Committee could make, at least in regard to the general constituencies of the Central and Provincial Legislatures, must be destructive. It has already been pointed out that the elected members have done little, if anything, to educate their constituencies politically. In many constituencies, and certainly in rural constituencies, the electors see nothing of their members between elections, until the last few months preceding an election. They are seldom, if ever, consulted by their member as to his policy on important matters, and, in general, anything in the nature of active relationship between the member and his constituents is noticeable by its absence.

(e) Touching on the subject of the Growth of Parties, the Committee of the Chamber hold the view that the only party which has grown in the past nine years is that of the Swarajists, and whether that has grown to good purpose or evil its record in the Legislatures affords abundant evidence. In the opinion of the Committee of the Chamber the only functions which this party has successfully fulfilled in the Legislatures are those of obstruction and destruction. The Committee of the Chamber do not consider that they are called upon to enlarge on this point, but they do feel that it is necessary to point out that, for some reason or another, all parties in the Legislatures, save the Government bloc, have been driven more and more to the left, into opposition to Government. In these circumstances anything in the nature of a healthy growth of parties was hardly to be expected.

(f) The Committee of the Chamber feel that they cannot comment constructively on the subject of the growth of public opinion. They recognise that there has been a certain growth of public opinion in localised and restricted circles, but the growth would have been much more rapid and widespread if the representatives elected to the Legislatures had devoted attention, as they should have, to their constituencies. Proofs are abundant that in many rural areas the very existence, let along the meaning, of the Legislatures is unknown.

(g) The Committee hold a very definite view in regard to the nomination of officials and non-officials as additional members of elected bodies. In local self governing bodies the presence of officials is entirely unnecessary and would indeed be a contradiction to the term "self-government."

In the Provincial Legislatures the Committee of the Chamber strongly favour the grant of provincial autonomy and they accordingly hold the view that this does away with the arguments put forward in the Report of the Reforms Enquiry Committee, 1924, for the retention of officials in the Provincial Councils. If responsible Government is to be attained in the Provinces the officials must, with one exception, disappear. The reason for this exception, is stated on pages 368 and 371 of this Memorandum.

In regard to the nomination of officials to the Central Legislatures the Committee of the Chamber prefer to leave any recommendations that may be made to the Associated Chambers of Commerce.

2. The suitability of existing areas for legislative and administrative purposes and for the growth of representative institutions.

The Committee of the Chamber do not desire to advance any views on this subject in its relation to local self-governing bodies. In regard to Provincial Representative Bodies the Committee desire to confine an expression of their opinion to the United Provinces. They are aware that suggestions have been made that Oudh should be separated from the Province of Agra, and they desire to record their entire opposition to and disapproval of any such proposal. They consider that no adequate reasons exist or can be advanced for any such administrative separation. There is a case for judicial separation, in the manner in which it now exists, but beyond this no differentiation should be made. Local differences requiring different treatment in matters of tenancy and revenue are adequately met by the present enactments governing these. A complete separation, administrative and legislative, would be merely expensive and in no way beneficial.

The Committee of the Chamber have also heard that it is suggested that the Delhi province should be increased in size by the appropriation of certain districts from the Punjab and from the United Provinces. They can hardly credit that such a proposal has been made seriously. They are entirely opposed to any such suggestion and they recommend that the Delhi province be left as it is, a small district having as the sole excuse for its separate existence the neutralised situation of the Capital of India.

3. Local self-governing bodies (Municipalities, District Boards, etc.) and their relationship with the Provincial Government.

Dealing with this subject under its various subheads, the Committee of the Chamber desire to record their views as follows:—

(a) Constitution.—In regard to District Boards the Committee have already recommended that these be elected by Village Panchayats. They consider that there is no real analogy between the qualifications of voters in District Board elections and those in Municipal elections. The circumstances, interests and conditions of the rural and urban electorates are entirely different. For instance, while in District Board electorates illiteracy does not necessarily imply an absence of the essential property or tenancy qualifications, it is, as a wide general rule, the reverse in the case of Municipal electorates, the urban population having far more opportunity of and incentive for becoming literate. The Committee would therefore not recommend the imposition of a literacy qualification for District Board electorates, i.e., the members of Village Panchayats, beyond the qualification which already exists for election to Panchayats, which is, in these Provinces, that the Sarpanch and one other Panch shall be able to read and write in the vernacular.

In regard to Municipal Boards, however, it is felt that the time has now come to make the grant of a franchise a motive for the acquirement of literacy and that a beginning should now be made with the urban population. The Committee of the Chamber accordingly recommend a tightening up of the basis of the Municipal franchise by imposing as essential an overriding educational qualification on all those who are not directly assessed to Municipal tax. This qualification, which should be based only on literacy in English or any of the vernaculars, should be just as essential as the present residential qualification, which should of course be retained. The various subsidiary qualifications at present laid down for Municipal electorates in these Provinces are considered sufficient and desirable, but it is felt that the occupancy qualification of a minimum annual value of Rs. 36/- fixed by rule, is too low. It is recognised that a similar figure was fixed as one of the qualifications for the Legislative Council electorate under the present system, but there also the figure has always been regarded by the Committee of the Chamber as being too low, since, in effect, it has extended the franchise quite disproportionately to the ignorant and irresponsible classes, giving them a preponderating vote as against those who have a real stake in the constituency. The same arguments apply to Municipal constituencies.

(b) Functions.—The Committee of the Chamber do not think it necessary to criticise the functions laid down for District Boards, but, in regard to Municipalities, certain of the discretionary functions should be made statutory.

In these Provinces the law governing Local Self-Government by Municipal Boards is contained in the United Provinces Municipalities Act of 1916. Certain amendments to the Act have since been made which have worked advantageously. In the view of the Committee of the Chamber the Act, save where these amendments have been found necessary, has worked very well. It was drafted by an officer of Government who had had considerable personal experience as the Chairman of an important Municipal Board and on the whole it is a practical and sound enactment, with the maximum of freedom from Government restraint and supervision allowed and with the minimum opportunity for interference. The Committee of the Chamber are aware that on many points a further amendment of the Municipalities Act has been urged, but in most cases these proposals have had as their object the lessening of any form of Government control and the entire removal of supervision and intervention by the Commissioner and District Magistrate.

The duties imposed by statute on Municipalities are enumerated in section 7 of the Act. Certain other functions, detailed in section 8, are discretionary. In the opinion of the Committee of the Chamber certain of these discretionary functions should be made obligatory, e.g., the establishing and maintaining of poor-houses, dairies, washing places, and drinking fountains, and the reclaiming of unhealthy localities, etc. Others of the discretionary functions might more appropriately be left to Improvement Trusts, where these exist side by side with Municipalities. The Municipalities Act was drafted before the U.P. Town Improvement Act was devised in 1919, and should now be amended to prevent an overlap of functions with the latter where applied, and the latter should also be amended so as to relieve Municipalities, which are connected with Improvement Trusts, of certain of their discretionary functions.

(c) Relationship with officials of Provincial Government and (d) Control by Provincial Government. The relationship of Municipalities with officials of the Provincial Government is covered by section 32 of the Act which provides for supervision by the Commissioner and District Magistrate; by section 33, which provides for the inspection of Municipal works and institutions by Government officers; by section 34, which gives the Commissioner or District Magistrate power to prohibit the further execution of a resolution or order of the Board; by section 35, which gives to the Commissioner (in case of a non-city Municipality) certain powers in the case of default by the Board (in the case of city Municipalities these power vest only in the local Government); by section 36, which gives the District Magistrate extraordinary powers in case of emergency; and by Rules under section 296 governing the audit of Municipal Accounts by Government officers. The Committee feel that any lessening of the supervision and powers referred to above is strongly to be deprecated. The control of Municipalities by Government is essential, certainly to the extent provided by the Act, and detailed in schedule 7 of the Act. A careful study of the Government's powers as given in this schedule convinces the Committee that in no particular should there be a removal of these powers. The Committee, however, consider that, in certain minor details, restrictions and prohibitions as to expenditure by the Board should be removed. It has been made obvious that the retention of these restrictions cannot prevent a mismanaged Board from plunging into bankruptcy if set on this course, while on the other hand a self-respecting and fairly well managed Board cannot but regard them as galling in the extreme and inconsistent with the spirit of self-government. In particular the Committee consider that it is in the application of the powers under section 8 (3) of the Act that more financial freedom should be afforded to Boards.

(e) Finance.—Taxation is the main source of income of Municipal Boards. The powers of taxation to be allowed by Local Governments to Municipal Boards are governed by schedule 2 of the Scheduled Taxes Rules, framed under section 80 A (3).(a) of the Government of India Act, and the Committee strongly recommend that, in regard to Municipal Taxes, these powers shall be preserved and the schedule not extended.

Other sources of Municipal income are revenue from Municipal property and Government grants, and having regard to all these sources of income, and speaking with close acquaintance with Municipal conditions in Cawnpore, the Committee of the Chamber hold the opinion that Municipal income is or can be made more than sufficient for the proper discharge of its functions by the Board, adequate attention being paid to the necessity for economic working, proper restraint of establishment and wise embarkation on new schemes.

The Committee of the Chamber feel that they must criticise adversely the present attitude of the United Provinces Government towards Municipal expenditure on capital works, e.g., on water works, and the extension of drainage and roads, as evidenced by their treatment of the Cawnpore Municipality. To this Board loans for these purposes have been consistently denied for several years on the ground that the Board is able to finance these works from its revenues. This attitude encourages the Boards to disregard the elementary economic principle that such capital works, from which posterity is to benefit, should be a charge on posterity and should therefore be financed by means of loans which it would fall on posterity to repay.

The Committee of the Chamber also desire to recommend that opportunity should be taken, if possible, to impose more effectually on Municipal Boards the duty of realising to the full within the year of liability all collections of Municipal taxes, sale proceeds and other debts. In this matter it has been shown that audit notes, official communications and remonstrances have in many cases proved quite ineffectual. It is therefore suggested that steps should be taken to amend the Municipalities Act so as to improve the procedure for collection and to compel Boards to employ to the full the powers vested in them under the Act to realise their dues.

4. The Provincial Governments.

The Committee of the Chamber consider that a radical change should now be made in the status, constitution and powers of Provincial Governments, so as to give them, in effect, virtual provincial autonomy, certain precautionary powers being reserved to the Governor and to the Central Government, to be exercised only in case of grave emergency threatening to bring about a breakdown of the administration. On the basis of this general recommendation the Committee prefer to deal with the subject in detail in accordance with the sub-heads set out in the Appendix to the Invitation to Submit Memoranda.

(a) Constitution.—It is recommended that the constitution of the Provincial Governments should be (1) the Governor, (2) a Cabinet of five Ministers and (3) a bi-cameral Legislature consisting of :—(a) a Lower House maintained at the present total strength of the Provincial Legislative Councils, e.g., in the United Provinces, 123; but with no official members save one Parliamentary Secretary to answer for the Governor in his role of a Minister in charge of a portfolio.

The members of the Lower House would be elected by a system of electoral colleges, as previously recommended, but a certain number of seats would be reserved to be filled by nomination by the Governor to represent minority interests which cannot secure representation by means of election. The number of nominated members should be kept as low as possible consistent with the representation of such minority interests.

An Upper House of approximately one-third the numerical strength of the Lower House and composed of elected and nominated members, in the proportion of five elected to four nominated. In this House also there would be no official members, save one Parliamentary Secretary. The elected portion would be returned by direct election on a restricted and comparatively high franchise, uniform with that for the Council of State and not lower than that obtaining for the present Council of State.

The period of life of the Lower House should be four years and that of the Upper House five years. The reason prompting the Committee to make this recommendation, increasing the period of life of the Legislature, is that it has been found in practice that members of the Legislatures who are new to legislative work take time, varying from a year to 18 months to arrive at a proper appreciation of their duties and to settle down properly to their work. By increasing the period the disturbance caused by this fact in the new Legislatures will be considerably reduced.

The period of life of the Upper House should not be coincident with that of the Lower House so as to obviate as far as possible the dissolution of both Houses at the same time.

The Governor and the Cabinet would constitute the Provincial Executive.

In dealing with the question of the Executive the Committee have been much impressed by certain remarks in a memorandum on the subject of "The Executive in Modern Democracies" recently issued by the European Association. In this Memorandum it is stated, inter alia :—

"An examination of the constitutional history of France, Spain and Italy in modern times reveals a lamentable and far different state of affairs. In all three countries constitutions based on the outward appearance of the English Constitution have failed completely for the reason that a weak executive was placed at the mercy of the elected legislature, for the weakness of the Executive in Spain and Italy was, and in France still is, due to the fact that owing to the large number of parties the Cabinet was never assured of that first essential of strong Cabinet Government, a certain and stable majority in the Legislature."

"The central and important feature of the English Constitution is the control of Parliament by the Cabinet and not, as many believe, the control of the Cabinet by Parliament."

"In India and England to-day there is a widespread idea that "Responsible Government" and "the domination of the executive by the Legislature" are one and the same, and that, therefore, as "responsible" Government has been promised to India, the goal at which we must aim is the control of the executive by the Legislature. A more mistaken idea can hardly be imagined, and if the complete breakdown of Responsible Government in India is to be avoided this erroneous conception of Government must be dispelled."

"The sine qua non of the Cabinet system is "two-party government" and as this is clearly an impossibility in India, either in the Central or the Provincial Legislatures, resort must be had to something like the Presidental system" (obtaining in Switzerland and the United States of America) "if strong, stable and good government is to be obtained."

The Committee of the Chamber commend these remarks to the consideration of the Statutory Commission.

(b) The working of Dyarchy.—The unanimous feeling of the Committee of the Chamber is that the dyarchical system has failed and that it should forthwith be abolished. To give detailed reasons for this opinion would be as tedious as it seems to be unnecessary, but the reasons may be summarised in the statement that so far from providing a system of responsible self-government dyarchy has produced complete irresponsibility.

(c) Position and Powers of the Governor.—The Governor must continue to be the executive head of the Provincial Government, with his present powers unimpaired, save in that his powers of certification should be severely circumscribed.

The Governor would, under the proposed reformed constitution, call upon any person in the Council, whom he considers to have the necessary support, to form a ministry. The Ministers would be appointed by the Governor in consultation and agreement with the member of the House whom he has called upon to form the ministry. The Governor would preside over the Cabinet and would have a casting vote.

(d) The position of Ministers in relation to the Governor and Members of the Executive Council.—With the substitution of a Cabinet system of Government for the present system and the consequent disappearance, in their distinctive capacities, of members of the Executive Council and of Ministers, this question would not arise.

(e) Relationship of Ministers to each other and the question of collective responsibility.—It is regarded as very desirable and important that the doctrine of collective responsibility should prevail with a system of Cabinet Government such as is recommended.

But the Committee of the Chamber feel that they cannot lay down a rule on the subject, realising, as they do, that the Legislature is likely to divide, not into two or three parties but into a number of smaller groups, and that the Cabinet will in effect be formed by the coalition of two or more of these groups. In these circumstances the principle of joint responsibility is not likely to be strictly observed.

(f) The growth of the Party system in Provincial Councils.—The system of Government per Cabinet must result in a strengthening of the party system, which is regarded as desirable.

(g) Working of particular departments.—Speaking generally on this head the Committee of the Chamber hold the view that, probably in most Provinces, and certainly in the United Provinces, the Executive has, since the introduction of the Reforms, been weakened and that the Government, and consequently the working of the various departments, probably with the exception of the Police and the Revenue Departments, has deteriorated. They desire to attach as Annexure B to this Memorandum a note on the working of certain of the departments.

(h) Classification into Reserved and Transferred subjects.—Having recommended the abolition of dyarchy the Committee of the Chamber consider that this point does not arise.

(i) Desirability of a Second Chamber.—The Committee of the Chamber consider that there should be a second Chamber, to be the Upper Chamber of the Provincial Legislatures. This point has already been covered above, under sub-head (a) "Constitution."

It is recommended that the members of the Upper Chamber should have a distinctive title. The Upper Chamber should have the power to initiate legislation and should also be a revising chamber to exercise a restraint on the Lower Chamber. The members of the Upper Chamber should mainly be persons with a real stake in the country.

In regard to the composition of the Upper Chambers it has already been recommended that these should consist of elected and nominated members in the proportion of 5 to 4. It is specifically recommended that in the United Provinces the Upper House should consist of 40 members, of whom 22 would be elected and 17 nominated by the Governor from among suitable non-officials, at his discretion, with one official to act as Parliamentary Secretary. Commerce should be entitled to elect two members, one each for European and Indian Commerce, the constituencies being the Upper India and the United Provinces Chambers of Commerce.

(j) Question of Provincial Autonomy.—The Committee of the Chamber, in the preamble to this head, have already recommended that virtual Provincial autonomy should be granted.

(k) Finance of Provincial Government and Financial control.—The Committee of the Chamber, in dealing with this sub-head, feel that they cannot do more than recommend that complete control of provincial finances should be given to Provincial Governments, subject to the Governor's veto, and to severely circumscribed powers of certification by the Governor in emergent cases. The powers of taxation by Provincial Governments should of course be definitely laid down in the Government of India Act, as at present provided for by section 80A (3) (a) of the Government of India Act, 1919, and the Scheduled Taxes Rules and schedules 1 and 2 thereof.

The Local Government Borrowing Rules, under section 30 (1) (a) of the present Government of India Act, should be maintained. Powers similar to those at present provided by the Reservation of Bills Rules under Section 81 (a) of the Act should remain, with suitable changes consequent on the proposed abolition of dyarchy and the disappearance of the distinction between transferred and reserved subjects.

(l) Financial Relations between Reserved and Transferred sides of the Government including the question of the Joint and Separate Purse.—Under a system of Cabinet Government such as is proposed this question would not arise.

(m) Provincial Public Services Commissions.—Although this subject is not touched upon in the Appendix to the Invitation to Submit Memoranda, the Committee of the Chamber consider it incumbent on them to state that in their opinion some form of machinery should be devised for controlling recruitment to Services other than the Superior Services. This machinery should be on the lines recommended by the Royal Commission on the Superior Civil Services in India, 1924 (the Lee Commission), in para. 26 of their Report.

A permanent salaried Chairman to have charge of the Selection Board should be appointed by the Governor in consultation with the All India Public Services Commission. This Chairman should have complete power to select his own Board.

All appointments should be made in the name of the Governor, who should have the ultimate power of revision.

The decisions of the Selection Board should not be over-ruled by Ministers, as is at present the case with selections made by ad hoc Selection Committees.

Promotions or posting of such important officers as Commissioners and District Magistrates, and in fact, the promotions and postings of all officers of the Superior Services, should remain the special charge of the Governor.

5. The Central Government.

The Committee of the Chamber desire to confine their remarks on the specific subject of the Central Government to the recommendation that there should be no change in the Central Government, unless it be in the direction of improving and increasing the power of the Executive. They have already quoted certain remarks contained in a memorandum on "The Executive in Modern Democracies," and these have a special bearing on the Central Government.

For the rest the Committee of the Chamber prefer that the question of the Central Government should be dealt with by the Associated Chambers of Commerce.

6. Relations between the Central Government and the Provincial Government.

(a) The extent of the power of superintendence, direction and control to be exercised by the Central Government.

Having in view the fact that the Committee of the Chamber have recommended the grant of provincial autonomy it follows that they must recommend that certain restrictions at present imposed by the Government of India Act, which obviously are antagonistic to provincial autonomy, must be relaxed.

As all Provincial Subjects would, under the Committee's proposal, be transferred, the relaxation of the Secretary of State's powers of superintendence under section 19A will automatically apply to all Provincial Subjects.

Section 45 (1) of the Government of India Act, which lays down that Local Governments are obliged to obey the orders of the Governor General in Council and to keep him constantly informed of all matters relating to the Government of the Province, must be maintained. Such powers, as are imposed by section 81A, whereunder the Governor of a province must, or in some cases may, reserve a Bill for consideration by the Governor General should also be maintained.

Discretionary powers should be given to the Governor General under section 46 (3) to revoke or suspend Provincial (Executive) Councils, subject to the proviso that the Governor General may at his discretion reserve orders pending the decision of the Secretary of State. The references above to the Executive Council would, if the Committee's recommendations are accepted, apply, mutatis mutandis, to the Provincial Cabinets, which it is intended shall take the place of the Executive Councils.

The Governor should himself have powers to suspend his Cabinet, pending the decision of the Governor General in Council.

The present powers of a Governor to dissolve his Legislative Council should be maintained in regard to both the Provincial Lower and Upper Houses, but it is thought desirable that over-riding powers in this direction should be vested in the Governor General in Council.

In the event of the Governor, or the Governor General in Council, dissolving the Legislature all powers vested in the Legislature should vest in the Governor during the ensuing six months or such shorter period as may be necessary pending the election of a new Legislature.

It is further recommended that in a case of grave emergency, the Governor General may, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State, entirely suspend a Provincial Administration for an indefinite period, and make such directions for carrying on the Administration as may be suitable.

Dealing specifically with certain of the present powers of supervision and control the Committee desire to make the following recommendations, some of which have already been made :—

The Local Government Borrowing Rules under section 30 (1) (a) of the present Act should be maintained.

In regard to the following rules under the Devolution Rules it is recommended that :—

Rule 6, which makes it a duty of a Local Government to supply information to the Governor General in Council, should be maintained.

Rule 12 (a), regarding roads and other means of communication of military importance, should be maintained.

Rules 46 to 48, governing the employment of the agency of the Governor in Council by the Governor General in Council in the administration of Central subjects, should be maintained.

Rule 49, limiting the power of superintendence, direction and control over a local Government, vested in the Governor General, in relation to transferred subjects would now apply to all provincial subjects and should be maintained. In view of the importance of a general co-ordination of provincial activities, especially in such matters as health, roads, electricity and irrigation, the Committee of the Chamber are disposed to agree with the Muddiman Committee (vide their Report, Para. 48) that the contemplated transfer of all subjects may necessitate reservation to the Central Government of somewhat greater powers of supervision and control than the existing rule 49 would give.

Rule 13, which states that, save in the case of transferred subjects, nothing in the Devolution Rules derogates from the power of superintendence, direction and control conferred on the Governor General in Council by the Act, would cease to be operative.

Rule 27, giving powers to the Secretary of State and to the Governor General in Council to sanction expenditure on certain transferred subjects detailed in Schedule 3 should remain, but the Schedule would need to be altered.

The Scheduled Taxes Rules should remain, but it might become necessary to extend Schedule 1. This, however, is a point on which the Committee of the Chamber are unable to make a specific recommendation as it is a part of the question of financial relationship which they would prefer to see examined by an expert committee. In regard to Schedule 2, however, the recommendation has already been made that this Schedule should not be extended.

The Local Legislatures (Previous Sanction) Rules, under section 80A(3)(h), should remain. In this connection it is recommended that all enactments dealing with industrial matters should be included in the Schedule to these Rules.

The Reservation of Bills Rules, under section 81(a), should remain, with suitable changes consequent on the proposed abolition of dyarchy and the disappearance, of the distinction between "transferred" and "reserved" subjects.

The Rules regarding the Civil Services in India should remain.

(b) Classification of subjects as Central and Provincial.

The proposal of the Committee of the Chamber to transfer all reserved subjects in the Provinces will necessitate a very definite delimitation of the boundary between Provincial and Central subjects.

The present Devolution Rules in the Government of India Act show, in Schedule 1, the subjects which are at present Provincial. The Committee of the Chamber recommend that these should not be added to.

Of the present Provincial subjects the question whether "Law and Order" should continue to be a Provincial subject or should be reserved to the Central Government has been the cause of much anxiety and discussion in the Committee of the Chamber. Included under this head is the subject of the Police which has in the past been the one which more than any other has been attacked in the Provincial Councils. Having been a reserved subject these attacks have been successfully met, and supplies, which have been refused in certain Provinces for carrying on the work of the Police, have been restored by certification. Without this remedy the Police administration would have collapsed with the immediate result of chaos. It is certain that the subject of Police will continue to be one for acute criticism and it is feared that in the future attacks similar to those in the past will continue to be made. Now that it is proposed to transfer all Provincial subjects the gravest apprehension is felt as to the wisdom of leaving "Law and Order" including the Executive Magistracy and the Police as a Provincial subject, not only from the point of view of the probable refusal of supplies, but also from that of the efficiency of the services and of maintaining the confidence of the Officers, who, if called upon to exercise their duties to the utmost and take a strong hand, might be subjected to personal attacks and victimization. It is considered to be most important that no opportunity whatever should be afforded for lessening the morale of these services, or of reducing the confidence of the Officers that they will be backed up by the Administration in carrying out the duties enjoined on them. It is also in the highest degree necessary that the services of the Police should be immediately available in an emergency without hesitation and without the delay which might result if the actions of the Police or Executive Magistracy were liable to be visited on the head of a politician Minister in charge of the Department. At the same time the Committee of the Chamber feel that the subject of "Law and Order" could not be successfully administered as a Central subject, even by agency means, and the withdrawal of this subject from among the Provincial subjects would certainly be regarded as a considerable negation of the principle of provincial autonomy.

In the circumstances the Committee consider that the only solution of the problem lies in the recommendation that "Law and Order" should remain a Provincial subject, but that the portfolio for this Department should be with the Governor, who, in administering it, shall himself function as a Minister. For obvious reasons it is impossible that the Governor himself shall appear in person to answer to the Legislature on questions affecting "Law and Order" and it is therefore further recommended that, in his capacity of Minister, the Governor shall be represented in the Legislature by a senior official, acting as a Parliamentary Secretary. The Governor's powers of veto should extend to "Law and Order" as to other matters, but his powers of certification, which it is recommended shall be severely circumscribed, should certainly apply to "Law and Order."

The Committee realise that this preservation of the power of certification is in itself incompatible with the principle of provincial autonomy, but such incompatibility, in the case of "Law and Order" appears to be entirely unavoidable, since the matter, involving as it does grave issues of peace and tranquillity, life and death, is far too serious to expose to the dangers of an unwise experiment.

(c) Financial relationship between the Central and Provincial Governments including the Meston Settlement.

The Committee of the Chamber feel that this question is far too complex and specialised for them to be able to offer any useful opinions. They also realise the contentious nature of the subject and that localised opinions must of necessity be to some extent selfish and widely variant. They therefore feel that, actually, this is a matter for special consideration by an expert Finance Committee, working under or with the Statutory Commission. It may be that, if this suggestion is adopted, and if in the future this expert Committee issues a questionnaire dealing with specific points coming under this sub-head the Committee of the Chamber may be able to assist with their opinions.

7. The Courts and the Judiciary.

The Committee of the Chamber feel that they cannot assist with any opinion on this subject.

8. The Constitutional Problem.

The Committee of the Chamber, realising that the subjects indicated under this head are of the first importance to Commerce and Industry in India consider that they could be more appropriately dealt with by the Associated Chambers of Commerce as a whole, than by individual Chambers.

9. The relationship between the Central Government, the Secretary of State and the British Parliament.

The Committee prefer to leave this question also to the Associated Chambers of Commerce.

10. The position of the Services.

The Committee of the Chamber feel that they cannot, in treating this subject do better than refer the Statutory Commission to the opinions expressed by the Chamber in a letter dated the 12th December, 1923, to the Royal Commission on the Superior Civil Services (the Lee Commission). A copy of this letter is accordingly attached as Annexure C to this Memorandum. The opinion of the Chamber in regard to the Services has in no way altered since 1923.

To the opinions then expressed the Committee of the Chamber desire to add the specific recommendation that all Essential Services should be under the control of the Central Government and that the salaries of officers in these Services should be non-votable.

11. The Growth of Education.

The Committee of the Chamber appreciate that this subject is among the most important of those into which the Statutory Commission is to enquire. It is noted that a special announcement as to this branch of the enquiry is to be made and that a special Committee has been appointed to deal with it. If this special Committee should see fit to require the detailed views of the Chamber on any specific points connected with education in these Provinces these details will, as far as possible, be gladly dealt with.

Meantime the Committee of the Chamber desire to offer the following general observations :—

It is incontestible that among civilised nations India is probably the most backward in its general education. The reasons for this are several and complex, but it may be stated as a widely demonstrated fact that in India, speaking generally, there is no desire for primary education. The difficulties in imparting primary education are greatly increased by the fact that, owing to the almost complete illiteracy of women there are no female teachers available to fill the function which has been found so essential in other countries of imparting elementary instruction in the home or in primary schools. When the mother of a family is herself entirely illiterate and when anything in the direction of the general spread of education is actually discouraged among the women of the poorer classes, which comprise the vast majority of India's population, the problem becomes difficult almost to the point of hopelessness.

In regard to the growth of education in India and particularly in these Provinces the Committee of the Chamber are privileged to quote from a note prepared by an Indian member of their body. The full note is also attached as Annexure D to this Memorandum. Particular attention is invited to the remarks in this note on primary education, in regard to which the specific conclusion arrived at is that "it is clear that primary education as at present carried on is worse than useless and no real progress can be made until considerably larger amounts of funds are available."

The general conclusions are as follows :—

"Taking an unbiassed view of the whole situation, one is forced to the conclusion that, so far as University and Secondary education go, there is no great need for expansion at the present moment, but the question of Primary Education deserves the serious consideration of all well-wishers of the country. The appalling illiteracy of the masses is retarding progress in every direction and is bound up with many of the economic issues which call for solution. But without funds it is impossible to do much more than what is being already done. The question therefore is purely one of rupees, annas and pies.

It has been urged in some quarters that Government has adopted a very parsimonious policy in respect of education. This charge is not borne out by facts. By far the major portion of the expenditure on education is being found by the Provincial exchequer. There seems no reason why local bodies should not raise, by additional taxation, funds to be spent on the expansion of primary education. The question of introducing compulsory education by a local option was first mooted by the late Mr. G. K. Gokhale in the year 1911. Mr. Gokhale's dream has materialised in so far that eight provincial legislatures have placed on their statute books Primary Education Acts. It does not redound to the credit of local bodies that they have not taken full advantage of the facility offered by these Acts. It is clear that Government cannot do much more. It is now for the people themselves to find the wherewithal for bringing about educational expansion which has been the subject of so much discussion in the past. The stage has now been reached where "deeds" and not "words" are wanted. One cannot help sounding a note of warning against the tendency to cheapen education regardless of efficiency. It seems to be a common idea that education consists merely of cramming certain books and of passing certain examinations. Little regard is paid to the question of development of character and physical training. A young man with the finest degrees in the world, who has paid no attention to the building of his character and to keeping himself physically fit, will be of very little use in fighting life's battles. It is important that special attention should be given to these two matters, otherwise the products of our schools and colleges will not prove to be useful citizens. We have amongst us thousands of young men whose education began in words and ended in words and when they settle down in life they find that they have nothing to fall back upon. The whole trouble is that they have been educated away from life and they do not understand what is educating for life. They have been taught the contents of a certain number of books, but they have not been taught how to better their own living conditions. They do not even know how to earn their own living, except perhaps by teaching to others the words which have been taught to them, or by swelling the ranks of those without whose assistance the great occupation of litigation would be impossible. We do not understand, in this country, that the first and foremost duty of every man in this world is that he should be able to earn his own living. True education must turn a man's mind towards work and not away from it, and should enable better living being earned not only for himself but also for those about him. Our education unfortunately only increases our dependence on others. There can be no greater condemnation of our present system of education, but the fault lies with ourselves and no system of Government, however benevolent, can help those who cannot help themselves."

ANNEXURE A.

COPY OF A LETTER DATED 13TH AUGUST, 1924, FROM THE UPPER INDIA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, CAWNPORE, TO THE SECRETARY, REFORMS ENQUIRY COMMITTEE, SIMLA.

The Committee of the Upper India Chamber of Commerce understand from the Associated Chambers of Commerce that the Reforms Enquiry Committee are prepared to receive evidence, in the form of memoranda, from individual Chambers, members of the Associated Chambers of Commerce.

The Committee of this Chamber accordingly desire to be permitted to offer the following observations on the questions which are the subject of investigation by the Reforms Enquiry Committee.

My Committee do not propose to go into details but to express their views in general terms.

In November, 1918, the then Committee of the Chamber criticised the proposals contained in the Montagu-Chelmsford Report on Indian Constitutional Reforms.

In doing so they emphasised certain points whereon the recommendations contained in the Report failed to meet the ideals which the Chamber had set as to the reformed system of Government. These ideals were not subsequently reached by the Government of India Act, 1919, and it must therefore be plainly stated that the present system of Government is not regarded as satisfactory by the Members of this Chamber. But however this may be the scheme of Government, as drawn up by the Government of India Act, 1919, undoubtedly showed promise of success, if fairly worked, and was accordingly accepted with all loyalty. Any doubts as to its working were met by the fact that in fixing a period of ten years for the trial of the scheme, with a promise of revision in 1929, Parliament had ensured that the experiment would be given a fair trial and would not be hastily judged at too early a stage in its course.

These anticipations have unfortunately not been fulfilled. The scheme has met with determined opposition from the day it came into operation and it has certainly not been given a chance to prove itself.

In these circumstances it is entirely premature at this stage to form an opinion as to its success or failure.

My Committee are of opinion that improvements can be effected, within the terms of the Act, by adjustments in the system of working but they are emphatically and entirely opposed to the introduction, at this immature stage of the experiment, of any change in the terms of the Act or of any alterations in the rules, save those which would assist in the smooth working of the Act.

It is not necessary for my Committee to touch on the present unrepresentative electorate. The facts concerning this are notorious and it is not possible to effect any real improvement until the universal spread of education makes India ripe for an electoral system which has been forced upon her at a time when she is unprepared for it.

But it is necessary strongly to emphasise the need for maintaining the communal system of the representation of minorities which the unassailable logic of India's present circumstances has rendered indispensable.

In this connection the claim for the representation of European commerce on the Legislative Assembly must again be given prominence and in urging adequate representation for this important interest my Committee desire to make it clear that there must be no diminution in the already inadequate representation of the European Community.

As far as may be consistent with the recommendation herein made that there should be no change in the terms of the Government of India Act, my Committee again advance certain recommendations which they put forward in November 1918, and the need for which is, in their estimation, even more pressing now than it then was. They then wrote :—

"Financial devolution of Provinces."

"The conclusions arrived at in the (Montagu-Chelmsford) Report as to the necessity for the financial autonomy of the Provincial Government, the complete separation of revenues and the abolition of divided heads have the support of the Committee but the methods suggested for meeting the deficit in the Imperial Budget in paragraph 206 of the Report are felt to be most inequitable and the Committee are of opinion that some better method of arriving at a settlement must be devised whereby any one province will not be unduly favoured at the expense of others. A per capita basis seems the fairest solution.

"Provincial Legislatures."

"The Committee of the Chamber are of opinion that the Report has entirely ignored the strong and irresistible claims of the European Community to representation on the Provincial and Imperial legislatures in their own right, in the right of their material interests in the country, which are admitted to be out of all proportion to their numerical strength, and in the right of the part they have played and must continue to play in the maintenance of peace and prosperity in India.

The Community, as such, cannot be adequately represented merely by the medium of specialised bodies such as Chambers of Commerce. These bodies merit and must claim separate representation but not at the expense of the Europeans at large. Indeed, with the introduction of enlarged Councils the claim of Chambers of Commerce to proportional increased representation is essential, not only in the Provincial Council but in the Imperial Legislative Assembly.

The suggestion that the European Community should be represented by nomination—itself a temporary expedient which it is avowedly intended to abolish—cannot find acceptance for a moment. Communal representation, in spite of all that the authors of the Report say against it, is absolutely necessary and my Committee strongly recommend that this fact should be recognised and arrangements made for the adequate representation on the Provincial and Imperial Councils of Europeans, Anglo-Indians, Parsees, Indian Christians and other minority communities."

In amplification of these remarks it may be said that the European Chambers of Commerce, while representative of European Commercial opinion, do not represent European communal opinion. These Chambers include Indians in their body and in many of them a certain proportion of Indians is on the Committee of the Chambers. The need for the separate representation on the Legislative Assembly of European communal interests and of European commercial interests is therefore clearly established. This need has been recognised, though inadequately, in the case of the Provincial Councils and the case for the extension of this principle to the Assembly is, in the opinion of my Committee, irresistible.

ANNEXURE B.

NOTE ON THE WORKING OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS IN THE UNITED PROVINCES.

Industries Department.

It is well known that this Department has failed so far to justify its existence. Broadly speaking the Department has failed effectively to assist the development of any industries. So far as major industries go, they are independent of the Department, but one might have expected that there would have been some expansion or development of the cottage industries of the Province as a result of the efforts of the Department. These hopes have been entirely falsified. A reference to page 75 of the Administration Reports of the United Provinces for 1926–27 will show that the activities of the Department have shown no tangible results, except perhaps in respect of industrial education. The recommendations of the Holland Commission, which were the results of very exhaustive enquiry and thorough deliberation by men of such eminence as Sir Alfred Chatterton, Sir Dorab Tata, Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy, Sir Rajendra Nath Mukerji, and Sir Horace Curzon Plunkett, have under the Reforms been consigned to the waste paper basket. The Reformed Government has continued to blunder through in its own peculiar way. The Legislatures do not understand the fundamental principles governing the development of industries. The position of the Director of Industries under the Reforms has been a very difficult one. His staff consists mainly of men who are not at all qualified to be entrusted with the task of developing industries. If, however, the Director got together material from various outside sources and drew up a practical scheme, his recommendations have, in the majority of cases, been turned down by the Government. The Board of Industries has wasted its time on matters of no consequence.

Co-operative Societies.

The Co-operative movement in the Province has not made much headway under the Reforms. There has been very little progress and the efforts of the Department are reported to have been concentrated rather on the elimination of bad societies and the stabilization of good ones than on any increase in the spread of the movement. Liquidation proceedings have increased and several prosecutions have had to be undertaken for embezzlement. The Agricultural Credit Societies have failed to inspire confidence in those for whose benefit they exist, and the village bania still rules supreme. Non-Agricultural or industrial societies intended for the benefit of cottage industrialists have had a very disappointing past. There are only a very small number of such societies in the Province and even these are not faring well. The Departments of Industries and Co-operative Credit should, under a common Minister, have joined forces to bring about a real development of cottage industries but next to nothing has been done.

Agricultural Department.

So far as teaching and research go, the Department seems to have done well, but there is a common complaint against the Department that a good deal of its work is incapable of being turned to practical account. It is common knowledge that many of the Department's demonstration farms are not paying. The Department is now empowered to grant loans for a variety of purposes connected with agricultural improvement, including the construction of permanent wells and the purchase of cattle and power machinery. During the year 1926–27, a sum of over 3 lakhs was granted as Taqavi on the recommendation of departmental officers; and a further sum of Rs. 3·2 lakhs was advanced for the purchase of seed and implements. This sum is disproportionately small, considering the extent of the Agricultural interests involved. In a recent article, the well-known Bombay Agriculturist, Dr. Mann showed that the economic prosperity and health of the masses depend very largely on the cattle. The activities of the U.P. Department of Agriculture in regard to cattle breeding have so far been a negligible item. The Department maintains two cattle farms, one at Madhurikund and the other at Manjhra. During the year 1926–27 the Madhurikund Farm maintained 517 head of cattle and issued 196 bulls, the corresponding figures for the Manjhra Farm being 383 and 66 respectively. The Report of the Royal Agricultural Commission is awaited with great interest but there seems no doubt that, unless and until there is a marked improvement in the stock of the cattle, agricultural progress will not be satisfactory. Credit for whatever has been achieved by the Department is due entirely to its Director, Mr. G. Clarke. One may safely say that he has not received much constructive assistance either from the legislature or from the Minister in charge.

ANNEXURE C.

COPY OF A LETTER DATED 12TH DECEMBER, 1923, FROM THE UPPER INDIA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, CAWNPORE, TO THE CHAIRMAN, ROYAL COMMISSION ON THE SUPERIOR CIVIL SERVICES, CAMP, INDIA.

In response to the request communicated through the Chief Secretary to Government, United Provinces, in his No. 6478 of the 24th October, 1923, the Committee of the Upper India Chamber of Commerce desire to record their views on the questionnaire dealing with the organization of the services, issued by the Royal Commission on the Superior Civil Services.

The Committee of the Chamber do not propose to reply to the questionnaire on Service conditions, this being appropriate only to members of the Services concerned.

1. It is considered that comparatively little readjustment is necessary in the position of the all India Services. Save, possibly, for isolated individual appointments the duties and functions of all of these Services should be preserved on the All-India basis as at present.

2. The Committee of the Chamber state unhesitatingly that the maintenance of the European personnel in the All-India Services is, and always will be essential, to the extent of at least 50 per cent. in each of these services.

In the "Security" Services particularly, i.e., the Indian Civil Service and the Indian Police Service, this proportion of European Officers should never be lowered, having regard to the responsibilities of the Crown for the good Government of India.

As competent Indians are found available in substitution for Europeans, the speed of progressive replacement should certainly not exceed, in the average, that set out in the Montagu-Chelmsford Report. The Committee of the Chamber view with some misgiving the fact that in the last two or three years the rate of replacement has been very considerably exceeded.

The view point of the Chamber in this matter is clear and distinct. Practically the whole of the vast industrial and commercial enterprises of India have become possible in the past solely by reason of the confidence of investors in a stable and unshaken Government. The Government which inspired this confidence was based on British ideals and methods, and has been administered by successive generations of men imbued with these ideals, who have spent themselves unselfishly and unremittingly in the task, and have built up a high tradition for the Services.

That the standard of administration of the past shall be preserved is of first importance and this can only be achieved if it is made possible for a sufficient number of the men who established and upheld these principles, and maintained these aims and ideals, to continue to serve the country.

3. The Committee of the Chamber consider that all members of the All-India Services should be appointed and controlled by the Secretary of State for India in Council, the present conditions and safeguards being altered, if necessary, so as to ensure that the right material is attracted.

Agreeing as they do with the principle that there must be an increase in the association of Indians in every branch of the Service, the Committee of the Chamber hold that it should be quite possible to obtain European recruits of the right stamp in the diminished numbers now necessary. To do this, the conditions of Service in this country must be made sufficiently attractive. The first step towards this is to give the classes from which these desirable recruits have hitherto been drawn sufficient confidence in the intention and the ability of Government to secure the future of their servants. It is believed that this confidence will not be felt unless the Secretary of State in Council is a party to the agreement under which they are engaged.

There is, unfortunately, every reason to believe that this lack of confidence in the future is one of the main causes of the present dearth of European recruits of the right class. Other causes have been assigned to financial considerations such as pay, pensions and allowances, insufficient to meet high living costs, and to the changed environment due to the political situation and the atmosphere of hostility in which the Civil Officer of to-day has to live and move. But, important as these causes are, they are believed to be less harmful in their results on recruiting than the lack of confidence in the secure tenure of office under the Government of India.

4. All recruits for the Indian Civil Service and the Indian Police Service, and the majority of recruits in the Indian Medical Service and the Imperial Branch of the Civil Veterinary Department should be recruited on a whole-time basis. Certain specialists in tropical medicine might, however, be engaged on short-term contracts. The other All-India services, might, to some extent at least, be recruited from professional men willing to serve on short-term contracts.

One practical objection to this method of recruitment in a service such as the Indian Forest Service would, however, be the difficulty of obtaining, on short-term contracts, men acquainted with the languages of the country.

While it is preferable that short-term officers in the All-India Services should also be appointed and controlled by the Secretary of State in Council, the Committee of the Chamber cannot resist the argument that there is less possibility of objection in their case than in others to the appointment and control passing to the Government of India or provincial Governments.

5. It has already been said in dealing with question 3 that it is considered desirable that all members of the All-India Services should be appointed and controlled by the Secretary of State in Council.

That this system should continue in the case of Indians as well as of Europeans is an opinion which follows on the belief that, save in the matter of a necessary allowance to Europeans for service overseas, all officers of any one service should be treated alike. The possibility of exception in the case of short-term specialists is admitted but in this too it is urged that Europeans and Indians should be treated alike.

6. This same argument is held to be applicable in the matter of the rates of pay. The Committee of the Chamber do not consider it within their function to enter into details of the pay of the various services but they hold that every effort should be made to adopt an adequate scale of pay in each service and that this scale should apply uniformly to all officers, Europeans and Indians alike, in that service.

But the European Officer must of necessity receive that special consideration to which his service under overseas' conditions entitles him. This can only be secured by an adequate overseas' allowance. The present overseas' allowances, which, it is understood, amounts in the senior grades to Rs. 250/- per month, is utterly inadequate. Actually it is no more than sufficient to educate one boy in England and its enhancement is of immediate and pressing importance. Full consideration should be given to the fact that the European officer of even moderate seniority is faced with the responsibility of keeping up two, or often three, establishments. He has to maintain himself at his station, his children at home, where they are being educated, and for several months in the year his wife at home or in the hills. There is no question of inclination or option in this. If his family are to continue in health, he himself be freed from anxiety in their regard, and his children suitably educated he must undertake this expense and the present overseas' allowance is ridiculously insufficient to meet it.

An adequate overseas' allowance would certainly go far to induce the proper and desirable type of European recruit to come forward for service in India and would be far less costly than any universal increase in pay.

7. The Committee of the Chamber do not propose to go into the question of the organization of the Superior Provincial Services, since they do not see any necessity for differentiation, other than by means of an overseas' allowance, between Europeans and Indians in the Superior All-India Services. They do not in any way favour the provincialisation of any of these Services, nor can they in the time at their disposal, go into the question of relegating certain specialised appointments in the present All-India Services to the Provincial Services. They are prepared to admit that there may be some appointments the status of which can be reduced without reducing the attractiveness of the All-India Services to recruits. But they deprecate anything which can be construed as a desire to pluck the plums of these All-India Services and pass them on to the Provincial Services.

LUCKNOW.

Dated 7th December, 1928.

AFTERNOON.

PRESENT :

ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION, OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE (EXCEPT Mr. KIKABHAI PREMCHAND), AND OF THE UNITED PROVINCES PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE.

Deputation from the UPPER INDIA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, Cawnpore.*

The Deputation consisted of :—

1. Mr. A. L. Carnegie, President, Upper India Chamber of Commerce.
2. Mr. T. S. Gavin Jones, M.L.A.
3. Mr. E. M. Souter, M.L.C.
4. Mr. J. G. Ryan, M.B.E., V.D., Secretary, Upper India Chamber of Commerce.

* * * * * * * * * *

1. Lord Strathcona : We have got as far as page 369 in the memorandum. We have got there sub-head (b), "The working of diarchy." Therein you say, "The unanimous feeling of the Committee of the Chamber is that the diarchical system has failed and that it should forthwith be abolished." Then you go on to say, "So far from providing a system of responsible self-government diarchy has produced complete irresponsibility." Is not that rather a strong statement to make, Mr. Carnegie? Would you care to qualify that statement in any way or elucidate it or elaborate it? You say diarchy has produced complete irresponsibility?—(Mr. Carnegie.) I admit that "complete" is rather a sweeping statement.

2. You are of the opinion that it does not give the ministers in charge of the transferred departments a really good chance?—I will ask Mr. Gavin Jones to reply to that question. He has a personal knowledge of the working of the legislature. (Mr. Gavin Jones.) We would like to qualify that in a way by saying that we do not think that the Montford scheme has failed entirely due to diarchy but because the responsible side of the Government was not given any responsibility at all. In our new proposals we have stated that they would be responsible for everything except Law and Order. They control finance and they would not as they do now depend on the official bloc. They will have to maintain their own party in the House and the position then even under diarchy would be very different.

* * * * * * * * * *

11. Then the next question I ask you is this. We pass on to a very detailed and clearly set out paragraph on Law and Order on page 370. And on page 371 towards the end of that paragraph you say: "In the circumstances the Committee consider that the only solution of the problem lies in the recommendation that 'Law and Order' should remain a provincial subject, but that the portfolio for this department should be with the Governor, who, in administering it, shall himself function as a minister." Then you go on to say: "The Governor shall be represented in the legislature by a senior official, acting as a parliamentary secretary" to answer for the Governor in the legislature. Do you not think that it will be a very great strain on the Governor who has got in addition other departments to administer?—(Mr. Gavin Jones.) It would be a strain, certainly, but not a very great strain. We do not think it is impracticable and we see no other way out of it, because we have definitely said that the police should not be centralised. We certainly do not favour transferring it to a minister responsible only to the autonomous legislature.

12. I take it your view is that though it is a provincial subject, you think the best thing would be that it should be administered by the Governor with a parliamentary secretary acting as his spokesman in the legislature?—Yes. The position will be very much the same as it is now. The Inspector General will be in the House to answer all questions as also the secretary. Perhaps the secretary will be there to answer all the questions and for all practical purposes he would be an ostensible minister, but the responsibility would be with the Governor, and really, as a matter of fact under the present circumstances, the Governor, being the head of the executive, is responsible in practice, and it works out very much to the same thing.

13. Chairman : May I just ask this question?—I am not sure I have appreciated this document in one respect. You say at the bottom of page 368 and at the top of page 369 in effect, that you feel the importance of securing that the executive of a province should be strong. That is right; is it not?—Yes.

14. I think that fairly expresses your general view. You think this is a country in which the executive should be strong?—(Mr. Ryan.) We felt that, Sir, but we could not put the implication more clearly than was offered in this note from which we quote.

15. Then you say at the bottom of page 369, sub-head (g), "The executive has, since the introduction of the reforms, been weakened," which I imagine means that you think that the influence of the legislature on executive administration has tended to make the executive government less firm? Is that your view? —(Mr. Gavin Jones.) Our view is that the Government has been weakened owing to the fact that the executive has been heckled in the legislature and it is continually being heckled and being made responsible to answer questions in the House. That is our opinion, and we believe that is the main reason why the executive has been weakened.

* The deputation was also examined during the morning of 7th December, 1928, but the report of this meeting has not been printed.

16. Because of heckling and pressure?—Yes. The executive are always in the House and their mind is always on the legislature. They are not expert politicians and they are worried by any individual and that has a great tendency to weaken the executive.

17. So far I follow your view. Now then I want to see if I follow quite clearly the line of remedy which you suggest. You say on page 368 and again on page 369 that the view of your Chamber is that there ought to be in effect in the provinces what is called provincial autonomy. I have not forgotten your special provision about Law and Order, but that is your general view?—Yes.

18. Do I understand that would mean this, leaving aside Law and Order the heads of all other departments dealing with provincial subjects would be ministers?—That is so.

19. Well then, the ministers would be members, would not they, of the council?—They would be supported by their party.

20. They would be members?—That is so.

21. What is not quite clear to me at the moment is how the new scheme that you sketch out in your view will produce the strong executive which you desire, since you think the present executive is weakened by the fact of constant questions in the council. Will the ministers be questioned just as before?—They will be; but they should be, if parliamentary government is carried out in a proper way, as it is not now, supported by a strong party in the House to be able to stand up against criticism.

22. When you say executive, you mean permanent officials?—Yes.

23. What is in my mind is this. In the English parliamentary system, while we have not got permanent officials in the House of Commons, we have got of course the political head of the department who is bound both by constitution and practice and as a matter of honour and good faith to stand the whole racket of parliamentary criticism for his officials?—That is exactly what we want, because then the expert politician in the House should defend his executive, whereas in the present case the executive are up there to defend themselves. I am talking about the permanent official.

24. I quite understand that when you use the word "executive" you mean permanent official?—Yes.

25. It really comes to this; you think that permanent officials ought not to be part of the provincial council and you think that if they were excluded and the council contained the ministers who are the chiefs of the departments that will tend to strengthen the executive?—That is the view, provided parliamentary government is going to be stable. We feel that it should be given a trial.

26. Then the other point is this. You think that if you were to build up the council by indirect election through electoral colleges, you would produce a membership that is more likely to act in the direction which promotes stable government?—We hope so, Sir.

27. Of course, there is another reason which may be urged for this method of indirect election and indeed I think it has already been mentioned. It is the reason that is suggested both on account of the vast size of the country and therefore the mechanical difficulty of getting direct election effectively carried through and the fact that at any rate at present such a very large proportion of the population is comparatively ill-informed of political affairs?—That is so.

28. That has got nothing to do with directly strengthening the executive, but it might be urged, I suppose, as a reason for using indirect election. As you say, it is easy to imagine that in a group of villages you would constitute the primary unit of panchayats and that the panchayats would then themselves be constituents to elect district boards and so forth?—(Mr. Ryan.) It would undoubtedly spread to those who would be in the lowest rank of electors a far better feeling than now prevails as to the use of their vote; the fact that they have a mandate in the House and that they could use it. At present with an electorate for this council of 3·5 per cent. it can hardly be said to be representative, whereas if it were built up from the lower grades—and remember, Sir, we have always insisted that in that lowest grade there shall be quite a fair percentage of literacy—the feeling would come home quicker to that lowest grade of elector that he is represented in the House by a person for whose election he has, however indirectly, been responsible, and whom he may on a future occasion hold responsible for failure.

29. There is only one other thing. Going back to that really very interesting quotation of yours at the bottom of page 368 and the top of page 369, it is a quotation which contrasts the method which can be followed in a country where there are strong parties like England with the methods which have been followed in some other places. The second method you call, or rather this quotation calls, the "presidential system." I suppose one characteristic of the presidential system is this, is it not, that though the minister is chosen because it is believed he has the support of a body of elected members, still when he is chosen and appointed, he is not liable by some snatch vote or some censure to be unseated from his position as minister? That seems to be what one means by "presidential system"?—Yes, security of tenure of office.

30. Of some sort or kind?—Yes.

31. I do not know if you gentlemen will point out whether the Indian conditions may make it necessary to secure a stronger executive, while at the same time you have a representative legislative body. I do not know whether you gentlemen at all contemplate that ministers should have any sort of security of tenure beyond what they have now?—We discussed that point and we found it very difficult because we saw certain evils in guaranteeing them an assured security of tenure of office.

32. Yes, there are difficulties; but if you are really trying to apply the British parliamentary system expressed in this epigram that it is the Cabinet that controls Parliament and not Parliament that controls the Cabinet, you should consider this question as to whether ministers will have more security of tenure. I think one way of applying the phrase in England will be this. It is quite true that a man appointed as a Cabinet Minister in England theoretically is liable to find himself turned out by a House of Commons' vote. No one imagines that the man would remain a Cabinet Minister if the House of Commons passes a vote of censure on him. But in fact it does not happen. It does not happen because our system at home, you know, is one which gives the man who is appointed a Minister a pretty sure prospect that he is now going to have the opportunity of running his department during the life-time of the legislature. It seems to me to be important. I want to know whether you have considered this. In order to secure a strong executive, do you think you ought to consider whether it might be secured by some method which gave the ministers some better security of tenure than they would otherwise have?—I am afraid we have to avoid the responsibility for expressing a definite opinion on that, and the best we can say now is, there is the quotation put before you with the recommendations, "look at this and do your best."

33. You commend the remarks?—Yes.

33A. Lord Burnham: Is there not another aspect of the presidential principle which you may imply?

The presidential principle is as a rule carried through plebiscite rather than parliamentary sanction?—Quite so.

34. You are thinking of the plebiscite principle?—I do not think we are wanting to welcome that at all.

35. The election to the United States is virtually by a plebiscite?—It is a very difficult thing in a country like this.

36. What you were thinking was the plebiscite as opposed to parliamentary selection, is it so?—We have not considered that. We left that to you. (Mr. Gavin Jones.) We do not see how it could be applied to India.

37. I want to ask you one or two questions in regard to the indirect system of election through electoral colleges which I know you support. The first stage is the panchayat, is it not?—That is right.

38. The difficulty that suggests itself in that regard is this. We have it in evidence and by documentary statements that in several provinces of India, notably in Bombay, the panchayat system hardly exists at present?—It is no reason why we should be discouraged because we hold a definite opinion. We feel that the machinery does exist in certain provinces. We are not acquainted with the conditions in Bombay, although we have been informed that in Bombay, by reason of the existence of the ryotwari system, the ground is really more favourable for the panchayat system than it is up here.

39. Lord Burnham : I was trying to suggest to you that there might be some substitute as a first step. In France, for example, the mayors of the communes who correspond to the village community here go to the electoral colleges. Therefore, it might be possible even where there was no panchayat for the headman of the village community to go to an electoral college. Is that a possibility?—A possibility, certainly, where it does not exist, but it must always be remembered that such a thing in this country is complicated by the communal question. Where there is a panchayat the communal question might be met. I do not see it quite being met by the patels or village headmen functioning as first grade electors.

40. Then it will involve—I dare say it is possible—the universal adoption of the panchayat in the different provinces for this purpose?—We would definitely like to see it.

41. Yes, I was trying to get it out?—Yes, quite so.

42. Do you hold that by means of this interlocking system there would be really greater responsibility on the part of the elected members, by indirect election, than there is on the part of elected members under the direct system?—Any change would be for the better, Sir, because we cannot see that there is any responsibility on the part of an elected member to his so-called electorate to-day.

43. You think so from personal experience?—From what we have been informed and what we have seen.

44. Then, may I ask, in view of the stress laid on this in the Montford report, whether you think it possible that the individual elector might feel a greater sense of participation in this way than he does now when he is dealing with the vast unknown?—We feel it would be hopeful, Sir. It would be hopeful in that direction.

45. And that it might help local self-government to a greater extent in some cases?—That is possible.

46. It has been suggested that this system would be open to manipulation and corruption in regard to the men who would be the electors in the last stage?—That is always a probability in this country.

47. Do you think the opportunities for corruption would be greater then than they are now?—I would not care to express any opinion on that.

48. In your opinion, in the opinion of your Association, it would be better than the present system?—Yes, Sir.

49. You think you will get, by this means, men who would be more truly representative?—We can always be hopeful, Sir.

50. There is only one other subject on which I want to ask one or two questions. In regard to the Second Chamber you propose, I understand, one-third of the size of the First Chamber. What I wanted to ask you was whether you do not think there is a danger, to judge from analogy, of too much trust being put in the resisting or the moderating power of the Second Chamber and therefore diminishing responsibility in the First Chamber, and possibly in the Governor himself?—That is a contingency we have not thought of, but even with that we feel that it is worth trying.

51. Do you think there are enough men of the right sort to constitute the legislative councils and Second Chambers in the province?—Yes, there are, definitely.

52. Mr. Hartshorn : I would like to ask a few questions on this subject which Lord Burnham was dealing with. It seems to me that this proposal which strikes at the existing franchise and the existing constituencies in rural areas is a bit of a revolutionary proposal, a complete change?—It occurs to us as being a sensible dismantling of an unsatisfactory structure.

53. Put it that way if you like. You are just proposing to dismantle the whole edifice that has been erected in rural areas up to now?—If I may say so, a thoroughly bad edifice should be dismantled.

54. I would like to see if I clearly undorstand what your ideas are. I understand that what you suggest is that panchayats should be set up in the villages?—Where they do not already exist.

55. I think the panchayats set up so far are some of them confined to one village and some of them embrace a number of villages?—Groups.

56. I think the Panchayat Act was passed in 1920?—That is right.

57. And the task of setting them up started in 1921?—That is right.

58. We are informed that the number of panchayats in existence at present in this province is about 4,600?—The number of panchayats between 1922 and 1925 increased very satisfactorily and then declined after 1925. There were over 3,000 in 1922, over 5,000 in 1925, and I believe last year there were just over 4,500.

59. That is right. I put it at 4,600. And I think there are about 42 millions of population residing in the villages. Now, the Panchayat Act, if I understand aright, confers certain powers and functions upon the panchayats and confines their operations in certain areas?—That is right.

60. And the areas covered by these panchayats embrace a population of 8½ millions?—I am quite prepared to accept that, Sir. I have no figures.

61. As a practical proposition it has taken since 1921 to set up panchayats in one-fifth of this province. I think there are 42 millions in the villages and only a fifth have come under it up till now. If it has taken a matter of seven years to set them up in a fifth of the area how long is it going to take to cover this province at that rate?—I can draw no analogy between the two, Sir, because I do feel, and the Chamber feels definitely, that the panchayat system has not been given a proper trial, that they have not been encouraged as they ought to have been. We quite understand that the establishment of a panchayat depends first on a request of a village or group of villages. We also understand that the expression of that request very largely depends upon the landholder, or the suppression of it. We further understand that the success of it largely depends upon the sympathetic attitude of the district officer, and we submit that that has not always been forthcoming, or else, why has the progress been so very slow? We are led to believe that in certain aspects panchayats have been accepted as successful by Government, but we definitely know, Sir, from advice received from our representatives in the council that the attitude of the Government, as such, to the development of the panchayat system has not been favourable. In one case, I understand, in 1923, a proposal for placing the panchayat system on an elective basis was rejected by Government. During this current year I understand certain resolutions for the development of the panchayats have been met distinctly in an antagonistic mood by Government.

62. Colonel Lane Fox: You are speaking of the United Provinces?—Yes. In fact our representative in the council told us definitely that it was discouraged by certain Government officials as being a beginning of socialism. That is not the attitude that we consider the panchayat system should have received. We are still hopeful in spite of that attitude. In fact, if we can get Government over that attitude we think the panchayat system will succeed.

63. Mr. Hartshorn: What you were saying just now conflicts with the statement made to us. We are assured in documents supplied to us by the Government that special attempts have been made to encourage the formation of panchayats, and the fact that within a year of the passing of the Act you had over 3,000 set up goes to indicate that they tried?—We do not deny their efforts at all, but the efforts have not been consistent or widespread.

64. All I am trying to get at is this. Whether it has been properly encouraged and pressed forward or not it has taken a matter of seven years to cover a fifth of this province. And I understand your suggestion would be that instead of the available 4,600 there should be 23,000 of these?—Something like that.

65. I think the panchayat consists of from five to seven members?—That is right.

66. Let us take it as six, and if you have 23,000 panchayats there would be 138,000 members. If I understand you aright, what you say is this. We have got these 42 millions of people in the villages. Let us try our hand for the election of these 138,000 members of the panchayats. And when that has been done all power of election or voting as far as the masses of the people are concerned comes to an end, and then these 138,000 panchayat members constitute the electorate for electing members to the district boards. Now, I think they have 48 district boards here?—Yes, there are 48 districts.

67. And I think the membership of these district boards would be somewhere in the neighbourhood of 1,500?—It is rather more than I thought.

68. I find in the Government documents that the number is given as 1,480, elected or nominated. So I have taken the figure as 1,500. Now, the sole purpose of setting up all these panchayats is to elect the 1,500 men?—No, Sir. The panchayats would continue.

69. I am not speaking about their other functions. I am talking from the standpoint of franchise. They are acting as an electorate. As soon as they have elected these 1,500 men their function as voters or electors comes to an end?—Quite.

70. And that brings us to this, that as far as the whole area of this province is concerned the elections to the legislative council or to the Central Legislature would be in the hands of these 1,500 men?—Yes.

71. That is the scheme that you give us? At any rate it seems to be a pretty big job to set up 23,000 panchayats—it will take a very long time to bring them into existence—merely for the purpose of finding 1,500 men to elect the members of the legislative council or of the Assembly. I should imagine that if we adopted this suggestion we should have to contemplate the possibility of doing nothing effective for very many years. If we are waiting for this machinery to be created there is nothing effective that can be done for very many years?—That is quite possible.

72. Then how do you say that this suggestion means an actual extension of the franchise?—Because it carries the franchise to all male adults of the rural population. Just now they have not got a vote except to the extent of something like 3½ per cent.

73. But does it not divorce them from the actual vote of the legislative council?—Could they pretend ever to understand that? But I am afraid I cannot accept your premise that it does.

74. In what way will this proposal, if adopted, lend itself to political education of the masses? It seems to me that they will be divorced to such an extent that they cannot actually come in contact with them?—We feel that it can be introduced more quickly than can education permeate to those same masses.

75. You say on page 364 of your memorandum: "It is regarded as an incontestible fact that at present, and for many years to come, communal representation must be resorted to in India, and it is believed that it would not be difficult to introduce a communal system, correctly based on the communal population, into the election of village panchayats . . ." I would like to know whether you think that to apply communal representation to the very foundations of the electoral system in India is the best way to build up a good system of self-government?—Recognising that communalism must persist we feel that that is the place to apply it.

76. But even those who are advocating communal representation treat it more or less as a necessary evil for the time being?—So do we.

77. But does it not appear that by introducing it into the village panchayats we will be making it a permanent part of the whole structure of the electoral system?—We see no alternative, sir.

78. On page 365 you refer to the formula enunciated by Sir William Vincent who, dealing with communalism, said: "What is wanted is a sliding scale in which the weighting given to Muhammadans increases as their numerical weakness does . . . Where the Muhammadans are in the census majority let them get representation in that proportion; where they are the weakest, let us double that proportion . . . Between these extremes let us multiply the census ratio of the Muhammadans by a factor greater than one and less than two." Have you considered how that would operate on the present representation of Muhammadans in this province?—Not to their harm as far as we can make out.

79. The Muhammadans are 14 per cent. in this province and under this formula they would get representation which would be greater than 14 but less than 28 per cent., but as a matter of fact they have at present, I think, 30 per cent.?—But how long are they going to have it?

80. So you realise that under this formula their number would be reduced?—Yes, but we feel that at present the understanding whereby they have their present number is very gravely imperilled.

81. On page 367 you say: "The various subsidiary qualifications at present laid down for municipal electorates in these provinces are considered sufficient and desirable, but it is felt that the occupancy qualification of a minimum annual value of Rs. 36, fixed by rule, is too low." Am I to understand by that that you want to reduce the number of electors in the municipalities from what their number is at present?—If that will have that effect, certainly.

82. Colonel Lane-Fox: Let me put you one or two questions. Do you think that it is really necessary to start the system of election in the panchayats?—Our anxiety is to give some chance to the classes, who are now entirely denied it, of electing representatives.

83. You think that by making the district boards elect representatives to the Legislative Assembly and to the provincial councils you would be getting better candidates?—Yes; we hope so.

84. I suppose there are a certain number of people in this country, as in England, who are not prepared to stand and face the election?—There is a very large number of self-respecting persons, particularly in the rural districts, who will not expose themselves to the ignominy, as I would call it, of an election.

85. Now about the arrears in the collection of taxes by municipalities. What is the position now?

What power is there for enforcing payment?—They may obtain a distress warrant but the trouble is that they won't.

86. What controlling power has the provincial Government over the municipalities? Is there any surcharge on members?—None whatever.

87. Have you any suggestions to make in this regard?—I think the Government should definitely tell the board that if it did not collect its arrears to a very high percentage, it would be denied all possible assistance in the shape of loans and grants, and if it persisted in that course it might even be superseded.

88. We have been told that the power of supersession has not been very often used?—It has not been used unfortunately in this province.

89. You think it is possible to use it for this purpose?—I do not know if it is possible for this purpose, but for general neglect of duties it must be used. I understand that one municipality has been called to explain why it should not be superseded; further than that I do not think the Government has taken any action.

90. Major Attlee: Regarding the system of basing your election on panchayats, a proposal was made to me before that we might try and base your election on the village panchayats, that is to say, the village panchayats should be the electors to the legislative council. But you have put in another step that these village panchayats should elect district boards which should elect members to the council. Do you not think that the connection between the electors and the indirectly elected persons will not be very great?—I am afraid we did not consider the possibility of omitting that second stage in our structure.

91. I was for three years an indirectly elected member for the Board of Guardians in England and I can assure you that I knew very little of the electors in that area; I myself did not know how I got in there. The second point is this: After all, you elect persons to the district board to do certain definite administrative work. But if you give them the dual function, to be both local administrators and members of an electoral college, the tendency will be, won't it, to try and get all those people who represent certain party interests, without any regard to their abilities?—I see that disadvantage, and others.

92. Would it not be better therefore to cut out the intermediate stage? You can have the college of electors representing villages who are kept in touch with the villagers and this electoral college can elect members for the district boards and for the legislative council?—I am attracted to it at first sight, but it bears a lot of thinking.

Chairman: You mean to say that those who form the electors for the village would be distinct from people who are chosen for local administrative functions?

93. Major Attlee: The suggestion put to me was this: The ordinary villager knows very little outside his village and that the representatives of the village possibly do not know very much outside the district. It might be better therefore if the villagers elect a certain number of persons, by show of hands, who would be regarded as worthy representatives of that village. These would be a panel of electors who would be available either generally or ad hoc both for local elections and for provincial elections?—That is more attractive than the other. That was the suggestion put forward, I think, in the Bombay Presidency. (Mr. Ryan.) It is so attractive at first sight, that I fear there is a snag in it.

94. Major Attlee: Might I put another question? You say that diarchy has been a failure but you suggest that the subject of Law and Order should be in the hands of the Governor who is to be represented in the legislative council by a secretary. Will not this amount to the continuance of diarchy?—(Mr. Gavin Jones.) We have got to admit that by retaining Law and Order with the Governor we are really continuing diarchy, but we see no other way out of it.

95. Do you not see that after all this jail work is not particularly attractive? You are giving the Ministers departments like education, irrigation, public health, agriculture and so on, but the unpleasant functions, apart from the extraction of land revenue, are concentrated on the person of the Governor. Is this not unfair?—We quite admit it, but we see no way out of it. Our point really is this, that we feel that it is impossible to handle Law and Order by a Minister who is going to be responsible to the legislature—a system which is yet untried. We think it would be a great step to take and we think it cannot be done unless and until we are assured that parliamentary government in the province is going to be a stable government.

96. I realise that. One gets a good deal of criticism on reserved departments. At present there is some buffer between the Governor who is after all the head of the province and those who make the objections. You are going to strike out that and concentrate the whole criticism on the Governor himself. Are you not weakening rather than strengthening his position?—We recognise that there are difficulties, but in actual practice it would not be the Governor personally who would be accused but it would be the department.

97. The Governor holds the portfolio?—It is quite true, but in actual fact, he holds it even now.

98. Anyhow, you admit it is diarchy?—It is diarchy. (Mr. Ryan.) It is inconsistent, we admit, but it is the nearest we can get at preserving safety. (Mr. Gavin Jones.) It is bridging the gulf.

Major Attlee: I should call it a rechristening of the old bridge.

Witness (Mr. Gavin Jones): You can call it so. The rechristening is not so much true of diarchy as that sufficient responsibility was not given to the ministers.

99. Chairman: You say that if you are right in your conclusion (about which I say nothing at present) that Law and Order could not be transferred to a minister in the present Constitution, you say, "Well, if we could devise a plan for improving the responsibility and creating a stronger executive at the hands of the ministers that would be the best way of developing the system and that Law and Order might be transferred later on"?—We must find out whether the Government is going to be strong enough.

100. But that seems to be your point?—We do not think it is safe to hand over Law and Order until we know whether the Government will be strong.

101. It is diarchy?—Yes, we have to admit that.

* * * * * * * * * *

111. On page 369 under paragraph (c) you say: "The Governor would, under the proposed reformed constitution call upon any person in the council, whom he considers to have the necessary support, to form a Ministry." Would you suggest that this ministry should be solely composed of one particular party in the council, or would you suggest that all communities should be represented in this ministry?—I think the intention certainly is that all groups, rather than parties, ought to be represented provided they can work together. We know that there are certain allied groups which would perhaps work together, whereas no one group could be strong enough to furnish a ministry with a majority from its own ranks.

112. Then you want to have a party government?—We feel that party government, however much to be wished for, is not possible now; we are far from that. (Mr. Gavin Jones.) If you are going to have collective responsibility and a Cabinet, you must have a party government.

113. In this way, if you had a ministry with the various members representing different communities, is there not a risk of the minister being turned out very frequently?—(Mr. Ryan.) Yes; but we do not intend that the ministry should be recruited from opposing parties, but from parties which in some way or another are allied. (Mr. Gavin Jones.) The Cabinet must have sufficient support in the House to remain there, and therefore it would have to be chosen from parties which would form one strong party to support the Cabinet.

114. My difficulty is this, Sir. You form a ministry, a Cabinet, and in the Cabinet it is considered desirable that various communities should be represented, then it at once establishes the danger of the Cabinet being turned out at any moment?—That is always there. (Mr. Souter.) Possible, Sir.

Chairman: Everybody agrees that with a ministry which is really composed by combining together the chiefs of a number of groups, something goes wrong if the groups go the other way.

Lord Burnham: Just as it happened before the Poincaré Ministry when the ministry used to change every six months.

115. Sir Arthur Froom: Have you considered that point?—(Mr. Gavin Jones.) I am afraid it is very difficult to get a two-party system in the council here, and we shall have to work on the group system, very similar to that in France, and the Premier who is chosen will have to be able to obtain sufficient groups to support him in power and will only choose his Cabinet from those groups.

116. Then your Chamber is definitely against a Cabinet being formed from one particular group which is the strongest in your council?—(Mr. Ryan.) Not if it is strong enough.

117. Then you will have one Cabinet from that group and possibly it might be able to carry on for three or four years?—(Mr. Gavin Jones.) Yes. You cannot have communal representation in the Cabinet. That is the point.

118. Chairman: Unless, I suppose, the groups that combine are groups which may be parties representing different communities?—That is so.

119. Then of course there will be a good deal of give and take in the Cabinet to carry on the minister's policy?—As in England if it is left to the Prime Minister to choose his Cabinet it will keep him in power.

120. At any rate, from the point of view of devising a constitutional structure, those things will really have to take care of themselves. You cannot say in the Act of Parliament, "Let there be two parties"?—Quite so, Sir.

121. Sir Arthur Froom: There is just one other thing which I would like to ask. You say under sub-head (k), "Finance of Provincial Government, and financial control," "The committee of the Chamber in dealing with this sub-head, feel that they cannot do more than recommend that complete control of provincial finances should be given to provincial Governments, subject to the Governor's veto." Now do you think it would be a wise step for any province to separate itself altogether from central control in the matter of finances? What I have at the back of my mind I may tell you at once. It is with regard to the loans and borrowings?—(Mr. Ryan.) The next paragraph deals with that, the Local Government Borrowing Rules.

122. You say that the Local Government Borrowing Rules should be maintained?—Yes.

123. So you have got to read both together? Although you recommend that complete control of provincial finances should be given to provincial Governments, at the same time it is not quite complete because there will be the Central Government to control the loans and borrowings? The two should be read together?—(Mr. Gavin Jones.) Yes.

* * * * * * * * * *

127. To continue this question of Law and Order, one witness that we had before us in another place contended that there must be a considerable amount of control from the Central Government over Law and Order in the provinces. Might I ask you whether your Chamber had that in mind? You agree that there must be a certain amount of central control over Law and Order? Had you that in mind?—We do not know what you mean by a certain amount; but we feel that you cannot possibly transfer Law and Order to the Central Government. It is quite important that the police who are continually in touch with the people should be in close touch with the provincial Governments, and they cannot possibly be controlled from Simla or Delhi.

128. To continue what I was saying, perhaps the Central Government did send round suggestions to provincial Governments in connection with Law and Order, but they were not really suggestions but more or less instructions?—In matters of policy, yes; they could not control in detail.

129. In cases where it may turn into a great disaster? You remember the Moplah rebellion? You remember Regulation III in Bengal?—(Mr. Ryan.) We refer to that. On page 370 we talk of discretionary powers to the Governor-General.

130. Then again, this paragraph has to be read with the paragraph on page 370 to get a true picture?—Yes.

131. Then of course it has been pointed out that to continue Law and Order as a reserved subject in the provinces it really means continuance of diarchy?—(Mr. Gavin Jones.) That is so.

132. To lessen this picture of diarchy, would you suggest that in your province the expenditure for Law and Order should be non-votable?—Certainly, we do that; but we prefer that it should go through the main budget and the Governor should have the power to certify.

133. It is in a way like the Army vote in the Central Government?—It will be in the same way.

134. Would you suggest then that it should be made non-votable so that it does not amount to diarchy?—(Mr. Carnegie.) I do not think so. It should be votable. But in the case of an extensive cut, the Governor should have the power to restore.

135. In the circumstances you suggest with regard to Law and Order you will never get your expenditure voted, or it will be very seldom that you will get it voted. That will be the first thing to be attacked?—(Mr. Ryan.) On page 371 we recommend powers of certification to the Governor.

136. But that is a thing we want to get rid of as far as possible?—(Mr. Gavin Jones.) It is possible to make it non-votable; but perhaps the legislature would certainly like to discuss Law and Order.

137. Chairman: I do not wish to press you, gentlemen, too far. Really we are very grateful to you for answering a number of very interesting questions to which one has to give careful thought. But, still, I should like to know this. On page 371 you say at the end of the second paragraph: "The Governor's powers of veto should extend to 'Law and Order' as to other matters, but his powers of certification, which it is recommended shall be severely circumscribed, should certainly apply to 'Law and Order.'" I do not know whether you would be able to tell me what sort of severe restrictions on his present powers of certification in respect of Law and Order you have in mind?—I think the intention there was that the powers should be circumscribed in regard to other matters. What we meant was that the Governor would not be able to certify with regard to other matters, but in the case of Law and Order he will have the power to certify. That is all the intention.

138. If that is your intention, what you have in mind would follow automatically. At present, the Governor has the power of certification which is much more extensive in the case of reserved subjects than in the case of transferred subjects?—Yes.

139. If you are going to transfer everything except Law and Order, it will follow that with regard only to Law and Order he will have the power of certification such as he now has over reserved subjects?—Yes. We wish to make that clear.

140. Sir Arthur Froom: There is only one other question which I wish to put. At the top of page 370 you refer to the Central Government and say that you do not recommend any change "unless it be in the direction of improving and increasing the power of the executive." Have you in mind the position of the Central Government which is practically in a permanent minority? Is that what you have in mind?—Yes. That is so.

141. Would you give the Central Government a permanent majority?—(Mr. Ryan.) That is really a point that we prefer to leave to the Associated Chambers.

142. Mr. Srivastava: Mr. Carnegie, what is the membership of your Chamber?—(Mr. Carnegie.) 76.

143. Does it consist of both Europeans and Indians?—Both.

144. What is their proportion?—I think there are about ten Indians. (Mr. Ryan.) We are speaking subject to correction.

145. Could you tell me what amount of capital is represented by the members of your Chamber?—(Mr. Carnegie.) No, we could not tell you off-hand; it is a very large sum. One member controls a capital of over three million pounds.

146. It represents a large amount of capital?—Yes; a very large amount of capital.

147. Could you tell me what amount of taxes they pay?—A very large amount; much too large an amount.

148. So that they have a real stake in the country?—That is so.

149. On page 369 of your memorandum you say that diarchy has failed. You have not given reasons there. Have your representatives on the council given you reasons? Are you aware of them?—(Mr. Souter.) Well, Sir, they had only powers of criticism and nothing else. That is the reason for the failure.

150. But in the transferred departments they are supposed to have responsibility and power?—I am referring to the reserved departments.

151. But diarchy refers to the transferred departments?—It was a general failure, not on any special side. (Mr. Gavin Jones.) I think it is because they have not had any control of the finances. They had to take what was allotted to them. (Mr. Carnegie.) They have not been made to feel any responsibility for any cut in finance on any particular head.

152. Is it because that the ministers are not really supported by any definite parties in the council?—(Mr. Gavin Jones.) Yes; that is so. They are dependent on the official bloc to keep them there.

153. You know, Mr. Souter—you have been in the Council—that various ministers have been appointed from time to time. Did they have the support of any large groups or parties?—(Mr. Souter.) No. Some of them have not had, and some have had.

154. When they want to support a particular measure, how do they get the votes of the legislature?—(Mr. Ryan.) By devious means. (Mr. Souter.) I do not understand the question.

155. The question is very simple. They are responsible to the legislature. They are supposed to carry the measures with the support of the legislature?—(Mr. Gavin Jones.) Each measure has to be taken as it comes along and they may change from one part of the measure to another part. They have got to get on as best they can.

156. There is no definite party behind the Cabinet?—There has been no definite party behind the Cabinet; that is it.

157. No effort has been made to develop one?—(Mr. Souter.) No.

158. Referring to the question of panchayats, is it not the Chamber's idea that by establishing these panchayats it will be the best means of educating the electors, I mean, political education?—(Mr. Ryan.) That is the hope and the belief.

159. And is it not your idea that it will be the best means of providing practical manhood suffrage?—Manhood suffrage; that is right, yes.

160. That is an alternative to the proposal which has been made in various quarters about the extending of the franchise?—Not direct franchise.

161. This is an indirect thing, but it is an alternative?—Yes.

162. Do you not think that the panchayats could be developed in a short time if the Panchayat Act is made compulsory?—They certainly would.

163. Just as the district boards had been established by a stroke of the pen?—Yes.

164. So that it will not really take a long time to establish them if it were desired to do so?—It ought not to.

* * * * * * * * * *

175. Chairman: Mr. Ryan, I see in this Memorandum of the Upper India Chamber of Commerce, on page 364, that you express the view: "It is regarded as an incontestable fact that at present and for many years to come, communal representation must be resorted to in India," Why?—If minority communities are to get representation.

176. Therefore, the answers which you have given just now on mere points of detail, which I think it was quite reasonable for Mr. Srivastava to ascertain, do not affect your view that the Muhammadan minority, as you think, must be conceded communal representation?—Not at all.

177. I see that on page 365 you say that your Chamber would be disposed to support the principle enunciated by Sir William Vincent, that there ought to be a weightage, an additional weight given to the Muhammadans as their numerical weakness becomes greater?—Yes.

178. So that you not only think that they should have communal representation, but where they are in a minority, they should be given more than the population proportion?—Certainly, Sir, because of the realisation of the importance of the Muhammadan community.

* * * * * * * * * * *

180. Khan Bahadur Hidayat Husain: Yours is predominantly a European Association?—Yes.

181. The president of the Chamber as well as the secretary have always been Europeans?—Yes.

182. Khan Bahadur Hidayat Husain: How long is it that you have had an Indian member on the executive committee of your Association?—(Mr. Ryan.) I can only speak from my own knowledge which now extends to about 16 years, and certainly in most of that period we have had an Indian member on the committee.

* * * * * * * * * *

184. You have come out with a somewhat detailed suggestion with regard to the control of the police. My point is this. Do you think police would be better controlled by an agency central in nature than by an agency of a provincial nature?—(Mr. Souter.) No. (Mr. Gavin Jones.) No.

185. Would it be your idea to have an official of the provincial Government in the legislative council without any responsibility to anybody there?—Yes.

186. That means that you will not allow even cuts on the police grant being discussed?—They can propose cuts, token cuts, but the Governor will have the deciding power. In other words police will remain exactly in the same position as it is now.

187. Now, you say that all other subjects besides police should be transferred, but I suppose you are aware that Law and Order are inter-dependent with revenue?—We say "Law and Order."

188. Yes, but Law and Order are inter-dependent with revenue?—Yes.

189. Would you like revenue also not to be transferred in the same way?—No, we should like it to be transferred. We do not want to reserve revenue.

190. My point is this, that Law and Order is intertwined at present with land revenue?—In a sense, it is entwined with everything.

* * * * * * * * * *

193. Khan Bahadur Hidayat Husain: Now with regard to the panchayat system of yours, you say that the panchayat should be made the unit for the election of the members of the district boards, while the election to the municipal boards should be left as it is, that is, direct and not indirect vote?—Yes.

194. Now, I do not think that any members of your committee who have compiled this memorandum are directly in touch with the realities of rural life, and therefore may I ask you if you know how these panchayats are at present constituted, that is to say, is it not a general complaint of these panchayats that they have not satisfied the villagers themselves where they exist?—That is quite likely.

195. It is true?—I will take your word for it. I cannot say from my own knowledge.

196. If you say that the panchayats should be elected by the general body of the villagers, then in that case do you not think that these panchayats are likely to be swamped by the nominees of either the zamindars, the patwaris or the moneylender?—That is a possibility.

197. In that case do you think that the panchayats would serve the purpose which you have in view?—We realise it is not ideal. We have suggested a system of summary election. We see that there are difficulties there. They are pulled both ways. We quite understand that a zamindar might resent the establishment of a panchayat in his holding, and we quite realise the influence that could be brought to bear; but with all those things in recognition, we feel that an attempt should be made in that direction.

198. What have you to say with regard to this objection, that in that case the members of the district boards would not be held answerable to the villagers, but they would be answerable only to the panchayat?—I cannot accept that. The panchayats, after all, are only speaking for those who elected them. Even if they have been defectively elected, yet they are merely a funnel to express the opinion of the lowest grade, that is, the people themselves.

199. I find from your memorandum that you think that separate electorates for the Muslims have to be preserved as they are at present. Well, do you think that Muslim villagers must elect Muslim panchas?—With villages largely Muslim, the larger number of panchas would be Muslim. If a village is entirely Muslim, all Muslims would be elected.

200. That, of course, is different. Take the stretch of land from Cawnpore right up to Allahabad; there are very few Muhammadans residing in those villages?—Yes.

201. My point is this, that in villages, for instance, where the proportion of Muslims is very small, say only 5 per cent., what do you think should be the proportion of Muslim representation in the panchayats there?—On the same basis generally, if it can be worked, as we have recommended for the other, on the weighting principle.

202. Then your point is this, that the district has to be divided for the purposes of election into several parcels, and the Muslim panches have got to elect Muslim members for the district boards. In that case, do you not think there would be very few Muslim panches to elect Muslim members of the district boards?—It is a point of detail which we have not worked out.

203. Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan: Why do you think that communal representation is necessary at the present time?—(Mr. Carnegie.) For the reason already already given by Mr. Ryan, that we do not think the Muslim community will be given adequate representation without communal representation.

204. If they are not given communal representation at the present time, what will be the result?—They will be very largely unrepresented, I should say.

205. And what would be the result of lack of representation?—(Mr. Gavin-Jones.) A 'narrow' oligarchy.

206. A narrow oligarchy will be established in India if separate electorates are not maintained; that is the view of the Chamber of Commerce?—(Mr. Carnegie.) Yes.

207. Do you think that commercial interests cannot be entrusted to general constituencies?—Certainly not.

208. What will be the advantage? I suppose the advantage will be that a person elected by your Chamber will have a mandate, and that he can resign if he goes wrong, and you can elect another representative?—Quite so.

209. But do you advocate election by Associations?—Such as ours.

210. But there are some Associations which are not yet members of your Chamber. How will you provide for representation of those Associations?—Can you give us a concrete instance?

211. I suppose there are some interests which are not represented. Are all interests represented in your Chamber?—(Mr. Ryan.) They have opportunities of being represented, either on our Chamber or on the United Provinces Chamber. If they do not avail themselves of their opportunities, that is their lookout.

212. So it would be associational, not territorial?—(Mr. Carnegie.) Territorial to a limited extent. (Mr. Ryan.) It is economic.

213. You say the executive has been weakened and the Government has deteriorated. You want to strengthen the executive by giving Law and Order to the Governor, do you not? Well, how will you strengthen it still more by simply giving Law and Order to the Governor?—(Mr. Gavin Jones.) The question of Law and Order will be strengthened, will it not?

214. By the mere fact of the Governor keeping Law and Order?—(Mr. Carnegie.) That is merely ancillary; that is not the whole question. I think your point is that the Government will be strengthened by keeping the executive itself out of the House, and letting them get on with their job.

215. How will they do that?—The permanent official, I mean, not the executive.

216. You are in favour of the transfer of more subjects?—(Mr. Gavin-Jones.) Yes.

217. What do you mean by strengthening the Government? You said the executive has deteriorated. Do you wish to strengthen the executive?—I should like to strengthen the executive, yes.

218. How will you do that?—I have just told you a little while ago what would strengthen it in a general way, but as far as Law and Order is concerned the strength of the executive would remain precisely as it is now.

219. If you leave Law and Order in the hands of the Governor, why do not you call it diarchy?—(Mr. Ryan.) We have admitted in our memorandum that we recommend only a virtual autonomy, and we have admitted also the inconsistency of the retention of this aspect of diarchy.

220. So it would be diarchy really, in fact?—That is so, attenuated.

221. What subjects do you include in the words Law and Order?—Police and executive magistracy. (Mr. Gavin-Jones.) It is a general term, which you have just discussed.

222. How will you define it?—(Mr. Ryan.) Police and executive magistracy.

223. What is your opinion about the judiciary?—Transfer it, so long as it is not under the control of the Government of India. High courts that are reserved to the Government of India would remain so. That point is discussed at more length in, and we would prefer to refer you to, the Associated Chamber's Memorandum.

* * * * * * * * * *

233. Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan: From page 370 I gather you would like to maintain Rule 49 of the Devolution Rules so far as the power of the Central Government is concerned, but you would like, I suppose, to invest the Central Government with greater powers?—(Mr. Ryan.) Yes.

234. Would those greater powers be negative or positive?—Positive.

235. Would the Central Government be empowered to offer constructive suggestions with regard to these departments, or be able only to prevent these departments from doing anything wrong?—Why not both?

236. I thought you meant only positive?—Both.

237. Both positive and negative?—You would get more illumination on that point by referring to the report of the Muddiman Committee.

238. Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan: To which paragraph do you refer?

Chairman: 48.

Witness (Mr. Ryan): 48, yes.

239. Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan: You said you could not have communal representation in the Cabinet?—(Mr. Gavin-Jones.) Yes.

240. Are you aware of the fact that in Switzerland they choose the members of what is called the Federal Executive Council—the Cabinet, really—from various communities and various cantons, according to Lord Bryce?—I do not know the details of that.

241. You may take it from me he refers to it?—In what sense is it communal?—

Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan: He is talking of the members of the council, and he says this: "One of the seven is annually chosen to be President of this Council and another to be Vice-President, and neither may be re-elected for the same post the following year. One is also by custom taken from a Roman Catholic canton, and very often one from the Italian-speaking cantons." So they are chosen from various cantons.

242. Chairman: I am very glad you read the passage, for it is what I expected. We must draw a distinction between two things which, from the point of view of drawing up a Constitution, are perfectly distinct. One question is whether it is going to be the written established law of the Constitution that a cabinet shall contain persons of different communities.

Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan: I meant only a convention.

243. Chairman: I am pointing out a distinction which I think your question suggested. The other question is quite distinct; it is whether it may not be, as a matter of expediency or as a matter of custom, a good thing to do. Let me give you an example. You can examine the list of members of the Cabinet in the Dominion of Canada, and I am fairly sure you will always find there is a Roman Catholic in it. No doubt the reason for that is that in the province of Quebec there is a great number of French-speaking Roman Catholics. Sir W. Laurier is one. But there is no section in the British North America Act which says there must be. If you were to take the High Court of England at this moment, you would probably find that amongst the judges there are members of the Church of England, there are Roman Catholics and there are Dissenters; but there is no law that there must be. It is a thing which is very likely to happen and very suitable. I was not clear, when you put your question just now, whether you meant to inquire whether these gentlemen thought it ought to be the law that there must be, or whether you meant only you thought it would be a good thing that such a custom should exist.

Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan: I thought it was a very sweeping statement that only the strongest party in the House should be able to form a Cabinet, even if it consisted only of one community. The object of my question was to ask whether it would not be expedient—not as a matter of law—to choose members of the Cabinet from various groups, representing the various communities.

244. Chairman: I follow; I am much obliged. I thought you were inquiring about an actual constitutional Statute. (To the witness) What do you think about that?—I think it would naturally work out that way. If a Cabinet were formed which wanted the support of the Muhammadan party, the Cabinet would be formed so as to get that support and would include someone from the Muhammadan party. But you cannot lay down a law to that effect: that is my point.

245. Chairman: That is the distinction, because I think, doctor sahib, some at least of the Muslim deputation were disposed to suggest it should be part of the written Constitution that there should be representatives of the different communities in a given Government?

Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan: Yes.

Chairman: That is the contrast.

Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan: We advocate this.

246. Mr. Desanges: You have given an opinion on education. What is your opinion about transferring European and Anglo-Indian education to the control of the Central Legislature?—I agree with that. (Mr. Ryan): As a Chamber we have no mandate to speak on the subject. I am prepared to give you my private opinion, if it is worth anything.

247. You are also chairman of the European Association?—Of the United Provinces branch, yes.

248. Can we have your opinion as chairman of that body?—Certainly. I strongly favour the transfer of European education to the Central Government.

249. I see you advocate the official bloc should be removed from the Lower House and not included in the Upper House?—Quite.

250. Then surely you would want more than one representative on behalf of the European community in the Lower House?—We are not prepared to press for it. You see, Mr. Desanges, we realise that there is little use in according seats when we find, as we do find difficulty in finding capable men to put forward to fill those seats. I emphasise the word "capable."

251. In that case there is a chance, if Europeans are represented only by one staccato voice, of having legislation made against them?—If it is staccato, so long as it is loud enough, it is all you can expect. If you doubled the number or trebled it you could make no difference in the voting power of the community. (Mr. Souter): None at all. (Mr. Ryan): We want a spokesman to put forward the opinions of the community and watch their rights and privileges.

252. You spoke about the franchise being too low. What would you suggest the franchise should be. It is on page 367?—I do not know that we are instructed to recommend anything, but we do think it is too low.

253. Kunwar Bisheshar Dayal Seth: You said just now your Association was in favour of communal representation?—Yes.

254. If somehow it was possible to find some other method to substitute for communal representation which would secure Muhammadan representation I think you would not object to it?—Minority representation.

255. For the minority, yes?—Have you any alternative in mind?

256. Not just at present?—I am not prepared to put one forward.

257. Raja Kushalpal Singh: Is not it one of the functions of a panchayat to settle petty civil and criminal cases?—Yes, and that is the function in which I understand they have been successful.

258. Is not it against the canons of sound administration that judiciary should be elected?—I think that the effects of the non-enforcement of that canon, in regard to panchayats, would be practically negligible. It is already laid down what panchayats, as a judicial body, may and may not touch. The limit is very low. Government officials serving in the same circle cannot appear before a panchayat, and, with due respect to the chair, a very useful recommendation is that lawyers may not be employed.

259. Are you aware that factions exist in very many villages?—I am aware that factions exist, yes.

260. Are not they great impediments to the smooth working of panchayats?—Yes, but we cannot expect the working of the panchayat is going to be made ideally smooth. It should be the purpose of the Government to overcome these factions, and I should think one of the best ways of doing it would be to go on with the panchayat system.

261. Chairman: We have had a very interesting afternoon, I think you will agree. May I detain you for two questions only? One is this. Was this Memorandum, which we have been so interested in looking through, of the Upper India Chamber of Commerce, examined by your members and approved by them in any way?—(Mr. Carnegie): By the committee. (Mr. Ryan): It was not approved by the members before issue.

262. But they have seen it since?—It was issued to them almost immediately after it was sent to your Delhi office, and we have not had one single objection.

263. Did you issue it to the members of the committee, or to all members?—To all members, under seal of confidence until it was published.

264. I am not making any point of that; I only meant, it has been before all the members of your Chamber of Commerce?—Yes, certainly.

265. Can you tell me whether, after that, you have had any information as to whether it was generally approved?—We have not had one expression of disapproval. On the contrary, we have had many expressions of approval.

266. I think you told us earlier in the day that your Chamber of Commerce contains Indian members as well as European members?—Yes.

267. Does it contain many Indian members—what proportion?—About 10 or 12 out of the total membership, and there are two Indians on the committee.

268. Two Indians on the committee, who would help to draw this up?—Yes. There was one Indian gentleman on the sub-committee who first went into it, and he and another gentleman on the general committee.

269. And then you say there are some ten, perhaps more, who are not members of the committee, but are members of your Association, out of a total of how many?—About 76.

270. Of course, we recognise that that total represents a very large volume of business. The reason I ask is because it is interesting to know whether or not the broad lines of this memorandum are to be treated as approved by the Indian as well as by the European members of your Chamber?—It has not been disapproved of, and since one Indian gentleman assisted us to draft it, and both the Indians on the committee agreed to it—at least, they did not disagree with it—we must take it as approved.

271. Of course, I do not mean by that that I treat everybody as agreeing to every syllable?—Quite so.

272. Chairman: In the main, is that your opinion, Mr. Srivastava?

Mr. Srivastava: Yes. I was on the committee.

Chairman: That is a very interesting fact.

Witness: I would like to say that that informative note on education which is one of the annexures to our memorandum, we owe to Mr. Srivastava's assistance.

273. Chairman: I have looked at it with a great deal of care. It is a very admirable appendix. The only other question I want to put to you—it is perhaps more thinking aloud than a question, but perhaps it will not do any harm put as a question—is this. Has this occurred to you gentlemen? You see, up to the present the constitution of the different legislatures in India has been laid down in advance, as it were, very precisely, that is to say, there has been a superior authority, a different authority, which has said, "They ought to contain so many members, and they ought to be distributed in such and such a way, and the vote should be so and so," and all that kind of thing. The structure has been prepared in great detail, and then, when the legislature has been created, the legislature itself has not had very considerable powers to bring about changes in its own internal structure. Do you see what I mean?—Quite.

274. Have you gentlemen realised this, that that is not by any means the invariable plan that is followed when Constitutions are being framed. As I am quite sure my friend Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan has observed on his own account, there are many instances in which when you have set up the legislature and have given power to it, you not only give it the power to pass ordinary laws, like a law about landlord and tenant, roads, or motor cars, or anything, but you also give it powers within limits to make changes in its own constitutional structure. Do you see what I mean?—Yes.

275. What I wonder is whether you gentlemen have at all considered this question. Do you think that we ought to consider whether the new legislatures in India ought not to have conferred upon them some powers of internal alteration, without, as it were, always having to go through the business of reviewing it from outside?—That is a very large question, on which we should not like to commit our Chamber

276. I do not expect you to commit your Chamber; but, you see, there is a great deal that is very ingenious and interesting and suggestive in the document. What I am wondering is, ought the Conference to treat itself as though it had got to prescribe, as it were, to the last screw and the last inch what the plan is, or is it not perhaps to be considered whether they ought not to advise as to how the thing should be constructed to begin with, and then to give the body some power of internal change?—(Mr. Gavin-Jones): It would have to be very limited

277. That occurs to one, that it would have to be limited; but you know, of course, in many parts of the Empire, at any rate after a certain period, there are quite substantial powers conferred upon the legislature, sometimes if they pass by a special majority, sometimes after the Bill has been specially reserved for consideration, quite considerable powers sometimes conferred on a subordinate legislature to consider whether its own internal structure would not be better if it was somewhat varied. You have not looked into it, I think, very closely from that point of view?—(Mr. Ryan): We have seen a suggestion somewhat approaching that. I am not quite sure the intention was not the same. I believe it was put forward by the Karachi Chamber of Commerce.

278. Chairman: Sir Sankaran Nair, I think you will agree with me that it is a little important to consider that. Perhaps I may give the Conference for a moment an example from my own knowledge of it. I am not saying at all that the thing applies here, but take, for instance, a State in Australia. I will take one within my own recollection, which is a very long constitutional case, the State of Queensland. There is no doubt at all that the legislature there was acting within its powers when it altered a great deal the previous arrangements under which it was constituted. I can think of a case where one of the provinces in Canada attempted to carry legislation which would have started what is called the initiative and the referendum inside the colony. That particular case was going too far; it was found out that they could not do it. I do not think it is necessary that a legislature should have a suit of clothes exactly cut out for it, and then be told to go and wear it. As Mr. Hartshorn says, a good instance is what exists already in some of the provinces; without any reference to outside authority, they decided to have female franchise. You can imagine a further latitude than that, and it seems to me that it might be possible to consider whether, when you set up these legislatures in some revised form, they might not perhaps have some powers which would enable them, for example, to adopt some of the things in your memorandum if they thought right; or again, if they were set up on the lines of your memorandum would be entitled to alter it into something rather different if they found it did not work?—(Mr. Carnegie): To carry on your metaphor, they might be permitted to alter the buttons of the coat without referring to the tailor.

279. That is what it is, because the best suit of clothes made for somebody else does not always fit?—(Mr. Gavin-Jones): They ought not to have power to alter the suit altogether. (Vide Appendix.)

280. Mr. Hartshorn: On page 366 you say: "Owing to the backwardness of these classes"—the depressed classes—"and their lack of education any system of direct election would be unsuitable but it is felt that a system of electoral colleges could be established in each province among the depressed classes and that they should be given a right of election under this system." Would you tell us in a few words what your idea is about that? In what way do you think electoral colleges could be created for the depressed classes?—(Mr. Ryan): I think we were here inspired more by hope than by belief. We know the depressed classes are moving towards self-assertion, and we feel it will not be long before they have moved sufficiently to allow some such machinery to be established; but what that machinery should be we have not been able to consider.

APPENDIX.

Copy of a letter from Mr. J. G. Ryan, M.B.E., V.D., Secretary, Upper India Chamber of Commerce, Cawnpore, dated the 12th December, 1928, to the Secretary, Indian Statutory Commission.

The attention of my Committee has been directed to the following passage in the press report of the examination of the delegates of this Chamber by the Joint Conference at Lucknow on Friday the 7th instant. It is at the end of the report and reads:—

"Sir John Simon: Should the new legislatures in India have some powers conferred upon them to make changes in their own internal structures?

"Mr. Gavin-Jones: The Chamber is not opposed to the idea of legislative bodies being empowered to effect minor changes in their internal structures provided such changes do not affect the structure as a whole."

As this report would lead to a very grave misunderstanding as to the Chamber's attitude in regard to such a proposal I am directed to make the position clear.

Sir John Simon was good enough, quite at the close of the examination of the Chamber's delegates, to throw out a suggestion, which, without committing himself to any opinion, seemed to strike him as a point of view which had not been considered. As he put it, he was thinking aloud.

This suggestion was that the legislatures should have the power to amend their own constitution in some respects, and he cited the action of one of the Australian Governments in this respect.

The Chamber's delegates were rather taken aback by this suggestion and could not at the moment offer any definite opinion, especially as they had no mandate from the committee on the subject. Mr. Carnegie remarked that it was a very difficult question on which the delegates could not then give an opinion. He endeavoured to get a better appreciation of the suggestion by pursuing Sir John Simon's own simile but refrained from committing the Chamber to an expression of opinion. Mr. Gavin-Jones merely remarked that the powers of amendment would have to be very limited, and Mr. Ryan remarked that the Karachi Chamber of Commerce, in their memorandum, seemed to have had in mind a somewhat similar proposal.

Actually all the delegates felt that the suggestion was not free of certain elements of danger, but put as it was, they were unable, on the spur of the moment, to focus their views as to this.

In view of the fact that the Karachi Chamber of Commerce have, in their memorandum of the 3rd of October, 1928, made a very definite proposal on these lines, a proposal which the Associated Chambers of Commerce have not been afforded an opportunity of considering, my committee feel that it is necessary for them now to state their definite views on the subject.

They consider the Karachi Chamber's proposal not only to be dangerous, but actually, in principle, opposed to the Imperial policy which Great Britain has always adopted towards the British Dominions and Colonies.

In effect the Karachi Chamber propose that when the British Parliament decides the form which the future Government of India shall take, and which they call the static Constitution, the Constitution shall become, after a certain period, "a fluent constitution in which the future impelling influence will essentially be the Indian people themselves."

They wisely state their case in general terms only, but they definitely state that "at the end of the static period the future government should be by agreement amongst the people concerned, either directly or through the legislatures."

Since the Karachi Chamber agree that complete autonomous Government should be given to the provinces my Committee assume that their intention is that either the Central Legislature will have the power of altering its constitution or that a concensus of opinion of the people, as voiced by the provincial legislatures, shall have the power of extending self-government to the Central Legislature.

Such a proposal is, in the view of my committee, impossible of achievement. It is totally opposed to British policy and it is impossible to reconcile it with the "certain fundamental and unchangeable provisions," which are outlined, and which, of themselves, are entirely incompatible with the ideal of "self-government."

The British Parliament, when relinquishing the full control of the Government of a Dominion or of a Colony, has done so only to a legislature responsible to the people. To no other authority is it conceivable that such control could be relinquished and the very first essential in the grant of self-government is that the Dominion or Colony shall be capable of providing for its own defence and its own internal security, following upon the immediate withdrawal of the British Army. As my committee read the Karachi Chamber's proposals it is intended that after the static period the legislatures will have the power to extend self-governing institutions to the full, without reference to the British Parliament. And yet it is definitely intended that the British Army is to remain, together with a percentage of British officers in the Indian Army and a percentage of British in the Civil Services. Such a position would be impossible.

The proposal practically means that the British Parliament would draw up the static Constitution, and immediately divest itself of all further responsibility. The development of self-governing institutions would be left to the people of India themselves, and the British Army and the Services in India would be left, as it were, in the air.

Such a proposal is entirely lacking in an appreciation of the realities of the situation.

My committee naturally do not for a moment think that Sir John Simon had such a proposal in mind when he made his suggestion, but the lines on which he was thinking would seem to be much the same as those which have led to the Karachi Chamber's proposal, and my committee desire definitely to express their disapproval of the Karachi Chamber's memorandum.

In regard to Sir John Simon's suggestion my committee are inclined to think that if the provincial legislatures were permitted to modify their own Constitutions, within a strictly limited sphere, no harm might follow, but even here, when the present communal tension is considered, such powers might lead to disruption.

My committee hold the very definite view that there should be no tampering with the Central Government, even in regard to internal detail, except by the authority of the British Parliament.

Memorandum submitted by THE BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION OF THE TALUKDARS OF OUDH.

The Blue books and other official records are replete with the history of Oudh Talukdars. We therefore only give a brief outline of the position of the Talukdars in this Memorandum.

The Talukdars of Oudh are a body of landlords, who, before the annexation of Oudh, held estates under a system which was akin to the continental feudalism. After the annexation of Oudh, the British Government proceeded with the summary settlement of land in the province. Unfortunately the officers who at the time were the advisers of Government had no knowledge of actual conditions prevailing in Oudh and the Government on their advice thought that it would be to its advantage to make settlement directly with the occupants of the soil and to change the established system prevailing in Oudh from long ages. On the 4th February, 1856, an order was passed to make settlement directly with the actual occupiers of soil and to ignore the Talukdars.

The Mutiny broke out in 1857 and the community of small holders of land newly created by the British Government soon rallied round the Talukdars—their former feudal Lords. Lord Canning came up and personally studied and investigated the whole question which resulted in the entire reversal of the policy of 1856. He was convinced that the Talukdars had been unjustly treated, and came to the conclusion that unless the rights and privileges of the Talukdars were recognised and their position restored, it would not be easy to restore peace and tranquillity in the Province and to ensure its prosperity. The rights and privileges which the Talukdars enjoy to-day are those which were conferred upon their ancestors under terms of Sanads issued during the time of Lord Canning by the order of the Crown.

The British Indian Association was established in 1861 and represents the entire body of Talukdars of Oudh. The Talukdars, as it would appear, are a compact body with a common interest and with special laws of inheritance, usage and customs. The British Indian Association is perhaps the oldest or one of the oldest institutions of its kind. Every Talukdar is a hereditary member of it and has to contribute a percentage of the income of his estate for its maintenance. It therefore represents the entire Talukdari community.

The necessity of the representation of the interests of the Talukdari community has been fully recognised in the legislature and our association has been allotted four seats in the present Provincial Council. This number was lower than our demand and the recommendation of the Local Government, and we, therefore, claim a larger representation. We have got large stakes in the Province and in view of the recent communist movement, the maintenance of the landed aristocracy like ours which is a stable element in the Indian Polity may be in danger unless our representation is increased, and in the future constitution of India our full proprietary rights, title and possession, which have been guaranteed in perpetuity by British Government, are permanently protected. Oudh has an area of about 24 thousand square miles with a population of 12 millions and yields a Government revenue of over $1\frac{3}{4}$ crores. Of this over a crore is the contribution of the Talukdars to the Public Exchequer. In addition to the land revenue, they pay 10 per cent. cesses towards the maintenance of the local boards and also largely contribute permanently towards educational and other institutions for the public benefit. Their importance in all affairs connected with the prosperity and well-being of the people of this Province is undeniable. This association, therefore, without being assertive in regard to the claims of the Talukdars for representation in the Legislature of this country, ventures to submit that their representation at present is inadequate, and should be increased. The Government of these Provinces also recommended five seats for us in the Council and this recommendation was accepted by the Franchise committee.

Basis of Franchise.

Property should remain the basis of Franchise. We have fully considered this matter in relation to the conditions prevailing in these Provinces, and we are convinced that under the present conditions no other basis is feasible. The standard of qualification should be maintained. No lowering of the standard of income for purposes of qualification to vote would be desirable.

Voting should be by ballot. We consider the desirability of introducing the system of open voting, and in our opinion while it has its virtues of developing more independence and moral tone in the voters it is subject to extraneous influence.

Methods whereby particular interests may obtain adequate representation.

We represent particular interests. There are other communities of interests such as those of commerce, trade and labour. If our Legislatures, Provincial and Central, were to be composed of representatives of different interests this perhaps would alter the grouping and help the political evolution of representative institutions and divert the thoughts of the people from communalism to question affecting the material welfare of the country. The most suitable method by which particular interests can obtain adequate representation will be to allow their representation in the legislatures in proportion to the amount paid by such bodies to the Public Exchequer. The numerical strength of such bodies should not be the criterion for fixing the number of their representatives but their social, political and economic importance should be given due consideration. The chief classes who are likely to suffer, if this principle is accepted, are the depressed classes and unorganised labour. In order to protect their interests some effective method should be adopted for such time as they are not properly organised.

As regards the communal question, unfortunately it is there and is due to cultural differences, economic reasons and last but not least, lack of political education. We do not, however, consider it necessary to make any suggestions as to the method of solving this problem. The British Indian Association represents special interests and is composed of people of all denominations whose economic interests are common and so far no communal feeling has disturbed us.

Growth of Parties.

We are conscious that Parliamentary system of Government without a party system is an anomaly. The electorates are mostly ignorant and the political education, if any, they are receiving, is not of the right kind. Behind all political activities lurk communal and religious feelings which are great obstacles to the growth of healthy public opinion. In the first election, under Montford Reform Scheme, the political cry of Non-co-operation was raised, but by the time of second election, non-co-operation had lost its magic power, and the communal question and religious sentiment began to be noticeable. In the last election, the communal question and religious sentiment became prominent. The political-minded people have been thrown in the back-ground by persons whose outlook is either religious or communal. That the growth of political parties entirely depends on the relations between the various communities in India, goodwill and trust between them can only create such an atmosphere in which political parties can flourish. The growth of parties would entirely depend on the growth of public opinion.

Nomination of Officials.

Public opinion is against the official voting in the legislatures, but it is likely that their total absence may be felt when questions involving technical knowledge come before the Councils. This deficiency can be removed by means of a provision in the constitution that the Ministers in charge of the department will have a right to call upon the heads of the department and experts to speak in the house in order to enlighten the house on a particular question. But they should not be allowed to vote.

MEMORANDUM SUBMITTED BY THE BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION OF THE TALUKDARS OF OUDH. [Continued.

The presence of an official block is also an obstacle in the way of the growth of party system in the legislature. The ministry, under the present constitution, can, with the help of the official block, afford to treat the non-official majority in the house with scant courtesy.

Territorial changes.

We do not consider it necessary to make territorial changes either for purposes of Provincial legislatures, Council elections or re-adjustment of local self-governing administrative units, so far as the United Provinces are concerned.

Local Self-Governing Bodies.

The result of the working of the Local Self-Governing bodies, with a few exceptions, indicates that full advantage has not been taken by them of the opportunities afforded by the new liberal constitution to carry on their administration on democratic lines. This is largely due to inexperience of the members. With more experience and educational progress, it is hoped that the state of things will improve. In these circumstances we are of opinion that the present system should continue. While suggesting the maintenance of the present system in case of these bodies, we strongly recommend that they should receive financial and advisory help from Government to enable them to make improvements in education, hygiene and communications.

Provincial Government.

The demand for autonomy in Provincial Governments appears to be unanimous, but we consider it necessary to provide certain reservations at this stage. We, therefore, beg to suggest that:—

1. the Cabinet system consisting of Ministers with joint responsibility should be introduced and the Ministry should be responsible to the Legislature;

2. that with the exception of the department for the maintenance of Law and Order, all other departments should be made Transferred Subjects;

3. that the department relating to the maintenance of Law and Order should be placed in the hands of a person appointed by order of the Crown and remain a reserved subject as at present;

4. the life of the Provincial Legislature should be increased from three to five years. It is too short a time to carry through any scheme that may be started by the Government and the election expenses on the Public Exchequer as well as for the candidates recur too frequently;

5. the power to assent or to veto a Bill should be vested in the Governor and as a representative of the Crown, the dignity of his office should be maintained as well as his position as a constitutional ruler. The legislature should not therefore have the power to curtail the expenditure necessary to maintain his position as such;

6. the position of the Governor in relation to the Ministers should remain as it is under the present constitution;

7. the Provincial Governments should be made independent of the Government of India so far as their powers of dealing with Provincial Subjects go. The control of the Government of India on the Provincial Government should be limited to departments which are primarily the concern of the Government of India;

8. the strength of the Council as at present constituted is hardly justifiable for a representative legislature.

The population of the United Provinces is very large. While on the one hand, we are not inclined to have the number of the representatives in the Council fixed in proportion to what is generally found in the democratic constitutions in Europe; on the other hand we are of opinion that the representation in the Council should be such as would admit of a fair amount of representation in the Council, considering the area and population of the Province. The ration of one representative for every two lacs of population is what we recommend. This will increase the number of constituencies and will thereby automatically decrease their area and make them more compact and workable. At the present moment, the candidates find it very difficult to nurse their constituencies, but with smaller constituencies the candidates will be in better position to canvass and educate their voters more effectively. We have already submitted that our representation in the Legislative Council is inadequate. We therefore urge that the number of our representatives in the Council in its present strength should be six. The same proportion should be maintained in case of any increase in the numerical strength of the Council.

Second Chamber.

It may be said that until complete autonomy is given to the Provincial Legislatures, there is no need for a Second Chamber in the Provinces. Our recommendations for the constitution of Provincial Legislature, if adopted, will not result in complete autonomy of the Provincial Councils but will no doubt go far towards autonomy and make a substantial advance in that direction. If we have not recommended the transfer of the department for the Maintenance of Law and Order it is for weighty and special reasons. While we recognise the importance of the extension of the representative system of Provincial Governments, we are of opinion that it should be well-ordained and judiciously controlled. We, therefore, strongly feel the necessity of a restraining power and sober scrutiny of the work of our Provincial Legislature which is still in its earlier stages. In these circumstances, we feel that is is necessary to create a Second Chamber in this Province, consisting of persons of large vested interests, higher educational qualifications and experience of higher form of judicial and administrative work, in order to supervise, control and restrain by means of their mature judgment any decisions that may be taken by the First Chamber in a state of excitement.

We do not make any proposals regarding the strength and composition of the Second Chamber but we are of opinion that broadly it should be on the lines of the Council of State.

Before we conclude this memorandum, we beg to submit that an Association like ours representing such an important community of interests has not been given any representation in the Central Legislature. We are a body ancient and legally constituted and have a record of public services which we can justly be proud of. We therefore earnestly put forward what we believe to be our just claim for representation in the Central Legislature and to be moderate we only ask for two seats in the Assembly and one in the Council of State, in the present strength.

Memorandum submitted by the AGRA PROVINCE ZAMINDARS' ASSOCIATION, ALLAHABAD.

Special Representation.

Special representation and Franchise has been granted under all Reforms to important minorities and special interests in the various provinces of the country. What we have now to look to is that an adequate and proper representation is secured to such constituencies under any Reform Scheme.

The Association regretfully submits that justice has not been done to the claims of the great zamindar community of the Province of Agra. Rather discrimination has been shown and in some quarters to an invidious extent. This is one of the most pinching and long standing grievance of the zamindars of the Agra Province. They have never been given an adequate and proper representation on the various Legislatures concerned although they have fought for it every time an opportunity presented itself.

In the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh the Province of Agra is the major province. There are altogether 48 districts in both the provinces of which no less than 36 districts belong to the Province of Agra, while out of the ten divisions which go to make up these two Provinces, eight divisions belong to Agra alone, there remaining only two divisions assigned to the Province of Oudh; viz., in point of territorial area the Province of Agra is four times as large as Oudh is. Similarly, in point of land revenue, Agra pays Rs. 5,15,00,000, while Oudh pays Rs. 1,76,00,000 only as land revenue; in other words, the Province of Agra contributes over two-thirds of Government revenue, while the Province of Oudh contributes only one-third. This will be found to be the case in almost all resources of taxes, cesses and other incomes to the Government of the Province in all branches of life.

It is therefore safe to conclude, that a great injustice has been done to the zamindar community of the Agra Province, when they of the eight divisions or 36 districts, have been allotted only two seats in the Local Legislative Council, while the Taluqdars of Oudh confined to two divisions, or 12 districts only, have been conferred four seats, and that all at once by direct method through the British Indian Association, Lucknow, which direct election through their own Institution gives them an additional development and consolidation in the political life of the country.

The zamindars of the Agra Province therefore on the data and precedence given above, should reasonably get three times, if not four times, more than what the Taluqdars of Oudh have got, viz., the Agra Province Zamindars should be awarded 12 seats in the Local Legislatures and a proportionate number of seats in other Legislatures in the country.

At the lowest, the Agra Zamindars should get eight seats in the Local Legislatures, corresponding with the number of divisions which go to make up the Province of Agra, and that by way of direct representation through their Institution at Allahabad; in other words eight representatives elected by the Agra Province Zamindars' Association, Allahabad. If, however, the strength of the Local Council is appreciably increased, our representation should in that case proportionately increase automatically.

The Agra Province Zamindars claim special representation in the Indian Legislative Assembly as well as in the Council of State.

Direct representation has been granted to the British Indian Association, Lucknow, in respect of all the four seats allotted to the special land-owning interest there. The Agra Province Zamindars' Association, Allahabad, similarly claims the privilege of direct representation in the legislatures. The qualifications for electors (to the Legislative Council elections) under the Rules for Agra Landholders' constituency and for membership of the Agra Province Zamindars' Association, Allahabad, are the same, viz., zamindars paying Rs. 5,000/- and over, as Government revenue, are eligible for the membership of the Association also, while the same qualification makes a zamindar qualified to become an elector in the Agra Landholders' constituency, as also qualifies him to become a member of the Council representing the special zamindar constituency in the Legislatures.

In view of the rapid turns that the Democratic spirit is taking in this country, it seems desirable to foresee the result. Although at present zamindars are being returned in a goodly number, yet it will not be the case in the near future, and it is thought desirable to have a Second Chamber added to the Local Legislature. This will insure the retention of a fair number of such representatives as have got a stake in the country and could take a calm and dispassionate view of the problems before them, avoiding extremes.

The Association claims direct representation in all Legislatures including the proposed Second Chamber for the great Zamindar Community of the Province of Agra.

Previously, when the Reforms were under consideration in 1917–19 the Association was refused direct representation. It was said that the British Indian Association of Lucknow was self-supporting by virtue of its funds, and established finances and (that it) had its own Headquarters buildings. It was mainly on these grounds that direct representation was conferred on the Taluqdars' Institution. Now the Agra Province Zamindars' Association, Allahabad has also got both these things; it has now its "Agra Province Zamindars' Association Contribution Act of 1927," as well as it has just completed its Headquarters building called Meston Mansion and the Marris Hall. This Institution has therefore now been firmly established by virture of its "Contribution Act II of 1927" and own Headquarters buildings and can therefore claim direct representation like the one which has been in vogue in the Province of Oudh in respect of the British Indian Association.

We rightfully beg to claim that the Zamindars of the Province of Agra, apart from their right to stand for the General Constituency, must have seats allotted for their Association in the Assembly and the Council of State, and the Agra Province Zamindars' Association of Allahabad only should have the right to return them.

The Association also begs to press the claims for an adequate representation of Zamindars in public services, both Provincial and Imperial. The Association further begs that in making appointments of the Cabinet Members in the Central and Provincial Legislatures due regard will be paid to the Importance and Interest of the Landed Classes.

The Association hopes that it has been reasonable in its humble claims and fair to all concerned in this problem of special Representation of the Agra Zamindars in the Legislatures of the country.

TRUE COPY.

Copy of Resolution No. 7 passed at the Annual General Sessions of the Agra Province Zamindars' Association, Allahabad, held on the 6th of January, 1928, at the Association's premises at 9 a.m.

7. The Coming Royal Commission.—There was an animated and prolonged discussion on the question at the end of which the following Resolution was adopted:—

(a) "Resolved that the Agra Province Zamindars' Association while feeling greatly disappointed at the entire exclusion of Indians from the Simon Commission, do realise that owing to their demands, as regards their proper and adequate representation on the Legislatures as well as the creation of a Second Chamber having been neglected by the former Reforms they cannot afford to simply wait and mark time."

(b) "That their representation in the Legislature of the Agra Province should be increased from two to eight by allotting eight seats for them on the U.P. Legislative Council.'

(c) "In any scheme of further instalments of Reforms to be granted to Indians a Second Chamber in the Provincial Legislature should form an integral part of the Constitution."

(d) "An adequate separate representation in the Central Legislature should be granted."

(e) "That the above resolution be made over to their representatives selected from the members of the Association, who will submit the same to the proper authorities."

The Resolution was put to vote and was carried by majority.

AGRA PROVINCE ZAMINDARS' ASSOCIATION, ALLAHABAD.

THE SIMON-COMMISSION SUB-COMMITTEE.

Proceedings of an urgent meeting held on the 15th October, 1928, at 3.30 p.m., at the Association's premises.

1. To consider the memorandum and redraft it in the light of the changed circumstances, with Assistant Secretary's note.

"The re-drafted memorandum was considered and adopted unanimously with slight amendments and alterations."

"Further resolved that Khan Bahadur Mohammad Obaidur Rahman Khan, Mir Ali Sajjad Sahib, the Raja Bahadur of Padrauna, the Raja Bahadur of Manda, Raja Kalicharan Nuira Sahib and Rai Ishar Sahai Bahadur be requested to kindly prepare themselves to give evidence before the Simon Commission as representatives of the Association."

Supplementary Memorandum by the AGRA PROVINCE ZAMINDARS' ASSOCIATION.

I have the honour to inform you as follows :— We had our Annual General Sessions of the Association on the 4th November, 1928. The slightly amended Memorandum already submitted to you was adopted in toto and in addition it was also resolved to bring two more important facts before you in the best interest of the general progress of the Reforms to come :—

One is that the life of the Legislatures be enhanced to five years, instead of three years as obtains now. This is expected to give better and fuller education to the Council members of the methods of responsible government to be followed under a representative and democratic form of government.

The second point is, that it appears from the newspaper reports, that the educated party wants the Meston Awards to be amended and financial relations between the Provincial and Imperial Government to be readjusted. In case if this suggestion is to get a hearing at the hands of the Simon Commission, the prayer of the Association is, that in any such case, direct or indirect, the Permanent Settlement where obtaining should not be allowed to suffer any go back on the pledges so sacredly and solemnly made by British Government to the people of the Provinces which such a settlement already extends. It would amount to a breach of faith and injure the cause and existence of the landed community fearfully.

I hope you would bring this matter as well before the Commission.

Memorandum on behalf of the PEOPLE OF ORISSA.

We, the undersigned, on behalf of the People of Orissa accord a cordial welcome to you, the Members of the Statutory Commission, and heartily make the following submissions for your careful consideration. We reserve our suggestions and observations, in general, upon the structure and working of the existing constitution of British India, and submit at present a tentative bare outline on your terms of reference from (a) to (g) and most respectfully lay particular stress upon one point, namely, the suitability of existing areas for legislative and administrative purposes and growth of representative institutions. Here we draw your special attention to the case of Orissa and Oriyas placed under four distinct Provincial administrative units, forming a hopeless minority in every Province they are attached to.

The aim of the Reforms inaugurated in 1917 was to lead India to progressive realisation of full responsible Government by increasing association of Indians in every branch of administration. To the Oriyas who have been placed under four administrations this increasing association has been an impossibility. They have been tied to the tail end of each Province and as such the pulsation of the heart at the centre of administration fails to reach the extremities. They are as the Government of Bihar put it in their letter to the Financial Relations Committee a "distant adjunct" of all the Governments and as such relegated to negligence. Moreover it has served to create intermediary ruling races who dominate the Provinces and naturally all the benefits, that accrue from any Scheme of Reforms calculated to grant more power and privilege to the people, come to them. Hence the Oriya position has become more insecure and the fruits of reforms are practically denied to them. Their fate is no better than that of the Scheduled Districts classed as backward tracts.

Since the eighties of the last century the Oriyas have agitated and agitated for their unification under one administration. This was recognised by Commissioner Cook of Orissa in the Annual General Administration Report of Orissa in 1894–95. In their letter No. 3678 of 3rd December, 1903, the Government of India were "disposed to unite the whole of Oriya-speaking peoples, both hill and plain, under one Administration." Over 25 long years have passed, during which great and momentous administrative changes were made and unmade, partitions were made and annulled, but the pious wish of the Government of India to unite Oriyas is still unfulfilled and their strenuous continual constitutional agitation goes unheeded.

In the great Indian body politic, the Oriyas emerge as a distinct factor. They have a history of their own and are distinguished from others psychologically and socially, ethnologically and linguistically, educationally and economically. The predominance of a vast majority of another race has in many instances tended to effect this distinctive feature of the race. Lord Crewe in his Durbar despatch of 1911 admitted this when he said "Orissa has long felt uneasiness at a possible loss of identity as a distinct community." But this lip-sympathetic recognition of the psychology of the Oriya people ultimately ended in getting them from the frying-pan to the fire by placing them under four administrations instead of three as before.

The Oriya's demand of his linguistic boundary is corroborated by Dr. Grierson in his Linguistic Survey of India. "The Orissa country is not confined to the division which now bears that name. It includes a portion of the district of Midnapore in the North, which together with a part of Balasore was the Orissa of the phrase "Bengal, Bihar and Orissa" met in the Regulations passed by the Government in the last decade of the 18th century. Oriya is also the language of most of the District of Singbhum belonging to the division of Chhotanagpur and of several neighbouring Native States which fall politically within the same division (some of which have lately been transferred to the Orissa States). In the West it is the language of Raipur in the Central Provinces and also of the number of Native States which lie between those Districts and Orissa proper. On the South it is the language of the North part of Madras, District of Ganjam with its connected Native States, and of the Jeypore Agency of Vizagapatam. It is thus spoken in three (now in four) Governments of British India, viz., in the Lower Provinces of Bengal, in the Central Provinces and in the Madras Presidency (and in Bihar and Orissa). "Sometimes the Oriya characters are frankly abandoned and the language is written in Bengalee character." The above statement is a clear proof of the loss of the identity of the Oriya race referred to above.

After two decades of strenuous and continuous constitutional agitation the Oriyas were fortunate in drawing the attention of the authors of the joint report during the Reform days in 1919 who recognised the claims of Orissa in the following terms:—

"In Orissa and Berar at all events it seems to us that the possibility of instituting Sub-Provinces need not be excluded from consideration at a very early date." Ten long and expectant years have passed, but the "early date" adumbrated by Montague and Chelmsford has not yet arrived, though the Orissa representatives have, since then, in the local and Imperial Legislatures, drawn the attention of the Government to the fact of uniting the Oriya-speaking tracts under one Government. The Government of India only moved so far as to institute a Commission of Enquiry (under Philip and Duff) into the Oriya tracts in the Madras Presidency, who sum up their enquiry thus: "There is a genuine, long standing and deep rooted desire on the part of the educated classes including the Oriya Zamindars and that wherever the Rayats have learnt something of the matter they are entirely in favour of Amalgamation."

That at least is a piece of "accumulated official evidence" and would have satisfied Mr. Montagu were he living to steer the administrative ship of India.

The authors of the Constitutional Reforms were impressed with "the artificial and often inconvenient character of existing administrative units" and were "convinced that the business of the Government would be simplified if administrative units were smaller and more homogeneous." All those just and weighty considerations were consigned by them to the limbo of impracticability under the weight of Reforms which they advocated. Further, they say that "division of territory which are not made in response to a popular demand is apt to provoke wide and deep-seated dissatisfaction." Is not the demand of the Oriyas for union a popular demand? Is not this uncouth combination of the Oriyas with people of other races and languages unnatural and unjust? Have not the Oriyas been "sacrificed without compunction" as Lord Curzon put it? It is a pity that the authors of the Reforms failed to do what they could have done by a stroke of their pen. Certainly the Oriya union would never have been imposed upon the people by official action. The Oriyas demanded it and they could have granted it if they meant to do justice. Instead of having recourse to a process which should have preceded rather than followed the Reforms in order that all peoples and races of India might have reaped its benefits, the authors left the matter to the Government of India which in July, 1917, has been depicted by the Right Honourable Mr. Montague as "too wooden, too iron, too inelastic and too ante-diluvian." Till now the case of Oriya union has been buried under red tape and it may continue there till Doomesday unless the Oriyas put themselves under better tutelage to learn the mode of agitation that tells.

Orissa has always been the pawn of experiments. Like a football she was kicked from one Province to the other and the people were never consulted. In uniting all Oriyas under one administration a consultation of the wishes of the people concerned is deemed necessary, but in putting the Oriya people under other races it was never dreamt of. Rather this vivisection of the Oriya people is explained away as a matter of historical accident over which the Government have no control and they cannot remedy it even if they so desire.

A separate administration for fifteen millions of people is not an unreasonable or childish demand. The only peg on which the authorities hang their arguments against, is finance. If the Government were determined to save the Oriya people, no financial difficulty would stand in the way. It never did in the case of the North-Western Frontier Province. It was never thought of in the case of Bihar. The North-Western Frontier Province does not meet its own finance. What vast sums of money were spent over the abandoned temporary capital at Ranchi and the new capital at Delhi? Were the people consulted then? Did financial considerations weigh with the authorities in these matters? Certainly not. "There is a Way where there is the Will."

But only in the case of Orissa, finance proved to be the stumbling block of the authorities. Recently our Intermediary Ruling Races in the All-Parties Conference, that met at Delhi and Bombay have also stumbled on the same financial rock. This mentality is the outcome of a notion of Standardised Provincial Government in all the Provinces of India. "Cut the coat in accordance with the cloth you have" is an old saying, inapplicable to the Indian Administration. The Government is not shaped to suit the Finance of the country, rather the people are required to supply money to feed the hobbies or prestige of administration. Belgium, Holland and Switzerland which in area and population though small carry on their efficient administration. They do not emulate England, Germany, France or Italy in matters of finance. Even in India there exist administrative units with much less population and area. The North-Western Frontier Province, Baluchistan, and Ajmere Marwara are instances. Their area, population and finance will not exceed that of the united Oriya Province. If the suggestion of Mr. Lionel Curtis be considered sound and healthy for the good and efficient Government of India, a number of small federated States on the line of the States of the United States of America will be necessary.

States formed on the basis of language and race are more homogeneous and so calculated to bring on peace and contentment to the various linguistic units forming the great Indian Nationality. The parable of body and the members should not be lost sight of. A weak unhealthy portion of India will neither contribute to the strength of the Indian Government nor facilitate the growth of Indian Nationalism which leaders of all shades of opinion so ardently desire. Unity and expansion of the diverse racial units of India can only contribute to the autonomous development of the United States of India or else democratic Swaraj will be an impossibility; and Swaraj, whatever be the connotation of the term, will mean a substitution of the brown bureaucrat in the place of the white one.

A sore in the extremity of a limb takes time to heal as circulation is feeblest towards the end and it is far removed from the heart. The human body affords a striking parallel to an administration. The disabilities and disadvantages due to distance have been summed up by the Government of Bihar in their letter to the Financial Relations Committee on May 29th, 1920. "The development of Bihar and Orissa was hampered in the past by its attachment to Bengal. That Province not unnaturally devoted a large part of its limited resources to develop in and near the capital city of Calcutta, while its distant adjuncts in Bihar and Orissa were neglected." What was true of Bihar and Orissa with Bengal is more true in the case of Orissa with Bihar. Calcutta, the capital city of Bengal—was only 250 miles from the seat of Orissa's capital, while Patna, the capital of Bihar is over 600 miles from Cuttack. Orissa the distant adjunct of the Province of Bihar "not unnaturally" suffers disadvantages and inattention due to distance by a greater degree than she suffered with Bengal. Hence we emphatically declare that the existing areas so far as the Oriya-speaking tracts are concerned are most unsuitable for Legislative and Administrative purposes.

The foregoing sentiments also find an echo in the Parliamentary Speech of Lord Curzon, the Author of the Partition of Bengal, where he made a prophecy the following terms:—

"Take the Orissans. No one has paused to think what they want. You could not know of your secrecy, because you consulted nobody in advance. They want the re-union of the Oriya-speaking people. They want to remain under Calcutta to which they have been attached so long. What is the good of Orissa being tied to the tail of Bihar, where there is no affinity of language or race, with which they have nothing in common and from which they are separated by a great belt of mountains and rivers over which we have never been able to carry a railway. I venture to prophesy that this is a blunder that cannot remain permanent. Were the Orissans an agitating people, which they are not, they would soon make their protest heard. As it is they have been sacrificed without compunction. The same might be said of Chhotanagpur, but I will not labour that point. The fact is, this new Province of yours on the West of Bengal is a bundle of odds and ends which you have thrown together because you did not know what else to do with them. In Bengal you have united Bengalees because they are all of the same race and language, but when you come to these other Provinces, you force into an unnatural union these people of different race and language."

Further an Ex-Minister of Bihar, Mr. M. S. Das, C.I.E., pointed out the Oriya disabilities to the Muddiman Committee in 1925 in most unequivocal terms. We place the whole text with the Bihar Government's comment thereon in Appendix A.

The history of the movement and various difficulties have been set forth at some length in the Book entitled "The Oriya Movement" which we submit herewith as Appendix B*. A rough outline of Franchise is appended in Appendix C. And the financial aspect of the new Province in Appendix D. Some authoritative opinions of those responsible for Indian Administration and Provincial non-Officials are given in Appendix E.

While submitting this rough outline we reserve a fuller observation on these subjects at a later date. Our demand is the same as we put forward before the Montagu and Chelmsford Commission.

For reasons stated above we most sincerely and emphatically demand that all the Oriya-speaking countries be placed under a separate administration or be placed under an administration where the Oriyas will find ample scope for their expansion, peace and contentment and will be propitious for the autonomical development of the Oriya people, so that the benefit of Political and Administrative concessions may not be interloped by an intermediary dominant sister race. We want bread, pray serve us not with stones.

Whatever be the criticisms levelled at the British Administrations by the Indians, their faith in the sense of justice of the British people is not fully shaken. We, on behalf of the Oriya people, approach the Members of the Commission with an unswerving faith in their sense of justice and hope that justice be done, if justice be due, to the Oriya grievance.

* Not printed.

APPENDIX A.

NOTE OF MR. MADHU SUDAN DAS, C.I.E., LATE MINISTER OF BIHAR AND ORISSA.

The reforms were introduced as a remedy to the political situation created by a foreign rule more than a century old. The peasants who form 99 per cent. of the population are ignorant. They do not understand economic principles underlying the administration. They know that their economic condition is growing from bad to worse. They trusted the high caste educated people and had been in the habit of being led by them. When the educated people were disaffected towards the ruling race disaffection permeated the whole social atmosphere. It became a simple race question, people did not stop to enquire into the relative merits of the existing system and the promised Swaraj. Race feeling is the overpowering passion. Race feeling is not directed to a particular race. Race feeling, as history shows, seeks to promote the interest of the race and it does not matter what race's interest clashes with the interest of the race which occupies a vantage ground. History shows that the Jews divided the population of the world into two classes, Jews and Gentiles. The Greeks divided the world's races into Greeks and Barbarians, the Hindus divided the world's population into Hindus and Mlechhas.

The population of this Province has two races, Biharis and Oriyas. A perusal of the reasons given in paragraph 20 of the despatch dated the 25th August 1911 will furnish sufficient justification for the Bihar feeling that Orissa has been tacked to the new province for the benefit of Biharees, as without tackling Orissa Bihar could not claim a Council Government being too small both in area and population.

Once a race is impregnated with the belief that the best interests of another race will be secured by the former's control of the administration, it is not possible to induce the more powerful race to give the inferior race an opportunity to develop a sense of responsibility.

This is illustrated by the strong objection of the British members of the various services to transfer the control of a subject to an Indian Minister. It is nothing but a race question.

It is not possible for an Oriya to hold the office of a Minister in the Bihar and Orissa Government. On account of the presence of the Oriya race, the Biharees will support any Bihari Minister. But if the province had only a single race there would be criticism against an incompetent Bihari Minister. Two dogs will fight over a bone but if while fighting for the bone they see a jackal both the dogs would chase the jackal. The Biharees will not permit an Oriya even to retire honourably, and as Biharees form the majority in the Council His Excellency the Governor is not in a position to examine the situation with an eye to protect the weaker party's self-respect. The development of a sense of responsibility in Orissa under Bihari Minister is a travesty of the Reforms so far as Orissa is concerned.

These arguments must have weighed with the authors of Montagu-Chelmsford report when they suggested the formation of a sub-province of Orissa.

I beg to suggest that a separate Minister should be appointed for Orissa. He will have control over all transferred subjects. It may be necessary to have two Ministers for Bihar, if that is found necessary, an additional post should be created.

As regards the transferred subjects the Minister should be at liberty to select his Secretaries from the members of the services in the Province. All the members of the services do not relish the idea of serving under an Indian Minister. This is natural and I do not find fault with them. The services have been accustomed to see India from England. It is necessary now to see India from India. The standpoint of view makes a great difference. One may see in England the sun enveloped in a mist while the man in India sees his country flooded with sunshine.

Calcutta, M. S. DAS.
The 6th June 1924.

OPINION OF THE GOVERNMENT OF BIHAR AND ORISSA ON THE ABOVE NOTE.

Para. 21 Special Treatment for Orissa. Mr. M. S. Das (vide annexure 11) considers that Orissa should always have a special Minister of its own, apparently to be in charge of all transferred subjects in Orissa. The point does not arise in the present connection but section 52A (1) of the Act provides for placing part of a Governor's province under the administration of a Deputy Governor. It appears to be a question of administrative convenience and financial expediency rather than one connected with the general working of the Government of India Act.

APPENDIX C.

CONSTITUTION AND FRANCHISE OF THE PROPOSED PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT OF ORISSA.

We sketch a rough outline of the future constitution of the Orissa province. The ultimate goal of the people is the same as of other peoples and provinces of India. A federated states of India with full Dominion status, with a central Government to control Army, defence and foreign relations, having power of advice to and supervision over the federated states on the lines of the United States of America.

The provincial Government of Orissa should be autonomous like other provinces. The legislature of the Government should be bicameral and the lower house should consist of 60 to 75 members while the upper house which may be styled "Senate," should consist of 15 to 20 members. For 100,000 individuals there should be a representative in the lower house and the Oriya-speaking country under British administration be divided into constituencies on a population basis, each constituency having an approximate population of 2 lacs and will elect two members for the lower house of the provincial legislature.

Franchise for the lower house shall be a graded one, based on property, income and literacy. The Franchise for the upper house should be based on income or property and will conform to the same standard as do the voters for the Council of State of the Central Legislature. Provision should be made for at least 15 elected members of the Upper House or Senate. There should be at least 5 nominated seats for non-officials in the Senate.

There should be an age limit for candidature to the Council and Senate—25 to 30 being the minimum age respectively. Candidates should comply with the electoral laws prevalent for the time being.

The electorate should be a joint one. There should be reservation of seats on the legislature for Mohammedans on population basis, there being one representative for each 50 thousand inhabitants. Special interests such as Land-holders, Industries and Labour and Depressed Classes should be provided for. In view of the importance of the landholders in the Province of Orissa 15 p.c. seats in the council should be reserved for them. The Mohammedans of Orissa insist on a separate electorate.

Financial Relations :—

A baby Province needs careful nursing and so there ought to be careful adjustments of revenue between the Central and Provincial Government of Orissa. In the case of Bihar, Assam and N.W.F. Province the Central Government contributed liberally until the Provinces could stand on their own legs. This can only be satisfactorily done by parting with certain sources of Imperial revenue to the Provincial Government. Our claim for the new Province to make it stand on her own legs is a sacrifice on the part of Central Government of the Income-tax, salt, export duties on certain goods to the Provincial Revenue. Our estimate of the Provincial Finance is based on that assumption. This demand has the support of the Taxation Enquiry Committee and various non-official legislators.

The Orissa Feudatory States which for over a century were governed by the Commissioner of Orissa are now under a Political Agent, under the Governor-General. In order that the Oriya speaking tracts both "hill and plain" should all remain under one Government we suggest that the Governor General should delegate all powers of supervision etc. to the Governor of Orissa.

The language of the legislature should be Oriya and English.

APPENDIX D.

REVENUE OF THE PROVINCE OF ORISSA.

We have already stated that the Central Government must allot minimum equitable share of revenue —specially when it will be a minor Province like Orissa or N.W.F.P. We have claimed the whole of Income Tax reducing the supertax, export duties on hide and leather and forest produces and salt revenue as Provincial revenue of Orissa. In the light of the foregoing remarks we give here the estimated revenue of greater Orissa which includes all the Oriya-speaking tracts at present lying in different provinces and we are satisfied that our revenue will be above two crores of rupees which in our opinion is quite sufficient for internal administration of Orissa.

These figures are based on figures culled from Departmental Administrative Reports.

Income of the present Division of Orissa in the year 1925 and 1926.

		Income.
(I)	Land Revenue	Rs. 30,53,628/-
(II)	Excise	Rs. 31,52,519/-
(III)	Stamps :—
	(a) Judicial	Rs. 9,69,722
	(b) Non-Judicial ...	Rs. 2,41,708.
	(c) for Angul ...	Rs. 10,000
(IV)	Forests :—
	Puri	Rs. 102,157
	Sambalpur	Rs. 180,207/-
	Angul...	Rs. 91,612
		Rs. 373,976

(V) Mines, Forest and Mis. Revenue (Provincial)			Rs. 61,238
(VI) Local cess, Roads and P.W. incomes :—
Cuttack	...	...	Rs. 2,30,190
Puri ...	...	...	Rs. 1,13,404
Balasore	...	...	Rs. 1,12,679
			Rs. 456,282/-
Sambalpur (Figures are included in land Revenue Account).
(VII) Jails :—
Cuttack	...	...	Rs. 17,805/13 as.
Puri ...	...	...	Rs. 2,784/15 as.
Sambalpur	...	...	Rs. 2,783/3 as.
(VIII) Registration :—
Cuttack	...	...	Rs. 85,533
Balasore	...	...	Rs. 43,412
Puri ...	...	...	Rs. 38,487
Angul...	...	...	Rs. 1,168
Sambalpur	...	...	Rs. 4,418
			Rs. 173,924

Total of Income (I)—(VIII) Rs. 85,15,470.

The land Rev. will undergo an increment of 25 to 30 p.c. after the present settlement in 1929 Rs. 10,00,000/-.

To this total must be added the income on other heads of revenue which may amount to Rs. 5,00,000/-.

From Orissa with Bihar and Orissa we get an annual Revenue of about one crore.

Income-tax and supertax in Ganjam as gathered from Mr. U. M. Sen's report Rs. 40,00,000/-.

Income from Ganjam as per Mr. Sen's report Rs. 38,00,000/-.

Income from other Oriya-speaking tracts, e.g., the District of Singhbhum in Chotanagpur, nine thanas in Bengal, Khariar, Bastar, Padampur, Chandrapur and Malkhurda States etc. in C.P. approximately about Rs. 30,00,000/-.

We may fairly estimate a total revenue on all heads of Orissa to be two crores and twenty lacs.

When Assam was taken over from the Chief Commissioner to be a Governor's Province it had an income of one crore and 75 lacs.

As far as could be gathered from these incomplete figures finance won't stand in the way of creating Orissa a Governor's province just like Assam, if the Government of India and the British people desire to save from extinction a very ancient race, with history, literature, architecture and language of their own.

APPENDIX E.

OPINIONS OF PROMINENT OFFICIALS AND NON-OFFICIALS.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA'S LETTER TO THE GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL, DATED 3RD DECEMBER 1903.

"On the grounds above stated the Government of India are disposed to unite the whole of the Oriya-speaking peoples, both hill and plain, under one administration, and to make that administration Bengal. In other words they would add to Orissa the Oriya-speaking tracts of Sambalpur (615,941 Oriya-speaking people out of a total population of 829,698) and its Feudatory States, the Ganjam District (with the possible exception of one Taluq in which Oriya is said not to be the prevalent language) and the Ganjam and Vizagapatam Agency Tracts. Such a scheme would solve the question of language once and for all. This change would relieve both the Central Provinces and Madras of a troublesome excrescence upon their administrative system; and it would result in handing over the Oriya problem to one Government alone, on a scale and with a unity that would admit of its being treated with consistency and efficiency."

LETTER OF LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR OF BENGAL TO THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA, DATED THE 12TH SEPTEMBER 1904.

"Probably it may be admitted that geographically and ethnologically the Ganjam district and its Agency tract ought to have been under one administration with Orissa proper and with the Oriya-speaking tracts of the Central Provinces, the common bond being the identity of race and the longstanding connection of the Orissa district with the rural tracts of the hills. The ancient history of these tracts seems to indicate that this would have been the suitable arrangement."

THE HON'BLE MR. (NOW SIR HUGH) MCPHERSON, I.C.S., AS CHIEF SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNMENT OF BIHAR AND ORISSA, WROTE TO GOVERNMENT OF INDIA (10th DECEMBER 1928).

"The politicians of Orissa concentrate their attention to the claims of Orissa to a separate provincial administration and to the union with the parent stock of all Oriya-speaking tracts which are now included in the adjacent Provinces."

SIR WILLIAM VINCENT, HOME MEMBER, GOVERNMENT OF INDIA, IMPERIAL LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL (1920).

"I am quite prepared, however, if I can secure the sanction of His Excellency in Council to this course, to have a full investigation of the facts, to ascertain the view of the Local Governments and prepare such materials for the use of the new Governments as may assist them in arriving at a just decision in this matter."

REPORT OF PHILIP-DUFF COMMISSION, 1924.

"There is a genuine, long-standing and deep-rooted desire on the part of the educated classes including the Oriya Zamindars and that whenever the rayots have learnt something of the matters, they are entirely in favour of amalgamation."

H.E. SIR HUGH MCPHERSON, ACTING GOVERNOR, BIHAR AND ORISSA, AT DARBAR CUTTACK, (APRIL 1925).

"Orissa sometimes grumbles about her neglect under the existing regime and calls herself the 'Cinderella' of the new province."

* * * * * * * * *

"That consummation for which all good Oriyas aspire, a reunited Orissa with a University of its own as a first step towards the goal of being completely self-contained."

RAI BAHADUR DWARIKANATH (BIHAR AND ORISSA COUNCIL 1921).

"Even if Orissa is lost to us, I am prepared to say that it will not be fair for us to stand in the way of the aspirations of the people of Orissa. It matters little whether it is a gain or loss to us. Let us sympathise with their aspirations. Let us say distinctly that so far as we are concerned we wish them god-speed, we bless their aspirations and we have every sympathy for them."

THE LATE SIR SURENDRA NATH BANERJEE ON MR. SACHIDANANDA SINHA'S RESOLUTION.

In the Indian Legislative Assembly 1920.

"My friend has referred to the fact that the Oriyas are in a minority all over India, they are in a minority in Bengal, in Bihar, in the Central Provinces and in Madras. What does that mean? It implies that in all matters affecting their well-being the representatives of the Oriya-speaking population have no determining voice, and evil is likely to be aggravated when the Reform Act comes into operation. That seems to me to be an intolerable situation inconsistent with the self-respect of a growing and advancing community.

SIR B. N. SARMA.

(Indian Legislative Council Debates, 1920.)

"Sir, it is because I feel that the future safety and well being of the Oriya-speaking people would consist in their having in time a province of their own and in their not being included in Bihar and Orissa."

THE RAJAH OF KANIKA.

(Indian Legislative Council Debates 1920.)

"Their (Montagu and Chelmsford) conception of the eventual feature of India is a sisterhood of States, self-governing in all matters of purely local or provincial interests in some cases corresponding to the existing provinces, in others perhaps modified in area according to the character and economic interests of their people."

* * * * * * * * *

"Even Mr. Montagu in 1912 in the House of Commons said, that the question might be reconsidered at any time if accumulated evidence is forthcoming."

THE HON'BLE SIR GANESH DUTTA SINGH.

Bihar and Orissa Council 1921.

"If you want to be united, and if you say that some of them in Madras, some in Bengal, some in Bihar and some in Central Provinces and you want they should be in one Province, there is no reason why any one should stand in your way. As some of the speakers have said these are the days of self-determination and if you think that it is to your interest and you say you want to be placed in one province you would certainly have it. I think if any Government has a claim that all the Oriya-speaking people should be placed under it, it is the Bihar Government."

MR. SACHIDANANDA SINHA.

In Indian Legislative Council 1920.

"The proposal made by Sir Herbert Risley on behalf of the Government of India was that the Oriya-speaking tracts should be amalgamated and brought under one administration."

* * * * * * * * * *

"Orissa proper lies within the province of Bengal, and the people of Ganjam suffer in that they have been separated from their brethren; they are foundling children; alien from the more favoured, because better recognised Dravidian races; alien even in the origin to which their ancestry has been traced."

THE HON'BLE SIR DINSHAW E. WACHA.

Indian Legislative Council.

"Looking at it from a broad point of view and at the condition in which small nationalities are struggling all over the world to have independence of their own and from homogenous communities under a single territory, it might be better if the Government of India would consider, perhaps a year or two hence, that nationalities like those of Orissa should be allowed to form a homogenous province of their own."

STRELING'S ACCOUNT OF ORISSA.

In the progress of migration and conquest the Oriya nation carried their name and language over vast extent of territory both on sea shore and on the hills including besides Orissa so-called, a portion of Bengal and Telengana. Occasionally the conquest of Gajapati princes extended into the more remote parts of Telengana and even to the Carnatic."

Criticism on NOTE by Rai Saheb U. N. SEN ON REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE OF GANJAM. (An Addendum to the Oriya Memorandum.)

INTRODUCTORY.

Before going to scrutinise the report of the Special Officer deputed by the Government of Bihar and Orissa to study the financial condition of the District of Ganjam, it is desirable to go into the question of what has been styled "Excluded area." The people of Ganjam never demanded the exclusion of Parlakimedi, Tikali, Sompette, Jeypur and Vizag agencies, neither did the Rajas of those places except Jeypur give an inkling of aversion to amalgamation. On the other hand, they unanimously demand it. The Phillip and Duff Commission Report rather says that even the non-Oriya section of the people of those places clearly indicate their desire to go along with the Zamindars to wherever they go. The Oriyas never demanded Chicacole and its exclusion is justifiable, but no reason could be assigned to the exclusion of the other three Taluks, Jeypur and Vizag agency against the wishes of the Rajas and people of those places. If the figures of these Taluks were properly gone into by the Financial Expert of the Bihar Government his financial statement should have assumed another colour and the imaginary deficit would have disappeared.

1. The report of the Special Officer deputed by the Government of Bihar and Orissa to study the financial condition of the district of Ganjam is almost the only official document of the subject available to the public. On the authority of that report it has now come to be regarded as an accepted fact that the district of Ganjam as a whole is run at a loss of six and a half lakhs of rupees and that the portion of it, excluding Chicacole, Parlakimedi, Somepeta and Tikali which have been treated in the report as excluded area is run at a loss of 11½ lakhs. A closer examination of the report suggests, however, that it should not be taken as a document of unassailable authority. The Special Officer's estimate of revenue is rigidly, perhaps unjustifiably low and is valuable in only so far as it shows that the revenue of the district cannot be less than his estimated figure of 3,863 thousands of rupees. His estimate of expenditure is unduly high, all sorts of possible expenditure which Government may have to undertake in the near or distant future or may not undertake at all, having been taken into account. The whole report reads as if he were a surveyor on behalf of an unwilling purchaser of a property who had instructions not to take any chance on the credit side and not to omit any item on the debit side.

2. However that be, it seems that there is a clear under-estimate in his assessment of revenue of land. To make the matter clear, the following table is taken from the Special Officer's note on land revenue :—

CRITICISM ON NOTE ON REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE OF GANJAM. [Continued.

	Original (i.e., figures supplied by Madras Govt.) (thousands of repees).	Revised calculations (i.e., Mr. U. N. Sen's revised calculations) (thousands of rupees).
April, 1923, to June, 1923 (3 months) ...	1,987	367
July, 1923, to June, 1924 (1 year) ...	2,270	2,270
July, 1924, to June, 1925 (1 year) ...	2,505	2,505
July, 1925, to March 1926 (9 months)	2,149	2,149
Total ...	8,911	7,291
Deduct cess levied in Zamindari and inam lands for three years ending March, 1926	1,294	1,294
Deduct Raiyatiwari cesses for three years ending March, 1926	500	500
	7,117	5,497
Average for three years ending March, 1926	2,372	1,832

It will be seen that the average annual revenue of 2,372 thousands has been reduced by Mr. Sen to 1,832 thousands. He explains that there was an error in the figures originally supplied by the Madras Government for the three months—April, 1923 to June, 1923. Granted, but why should the revenue be 367 thousands against a gross annual revenue of 2,270 thousands in Fasli year 1333 (July, 1923, to June, 1924) and of Rs. 2,505 thousands in Fasil year 1333 (July, 1824, to June, 1925)? Does 367 represent the net revenue instead of gross revenue? In Ganjam revenue is paid in four kists against two kists in Orissa. We should therefore take a quarter revenue paid into treasury which Mr. Sen does not appear to have done. Again, if we take the average of the actual revenues of the two years 1333 and 1334, the annual average comes to 2,388 and one-fourth of that representing three months' income comes to 597. And if we take actual figures for nine months of the year, 1925–26, an approximate revenue of three months will amount to Rs. 716 thousands Taking the average between the lowest and the highest figures (497 and 716 respectively) the average comes to 606. It is not clear from Mr. Sen's report that 1,987 represents the actual figure for the whole Fasli year 1332, but supposing it were so, a quarter's revenue should be 497 thousands (gross revenue) and not 367 thousands, as assumed by Mr. Sen. Again from the three years' gross revenue of 8,911 as estimated by Madras Government and of 7,291 thousands as revised by Mr. Sen a deduction of 1,794 thousands has been made by Mr. Sen on account of cess payable to the District Board. In Orissa cess is assessed separately from land revenue, but in Ganjam it forms an integral part of land revenue, though the revenue from cess is paid to the District Board as in Orissa. Therefore any mistake in calculating gross revenue produces a similar mistake in the amount of cess revenue. As Mr. Sen reduced the gross revenue by 16½ lakhs he should, for the purpose of deduction, have reduced the cess revenue proportionately. He has not done this, with the result that the net land revenue has unduly been under-estimated. Cess revenue in the original estimate was about 20 per cent. of the gross land revenue, so that after necessary corrections, Government's share of the average annual land revenue stands as below :—

	Mr. Sen's revised estimate.	Correct revised estimate.
Gross revenue in three years ...	7,291	7,531 [7,291+(606—367)]
Deduct cess ...	1,794 (Madras Govt. figures)	1,506 (20 per cent. of 7,530)
Net revenue in three years ...	5,497	6,024
Annual average	1,832	2,008

The revenue of the district as a whole thus comes to (as calculated by Mr. Sen) 3,863

Add for mistake as above ... 176 (2,008—1,832)

Total 4,039

This reduces the deficit in the district as a whole from 651 thousands to 475 thousands or, say, from 6½ lakhs to less than 4¾ lakhs.

3. There is a very strong presumption of another unconscious fallacy at the end of his report (Para. 46 of Mr. Sen's Report). Mr. Sen's calculations of revenue are not based on the recommendations of Phillip and Duff Commission inasmuch as they recommend the inclusion of Parlakimedi, Tikali and Somepeta in Orissa. Mr. Sen has calculated the revenue and expenditure of what may, for want of a better description, be called the predominantly Oriya speaking tracts of the district as follows :—

	Revenue in thousands.	Expenditure.	Surplus (+) or deficit(—)
For the whole district ...	3,863	4,514	—651
Deduct amount for the excluded area	1,357	872	+485
Net for predominantly Oriys speaking tracts ...	2,506	3,642	—1,136

A glance at the above statement will show that though the district as a whole is in deficit to the tune of 6½ lakhs, yet that portion of it which is treated as an excluded area has, according to Mr. Sen, a surplus revenue of 485 thousands. To the ordinary mind this is an inconceivable situation. How does it happen that only that portion of the district which it is desired to transfer to Orissa is maintained at a loss? The answer is suggested by Mr. Sen himself. He subjected the revenue of the district to a severe scrutiny but in respect of the excluded area he accepted the untested figures supplied by Madras. (Para. 46(2) of Mr. Sen's Report.) For instance—

(1) He made a deduction of 540 a year under land revenue in the district as a whole (para. 7 of Report, see under V—Land Revenue) but made no corresponding reduction for the excluded area. Assuming that the land revenue of the excluded area is one-fourth of the total revenue, a deduction of 135 should have been made on this account, as below :—

	Rs.
Deduction in three years' revenue	1,620
Annual average	540
One-fourth of above	135

(2) He did not allow reduction in revenue to be made for the excluded area on account of cost price of opium—see para. 8 of his report.

Opium is purchased from the Government of India, the cost of this was 157 thousands for the Ganjam district in 1925–26. This is shown as an expenditure in the accounts of treasury, but not in the accounts of sub-treasuries. Opium is issued to licence-holders both from treasuries and sub-treasuries at about double the cost price. Therefore double the cost price is shown as the revenue of a sub-treasury or a treasury and the net revenue should be an amount equal to the cost price. In the case of the district as a whole, Mr. Sen has taken the net revenue only, but in the case of the excluded area he must necessarily have taken the gross revenue. It is not possible to say what the net revenue in the excluded area should be, but it may be taken as about one-fourth of 157, i.e., 39 thousands.

(3) Again under XIII.—Irrigation, Madras Government had shown no revenue, but in Mr. Sen's report a deficit of 90 thousands was entered, of which, according to para. 14(b)(2) of his report, the Ganjam Minor River System in Chicacole is responsible for 30 thousands. This 30 thousands at least should have been deducted from the figure 1,357 which he regards as the revenue of the excluded area.

(4) On the expenditure side he added a sum of 37 thousands under "Stationery and Printing" to the expenditure of the district, but could not have allowed proportionate increase in the expenditure of the excluded area, as his figure is taken from the sub-treasuries which do not include indirect expenditure like this. Moreover in calculating the expenditure of the excluded area he has taken the accounts of 1925–26 only, but in working out the expenditure of the district he has taken the highest possible figure. Thus the revenue of the excluded area should not have been taken at more than 1,357−(135+39+30)=1,153 and its expenditure should not have been less than 891. Thus according to his own methods of calculations and allowing for obvious mistakes the deficit in the predominantly Oriya speaking tracts works out to

	Rs.
District revenue	4,087
Deduct revenue of excluded area	1,153
Revenue of the "predominantly Oriya speaking tracts" ...	2,934
District expenditure	4,514
Deduct expenditure of excluded area	891
Expenditure of predominantly Oriya tracts	3,623
Deficit in ditto	689

against 11¼ lakhs reported by Mr. Sen.

4. There must have been other mistakes which cannot be readily detected by the unpractised eye. We have not the advantage, which Mr. Sen had, of having recourse to all the records of Government, of advice of experts like the Accountant-General, Board of Revenue, and Finance Department of Madras. Our conclusions are based on the statistics and details given by Mr. Sen himself. In my opinion, even if we assume that the deficit is not shared by excluded area, there is no reason to suppose that that area alone is surplus to the extent of 485 thousands. The utmost that can be conceded is that revenue and expenditure balance in the excluded area. There can be no doubt that the assumed deficit of 11¼ lakhs is greatly exaggerated.

5. What has been stated above is a mere restatement of conclusions reached by Mr. Sen, allowing for obvious mistakes. It does not mean that his conclusions are accepted. He has in fact dealt with the subject from a view-point which was really a financial survey on behalf of a Government unwilling to take over charge of the district. He has reported not on the question whether Ganjam is paying its way but whether Ganjam will pay its way after adopting for the district the best standards of administration both under the Madras and the Bihar systems. We shall illustrate our point in the following paras. by examining the standard of expenditure recommended by Mr. Sen under some of the heads:—

6. 8 and 8A. Forest.—Mr. Sen worked out the probable expenditure in 1926–27 to be 199 thousands to which he added 28 thousands on account of the Saw Mills of Russelkunda, thus giving a total of 227 thousands rounded to 230 thousands (Para. 12 of Mr. Sen's Report.) Now this loss of 28 thousands on the Russelkunda Saw Mills is not a real loss but a fictitious one. The Saw Mills at Russelkunda worth more than four lakhs of rupees were completed in 1921–22. It appears that the capital had been financed from ordinary revenues and no interest had actually to be paid to any one, but in 1924–25 either because the accounts were commercialised or because there was some change in the system of keeping Government accounts, the capital invested in the Mills appears to have been treated as a part of the loan fund. Whether the Madras Government actually borrowed money in 1924–25 to finance its ordinary revenues is not clear. In their reply to a question put in the Madras Legislative Council on 8.9.1928 by Sriman Biswanath Das Mahasaya, M.L.C., the Government of Madras published a copy of the statistics furnished to the Government of Bihar and Orissa regarding the revenue and expenditure of Ganjam. They have specifically mentioned therein that interest has to be paid to the Government of India on capital sunk in the Rusikula Irrigation System, but they make no reference there to the payment of interest to the Government of India on account of the Saw Mills. The presumption therefore is that the money spent or advanced was found from the Provincial Exchequer and no interest is paid thereon. There is therefore no reason why this interest should be taken into account in examining the financial condition of the district, it being merely a paper transaction like emptying one pocket to fill another. We may assume, however, that interest has to be paid, say to Government of India. What we wish to emphasise is that under the commercial system of accounts, in spite of a depreciation fund of Rs. 15,000 having been opened out, of which nothing has been spent so far, a sum not less than Rs. 20,000 is debited to the accounts of the Mill, year by year, as depreciation of buildings, machinery, etc. This amount has certainly not to be paid to any one and its omission would mean a corresponding profit of over Rs. 20,000. This including a profit of about 8, which the Mill is latterly making, would exactly cover interest. For the purpose of calculating the finances of the district what is required is to find out the direct receipts from and expenditure on the Mill, allowing for interest and not commercial profit and loss. We cannot quote the direct receipts and expenditure, but from what we can make out from the balance sheet there is no actual loss on the Mill. The expenditure under Forest should therefore be taken at most to be as 199 thousands and not as 230 thousands. It may be noted that taking the expenditure in March to be $\frac{20+27}{2}=23\frac{1}{2}$ or 24, the average expenditure in three years figures given by Mr. Sen works out to $\frac{175+158+(172+24)}{3}=529$ or say 176. As the Forest Department generally works on a profit, an income of 178 and expenditure of 176 is more probable and should be taken as the standard.

May we point out here that if the excluded areas are not transferred to Orissa it may not be necessary to maintain a Divisional Forest Officer at Ganjam in addition to a second Imperial Service Officer at Russelkunda and the Provincial Service Officers at Berhampur. Cannot the Divisional Forest Officer, Khurda, add Ganjam to his charge? This is a point which Mr. Sen has not examined.

7. 5. Land Revenue and 22. General Administration.—As there are no Divisional Commissioners in Madras, senior officers are probably placed in outlying tracts as Collectors, but even so an officer on the maximum pay of Rs. 2,500 cannot always be placed in charge of the district. (Paras. 18 and 19 of the Report.) Mr. Sen should have based his calculation on average pay instead of on the highest possible actual expenditure. He has also exaggerated expenditure in other respects. For example, under Works expenditure actuals in 1925–26 were 50, and probable in 1926–27 was 68, but Mr. Sen adopted 75 without any reason whatsoever. The average expenditure was worked out to 964 in the Collector's Office. Mr. Sen raises it to 1,035 which was the probable actual at the time he collected the figures. 1,000 which is the mean between Mr. Sen's and the Collectorate figures would be a fair average.

8. Stamps 17 and 24. Administration of Justice.—No allowance has been made on the revenue side for court fees payable in suits in the Madras High Court. It is also doubtful whether with a reduced area there will be sufficient work for a District Judge at Berhampur. The Judge may take up one Orissa district and by process of adjustment the revenues of Bihar and Orissa are likely to be proportionately relieved of some expenditure on Additional Judges.

9. 31. Education.—Under Education, Mr. Sen found that the expenditure in 1925–26 under Grant-in-aid and in 1926–27 under Establishment was 780 a year. (Para. 26 of Mr. Sen's Report.) He, however, rejected this and took the actuals of 1926–27. He found that 713 had been spent up to February, 1927, in 11 months and adding to it 133 which is the maximum in March during three years as the probable expenditure in March, 1927, arrived at the annual expenditure of 846. To this higher figure he has again added another 20 on account of two new schemes costing 20 in all. We are not informed when effect will be given to these or whether they have been finally approved nor do we know whether these will benefit the district only or any larger area. It is doubtful whether this sum of 20 thousands should be taken into account, when the expenditure was not being incurred at the moment. We may omit these for the present. Mr. Sen's apprehensions about the Ganjam students going to Madras and consequent contributions is fictitious. It is rather strange that Mr. Sen jumps from Madras to Patna, without taking any note of a first Grade College at Cuttack, where at present the Oriyas of Ganjam do not find place, as they are treated as aliens of another Province, though domiciles of this Province find an easy berth in the College.

10. Medical 32.—Here again it is doubtful whether the additional 30 for dispensaries is justifiable. It should therefore be omitted from present calculations as expenditure is not incurred at present.

11. 41. Civil Works.—It is here that the capacity of the Financial Expert to bend statistics to his will has been given the full play. (Para. 37 of Mr. Sen's Report.) Mr. Sen got 277 "as more or less normal" annual Civil Expenditure under this head. To this he added 75 as Public Works Expenditure thus making a total of 352. This did not, however, satisfy him. He must look forward and allow "something" for the programme of work to be carried out in the "near" future. The "something" turns out to be 45 lakhs and the "near future" to be 18 years, seeing that he has recommended an additional expenditure of 2¼ lakhs a year. Taking his projects one by one, there was a programme of 701 to be completed by 1931–32 for which 178 was required in 1927–28. If Madras have not put it off on the ground of uncertainty as to whether Ganjam will pass out of their hands, in which case the Government of Bihar and Orissa can put it off on the ground of financial stringency, this programme will have been completed by the time Ganjam is transferred to Orissa. Secondly, regarding the model village for Government officials, and thirdly, regarding a group of projects, costing about 16 lakhs, it is not stated if there is any need for hurry over the matter. Then the Collector's Office and the Taluk Office, which if urgent, Madras Government will have completed them before the amalgamation is effected. Then the police programme of about 15 thousands a year, and lastly, a group of projects for which Government may have to find funds. I ask, if the proposals of the Road Development Committee go through, will not Ganjam get a share of the additional revenue? The fact is Mr. Sen was peeping into the gloomy future without turning his eye towards anything bright, so much so that he forgot to take into account the amount which is already spent in Civil Works. Though expenditure on roads and buildings and bridges is continuous, the completion of a project means the liberation of money for taking up another. He has given a full list of projects which may have to be taken up during the next two decades and he says that about 2½ lakhs will be required for these annually. Now what is the difficulty in financing these from the grant of 191 to local bodies and 75 which is spent directly by Government or how will this 191 and 75 be utilised, if 2½ lakhs are required for all the future programmes. The fact seems to be that he prepared a big list of projects and got frightened into thinking that these required additional funds, forgetting that he had already included 268 thousands in the normal expenditure which would be available for these purposes. Let us examine this from another standpoint. The total provision in Bihar and Orissa under Civil Works excluding Angul is 7,382 in 1928–29 which works out on average to 369 thousands per district. If the Government of Bihar and Orissa are spending 369 annually in districts already under their charge what reason is there to say that they will spend double that sum in a district which is newly transferred to them. Is Madras Government neglecting Ganjam? Are there no cracked buildings in Bihar and Orissa? Are roads fully provided? Every river bridged? Either say the Government of Madras is inefficient and neglectful or say you are deliberately setting up a financial scare to put off the heart's desire of a dismembered and downtrodden race. It may be pointed out, however, that the Executive Engineer of Ganjam will probably be able to take over Puri district and part of Cuttack, thus enabling the Executive Engineer, Cuttack, to take over Angul. The pay of the District Engineer, Angul, will thus be saved. It is most unjustifiable to add 2½ lakhs to the standard recurring expenditure, which should be omitted altogether.

12. Allowing for these corrections as suggested above, the revenue and expenditure account stand as follows :—

		Rs.
Revenue of district as worked out by Mr. Sen		3,863
Add for mistakes under land revenue		176
Total		4,039
Expenditure as calculated by Mr. Sen		4,514
Deduct :—
	Rs.
8 and 8A—Forests	54
Land Revenue and General Administration	35
Education	20
Medical	30
41. Civil Works	248
		387
Standard Expenditure		4,127
Net deficit ...		88

The deficit of the district as a whole thus works out to 88 thousands. If we suppose that it is distributed evenly between the excluded and the other areas the amount will be reduced still further.

As against this there is every possibility of savings in existing establishment under Forest, Judicial and 41—Civil Works by redistribution of charges. On the whole it may be said that though Ganjam may not be a paying district from the financial standpoint there is not going to be any serious loss over it. British India as a whole is paying its way. The provinces somehow manage to maintain themselves decently. The average districts must be contributing their quota to the general revenues and there is no reason to suppose that Ganjam will be the only exception of a deficit district. Mr. Sen applied a most rigid and parsimonious scrutiny to income and was as liberal as possible with expenditure. It is no wonder that a deficit of nearly 35 per cent. or half the revenue was declared by him.

THE FALLACY OF A DEFICIT:—A Reply to Mr. U. N. SEN, Financial Expert of Bihar and Orissa, on The Revenue and Expenditure of Ganjam, by Biswanath Das, B.L., M.L.C., Ganjam.

A REPLY TO MR. U. N. SEN.

Mr. U. N. Sen was deputed by the Bihar and Orissa Government in March 1927 to make further enquiries on the figures furnished by the Madras Government regarding the revenue and expenditure of Oriya-speaking tracts. The present Ganjam District with the Agency Division consists of 15 Taluqs and Sub-Taluqs. They are :—

1. The Agency Division.
   - I. Balliguda.
   - II. Udaygiri.
   - III. Ramagiri Udaygiri.
2. The Ghumsur Division.
   - I. Ghumsur.
   - II. Aska.
   - III. Surada.
3. The Chhatrapore Division.
   - I. Chhatrapore.
   - II. Kodala.
4. Berhampore Division.
   - I. Berhampore.
   - II. Ichhapore.
   - III. Sompetta.
5. Chicacole Division.
   - I. Chicacole.
   - II. Narassannapetta.
   - III. Tekkali.
   - IV. Parlakhemundi.

The Agency Division covers 3,500 sq. miles while Ganjam District 4,798 sq. miles with a population of 18,35,562. Mr. Sen's report not only forgets to include the Jeypore Agency extending over 12,000 sq. miles with a population over 10,10,000 with a preponderating element but also excludes the revenue taluqs and sub-taluqs of Chicacole, Narasannapetta, Tekkali, Parlakhemundi and Sompetta with a population of about 7½ lakhs extending over an area of 1,800 sq. miles. It is not the purpose of this rejoinder to commend or condemn this exclusion but only to show that neither Treasury figures nor his standard figures are based on a correct understanding of facts.

His Figures.—Some of his figures are based on a comparison of the Treasury accounts, books of Accountant General's office and figures supplied for the preparation of Administration Report. There is therefore little to question the accuracy of certain items of income of Ganjam District for the three years of 1923–24 to 1925–26 given in Appendix A. Nor have we very much to say against the average of these three years. He then suggests his standard figures which are not only incorrect but are also misleading. To illustrate the point, the average receipts of the District as per Treasury accounts is Rs. 45.84 lakhs while the average expenditure comes to Rs. 37.81 lakhs. Brushing aside the surplus by a curious process of jugglery he arrives at the conclusion that Ganjam is a deficit district and that this deficit may come to Rs. 11.36 lakhs. It is the purpose of this rejoinder to show that Ganjam has never been a deficit district, that the Treasury accounts are correct but are inaccurately noted by Mr. Sen and that these 9 Taluqs taken by themselves have always a plus balance.

Before I begin my observations I wish to present the reader an account of the incomes of the Province as a whole during these three years :—

1923–24	16.47	Crores.
1924–25	16.27	,,
1925–26	16.41	,,

It is seen that the year 1924–25 was the worst year on record for the reason that there were severe floods in the North-East Coast called the Circars and the West Coast of the Presidency causing breaches of irrigation works and crop failures. I quote the following from the report on settlement of the Land Revenue for Fasli 1333 dated 29th April 1925 from the last page reviewed by the Government.

"There was exceptionally heavy rainfall during both the monsoons in certain areas which caused local floods in Malabar, the Northen Circas and Tinnevelly * * *" "Relief operations under the famine code were conducted in parts of Ganjam, Bellary and Anantapore. Remissions were granted to the extent of Rs. 24.04 lakhs as against Rs. 8.21 lakhs in the previous fasli." This clearly shows that the cyclone of November 1923–24 had its after-effects in the year 1924–25. The receipts under one and Revenue had necessarily to be reduced owing to the heavy remissions which government had to give as the result of cyclone. The actuals of these three years therefore represent the minimum receipts. On the other hand heavy expenditure had to be incurred in repairing breaches of irrigation works, in appointing special staff to estimate remission and also loans under the Agriculturists' Loan Act and the Land Improvement Loans Act. The relief operations noted above combined with cyclonic repairs have also increased the spending capacity of the Public Works Department. The Treasury Accounts of revenue and expenditure of these three years are not therefore a safe guide for the normal receipts not even for the normal expenditure. Being ignorant of these conditions Mr. Sen arbitrarily enhances his standard figures of expenditure to the highest pitch. Thus under Civil Works (P.W.D.) his average treasury actuals come to Rs. 2.75 lakhs in forests, he suggests a standard of 2.30 lakhs without giving any treasury figures.

His calculations of the expenditure for these five Taluqs proposed to be excluded are equally defective. These figures leave out of account the proportionate share of expenditure incurred in the shape of pay, establishment, contingencies etc., both of office and of officers of every Head of Administration in the District. Not content with all these omissions he cuts down the receipts of the District. The receipts under Land and Revenue as per Treasury account of these three years have on the average been shown as Rs. 23.72 lakhs. The figures given in reply to my interpellation No. 448 dated 7–9–28 correspond to this amount. But Mr. Sen would not agree to anything less than Rs. 18.32 lakhs as his standard figure. With these general observations I invite the reader to a discussion of the item.

REVENUE OF GANJAM DISTRICT.

Income Tax.—I proceed to deal with certain important items of Mr. Sen's account given in Appendix 1 and 2. His first item is tax on income. This is an imperial source from which the Madras Government only gets a share as provided in the Devolution Rules. Mr. Sen does not give us the average receipts under this head of the last three years though he was furnished with these figures by the Madras Government. In reply to my interpellation answered in the September sitting of this year the total revenue of these three years has been stated to be Rs. 6,41,368. Thus the annual average comes to Rs. 2,14,000 in round figures which is much more than the income for 1920–21. The total for Tekkali, Sompetta, Parlakhemundi and Chicacole Taluqs has been stated to be Rs. 63,000 in round figures. The assessed income under Devolution Rule 15 now exceeds Rs. 50 lakhs. The income under this head may safely therefore be fixed at Rs. 15 thousands.

Land Revenue.—The income under this head includes Peshcush, Jodi revenue from village service, both proprietary and ryotwari, sale proceeds of waste lands and land revenue including ryotwari, miscellaneous, etc. The average receipts of three years under the head have been correctly stated by U. N. Sen in his Appendix 1 as Rs. 23·72 lakhs. This agrees with the figures furnished by the government of Madras to my interpellation quoted above while Mr. Sen suggests Rs. 18.32 lakhs as his standard.

In explaining the difference he speaks of certain wrong calculations, i.e., Rs. 19·87 lakhs being noted in place of 3¾ lakhs. He then furnishes certain tables in proof of his above statements which is confusion worse confounded. The statements instead of showing the final March Treasury actuals for each of these three years speak of treasury accounts of April 23 to June 1923, July 23 to June 1924, July 1924 to June 25 and lastly July 25 to March 1926. One fails to see how this roundabout course goes to disapprove the accuracy of the treasury actuals furnished by the Government of Madras to the Government of Bihar and Orissa and to me in reply to an interpellation.

Again in reply to my interpellation dated 13–2–26 Madras Government stated that the land revenue and the peshcush from the District of Ganjam alone for 1921–22 amount to Rs. 17·52 lakhs and for 1922–23 Rs. 17·70 lakhs. These sums do not include the incomes under the head of Land Revenue of the three Taluqs of the Agency Division, as also revenues of some of the minor sub-heads of Ganjam District classed under Land Revenue. A further proof of the inaccuracy of the figures in his last statement (details) is seen from the fact that Rs. 4.08 lakhs have been wrongly noted as against Rs. 5.14 lakhs under the head of peshcush in permanently settled areas (vide Administration Report—Land Revenue for 1926–27). Similarly under the head of Ryotwari and miscellaneous for the same year Rs. 12.51 lakhs is wrongly noted for Rs. 13.65 lakhs while the collection for 1926–27 according to statement No. 10 of Settlement of Land Revenue administration is Rs. 14.10 lakhs. Added to these a number of small items such as incomes of cattle compounds. Agency toll-gates receipts' process fees and many similar items with tens of thousands of rupees have been left out of account. All these carry an undoubted inference that no case has been made out to reject the Treasury figures of the Madras Government.

Again in the same table (details) an average deduction of more than 5 lakhs a year (in place of Rs. 3.6 lakhs) is shown annually as advance given to Local Bodies for Land Cess. If actual dues from land cess in place of these heavy advances are deducted from the total income Land Revenue, the income of the Ganjam District under this head ranges from 20 to 21 lakhs of rupees. Looked therefore from any point of view the tables of Mr. Sen are misleading and inaccurate. I have already stated that the year 1923–24 started with an apprehension of famine and closed with cyclone. Government reports are quoted how the province was given a remission of 24 lakhs as against 8 lakhs a year as remission and how loans to agriculturists were freely given with special staff from which Ganjam had her due share. Thus the three years taken by Mr. Sen had not only the minimum income from land revenue but also the maximum expenditure by way of remission, etc., as also repairs to breaches, irrigation works, etc.

Forests.—Neither the income nor the expenditure under this seems to have been properly estimated while the incomes are cut down the expenditure is unnecessarily over-estimated. Thus in the administration report of 1924–25 the income is shown as Rs. 2·35 lakhs and in 1926–27 as Rs. 2·16 lakhs. Mr. Sen states that the income of 1924–25 is abnormal as they include moneys realised from the commercial undertaking of the previous year. The amount under question is Rs. 46.6 thousand, recoveries from government commercial undertakings. We are not told how much of this represents sales of the previous year and there is nothing to believe why this unprofitable sawmill, kept under the system of commercial audit, keeps in arrears such a big sum of money. In the revenue account of 1924–25 Rs. 94,000 and of 1926–27 Rs. 99,354 (at page 124 of Part I) is shown in the administration report as the annual sale of timber through Government agency to the sawmill. The audit reports clearly show that the Government was supplying logs to the mill at a flat rate of 2½ annas and 4 annas when the actual price of rejected logs was ranging between 6 annas to 8 per cubic foot. It is therefore expected that the income under this sub-head from all kinds of logs would at least double itself. The mill has now been closed from 1st July 1928. This reduces the spending capacity of the forest department in the district as also the investment of sums like Rs. 25 thousands during the year 1924–25 or a loss of Rs. 97 thousands in 1926–27 on its sawmill. Items like the expenditure on roads, buildings and conservancy exceeding Rs. 10 thousands may not be found necessary, while establishment, travelling allowance and contingencies of officers will have to be reduced. In reply to my interpellation answered on 8th September 1928 Government stated that the pay of all officers, establishment allowances, travelling allowance and contingencies amount to Rs. 1.05 lakhs while the Administration Report for 1926–27 fixed them at Rs. 1,00,473. Like other districts the formation of Forest Panchayats in Ganjam will further reduce this expenditure leaving aside Rs. 50,000 for protection, improvement of forests, conservancy and works which approximates the administration reports, we may safely fix the expenditure under this head at Rs. 1½ lakhs and income at Rs. 2½ lakhs.

Registration.—The income is progressive (i.e. Rs. 98 thousands in 1927). The registration fee alone is brought to its old level from April 1928. Its average income may therefore be kept at Rs. 80 cutting down the gross by about Rs. 20 and the expenditure at Rs. 60 thousands.

Excise.—The income under this head has been correctly stated in the Treasury actuals of 1923–24 and 1924–25 as Rs. 12·25 and Rs. 11·52 lakhs. In reply to my interpellation of 13th February 1926 Government furnished Rs. 11·45, 12·04, 11·53. There was a great fall in the Excise Revenues of the Madras Government in these years and specially in 1921–22 due to Non-co-operation. Since then the revenue under this head shows a steady increase as may be seen from these figures—

Accounts of	1922–23	...	Rs. 4·88	Crores.
,,	1926–27	...	Rs. 5·10	,,
Revised estimate	1927–28	...	Rs. 5·20	,,
Budget estimate	1928–29	...	Rs. 5·24	,,

These figures clearly prove that there has been a progressive rise in this revenue. No case is therefore made out why the revenue for 1925–26 should be Rs. 11·01 lakhs. These figures for 1924–25 quoted by Mr. Sen as Rs. 11·52 lakhs do not seem to be accurate as the government's reply to my interpellation quoted above fixes the same at Rs. 11,53 lakhs. I must confess that I could not get the necessary information on this head for want of time. There is nothing in the administration report or in any budget memoranda of any year showing such heavy fall in the excise revenue from Ganjam. While disputing the accuracy of income for 1925–26 I fail to see why Mr. Sen should further reduce this average by Rs. 34 thousands. No reason has been shown why the expenditure should exceed the average of the two years shown in the account. I therefore accept the average of the treasury actuals of Rs. 11.59 lakhs for the time being as correct as also the average expenditure of Rs. 75 thousands.

Medical.—The expenditure under this head on the average is 1.01 lakhs, while the suggested standard is Rs. 1.34 lakhs. At page 112 of the Administration Report of the Department for 1926 Government contribution under all heads in the District and the Ganjam Agency amount to Rs. 60.2 thousands. This excludes the pay of the District Medical Officer, his office and establishment as also the contribution for a few rural dispensaries started after the said administration report with an annual contribution of Rs. 500 each. I therefore suggest Rs. 1.10 lakhs as the maximum standard figure for the purpose.

LAND REVENUE AND GENERAL ADMINISTRATION.

There seems to be a lot of miscalculation under this head. Mr. Sen thus summarises his result (in thousands) :—

(a) Collectors and Magistrates in the District, including establishment	Rs.	89
(b) Treasury establishment ...	Rs.	30
(c) Sub-Divisional Magistrates, their establishment, allowances and contingencies, etc.	Rs.	104
(d) Taluq establishment ...	Rs.	192
(e) Village establishment ...	Rs.	471
(f) Process serving	Rs.	9
(g) Works Expenditure ...	Rs.	75
(h) Audit and Travelling Allowance of M. L. Cs. ...	Rs.	11
	Rs.	981 a year

A reading of this reveals the fact that (a) and (c) are mere repetitions, since both these include the pay of the four Sub-Divisional Officers drawing Rs. 39 thousands a year. The expenditure under this head does not include the retrenchment of village establishment effected after 1926 and reduction of establishment in the District after the separation of Salt and Income Tax. The sum of Rs. 9.81 lakhs representing all expenditure was not then drawn in the treasury accounts of those years. The reply to my interpellation answered on the 8th Sept., 1928, shows an expenditure of Rs. 1.24 lakhs, while budget estimate for the year 1927–28 under the head amounts to Rs. 9.30 lakhs. Taking the treasury actuals of any of these three years on reply to my interpellation to my budget estimate for 1927–28, we get less than the standard figures suggested only under general administration. In any calculation the expenditure on both these items does not exceed Rs. 9.64 lakhs.

IRRIGATION.

There are three irrigation systems in the District i.e., the Rushikulya, Nagavali and the Ganjam minor irrigation system, including the rivers of Langulya and Vamsadhara. Besides these there are 2,460 irrigation tanks in charge of revenue and P.W.D. Officers, who also look after buildings and roads in the agency tracts. Under the 3 heads, i.e., XIII, XIV and XVI Irrigation, he estimates the revenue at Rs. 118 lakhs. The revenue derived from these irrigation works have not therefore been properly noted. In reply to my interpellations on the 13th February, 1926, at page 570 of the Madras Council Proceedings, the Government state that the revenue under Irrigation in Ganjam District amounts to 6.15 and 6.13 lakhs respectively for the years 1921-22 and 1922-23. Table 8-A at 93 and 94 from the Administration Report, Part II, on Irrigation for 1926-27, confirms the above figures.

VIII–A.

I. Extract from page 93 and 94 of the Administration Report, Part II, Irrigation for 1926–27 :—

———	Share due to old irrigation.	Total Revenue due to improvement.	Works Expenses direct & indirect.	Old main.
Rushikulya ...	67.0	197.0	123.6	7.6
Nagavali ...	37.4	84.2	27.7	3.9
Ganjam Minor irrigation works	95.0	65.1	56.0	6.4

(N.B.—The figures are in thousands of rupees.)

The gross receipts of these three systems amount to Rs. 5,45 lakhs, which have not been brought to account by Mr. Sen under the head of revenue, as also the income directly due to minor Irrigation for the year Rs. 1.82 lakhs given at 141 and 142 of the Administration Report. The interest on capital outlay of these systems under Devolution Rule 24 is 3½ per cent. The Ganjam minor irrigation system never brings less than 5½ per cent. net return, while the Nagavali system 3½ per cent., and the Rusikulya 1½ to 1¾ p.c. on the capital outlay. The share due to old irrigation amounts to Rs. 199.4 thousands in these three systems. Under rule 24 of the Devolution Rules interest on all these three systems is to be calculated at 3½ p.c. If the receipts under old revenue are added, the income always exceeds the expenditure. The gross receipts from all these works therefore amount to a sum of Rs. 7.27 lakhs. Having shown the revenue I proceed to examine figures relating the expenditure. Since irrigation works are controlled and worked by the P.W.D. Officers, discussion of both these items in this place is necessary.

The following are the items of expenditure on irrigation, Civil Works and interest on loans on irrigation works in the district.

1. The pay of the Executive Engineer, 3 Sub-Divisional Officers, their staff, allowances, T.A. and contingencies ...	Rs.	89
2. Grant to local bodies	Rs.	191
3. Maintenance of minor irrigation works by Civil and P.W.D. Officers	Rs.	75
4. Civil works expenditure ...	Rs.	75
5. Minor irrigation works by P.W.D. Officers	Rs.	43
6. Total working expenses of 3 river systems Rs. 2.05 lakhs, deducting Rs. 70 thousands under establishment as the expenditure under direction and execution are already included in No. 1 (vide Administration Reports) ...	Rs.	135
7. Interest on the capital outlay of 3 river systems	Rs.	225
	Rs.	833

The figures given in items 1 to 5 are those adopted by Mr. Sen in his Appendix II under the heads of Irrigation and Civil works under grant to local bodies.

In item 2 the normal figures amount to Rs. 1.60 lakhs both for trunk roads at the rate of Rs. 500 per miles and Rs. 89 thousands for the II class roads and general resources of the District Board. The rest (i.e., 191–160–31) represents the special grants due to cyclone in 1923–24, which ought to have been excluded. Similarly, items 3 and 4 represent the maximum expenditure on those works. Mr. Sen speaks of certain pending schemes. The Bahuda bridge is on the trunk road and has been practically completed. Other schemes involving non-recurring expenditure relate to the development of the Agency. Under the law the development of backward tracts is a charge on the Government of India. Having, however, claimed these backward tracts, reserving our right to claim the expenditure on the tracts from the central revenues, I include a recurring sum of one lakh of rupees a year under this head for the backward tracts of Ganjam and Vizag Districts which are mainly Oriya. Thus the income as per administration report amounts to Rs. 7.27 lakhs, and expenditure Rs. 9.33 lakhs, which in round figures may be taken at Rs. 9.35 lakhs.

EDUCATION.

The estimation under this head has been highly exaggerated. Instead of commenting on every item I take the various items of expenditure in the Ganjam Dist. (Plains), to disprove Mr. Sen's suggested standard of Rs. 8·66 lakhs. Some new schools have been started since he submitted his report and the figures given below represent the up-to-date estimate of expenditure mostly corresponding to the treasury actuals of the last year.

Inspection	56,609
Scholarships	3,473
Training School	52,413
Subsidies to all local schools both for boys and girls	2,20,465
Grant to elementary education council	1,77,061
Grant to Sec. & Collegiate Education	1,02,362
Agency Education	1,34,000
	7,46,383

In round figures I estimate the expenditure at 7½ lakhs. The average (7·2 lakhs) of the past 3 years from the treasury actuals as also the figures of the Accountant-General (Rs. 7·23) lakhs also support my figures.

STATIONERY AND PRINTING.

The expenditure of the past three years put together amounts to Rs. 29 thousands giving an annual average of Rs. 9·6 thousands. Mr. Sen takes a big leap in the dark by suggesting Rs. 40 thousands a year which beats down the total. This is because "It cannot be estimated." Nothing could be more consoling than a confession as this. Inability to estimate a certain item of expenditure is no justification to enhance. There is a small press attached to the Collectorate which is already provided for under the heads of Land and Revenue, General Administration. I therefore estimate the expenditure at Rs. 10 thousands.

CERTAIN ITEMS OMITTED.

In summing up the items of revenue and expenditure it has to be noted that certain items of income under the heads of stamps both judicial and non-judicial in Madras has not been taken into [? account] Ganjam has to take credit for her from the income on stamps from the High Court, the Board of Revenue and the Hindu Religious Endowment Board. The income of the minor ports in the District and a few smaller items have also been left out of account. We have also to claim our share out of the accumulations of the Famine Insurance Fund which in Madras has exceeded 36 lakhs. Famines are not so frequent in this District as have been depicted in the report. For the last one decade we have very little expenditure on famines and during the 3 years under review the average as per treasury accounts amounts to Rs. 8 thousands. Exigencies of time and space make [? omission] to adopt small items of revenue and expenditure suggested by Mr. Sen though I feel that they have not been properly stated besides government reply to my interpellation dated 13th February 1926. I place before the reader the average figure of three years either from the treasury actuals or from the administration reports published by the Government or from the budget reports published by the Government or from the budget estimates of certain departments from the Ganjam District.

AVERAGE FIGURES FOR THREE YEARS FOR GANJAM DISTRICT.

	Receipts (in lakhs of Rupees).			Expenditure (in lakhs of Rupees).
	Madras Government figures.	Mr. Sen's Standard figures.	Our Standard figures.	Madras Government figures.	Mr. Sen's Standard figures.	Our Standard figures.
1. Taxes on income	—	0.09	15	—	—	—
2. Land revenue	23.72	18.32	23.72	1.24	0.34	9.64*
3. Excise	11.59	11.23	11.59	0.50	0.82	0.75
4. Stamps	5.56	5.85	5.85	0.12	0.15	0.15
5. Forests	—	1.78	2.50	—	2.30	1.30
6. Registration	0.87	0.87	0.80	0.58	0.58	0.60
7. Irrigation (XIII)	—	0.90	7.27	5.54	8.79	9.50†
8. Irrigation (XIV)	0.02	0.02	—	—	—	—
9. Interest (XVI)	0·26	0·26	—	—	—	—
10. Administration of justice ...	0.33	0.33	0.33	2.00	2.00	2.00
11. Jails and convict settlement	0.06	0.06	0.06	0.50	0.50	0.50
12. Police	0.12	0.14	0.14	6.45	6.95	6.95
13. Education	0.03	0.01	0.01	7.23	8.66	7.50
14. Medical	0.05	0.01	0.01	1.01	1.34	1.10
15. Public Health	0.03	0.01	0.01	0.36	0.42	0.42
16. Agriculture	0.03	0.01	0.01	0.37	0.37	0.37
17. Industries	0.07	0.07	0.07	0.06	0.10	0.10
18. Miscellaneous departments	0.08	0.08	0.08	0.05	0.05	0.05
19. Civil works	0.13	0.15	0.15	2.75	6.00	(Vide items 7, 8 and 9).
20. Superannuation	0.08	0.08	0.08	1.33	1.33	1.33
21. Stationery and printing ...	0.03	0.03	0.03	0.09	0.40	0.10
22. Miscellaneous	0.10	0.10	0.10	0.03	0.03	0.03
	Rs.45.84	Rs.38.63	Rs.52.96 lakhs.	Rs.37.81	Rs.45.14	Rs.42.59 lakhs.

Summary.	Receipts.	Expenditure.
Average of three years for 1923–24 to 1925–26	Rs. 45.84 lakhs	Rs. 37.81 lakhs
Mr. Sen's suggested Standard	Rs. 38.63 „	Rs. 45.14 „
Our estimates	Rs. 52.96 „	Rs. 42.59 „

* This includes expenditure—22 General Administration.

† This includes expenditure under 41 Civil Works which is item 19 here.

CONCLUSIONS.

I have already shown that Ganjam has never been a deficit District as was misrepresented by the financial expert of the baby province. We have further to prove that he has mercilessly underestimated the expenditure on the five taluqs which according to him are to be excluded as non-Oriya tracts. In the absence of any details it is difficult to rely on such rough estimates of one having half a week experience of the District. The report observes that the District as a whole appears to be deficit and Mr. Sen's ingenuity has succeeded in showing a plus balance of Rs. 4·85 lakhs (Rev. 13.57 against an expenditure of Rs. 8·72) for the excluded area. He states to have adopted all these figures of these excluded tracts. Besides inaccurate estimation which is bound to result in such a calculation he has not at all taken into account the contribution that these 5 taluqs have to pay for the maintenance of Officers and offices of the Heads of various Depts. in the District such as Collectorate, Sub-Judge and Dist. Judges's Court, Dist. Jail., Dist. Medical Officer and the Berhampore Jubilee Hospital, Police Office and Reserve at Chhatrapore Forests, P.W.D., District Health Officer, D.D. Engr., Dist. Education Office, Added to these five excluded taluqs have got two river systems which pay interest on heavy capital outlay on them their proportionate contribution towards superannuation, printing and stationery has also to be estimated. Again Sompetta taluq will have to contribute its proportionate share of the Divisional Officer, Berhampore and his office.

Under the circumstances I would not attach any importance to these findings. The Ganjam collectorate as a whole owing to local prejudice does not favour the amalgamation of Oriya speaking tracts much less a separate Oriya province. Mr. Sen was therefore led and guided by people who as a body never had any sympathy in his mission. I feel certain that an accurate calculation of receipts and expenditure of the Ganjam District or for the matter of fact of these 10 taluqs and sub-taluqs by themselves will always shows a plus balance to meet their due contribution to the provincial administration and improvement of the backward tracts.

SCHEME FOR A SEPARATE PROVINCE FOR AMALGAMATED ORISSA.

FOREWORD.

While the Oriya deputation were giving their evidence before the Joint Free Conference, and pressing their claims for a separate province for Orissa after amalgamation of the outlying Oriya-speaking tracts, a member of the Central Committee diverted the discussion to more academic problems and suggested alternate methods of administration that might possibly be tried in case a fully constituted Governor's province was not found feasible or otherwise for Orissa. We were taken by surprise at this diversion of the issues and therefore asked for time to restate our position and define our attitude on the complex problem of alternate constitution-making for Orissa. We stand by our original memorandum and claim separate province for united Orissa enjoying full status as other provinces subject to certain definite financial co-ordination with the Central Government. We claim same form of Government, same stages of advancement, similar franchise and electorate as other provinces particularly as Bengal Bihar and Madras, inasmuch as the Oriya people have all along been associated with these advanced provinces and the Oriya people will not be prepared to sacrifice any part of their acquired constitutional rights and privileges.

We have gone into the history and theory of constitution of a sub-province and if the constitutional interpretation we have given to that ephemeral phrase is accepted, the Oriya people will be prepared to carve out their destiny under a Deputy Governor, whose status may be a bit inferior to that of a Presidency Governor only for the fact that he has to get financial help from the Central Government for some years to come. In other matters he and his Council and the Orissa Legislature will enjoy same stages of progressive democracy as other provinces in India.

In preparing the scheme we have kept in view the present and past constitutions of India without anticipating the future. The problem of a minor community being yoked with a major one on their march towards responsible Government has practically been left unsolved. With a hope for the better, we venture to submit this alternative of a less ambitious scheme for a Sub-province which can only bear the construction we have put upon it and in which case only it will be acceptable to us.

CHAPTER 1.

SAFEGUARDS UNDER A JOINT GOVERNMENT WITH AN EXISTING PROVINCE.

INTRODUCTION.

It has been suggested that any scheme prepared by us should take into consideration the possibility that eventually it may not be found practicable to fulfil the legitimate aspirations of the people of Orissa for a separate Province. In that case we are asked to indicate special safeguards, if any, we would like to be provided if Orissa continues, as at present, to share the benefits and advantages of the progressive march towards responsible Government. It will be shown in the following paragraphs, it appears to us impossible that the benefits and privileges of a responsible Government in provincial matters can be shared in an equal degree by two races whose interests are not identical, and one of whom is in an overwhelming majority and the other in an insignificant minority and supposed not to be prosperous financially. We shall, however, bend our wishes to the circumstances and prepare the scheme of safeguards, which we are required to do.

2. The scheme of a third ministry has been considered in many quarters as the cheapest sop for the Oriya aspirations. We have considered it in all its aspects and are forced to abandon it. This scheme is that a third Minister should be appointed to the Bihar Government who will look after all matters relating to Orissa in the transferred departments. If this is adopted in the existing administration it will naturally happen that we shall not be allowed any say in the reserved departments. The Minister will become all in all, he is not likely to have the sympathy or support of his colleagues. The major part of the Council itself may look upon him and the representatives of Orissa with disfavour. If they criticise his action, he himself and the Oriya members are likely to resent such criticism and thus bring about estrangement between the two races living together. If they do not scrutinise his administration he may become an autocrat and irresponsible. Even the representatives of Orissa will find themselves in the awkward position of not scrutinising his actions closely before a hostile Council. We do not see that any effective measure can be suggested for remedying these defects. If it be a fact that provincial autonomy creates provincial jealousies, if it is a fact that communal electorates create communal jealousies, it must be the case more so that the scheme for a third ministry will create hostilities between the major and the minor races. We, therefore, reject this scheme as unworkable.

3. Another scheme can be developed with some sort of feasibility from the published demands of some of the minority communities. Under it the Oriyas should be given an adequate number of seats in the Council, necessarily in excess of the proportion to which they would be entitled under the general scheme of representation, and a non-official Oriya should always be nominated as a member of the Government either as a Minister or as an Executive Councillor. With the amalgamation of the Oriya-speaking tracts, the number of seats for united Orissa will be increased under any general scheme. The reservation of some more seats will not really affect the majority community materially; it is likely to give Orissa just a louder voice in the Council. But a little thought will convince any one that this is really a form of the Morley-Minto scheme under which the Councils were enlarged to admit more non-officials and an Indian member was taken into the Executive Council. The Morley-Minto Reforms did not satisfy the aspirations of the Indians. The reservation of excess seats in the legislature and a seat in the executive Government will no more satisfy our aspirations. At all events it will not lead the Oriyas to the avowed goal—the goal of responsible Government.

4. A third scheme is that the affairs of Orissa should be entrusted to a Committee of the Council. Under this scheme a Standing Committee of the Council may be constituted, as there are Standing Committees now, which will examine and report on all matters relating to Orissa. Oriyas will, as at present, be represented in the existing Standing Committees—if these continue after the introduction of the reforms—but there will be a special Committee for Orissa. The Government will nominate their own members and the Council will elect its members mostly Oriyas. All matters affecting Orissa will be examined and reported on by this Committee, its recommendations will ordinarily be accepted by the Council and the Government. It may be given power to initiate schemes and not merely to give its opinion on schemes which the Government may refer to it. Here again the policy of the British Government to give responsible Government to the people will not be fulfilled though it is likely to give the Oriyas some share in shaping the administrative policy of the Government in the Government. This is considered inadequate and will not serve even for immediate temporary satisfaction of the people.

5. So whatever scheme is devised our lot is never likely to improve for so long we remain with another province. Responsible Government will always remain a dream to us, rather the worse will happen. Without being accused of anticipating the extent of the next instalment of the reforms, it may safely be said that the Executive Government and the Legislature will remain antagonistic to each other for some time to come. Our representatives are certain to get bids from both sides for support and afraid of displeasing either they will sell their votes sometimes to the one or to the other or will divide them in shares between both. In plain words that is what will happen and in fact our representatives have so far taken the moderate course of merely attaching themselves to the Government or to the opposition and thus divided they are unable to gain any influence in either camp.

6. It will thus be seen that so long we remain with another province we do not and cannot get any benefit and privileges any larger than the provinces enjoyed under the Morley-Minto reforms. The transfer of control from the Parliament to the local legislature, from the Secretary of State and the Government of India to the Governor and Ministers will virtually mean that we shall be ruled completely by a sister race (whom in our Memorandum we styled the "intermediary ruling race"). We shall become the more helpless, now that it is widely though erroneously believed that Orissa does not pay its way and the amalgamation of Oriya-speaking tracts is likely to increase the deficit. We need not labour this point in detail.

CHAPTER II

SUB-PROVINCE THE LEGITIMATE ASPIRATION OF ORIYAS.

7. The only scheme, therefore, which is satisfactory from the political view-point is the constitution of amalgamated Orissa into a separate province or sub-province, and this alone will satisfy the legitimate aspirations of the people. The objection that a large number of administrative units demand separate Government on mere sentimental grounds of linguistic or historical associations alone does not apply to the case of Orissa. We do not claim a separate province on sentimental grounds alone but we suffer from specific disabilities under the present system for the removal of the which we are unable to explore any other alternative.

8. But what is a sub-province and what will be its administration? This new name was first given currency in the report on the India Constitutional Reforms of 1917 (paragraph 226) and in order to give effect to the promise held out in that report power was taken in section 52A of the Government of India Act that any part of a Governor's Province might be placed under the administrative control of a Deputy Governor. These words "Sub-province" and "Deputy Governor" have unfortunately given rise to various unauthoritative interpretations in certain quarters that a sub-province must mean subordination to a major province and a Deputy Governor must be the subordinate to a Governor or in other words a Deputy Governor will only be an exalted Commissioner of a Division. Such misconception about sub-province has kept the people back from demanding the fulfilment of a hope which was held out by so distinguished persons as the Secretary of State and the Viceroy and to which the British Parliament is, we respectfully submit, committed in a way by including section 52A in the Government of India Act. A closer study of the Montagu-Chelmsford Report and of the Government of India Act, however, gives the real clue to the intentions of the authors of the Indian Constitutional Reforms. Paragraphs 39 to 44 of the Report described the names and status of the administrative units as then existing.

These were:—

- Presidencies—administered by Governors.
- Provinces—administered by Lieutenant-Governors.
- Local administrations of Assam and Central Provinces administered by Chief Commissioners.
- Minor administrations—also administered by Chief Commissioners, such as Coorg, Ajmere—Merwara, etc.

Under the reforms the names "presidencies" and "provinces" were retained, the designation of the administrators of the provinces was changed to "Governors," but the designation "Lieutenant Governor" had also to be retained as the reforms did not originally apply to Burma; the local administrations disappeared but the designations "Chief Commissioner" had to be retained in sections 46, 53 and 58 of the Government of India Act. New names had to be devised to distinguish these from an administrative unit which would be given the benefits of the reforms to a limited extent. The words "sub-province" and "Deputy Governor" came handy for this purpose and they do not in the least imply subordination to another province. They imply, however, subordination to the Government of India probably to a greater extent than in the cases of Governor's Provinces.

9. While on this subject it will be convenient to examine the relations between the Governor General in Council and the Deputy Governor of a Sub-Province. The obligation to take the initiative is laid by statute on the Government of India. It is for them to consult the local Government and the local legislature concerned and to obtain His Majesty's sanction. The Governor General in Council will appoint the Deputy Governor and section 52A proceeds "may . . . apply, with such modifications as appear necessary or desirable, all or any of the provisions of this Act relating to Governor's provinces, or provinces under a Lieutenant Governor or Chief Commissioner to any such province or part of a province." It is unprofitable to enter here into a detailed examination of the modification which may or may not be considered desirable or necessary, but the financial relations between the Government of India and the sub-provincial Government have to be gone in detail owing to the crippled financial condition of the Oriya-speaking tracts.

10. A misconception exists in the minds of many that under the reforms it is not permissible for the Government of India to divert any part of the central revenues towards provincial expenditure. This is true of the Governor's provinces to which specific sources of revenues have been transferred sufficient to carry on the provincial administration efficiently, but it is not true for other parts of British India which are not placed under the administration of Governors. The Government of India do spend their revenues in the minor administrations of the North Western Frontier Provinces, Beluchistan, Delhi, Ajmere, Coorg, etc., and there is nothing in the Government of India Act to prevent them from devoting a part of the Imperial revenue towards expenditure in connection with the administration of subjects entrusted to a Deputy Governor. On the other hand, in providing in section 52A that all or any of the provisions relating to a Governor's province or Lieutenant Governor's province or a Chief Commissioner's administration may be applied to a sub-province, the Parliament must have in mind that the status of the sub-province must be determined by the degree of financial assistance which the Government of India must be called upon to bear.

11. Yet another misconception exists that though the Government of India have to bear the financial burden of provinces like the North Western Frontier Provinces and Baluchistan on account of their strategic importance there is no such administrative or political interest in Orissa as would induce them to shoulder financial responsibility for the sub-province. This class of criticism overlooks that the reforms under which the Imperial finances were separated from provincial finances are experimental, that they can be withdrawn in any province and the old system under which the Central Government of India assumed certain financial responsibility commanding the provincial resources can be reintroduced. Such criticism seems therefore to have no validity. The above explanation seemed to us to be necessary as a sort of introduction to our scheme which we beg to submit in the succeeding paragraphs.

CHAPTER III.

THE SCHEME.

12. The existing Orissa Division together with the outlying Oriya-speaking tracts now under four Governors' provinces of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa, Madras and the Central Provinces should be brought under one administration and constituted into a separate province or sub-province under a Deputy Governor to be appointed by such authority as the Government of India Act may provide. The Deputy Governor will be directly subordinate to the Governor General in Council; the honorific title of a Knight and "His Honour" should be conferred on him as a matter of convention. He shall be entitled to salutes in his own jurisdiction or outside, as may have been the practice in the case of the Lieutenant Governors. He will be provided at the expense of the State with such personal staff and other amenities as may be determined by the Government of India with the sanction of the Secretary of State.

13. The government of the Deputy Governor in Council will be known as the Local Government of the Sub-province and the Local Government will correspond direct with the other provincial governments and the Central Government through its Secretaries.

14. The executive Government will consist of the Deputy Governor and his Council. If as in the major provinces all the provincial subjects are transferred to the control of the local legislature, he will be assisted by two Ministers, otherwise by one Minister and one Executive Member will assist him in the administration of transferred and reserved subjects respectively. They will both be Indians. The Minister will be nominated by the Deputy Governor. The members of the Executive Council will be appointed in the same way as in major provinces.

15. We now come to the constitution of the Legislative Council. In the pre-reform days Legislative Councils were created even in the Chief Commissionerships of the Central Provinces and Assam (para. 42 of Montagu-Chelmsford Report). Even now there is a Council in Coorg. There can, therefore, arise no question about the Deputy Governor having such a Council. The strength of the Council must depend on the extent of territory and the general scheme of franchise which will be adopted for India as a whole. We merely suggest that the number of elected non-officials should in no case be less than 30 and that the proportion of non-officials and officials and elected and nominated members should be at least what it will be in the Legislative Council of Bihar and Orissa. We do not go into the general question of electorals and proportion of representation of different communities. These matters may be decided on the principles adopted in the general scheme for India.

16. The members of the Legislative Council will have at least the same power of interrogation, bringing forward motions and private bills as they enjoy in the present Council of Bihar and Orissa. There can be no curtailment of the existing powers to control expenditure by budget motions and through a Public Accounts Committee.

17. It shall lay down the policy in matters of purely provincial interest, but its power to recommend new schemes or policy which involves additional expenditure beyond specified allotments or sources of revenue be restricted except in the case of education, public health and medical.

18. We do not attempt to suggest the scales of staff, which will be necessary for the administrative posts beyond pointing out that as the volume of work will be much less than in a big province the number of Secretaries and Under-Secretaries can be greatly reduced and so also the number of heads of departments by combining several charges under one administrative head. These are matters which the local Government and the Government of India are in a better position to work out. We should further point out that both a Board of Revenue and a Divisional Commissioner, an Inspector General of Police and a Deputy Inspector General, and so on, are not likely to be necessary.

19. We venture here to bring one or two matters of importance. So long as the responsibility of good government of India devolved solely on the Secretary of State and the Government of India it was incumbent on them to keep up the same standard of uniformity in all provinces. Now that the responsibility is being transferred to the people, it should be definitely recognised that the same standard of expenditure cannot be maintained in all provinces in every matter. In subjects which are not an essential part of the function of Government like agriculture, the Deputy Governor in Council and his Legislature should be given discretion to lay down their own policy and the Government of India should not dictate the policy to them when additional expenditure is not involved. We would also suggest that in matters of recruitment and appointment to services other than imperial services and in laying down the conditions of service of officers whom the local Government of the sub-province appoint, the Government of India will have no power of interference except when more liberal treatment of service conditions is proposed than is accorded by the Government of India to its own servants.

20. In the matter of pay of Government servants the sub-province will immediately inherit from the main body scales of remuneration which its own slender means may not be able to bear. In this matter also the Deputy Governor in Council and the Legislature may be given the discretion of adopting a less expensive standard.

21. But in spite of all the economy which the future government of Orissa may adopt it may not be possible to secure a sufficient margin of surplus revenue to introduce measures of development and progress. We must have to look to the Government of India for financial assistance. It has been shown in paras. 10 and 11 supra that the grant of such financial assistance is not incompatible with the existing principles of financial relations. A fair share of the provincial balance and of the old Famine Insurance Fund is all that we may expect from the Government of Bihar and Orissa. Promises of financial assistance of the Central Government regarding drainage scheme of Puri given as long as 1916 yet remains unfulfilled. But at the start the new province will have to meet heavy non-recurring expenditure. We trust that the Government of India will realise their responsibility and come to our help in this. We also would strongly press for exemption from payment of the recurring interest charges amounting to 8 or 9 lakhs on Irrigation works from which the people derived no benefit and which were thrust upon the provincial Governments and are obviously an inequitable charge. In addition to this we suggest that over and above what Orissa may get from any general scheme of re-arrangement of financial relation, some special financial settlement be accorded to the future Government of Orissa so that the sub-province may start with an assured surplus of a substantial amount.

22. It will be necessary for the new sub-province to share certain services with other provinces, e.g., we cannot maintain a separate High Court or Medical or Engineering College and the like. In such cases, if it is the practice at present to pay a share cost to the province which maintains the institutions, we hope that the new province will be exempted from such payment or at any rate favourable terms will be secured for us. The province concerned will not incur any additional expenditure on this account and therefore such an arrangement will not be felt by them. On the other hand, as under our scheme, the Government of India will bear the additional cost involved in the creation of the new sub-province, such arrangement will indirectly be a help from the province to the Government of India. There will presumably be a fresh financial settlement more favourable to major provinces. It would not therefore be difficult to persuade the Provinces to agree to this measure of relief. We claim proportionate share of reservation of seats on a population basis in all Imperial institutes such as the Military College at Dehra Dun or the Imperial Forest Institute or the Imperial Agricultural Institute, Pusa or L.H.M.C. We claim also similar quota in the services of the Central Government where not a single Oriya clerk or a peon even could be found to-day after 126 years of British connection with Orissa.

23. Before we proceed to explain the reasons for which the Government of India will accord a sympathetic treatment to the people of Orissa, we wish to draw attention to two points. The first is that as under our scheme the Executive Government will have more control over the Legislative Council, the district of Angul should no longer be excluded from the benefits of the Reforms. It would be more economical to administer Angul as a sub-division of the Cuttack District. Some 6 lacs of Rupees may be saved if such an arrangement be made. The second is that the Sub-province should be represented in the Legislative Assembly by at least eight members including an official nominated member. At present two members are elected from the Orissa Division. It should also be represented in the Council of State by at least two non-official members and one official member. The above suggestion we put forward in view of the present strength of the Assembly and the Council of State. If under further reforms the numbers go up our members should proportionately be increased.

24. We now proceed to explain the reasons for which special treatment should be accorded to the sub-province in financial matters. Orissa passed into the hands of the East India Company in the year 1803. Some 50 years before that Bengal and the portion of Orissa now included in Bengal had come into its hands and that province in the north and Madras on the south had already been brought under the British system of Government. On getting Orissa which was at the time a valuable acquisition to them on account of its being the connecting link between Bengal and Madras it was attached to the advanced province of Bengal merely on the ground of administrative convenience ; and within a short period of its occupation the laws and regulations and administration suitable for a people who had come for 50 years under the British Government were made applicable almost wholesale to the Oriyas. A very severe land law was enforced for the realisation of land revenue under which zemindaris were forfeited to the State and put to auction of Calcutta in the days when there were no easy means of communication. The indigenous landed aristocracy was thus reduced to poverty, their zemindaris passed into the hands of Bengalis. Government offices, even small posts as Sub-Inspectors of Police earning a monthly remuneration of Rs. 20/- or Rs. 30/- were filled in by the Bengalees. The economic condition of the people thus grew worse year after year. It was not until the great famine of 1866 in which about a quarter of the population disappeared for want of adequate relief that the neglected condition of Orissa drew the attention of the authorities. Even after that all the big assignments which the Government of Bengal received from the Government of India from time to time were devoted to schemes of improvement in Bengal. Orissa continued undeveloped and stationary. Orissa remained a " distant adjunct " as stated in our memorandum and was far removed from metropolis Calcutta. No schemes of development for advancement of education and prosperity were introduced and Orissa remained undeveloped, but was exploited to enrich Calcutta. This happened directly under the eyes of the Government of India which was stationed then in Calcutta. Similar or worse was the fate of the Oriyas linked to the Government of Madras and Central Provinces. The past neglect cannot be made up now by heaping on us measures of political reform in conditions under which we cannot utilise them. We can proceed on the path of progress only with the same assistance which the sister races have enjoyed for 150 years. If that assistance is denied to us, we shall remain crippled and in the background now as before.

25. In conclusion we beg to point out that we have suggested the utmost economy in the form of Government coupled with restricted power of the legislature to propose additional expenditure. We are willing to submit to a policy of future progress being arrested in such important matters as Education, Agriculture, Industries, Forest, Veterinary and the like, which are justly called nation building services. If need be we are willing even to see to the curtailment of expenditure in these respects. The Government of India and the Central Legislature will, for the time being, control expenditure. Again our revenue is sure to expand. The greater part of Orissa is temporarily settled and land revenue increases at regular intervals. The greater part of Ganjam is also temporarily settled where settlements come at quicker intervals. There are also possibilities of growth of revenue in other directions. In any case we can only leave ourselves in the hands of the Government of India in this matter. The control of revenue and expenditure will thus be resumed by the Government of India and the Central Legislature. To preserve the race from utter extinction, we are thus ready to go back upon the reforms and to begin from an earlier period in financial matters. As has been the case in other provinces such as the existing province of Bihar and Orissa and Assam our financial position is sure to undergo a change for the better when we get a separate Government to look solely after our own advancement. We shall not then stand in need of spoon-feeding by the Government of India. But we can show no improvement immediately and it is only for the time being that financial aid is sought from Government of India. Centuries neglect dealt to Orissa, their administrative disadvantages, total absence of any share in the Government of their country, the threatening extinction of an ancient race, all these should outweigh the financial considerations which stand in the way of a united Oriya Province. No attempt till now has been made to improve the finances of the country by improving the economic resources of the people. In the previous paragraph we mentioned how the Oriya people have not been given the chance to develop their industries, ports, communications, etc., which facilitate trade and industry and bring prosperity to a nation. Administrative policy of the old Bengal Government and the present Bihar and Orissa Government, Madras and C.P. Governments has been all along to enrich the capital and to keep the rural area undeveloped. The Oriyas with a great past as an industrious and skilful people with traditional skill in arts and crafts have, by sheer neglect of the successive Governments degenerated to-day to only a race of workers and peasants. An administration of our own will conserve all resources of the nation and the economic wealth of the people is bound to increase. It would not be too much to expect a helping hand from the Government of India. Even now there exist provinces with a big deficit. Even established Governments and advanced people have had encouragements for further advancement in the shape of annulment of all Provincial contributions. Will it then be too much, on the part of a long neglected race to expect the helping hand of the Government of India for uplifting them?

26. In addition to Mr. Montagu's indictment of Indian administration as being "wooden, iron, antediluvian and inelastic," it is a matter of common criticism that the Indian administration is extremely top-heavy. Multiplication of departments without reference to the actual needs and potentialities for development of the people does not make up for a good Government. With the growth of responsible Government, a paper Government must necessarily yield to an actual Government. The amount of money spent should not be the criterion of efficiency. In any scheme for a new Government the above should not be lost sight of, and the machinery of Government should always be simple, real and economical.

27. A bush or a tree under the shade of a full grown tree scarcely thrives or at least has a stunted or crippled growth. Similar is the fate of a race linked to a more powerful and advanced race. That this very common lesson learnt from nature be not lost on those who have to make or mar, mend or end the destiny, nay the very existence, of an ancient race—with mines of ancient literature still unexplored, with monuments of ancient architecture the type of which is all their own, with an era of their ancient Sovereigns a scion of whom is still living as the Raja of Puri temple current in the almanacs and horoscopes of the country and with a perennial spring of history and tradition that still inspires them—is the sincere desire of the Oriya people.

BRAJASUNDAR DAS.
NARAYANCHANDRA BIRABAR DHIR NARENDRA.
GOPALCHANDRA PRAHARAJ.
BHIKARICHARAN PATNAIK.
B. N. MISRA.
BHAGBAT PRASAD SAMANTARAI MAHAPATRA.

SEPARATE PROVINCE FOR UTKAL.—Being a Scheme presented by the UTKAL ALL PARTIES CONFERENCE COMMITTEE to the ALL-PARTIES NATIONAL CONVENTION at Calcutta, December, 1928.

SEPARATE PROVINCE FOR ORISSA.

CHAPTER I.

THE LANGUAGE QUESTION AND THE ORIYA PROBLEM.

Leaders of thought and public opinion in India have been declaring in unmistakable terms that for the healthy growth of India's culture and the contribution it is expected to make to the world's civilisation, the country should be divided for purposes of administration into homogeneous units on the basis of language and race. In a proper arrangement of affairs, the business of Government and education would be conducted through the means of the indigenous languages. A democracy must be well-informed, vigilant and able to take care of its interests. It is clear that the common people cannot take that intelligent interest and be able to shoulder the full responsibilities of a democracy if the administration is run in a language not their own. It is therefore that not only enlightened Indian opinion but those in intimate contact with the actual task of administration have realised the present irrational and artificial division of provincial boundaries. Apart from questions of language and culture, the work of administration is beset with difficulties by reason of the present irrational distribution. The present territorial units are the results of accident and the circumstances attending annexation by the British. During the few decades, there have been no doubt instances of recognition by the Government in India of the principle of linguistic unity in effecting territorial changes. The enfolding of the Beharis in a separate province from Bengal, the detachment in 1874 of three Telugu speaking taluks of the Central Provinces for union with the Godavari District, the separation of Sambalpure in 1905 from the C. P. changes in the boundaries of the Malayalee-speaking districts are cases in point. But apart from isolated cases such as these, there has been no clear-cut underlying plan kept in view by the executive government of the country.* In 1903 though the Government did not underrate popular sentiment in favour of local language, they realised the effect on the actual day-to-day administration caused by the diversity of languages in the Provinces. They recognised that the problem had been for years "a source of anxiety and the trouble to the different provinces" and the solutions proposed by them were intended, to use their own words, to deal with the problem "on a scale and with a unity that would admit of its being treated with consistency and efficiency." In 1918 the Report on Indian Constitutional Reforms went a step further, and recognised not only that the business of government would be simplified if administrative units were both smaller and more homogeneous being based on language, but that such redistribution would help to evolve responsible self-government.

* (See letter No. 3678 Calcutta, 3rd December, 1903, of the Government of India to the Governments of Bengal, Madras, and Central Provinces.)

The following gives the number of persons representing the more important languages, according to the census of 1921:—

Language.	No. of speakers.
1. Western Hindi	96,714,369
2. Bengali	49,294,099
3. Telugu	23,601,492
4. Marathi	18,797,831
5. Tamil	18,779,577
6. Punjabi	16,233,596
7. Rajasthani	12,680,562
8. Kanarese	10,374,204
9. Oriya	10,143,165
10. Gujarati	9,551,992
11. Burmese	8,423,256
12. Malayalam	7,497,638
13. Western Punjabi	5,652,265
14. Kherwari	3,503,215
15. Sindhi	3,371,708
16. Bhili	1,855,617
17. Assamese	1,727,328
18. Western Pahari	1,633,915
19. Gondi	1,616,911
20. Pashto	1,496,267
21. Eastern Hindi	1,399,528
22. Kashmiri	1,268,854

There are 22 languages claiming over a million speakers each and eleven languages each of which claim over eight million speakers. All the principal languages spoken in the existing nine Governors' provinces except the Assamese are included in the first eleven languages in the list. The position of Assam which is a Governor's province and of Sind, the N. W. Frontier Province, and Baluchistan is given below:—

	Areas in sq. miles, 1921.	Total population, 1921.	Population speaking the principal language 1921.	The principal language.
Sind ...	46,506	3,279,377	less than 2,645,786	Sindhi
Assam ...	53,015	7,606,230	1,725,689 (Bengali 3,525,220)	Assamese
N.W.F. Province	13,419	2,251,340	1,202,326	Pashto
Baluchistan	54,228	420,648	201,065	Pashto
Baluchistan States ...	80,410	378,977	150,724	Balochi

The comparative figures of total population and the number of speakers of the principal language in the case of Sind, the North-West Frontier Province, and Baluchistan will be found interesting in view of the recommendation in the Nehru Committee's Report and of the All Parties Conference (August 1928) that these provinces should have the same form of government as the other provinces in India. It will also be seen that the Oriyas, the Kanarese and the Guzuraties occupy much the same position in point of numbers.

We shall now examine the distribution of the Oriya-speaking people as revealed by the Census of 1921:—

Province.	Oriya speakers (1921).
1. Behar and Orissa ...	4,810,308
2. Behar and Orissa States called also the Orissa Feudatory States (26 States)	2,940,338
3. Madras	1,573,942
4. Bengal	293,700
5. C. P. and Berar	204,937
6. Assam	161,868
7. C. P. States	102,851
8. Burma	47,545
9. Bengal States	4,672
10. Delhi	1,177
11. Mysore States	721
12. Andamans and Nicobars	673
13. Hyderabad States ...	240
	10,142,972

Oriya speakers are found in such large numbers in Assam and Burma, because of their migration for exigencies of labour supply. We shall later allude to the deliberate manipulation of the Census figures in Midnapur in Bengal. Apart from these considerations, the above position reveals that about half the total number of Oriyas, viz., 48 lakhs are found in the Orissa Division of the Behar Province. Out of the remaining 53 lakhs, 29 lakhs are in the Orissa Feudatory States, 16 lakhs in Madras, 3 lakhs in Bengal, and 3 lakhs in the Central Provinces and its States. Except a large population in the city of Calcutta, most of the 99 lakhs of the above population live in a contiguous area divided between four provincial administrations and a large number of Feudatory States having political relations with the Governor in Council acting as agent to the Governor-General. If we leave out this contiguous territory, only about 3 lakhs live outside We shall show in a following chapter that this contiguous Oriya-speaking country has a total area of 89 thousands of square miles containing a total population of 15 millions of persons, of whom 10 millions are Oriya-speaking. The British portion of this territory comprises an area of 42 thousands of square miles and a population of 10 million souls.

Let us compare the area and population of the proposed province of Orissa with the existing nine Governors' Provinces:—

	Area.	Population 1921.
1. Assam	53,015	7,606,230
2. Bengal	76,843	46,695,536
3. Behar and Orissa ...	83,161	34,002,189
4. Bombay	123,621	19,348,219
5. Burma	233,707	13,212,192
6. Central Provinces and Berar	99,876	13,912,760
7. Madras	142,260	42,318,985
8. Punjab	99,846	20,685,024
9. United Provinces ...	106,295	45,375,787
Proposed Orissa.
British Orissa ...	41,816	10,071,662
Orissa States	46,704	4,953,221

We shall discuss the question of the future relations of the States with British India. Meanwhile it is our clear opinion that united Orissa has got both territory and population for a separate province. The question of the form of administration and the financial aspect will receive separate treatment.

In the next chapter we shall show that the Oriya problem stands apart by itself, and that it has assumed a keenness which it is well to bear in mind in offering the solution which it sorely needs.

CHAPTER II.

THE SPECIAL NATURE OF THE ORIYA PROBLEM

Growth of British Power in Orissa.

It will have been seen from the foregoing chapter that the problem of the Oriya people is singular in All India in that they have been divided into no less than four provinces and a number of small Feudatory States. This condition of things has been brought about by historical accidents and by the circumstances attending the growth of the British power in Orissa and its outlying tracts. We shall not enter into a detailed history of this territorial vivisection, but it will be enough to mention that different parts of Orissa came into British hands at different times and the ceded tract was united with the province then already annexed for the convenience of administration. Most of the Ganjam District which was known as the Chicacole Sirkar was got from the Nizam by the French in 1753, and in 1759 it was ceded to the British along with the Vizagapatam Agency which contains the large Zamindari of Jeypore. It was not till 44 years later that the Orissa province including 17 Feudatory States or Tributary Mahals was ceded to the British by the Mahrattas and annexed to Bengal. In 1837 the two states of Baud and Athmallik which originally formed part of the South West Frontier Agency with headquarters at Ranchi, were added to the Orissa States. In 1905 two other groups of States were added. These were the five Oriya-speaking States of Patna, Kalahandi, Sonepur, Bamra, and Rairakhol which were transferred from the Central Provinces, and the two states of Gangpur and Bonai which had hitherto been attached to the Chota Nagpur Division. The vicissitudes through which the Sambalpore District has passed make interesting, though painful, reading. It was in 1856 that the Raja of Sambalpore died without a heir. Till 1860, Sambalpore with the attached Tributary States were placed under the Agent of the Governor-General for the South West Frontier when the District was transferred to the Orissa Division in Bengal. But in 1862 it was made over to the newly constituted Central Provinces. In 1905 it was retransferred to the Province of Bengal with the exception of Chandrapur-Padampur, Phuljhar, Malkhorda, etc. On the same occasion the States of Jashpur and Udaipur together with a few other States were transferred to the Central Provinces from Chota Nagpur. Raigarh and Sarangarh were originally presented by the ruler of Sambalpur to chiefs for military services, and Phuljhar and Padampur were under Raigarh. Padampur Zamindari under Raigarh was ceded to the British in 1800. The British caused the Chiefs of Sarangarh and Raigarh to declare their independence from Sambalpore and annexed their territories in 1818. In 1861 their management was transferred to the Superintendent of the Tributary Mohals, Cuttack and in 1862 these territories were transferred along with Sambalpore to the Central Provinces. Dhalbhum in Singbhum came into British hands in 1777 and the territory was permanently settled in 1800. It was transferred in 1833 to Manbhum but in 1848 it was again transferred to Singbhum. The Kolhan tract was annexed in 1836. Four Ho pirs or divisions in Mayurbhanj also were during this disturbance added to Singbhum. The estate of Porahat was confiscated in 1858 and in 1892 was included in Singbhum. Midnapur was from ancient times under Orissa. The state of things continued till 1646–1658 when Shah Shujah annexed the Jelesar Sirkar, the Hijili tract of Orissa, to Bengal. When the Mahrattas took possession of the country in 1751, Orissa included the Parganas of Bhograi, Kamarda, Pataspur, and Shahbanda and a part of the present thana of Gopiballabhpur. In 1760 Nawab Mir Kasim Ali ceded to the British among other tracts the whole of the Midnapur District except the Pataspur Pargana which was in possession of the Mahrattas who held Orissa also. In accordance with a treaty between the Mahrattas and the British, the former ceded the Pataspur Pargana together with the rest of Orissa, and Pataspur thereafter formed part of Midnapur in Bengal. Pargana Bhograi and two other Parganas of Hijili had been added to Balasore before 1886, and in 1870 Jalesar and its neighbourhood were also amalgamated.

In four Provinces.

This outline of the sequence in annexation of the Oriya-speaking country has resulted in the present unnatural boundaries. There was no strong government at the seat of the Orissa Kingdom at the time when the British appeared on the scene. And in the anxiety to annex and consolidate the territories which the British obtained into their hands, the notion that the people are a unit with a language, literature, culture and common interests was totally lost sight of except when the difficulties in administration imposed by the variety of languages in Bengal or Madras Provinces called for a change. And such a change even when proposed as it was done at the time of Lord Curzon by the Central Government in 1903 could not overcome opposition of the local administrators arising out of a conservatism and unwillingness natural with those accustomed to think and work along stereotyped lines. It is not surprising that this attitude should fancy that the problem of the Oriyas would be capable of solution by palliatives other than territorial changes which necessarily entail inconvenience or unsettlement. We do not think that there is in India any other people like the Oriyas who suffer as acute a dismemberment. The Telugus or the Tamils are all in the same province and both are numerous enough to effectively influence the policy of the Provincial Government, and this will be more clearly realised when Provincial Autonomy comes to be exercised. The Kanarese are divided into two provinces, and there is the fairly large progressive State of Mysore whose state language is Kanarese, which besides looking after the interests of its own people, serves as a model in several matters to follow, to people in other states and provinces. Malayalse are a much smaller community than the Oriyas and number about 7½ millions, but besides inhabiting two districts in a single province, namely, Madras, are found in such large native states as Cochin or Travancore whose state language being Malayalam gives it a distinct status. The Sindhi speaking population are all in the Bombay Province and number a third of the Oriya-speaking people. The Assamese are 17 lakhs strong but have a Governor's Province along with twice their population of Bengali speakers within the territory. The Pasto which has no settled language claims about 15 lakhs of people divided between the N.W. Frontier Province and Baluchistan, each of which is a separate province under a Chief Commissioner, proposed to be raised to the status of a governor's province by the All Parties Conference. We do not make these comparisons in order to belittle the movements in these provinces for a separate territorial recognition, but to show that nowhere has any people been divided into four Provincial Governments and 31 Feudatory States* the population of each of which ranges between 22 thousands (Pallahara) to 6 lakhs (Mayurbhanj). In no province are the Oriyas again the predominant partners. Even in Bihar and Orissa, the so-called Orissa division contains a population of about 5 millions in a total provincial population of 34 millions. The evil is not mitigated by any of the numerous Feudatory States, being too antediluvian or too small to pursue bold experiments in starting representative institutions or in inaugurating far-reaching schemes of welfare for their people. As it is, the Feudatory States, almost all of them, are governed by primitive methods, and are least progressive. It is not our present purpose to demonstrate why this is so, or what remedy could be applied; but the situation both in the British tracts and the Feudatory area alike is unrelieved by any arrangement containing within it the assurance of political progress.

* 26 of these with an area of 28,648 sq. miles and a population of 3,959,669 persons are known as the Orissa Feudatory States under a Political Agent and Commissioner.

The Oriyas cannot regulate the policy of any Province.

It is no wonder that far from the Oriyas anywhere being able to regulate the policy of any provincial government, they have struggled as impotent minorities at the tail end of four provinces for preserving their very existence. The children of Orissa are no doubt moved by the struggle for winning the country's freedom, the Government declare that it is their intention that people in India should be trained in responsible self-government, but what prospect is there for Orissa to throw in her full force into this endeavour for constitutional progress if there be no province which they could call their own? As it is, practically all the energies of the community are spent away in profitless agitation for securing the elementary requirements of a civilised life, viz., recognition of Oriya as a court language, provision for teaching Oriya children in their own language, and not in Telugu, Hindi or Bengali, and local endeavours to get Oriya officers appointed who, being conversant with the language and customs of their people, are expected to discharge their task with sympathy and efficiency. It is here also that a grave danger lies. The struggles to secure these minor benefits in provinces which are predominantly non-Oriya give rise to jealousies and fan the flame of provincial rivalry which we readily concede is detrimental to the growth of Indian unity. On the other hand, as years roll on, the struggle becomes keener and in proportion there is the greater risk of opposition to the aspiration of the Oriyas by the predominant peoples in each of the provinces. It is not, of course, possible for such opposition to assume the aspect of an idealistic movement especially if the community concerned is itself agitating for a separate province of its own, but nevertheless any proposal for Oriya territorial unity will be discounted both in non-official circles and through the spokesmen of the provincial Governments on very plausible grounds. It will be urged that linguistic provinces will foster parochialism cutting at the root of national solidarity, that they will increase the overhead charges leaving insufficient funds for the development of provincial institutions, that recent history and commercial and political conditions are more important than mere sentimental considerations of language and race and that palliatives can be found to mitigate administrative difficulties. Our fears as to the future are grounded on the experience of the last half a century.

Without going into the details, we shall show that the interests of the Oriyas have been criminally neglected during a century and quarter of British rule, and certain grave injustices have been perpetrated which no government mindful of the welfare of the people committed to its charge could have looked on with equanimity, much less directly or indirectly participated in such acts.

Dispossession of Estates.

A Commissioner of Orissa in 1818, that is 15 years after the annexation of the province, writes:—"They (the natives of Orissa) seem unconscious of any particular benefits which have resulted to them from the operations of British laws and regulations, whilst it is very apparent that they have increased the assessment, required payment of revenue in silver instead of cowries, augmented the price of salt to six times its former rate, and dispossessed upwards of two-thirds of the original native proprietors from their estates. The people of the interior seemed also to have thought all applications to the court vain and fruitless of late years, unless besides the legal, authorised overwhelming expense of stamp paper, fees, etc., they could further produce a considerable sum to purchase the favour or at least the forbearance of the sudder amlah..... Translations of the regulations exist only in the Persian and the Bengali languages. Not a single regulation has ever been translated into the great vernacular language of the Province..... After a whole race having been thus long proscribed and thrown into the background..... In the second and third years after the extension of the Bengal Regulations to Cuttack, estates paying a jumma of 4½ lakhs of rupees out of a jumma of Rs. 12,00,000 were sold at public auction for arrears of revenue. Surely any temporary sacrifice of revenue would have been a less evil than rigorous enforcement of the rules of a new code. The inadequate value at which these lands were sold also immensely aggravate the hardship of the measure, and has justly been termed by the Collector (in his report) little better than downright robbery. To omit all mention of other cases, Moonshee Nussee Mooddeen alone, the dewan of the gentleman then holding the situation of Collector, purchased in one year at the public auction sales estates paying a jumma of Rs. 53,000 for a sum of Rs. 23,000." And the writer adds in a marginal note, "the purchases were made of course, benamee,..... The estates in question have, I understand, long since been disposed of to other speculators."

The Great Orissa Famine of 1865–7.

A second flagrant case of misgovernment or criminal neglect was in connection with the great Orissa Famine of 1865–7. The Imperial Gazetteer of India, Vol. III, records:—"Distress was greatest in Orissa, which was at that time practically isolated from the rest of India, but the gravity of the situation was not realised, the Bengal Board of Revenue being misled by defective estimates of the population requiring food and by fictitious price lists. The position was not grasped till the end of May, and then the monsoon had set in. Carriage by sea was extremely difficult, and even when grain reached the coast it could not be conveyed inland..... Meanwhile the mortality had been very great. It was estimated that at least a million people, or one-third of the population, died in Orissa alone. Adding the loss of revenue in all departments, the famine in Orissa is said to have cost the state about 1½ crores." The Cuttack District Gazetteer says:—"It (the famine) had to be dealt with by a body of officials necessarily ignorant of the signs of its approach, unprepared to accept it, and inexperienced in the administration of relief measures. When the harvest failed, the gravity of the occasion was not perceived, and no special enquiries were instituted." This phenomenon of officials ignorant of the signs of the approach of famine and unprepared to accept it obviously continues to this day. We do not consider that even an official government with its capital in Orissa and in touch with the people could have been so indifferent or so oblivious of the elementary requirements of its people.

Onslaughts on Language.

In the beginning of the seventies of the last century, serious efforts were made by Bengalis who filled the public services in Orissa to demonstrate that the Oriya language had no separate identity from Bengali, but that it was a mere dialect of the latter. It may be interesting to contrast this with what Mr. Beams had written in his Comparative Grammar of the Modern Aryan Languages:—"At a period when Oriya was already a fixed and settled language Bengali did not exist. The inhabitants of Bengal spoke a vast variety of corrupt forms of Eastern Hindi." Oriya, however, survived this agitation. Even in the University, the language had not received the recognition that was its due; and it was only since 1902 that in the F.A. and B.A. examinations of the Calcutta University Oriya was permitted to be used as a language. And even this was effected through the intervention of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, while the Syndicate of the University at first refused permission for such recognition. Surely, the Oriyas could have been spared many such efforts to prove what was already proven, if their energies had been harnessed to the practical work of administration.

Decrease in Numbers.

A further point we wish to make is the decrease of the Oriya-speaking population in successive Census enumerations. Since the great famine of 1865–7 which cost British Orissa, according to official estimates, a third of its inhabitants, the population continued to increase until 1911 but at a steadily diminishing rate. Oriya speakers decreased during the last two Census enumerations, thus :—

	Oriya speakers in Orissa Division.
1911	4,771,984
1921	4,657,947

While the birth rate continued at about 43 per thousand, the death rate at certain periods rose to 53 per thousand in the Cuttack District and as high as 70 per thousand in the Puri District.

In the Ganjam District, however, the total population has increased, but there has been a continual reduction in Oriya speakers :—

	Oriya speakers in Ganjam District.
1901	1,274,975
1911	958,661
1921	931,790

In the Midnapur District in Bengal, the change is very marked :—

	Oriya speakers in Midnapur District.
1891	572,798
1901	270,495
1911	181,801
1921	142,107

The Census Report, India, says on the decline in Oriya speakers thus :—"The number of Oriya speakers in Bihar and Orissa declined from 7,820,000 to 7,751,000, a loss which is more than accounted for by the actual loss of population in the purely Oriya speaking districts of Orissa. On the other hand politics seem to have affected the Return in part of the Midnapur District. The number of Oriya speakers in the Ramnagar Police Station has declined from over 50,000 in 1911 to about 170 in 1921. The explanation is interesting. The people were aware of the Oriya national movement and their leaders guessed that in deciding the matter the Government of India would give weight to the language figures of the Census. As they did not want their tract to be transferred to the neighbouring district of Balasore in Orissa they took care to return Bengali as their language." The Census report for 1911 of Madras commenting on the anomaly in the decrease in Oriya speakers of the Ganjam District points out that while the total population of the district had increased during the previous decade, Oriya speakers had considerably declined. The report suggests "a possibility of deliberate misrepresentation by Telugu or Oriya enumerators not uninfluenced by the contentions which prevailed some five or six years back between Telugus and Oriyas of the District."

It is needless to state that such manipulations would have been unnecessary under a normal condition if the Oriyas had been enfolded in a province of their own. And as regards actual fall in the population by a higher death rate due to diseases, an Orissa Government would have paid greater attention to the matter than one to which the Oriyas have been tacked on to serve temporary political exigencies.

The Standing Menace of Floods in Orissa.

Dr. Hunter in his "Orissa," written about 50 years ago, says that the history of Orissa is the narrative of a province at the mercy of a great river." But the history referred to is the history of the province during British occupation. Captain J. C. Harris of the Royal Engineers wrote in 1858 : "How great have been the vicissitudes to which the province of Orissa has been subjected; how vast the amount of suffering and how loud the lamentations of its inhabitants; how widely proclaimed, and deeply recognised, are the necessities of the district; how much might have been done towards the relief thereof will appear in the sequel; but I would ask, why are these things so in A.D. 1858?" No, it was not in A.D. 1858 that the situation had remained unsolved. It continues to the present day with an added intensity because there has been no plan or system to tackle the question all these years while new mistakes have continually been made. A recent Committee of engineers, including a representative of the Government of India, explored the entire question. They are of opinion that the embankment system or want of system is at the root of the troubles. Their own words are a sufficient condemnation of the want of plan or policy underlying the attitude of the Government. They say : "The whole system of embankments seems to have grown up without any reasoned plan underlying it. Some of the embankments have been constructed and are maintained by Government, some by the Zamindars. There are marginal embankments, running along the banks of rivers, and ring bandhas, completely enclosing villages and estates. They have come into being solely in the interests of the particular area to be protected, and with complete disregard of their effects upon other areas. The river shackled in one direction bursts its bounds elsewhere; fresh shackles are applied at the new danger point which necessitate the strengthening of the original defences and the institution of new ones which would otherwise not have been required. The whole arrangement can only be described as chaotic." Many of these embankments run at right angles to the big rivers, and the railway line which also cuts the rivers right across their course being insufficiently provided with culverts and bridges to drain off the water in flood time, has multiplied the difficulties. Nay more, the solicitude of the Government has created fresh embankments to protect the railway line which has been insufficiently provided with bridges and let-outs.

The situation created by the floods is becoming increasingly menacing, and large areas are verging on depopulation, some of the inhabitants, migrating in thousands to the Jute mills at Calcutta or to engage themselves in the city as domestic servants, some others going to the tea gardens of Assam as labourers, and others still to the rice fields in Burma. A Professor of Economics* who served in Orissa commenting on this emigration writes :—"The Oriya emigrant is in any case lost to his native land and is soon absorbed in the population amidst which he works. Again, though he manages to keep himself above want, his lot is not exactly happy. Having left Orissa under stress and with a defective equipment, he is only offered the lowest and most degrading jobs. He becomes a mere cog in the industrial machine of Calcutta. He rarely rises to a position of trust and responsibility, but is merely an instrument of exploitation for the capitalists who swell their incomes by cheap and docile labour. His loss is nevertheless serious for Orissa as, by the emigration of the most steady and adventurous elements, Orissa loses the best of its population and comes to be the land of the old and the infirm living on the bounty of the young men abroad. The greatest harm, however, consists in the disintegration of family life. Very few Oriya emigrants are in a position to take their families with themselves.

* Prof. H. R. Batheza, M.A., I.E.S.

I need not describe the moral and social consequences of young men living abroad and young women and children left behind."

As regards the problem of flood, it may be that large sacrifices have to be made, enormous outlay in capital necessitating the co-operation of many parties will be found essential, that any expenditure from sources like the Famine Insurance Fund on schemes proposed by the Adams-William Committee will be found inadequate and that therefore for a permanent solution the people of Orissa should feel that it is ultimately they who have to shape their future.

In conclusion, we wish to point out that the movement for linguistic provinces in the country is a legitimate aspiration of the people. The Andhra Movement dates from 1912 after the formation of the Bihar and Orissa Province. The agitation for a Kannada Province commences from 1921 when the Congress ordered its own constitution on a linguistic basis. Such movements are bound to arise as the struggle for freedom increases, and the responsibilities consequent on self-government are envisaged. But the history of the Oriya people under the British is the story of a long-drawn agony. We have mentioned in the foregoing paragraphs some of the main problems which have either directly arisen from the present state of dismemberment or are of such magnitude that only a government completely responsive to its requirements can tackle them in an adequate measure. We have omitted to mention the infinite disabilities to which the Oriyas have been subjected, the slow process of denationalisation that is going on in the outlying tracts, the dull apathy and indifference to human suffering betrayed by the lower classes, and the quiet but pathetic self-complacency with which people have come to depend on government for small mercies. This is the surest way of undermining that capacity for initiative and the willingness to undertake risks and shoulder responsibilities which is the essence of self-determination. We consider too that hemmed in amidst such difficulties, it is not surprising that the Oriya people were agitating for minor benefits at the risk of being parochial and have become conscious that unless they achieve a status of their own in the future polity of India, their interests will not be looked after by any community with whom they may be yoked into a province.

CHAPTER III.

EFFORTS AT UNION.

Stress on Language in Earlier Stages.

The scheme which it is our purpose to present will be incomplete without a brief sketch of the efforts made from time to time by the Oriya people to get united and to obtain a separate status. Due to late annexation of the Oriya-speaking country, the importation as members to subordinate civil services of persons belonging to neighbouring races and the comparative desuetude into which the Oriya language fell for a long time as a medium of instruction in schools or as a court language, was the occasion for repeated complaints on this score by the Oriyas. Coupled with the demand for recognition of the language, there was the claim for preserving the particular system of culture which corresponded with Oriya. While administrative union was envisaged as the proper remedy for putting an end to an anomalous position relegating the indigenous language to the background and as a means of fostering the local literature and culture, the revision of provincial boundaries was not in the earlier stages conceived to be part of a constitutional experiment or a stage in the evolution of a full responsible government. All the idealism and power of sentiment was, however, concentrated on the anxiety to save the Oriya language from this unnatural onslaught by the predominant peoples in each of the provinces.

History till 1912.

We have described on a previous page the terrible neglect of the Government when faced with the appalling exigencies of the great Orissa Famine. In the seventies of the last century, a memorial was sent by the people to unite all the Oriya-speaking tracts under a single administration. Sir Stafford Northcote, then Secretary of State for India in 1868, referred to the famine as "furnishing evidence of the defects of the existing system of Government when exposed to the ordeal of a serious emergency" and suggested that Orissa might be separated from Bengal. In 1895 Mr. Cooke, Commissioner of Orissa, proposed to extend the boundaries of the Orissa Division by the addition of Sambalpur and Ganjam. In 1902 the Oriyas of Ganjam submitted a monster memorial to Lord Curzon who was the Viceroy praying that the Oriya-speaking tracts might be united "under the Government of Bengal or under any one government and one University." The people of Sambalpur waited in deputation on the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces in 1901 to pray for union with Orissa. The Central Government, however, on the representation of the Central Provinces only restored Oriya as the court language of the District. In April, 1903, the citizens of Cuttack demanded of the Government of India that all the outlying Oriya-speaking tracts be amalgamated with the Orissa Division in Bengal or that Orissa be raised to a Chief Commissionership like that of Assam retaining the connections of the Calcutta High Court and University, "whichever of these two measures is, in the opinion of the Government, better calculated to secure the advancement of the race." The Oriyas were now forming the Utkal Union Conference which had been all along their premier national institution. The Conference was due to meet on the 30th and 31st December, 1903. On the 3rd December the famous proposals of Lord Curzon were published. It was proposed to unite the whole of the Oriya-speaking people, both hill and plain, under the Bengal administration. They said :—"Such a scheme would solve the question of language once and for all. This change would relieve both the Central Provinces and Madras of a troublesome excrescence upon their administrative system; and it would result in handing over the Oriya problem to one government alone, on a scale and with a unity that would admit of its being treated with consistency and efficiency." The proposal was supported by the Governments of Bengal and Central Provinces, but was opposed by Madras who, among other considerations, said that "it was useless to strive after an administration based on linguistic uniformity." The upshot was that Sambalpur became amalgamated while Ganjam and Jeypore were left out. In 1907 representations were made to the Royal Commission on Decentralisation asking for a Chief Commissionership for united Orissa. While the movement was thus in progress, and the Utkal Union Conference was reiterating its demands, and deputations on governors and viceroys were being organised, the unexpected announcement of the formation of a new province of Bihar and Orissa greeted the attention of the public in 1911. The despatch was hatched in secrecy and in uniting Orissa with the new Province made the ostentatious claim that the arrangement would well accord with popular sentiment in Orissa and added that it "will be welcome to Bihar as presenting a sea-board to the Province." The illusions of certain Assembly representatives that this last proposal meant that major ports would be opened in Orissa was shattered by the Government of India. Apparently a sea-board was to provide sea baths!

Before Mr. Montagu.

After the announcement to form the new Province was made the Government of India was approached, but they declared that the amalgamation was neither necessary nor desirable. From now Orissa's name became tackled to that of Bihar, and a Lieutenant-Governor, Sir Charles Bayley declared that Orissa would obtain a half of the Government's attention, a promise which was never fulfilled. When Mr. Montagu came to India in 1917, the Utkal Union Committee waited on him and pressed for a united Orissa with "an administration of the type which Bihar and Orissa now has," or if that be not feasible, to yoke united Orissa with Bihar with a view to develop it as a separate province. In the latter case the Committee asked for a wider representation to bring Orissa on a level with Bihar. They also urged that amalgamation should precede Reforms.

Sub-Provinces.

The Montagu-Chemsford Report of 1918 wanted to work out a plan whereby Responsible Government would devolve in instalments, and instituted the novel plan of "dyarchy." Now, dyarchy is a vertical division of the Governmental machinery. There was also before them the plan of a horizontal division, viz., to divide the country into small and homogeneous units based on language and race and hand over to these units, called sub-provinces or provincial states, the task of administering the "transferred" subjects pertaining to the area. There would be sub-provincial councils, ministers responsible thereto, and independent powers of taxation. "As the State councils developed, more and more functions would be made over to them . . . until finally the provincial governments disappeared, and the future polity of British India was represented by a series of States enjoying responsible government." This plan the authors rejected generally because they did not want to "unite the sufficiently difficult task of revising the constitution of India with the highly controversial labour of simultaneously revising the political geography of the entire country." In the case of Orissa as also Berar the authors recommended an exception to be made and proposed that the reformed provincial governments should test popular opinion about such schemes when forthcoming. They laid it down that such changes in redistribution of provincial areas should be effected through a "process of consent." The present Section 52 (a) of the Government of India Act which embodies this recommendation reads :—

"The Governor-General in Council may, after obtaining an expression of opinion from the local government and the local legislature affected, by notification, with the sanction of His Majesty previously signified by the Secretary of State in Council, constitute a new governor's province, or place part of a governor's province under the administration of a deputy-governor to be appointed by the Governor-General, and may in any such case apply, with such modifications as appear necessary or desirable, all or any of the provisions of this Act relating to Governor's provinces, or provinces under a lieutenant-governor or a chief commissioner, to any such new province or part of a province."

The Joint Select Committee which reported to Parliament defines in regard to the "process of consent" mentioned in the Report :—

"The Committee have two observations to make on the working of this clause. On the one hand, they do not think that any change in the boundaries of a province should be made without due consideration of the views of the legislative Council of the province. On the other hand, they are of opinion that any clear request made by a majority of the members of a Legislature Council representing a racial or linguistic territorial unit for its constitution under this clause as a sub-province or a separate province should be taken as a prima facie case on the strength of which a commission of enquiry might be appointed by the Secretary of State, and that it should not be a bar to the appointment of such a Commission of inquiry that the majority of the Legislative Council of the province in question is opposed to the request of the minority representing such a distinctive territorial unit."

A safeguard for the minorities in the provincial Legislative Councils who intend to move in the matter has been here provided. But what about minorities like the Oriyans in four provinces? In none of the outlying provinces except Madras are the Oriyans strong enough numerically to return even a single member to the Provincial Legislature. In the next chapter we shall discuss that this provision has been of no avail even in Madras, where a resolution by an Oriya member was not admitted for discussion.

Mr. Sinha's Resolution.

The Government Act was passed in 1919, and before the formation of the new councils under the Act, Mr. Sachidananda Sinha of Bihar moved in the old Imperial Legislative Council in February, 1920, for a mixed committee of officials and non-officials to formulate a scheme for amalgamation of the Oriya-speaking tracts with the present Orissa of the province of Bihar and Orissa. Mr. Sinha explained that the people of Bihar did not object to a separate province for the Oriyas, but that he thought the simpler scheme of amalgamation was more likely to be accepted by the Government. This motion received a great deal of support, and among those who favoured amalgamation being the late Sir Surendaranath Bannerji, Sir Dinshaw Wacha and Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda. Mr. B. N. Sarma supported the principle of linguistic union but advocated a separate province for the Oriyas. All the speakers were for a separate province ultimately. Mr. Bannerji declared what was too true that representatives of the Oriya-speaking population had no determining voice in matters concerning their welfare, "and the evil is likely to be aggravated when the Reform Act comes into operation." Sir William Vincent speaking on behalf of the Government stated that he believed that there was a very great feeling among Oriyas for amalgamation, that the Government was in no sense opposed to an examination of the question, but that they were precluded from appointing the Committee because it was for the reformed Councils to express their opinion about the matter. He added : "I am quite prepared, however, if I can secure the sanction of his Excellency in Council to this course, to have a full investigation of the facts, to ascertain the views of the local governments and prepare such materials for the new Governments as may assist them in arriving at a just decision in this matter." On this assurance the mover withdrew his resolution.

Views of Provincial Governments.

The result of this debate and the assurance of the Government gave a different turn to the Oriya movement. In Madras, an Oriya member wanted to move the subject in the new Council in 1921 but it was not admitted for discussion. A subsequent motion was withdrawn on the Government agreeing to publish materials in their possession. In 1922, the same Government is known to have definitely opposed amalgamation and even the idea of an enquiry in terms of the new Act. They also did not consider that it would be to the advantage of the country as a whole to create a united Orissa Province, sub-province or even amalgamate the Oriya tracts with the Orissa Division in Bihar. In 1921 a resolution by an Oriya member recommending the administrative union of all the Oriya-speaking tracts under one Government was passed in the Bihar and Orissa Legislative Council. And the Government of Bihar did not disfavour amalgamation in 1922, while it fully recognised the deep sentiment of the Oriyas of Orissa in the matter. In the same year the Government of the Central Provinces admitted that in Khariar and Phuljhar the Oriyas wanted amalgamation, and that there was a prima-facie case in its favour. The Bengal Government found that the Census figures were manipulated in Midnapur.

Philip-Duff Enquiry.

The Government of India in 1924 appointed a Committee consisting of two officers, Messrs. C. L. Philip and A. C. Duff, to ascertain the desire of Madras Oriyas in respect of amalgamation, who reported both as regards Jeypore and Ganjam as follows:—"Our enquiry has shown that there is a genuine, long-standing, and deep-seated desire on the part of the educated Oriya classes of the Oriya-speaking tracts of Madras for amalgamation of these tracts with Orissa under one administration . . . It is unquestionable that wherever the Oriya raiyats have learned something of the matter, they are entirely in favour of amalgamation."

In the Assembly.

At this stage there seems to have been a further reference made to the provinces. In February, 1927, Pandit Neelakantha Das moved in the Legislative Assembly for putting all the Oriya-speaking tracts under one local administration. The Home Member revealed during the debate that both the Central Provinces and Madras Governments opposed amalgamation, and the Bihar and Orissa Government wanted to make sure that the additions to its territory should be financially solvent. He expressed his sympathy with the aspirations of the Oriyas, and stated that the position was not quite satisfactory and that the tracts would be transferred if financial considerations made it possible to take such a step. The resolution was then withdrawn.

Mr. U. M. Sen.

The Government of Bihar and Orissa in 1927 deputed one of its officers to investigate into the finances of Ganjam, and that gentleman reported that there would be an annual deficit of 11½ lakhs because of Ganjam. We shall discuss the financial aspect of the matter in a subsequent chapter, and therein will be shown how the standards adopted by this officer are incorrect.

The Utkal All-Parties Conference held on the 7th December, 1928, attended by representatives of all schools of opinion has definitely demanded a separate province, and also asserted that the finances of the united Orissa Province would suffice her needs. The resolutions passed by the Conference are given as an appendix to this Scheme. The administrative aspect of the problem and matters arising therefrom will be discussed in the next two chapters.

CHAPTER IV.

THE DEMAND FOR A SEPARATE PROVINCE.

Demands from Time to Time.

We have seen in the previous chapter that while the demand for amalgamation of the Oriya-speaking tracts received a uniform and insistent emphasis from the outset, claims for the creation of a separate province have been made since 1903. That year the citizens of Cuttack wanted a "Chief Commissionership like that of Assam" but advanced it as an alternative proposal. In 1907, before the Decentralisation Commission, a demand for a Chief Commissionership was made. Before Mr. Montagu in 1917 the Committee of the Utkal Union Conference put forward the demand for a united Orissa and for "an administration of the type which Bihar and Orissa now has." The Conference sitting after the M. C. Report was published, declared in 1918 that "unless a separate province under a Governor-in-Council and a legislative assembly with an elected non-official majority be given to the united Oriya-speaking tracts, the proper solution of the question cannot be fulfilled." It is obvious that till the questions of responsible government and provincial autonomy were definitely in view main stress was laid on the union of the Oriya-speaking tracts, but the claims to a separate province were mentioned unerringly at the same time.

Separate Province as Amalgamation.

As late as February, 1927, Pandit Nilkantha Das asked in the Assembly for amalgamation, but pointed out that nothing less than a separate province would satisfy the Oriyas. The Government then stated that this question of a separate Province needed further enquiry being obviously a more serious matter than amalgamation. We concede that it is so, but the Oriyas never made a secret of what they wanted. Amalgamation was sometimes advanced by politicians only as either a necessary first step or with a view to obtain ready acceptance because it was a simpler proposition. But if the Oriya movement should be brought into line with the Swaraj Constitution, it should be unmistakably pointed out that we want a separate province to shape our own future and to shoulder our own burdens which recent history has pointed out were capable of being borne by no others. A point has sometimes been made that the politicians of Orissa are not united as to what they want, whether, it should be amalgamation or a separate Province. We consider this entirely beside the issue as there has never been want of unanimity as to how Orissa should be governed under a liberal constitution. The Conference of the All Parties in Utkal which appointed the signatories to the present scheme has after deliberate consideration ruled out the question of merely stopping at amalgamation. We do not see why the Oriyas should perpetually be yoked with a predominant and overwhelming partner in a province. It is in no spirit of antipathy to particular provinces that we make this claim: we feel that it is time that our right to self-determination be definitely asserted and recognised and that the risks and responsibilities as much as the glories incident to the creation of a separate status be fully taken over by this ancient people. The Oriyas in the present Orissa Division are only a seventh numerically in the province of Bihar and Orissa, and the position will hardly be altered by adding to the province a population as strong as that of the Orissa Division in point of numbers. Already the financial argument has been advanced that neither the Orissa Division nor the Ganjam District pay their way. The implication undoubtedly is that the extreme solicitude alone of the present Bihar and Madras Governments had been responsible for the well-being of the Oriyas and that otherwise their resources cannot suffice their needs. Without anticipating the arguments to be adduced in a succeeding chapter, we must say that nothing is bound to perpetuate the inferiority of the people concerned than this assertion. A Government is not entitled to advance this argument after a century and a quarter of its rule, singularly marked by neglect. If it had been mindful of the best interests of the people, Orissa would not have been faced by serious problems like floods, her appalling poverty, lack of facilities for education, general or specialised, an increasing death rate, depopulation of certain areas, emigration in thousands of its youthful sections, with all the consequences moral and material. A few minor adjustments or palliatives made to satisfy local agitation will but postpone the day of a final solution. The best of us are not quite free from that morass of pessimism which is so detrimental to corporate effort or new enterprise. The unrelieved lot of a public worker in Orissa is very often to engage himself in the solution of her poverty and to relieve the effect of her floods. But even the best non-official efforts consummate a small solution only. A quiet self-complacency has come over the educated Oriya, and the masses of the population are betraying a dull apathy to suffering, not to speak of co-operative effort. The process has got to be arrested, and the present arrangement is least calculated to advance the position. Delay at best only postpones the evil, while it very often gives rise to new complications requiring new effort to tackle them. The situation needs a comprehensive understanding of the problem, a proper programme, and the application of extraordinary remedies. We do not think that judging from past history, the present provincial governments can develop anything better than caution and tinkering with small details. Even if there is a change by broad basing the government on a democratic franchise without the needed territorial distribution, it will not be possible to work, actuated with that dominant feeling of Orissa's interests, which is now urgently called for, all the more insistently because of past neglect. Yoked with overwhelming numbers of sister nationalities the problem of Oriya progress assumes in all the four provinces the unwholesome aspect of seeking the remedy to minor grievances, if not of an attempt to gain fishes and loaves of office, which is very demoralising.

The Question of a Sub-Province Examined.

We do not think either that our problem is capable of satisfactory solution if what is known as a sub-province be instituted. We have already indicated what in broad outline this proposal meant to the authors of the Indian Constitutional Reforms. The essence of the plan of sub-provinces is dyarchy with a horizontal division of functions along territorial line added to the present anomalous and difficult system. Even official opinion does not declare that dyarchy has been successful these eight years while most of those who had worked the transferred departments under the system have condemned it. And this, quite apart from the stigma to the nation attached in "training" in, and in the offering of successive stages of, responsible government. In consonance with advanced political opinion, we are for provincial autonomy, consistent with the presence of a strong Central Government. Dyarchy is consistent with Provincial Autonomy, and a Sub-Province can exist only if there is dyarchy. We wish this simple truth could have been realised in certain quarters. If a Sub-Province be formed, we anticipate that subjects like Public Works, Education, Local Self-Government, Agriculture, would be transferred in the first instance for administration by the Sub-Provincial Government with the aid of a Sub-Provincial Legislature. We are already familiar with the practical effect of a so-called joint purse on the progressive transferred departments in the provinces. In fact the division of heads of revenue between the Central and Provincial governments, the juxtaposition in which excise was placed with a subject like education, and the all-India agitation for prohibition which affected excise revenues of the provinces at the commencement of the Reformed constitution, all these factors taken cumulatively have adversely affected the chances of dyarchy. The proposal of a sub-province does in no way improve the position. Thirdly, an arrangement where not only the Central Government but also the Provincial government will be an additional controlling authority over the actions of the Sub-Province is least to be desired. And then, the creation of a Sub-Province within a province presumed the formation of other Sub-Provinces therein. Let us take the illustration of Behar and Orissa. Let us suppose the outlying Oriya tracts are added to Orissa, and Orissa is then constituted a Sub-Province. Should not Behar be made a Sub-Province? But Behar has never wanted to be a Sub-Province. Our point is that if only one section like Orissa in Behar and Orissa be made a Sub-Province, the Provincial Council at the top, whatever ingenious arrangement be proposed, will acquire control of some sort over the affairs of the Sub-Province, which, it is obvious, no advocate of the system desires. There would be in the Sub-Province three sets of officers, two of which are not under the control of the Sub-Province. Even if an elaborate system be adopted for allocating funds or dividing heads of revenue between a Province and Sub-Province, for co-ordination and control of functions, and for collection of taxes, with all the complications that the administrative aspect involves, we are confronted with the outstanding status of inferiority of such a Sub-Province. Nor would the situation be improved by the presence of a handful of Orissa representatives in the Provincial Council. Occasions of conflict on the score of finance between the Provincial Council and the Sub-Province will multiply and the conflicts this time will assume a racial character, leading not to the consummation of that Indian unity which we all seek in the sphere of a democratic government but to a very different position. In fact, a Sub-Province, if it is not to furnish scope for mischief, will remain a dignified edition of an organ of local self-government like a District Board. We are aware that the failure of the Government to pursue the suggestion of the authors of the M. C. Report to create a Sub-Province at an early date after the Councils of 1921 were formed, was only in keeping with their policy of indifference towards the interests of the Oriyas and was not the result of anxiety as to the success of this new experiment. The protracted correspondence which they carried on during these nine years since Mr. Sinha's motion in the old Imperial Legislative Council betrayed the truth of this remark. Each Provincial Government seemed to vie with the other as to how little it should give. The Madras Government shut its eyes to the repeated representations which they received year after year from Madras Oriyas, propounded theories as to the language of Madras Oriyas being different from that of the Oriyas of Orissa, and went to the length of asking to be reimbursed for the cost of buildings which they had created in Ganjam. The Government of the Central Provinces during these years has made a somersault in going back upon their own recommendations. But this by the way.

Proposal for a Separate Minister.

A fourth proposal, of a novel character, remains to be mentioned. The proposal is of Mr. Madhusudan Das, C.I.E., once Minister of the Bihar and Orissa Government. Instead of a Sub-Province, he wanted an Oriya Minister in charge of the transferred departments pertaining to Orissa. Apart from the novelty of the plan, the assumption that all the subjects could be administered by a single Minister goes against the proposal. The administration would practically be in the hands of a number of secretaries not responsible to any legislature, and even the minister is not mentioned as being responsible to the members from Orissa in the Council. But if the latter is provided in the constitution, a further anomaly will be created. While the Orissa minister may not enjoy the confidence of the Orissa members, he may win other votes in the council, so that practically he will be at the mercy of votes of persons belonging to places with whose transferred subjects the minister has nothing to do. On the other hand, so far as the Orissa portion is concerned, a bureaucracy worse than what the existing machinery provided would be brought into being. We see no reason why this anomalous state of affairs should be brought into existence in the attempt to safeguard Orissa's interests. We cannot think that this would conduce to democracy and believe this is worse than the solution offered by a Sub-Province.

We clearly see the need of forming a separate Province. The fact that there are provinces in India with long experience of government should not render it necessary that we should begin our career with an "instalment" or "a stage" of responsibility, nor is there any reason to think that our progress, instead of being based on the lessons furnished by the experience of other provinces, should be extended over as many years as it has taken them to arrive at the present stage of development. We have indicated that mere amalgamation will only put off the solution of the outstanding question which the sons and daughters of Orissa alone are competent or bound to achieve. Makeshifts like the creation of a sub-province will multiply constitutional difficulties without effectively or at all solving vital matters affecting the people. Orissa's long history when she was an independent kingdom with military and maritime activity, her surpluses which enabled the famous temples to be built, and her zeal in literary and religious movements, all demand that she should be a distinct entity in the future polity of India. Without being such a unit, it is impossible for Orissa to unfold her life and culture.

CHAPTER V.

SCHEME OF AMALGAMATION.

The actual constitution of the future province of Orissa resolves itself into two parts, firstly the amalgamation of the Oriya-speaking country lying in Bihar and Orissa, Madras, Central Provinces, and Bengal, and secondly creation of a separate provincial unit. In a previous chapter we have indicated the additional difficulties arising out of the Oriyas being scattered in four provinces. A commission has therefore to go into the question of the delimitation of the boundaries.

Union of Areas.

The scheme of areas and population which have to be united is given below. This was adopted eleven years ago by the Utkal Union Conference. Some modifications may undoubtedly be necessary, and we neither have the material nor the time to deal with the question as to which taluka or which zamindari should be added or left out. These are bound to be controversial matters and should be settled by an Expert Committee who should give full consideration to all aspects.

Underlying Principles.

The general principles which should underlie such delimitation in our opinion are as follows. Full consideration should be given to the question of linguistic uniformity. By "language" we do not mean that the language spoken at home should be the sole criterion. An Oriya caste may have under the stress of the present dismemberment become Telugu or Hindi-speaking because of want of facilities in schools, courts and katcheries for the Oriya language. A unit of area should be fixed in each of the outlying tracts, and if Oriya is the predominant language in that unit, then it should go with Orissa. So far as the Madras tracts are concerned, this unit should be a revenue taluka. If large estates have a bi-lingual population, the opinions and conveniences of the proprietor or zamindar should certainly weigh with the Expert Committee, but the desires of the tenants, if they conflict with those of the zamindar, should generally be upheld, unless there are strong reasons of administrative convenience why the desires of the tenants should be overruled. We are not in favour of partitioning estates for purposes of a separate province of Orissa. Then there may be large industrial centres like Jamshedpur within a district like Singbhum proposed to be amalgamated. A question like this should be settled by a sort of arbitration of a representative of the Central Government. Then the question of aboriginal races has to be decided. The principle to follow in this respect is to find out to which province the particular race is mostly confined, and then put them together in the same province. A second consideration in respect of the aboriginal classes is to pay due regard to the language which has been the civilising medium in their case. And if they entered into any agreement as to which language they should receive instructions in, the same should be respected. If in a tract mostly peopled by aboriginal classes, the tests above do not yield a result in consonance with the object of securing a linguistic province out of a contiguous area, then the desires of the major non-aboriginal community as to which province the tract should be transferred should finally decide the question. But we do not think the problem in any tract will assume this last form, if the interests are sought to be served of the aboriginal population as well as the Feudatory States of Orissa which are an integral part of Utkal so far as propinquity of language and race is concerned. Finally, there may be one or two small areas predominantly Oriya speaking but as a result of the disruptive force working so long in the outlying areas their leaders may be incapable of realising the value of a separate Utkal Province. In such a case there should be a referendum to the adult population to finally decide the issue. Our proposals might seem meticulous, but knowing as we do the strongly evil effects of this long dismemberment, we feel that no pains should be spared to go into the question. As we have already stated the Oriya problem is the acutest and is not merely a part of the general movement for linguistic distribution of provinces.

The Scheme.

The following will give an idea of the Oriya-speaking country. The population figures are of the 1921 Census, except where otherwise indicated :—

Serial No.	Oriya Tracts.	Area in square miles.	Total population 1921.	Oriya Population.	Remarks.
	BIHAR AND ORISSA.
1	Orissa Division	13,736	4,968,873	4,657,947
2	Orissa Feudatory States (26)	28,648	3,959,699	2,940,338
3	Singhum Dt. in Chota Nagpur Division ...	3,891	759,438	140,821
	MADRAS.
4	Ganjam Dt., except Chicacole Taluk ...	7,920	1,894,851	1,024,043
5	Vizagapatam Agency, except Gudam Taluk	11,883	938,576	473,710
	CENTRAL PROVINCE.
6	Chandrapur, Padmapur, Phuljhar and Khariar Zamindaris, etc.	1,822	266,344	139,362	We have taken figures for 1911 as it was not possible to get figures for 1921.
7	Bastar, Sarangarh, Raigarh, Udaipur, and Jhaspur States	18,056	993,552	102,022
	BENGAL.
8	Contai sub-division, Dantan, Gopiballabpur, Mohanpur, Nayagram, etc.	2,564	1,243,580	572,798*
	Total	88,520	15,024,883	10,051,041
	British Territory	41,816	10,071,662	7,008,681
	States	46,704	4,953,221	3,042,360

* As admitted in the Census Reports both for Bengal and India and the Bengal Government, there has been a manipulation of figures representing Oriya speakers at the Census of 1921, and hence the figure of 1891 is taken as likely to be more correct.

Status of the Administration and other matters.

The status of the administration for this 15 millions of population should be a Governor's Province. The Governor should be appointed by the Governor-General in Council as recommended by the supplementary Report of the Nehru Committee. The Provincial Executive should consist of three ministers appointed by the Governor. The Governor should select the Chief Minister and appoint others only on his advice. We have accepted the provision of a uni-cameral legislature for the provinces consisting of a number of members calculated at the rate of one per 100,000 of population, and a bi-cameral system for the Central government, the upper house being elected by the provincial Councils. The present system of a circuit High Court at Cuttack should be continued, but which High Court of a neighbouring province should in the future exercise control may be determined by eliciting popular opinion. We favour the formation of a Supreme Court. So long as a separate High Court is not established for Orissa, we propose that the Supreme Court should have jurisdiction over disputes concerning the Orissa Feudatory States.

There should be no Divisional Commissioners. The Officer in charge of the States should be appointed by the Governor-in-Council. A University for Orissa should come into existence, which should put emphasis on studies relating to Orissa's natural resources and her language, arts, and crafts. As the University will have to serve both British Orissa and Orissa States a way should be found of constituting the governing body on the elective principle of not only giving representation to graduates, the legislative council, and local bodies, but also to donors from the Feudatory States. The proposed Orissa Chamber of Princes should be provided with representation on the governing body.

There should be universal adult franchise to the legislature, and a candidate for election must have attained 21 years of age. There shall be reservation of seats in the legislature for Mussalmans on the proportion of their population with the right to contest additional seats. This reservation shall be for ten years and the matter may be reconsidered after the expiry of the period. The term of the provincial council should be five years.

The maximum salary of the Governor shall be Sixty Thousand Rupees while the Ministers should be paid Thirty-Six Thousand Rupees.

CHAPTER VI.

THE FINANCIAL ASPECT.

The Financial Consideration is of Recent Origin.

The creation of a separate province of Orissa has recently been discussed in the country, and the All Parties Conference held at Lucknow in August last has assented to the proposal if the Oriya-speaking people "are able or are prepared to bear the financial burden which is incidental to separation." This declaration assumes two things, viz., that either the present revenues of the Oriya-speaking country do not satisfy all its needs, and the deficit of the burden is borne by the present provincial governments in whose jurisdiction the Oriyas live; or, that the income just balances the expenditure so far as the provincial finances are concerned, and that the cost of equipping the new government with offices and residences and the additional establishment have to be met from new sources, which in this instance the Conference suggests should be the people concerned by means of additional taxation; or, further still, that both the present deficits if any and the additional cost of forming a new government should be so borne. It is needless to point out that this opinion of the Conference has not been founded on any examination of the finances of Orissa. But apart from this objection, we confess that this apotheosis of the financial consideration has been recently imported, and that even the government has till now never adopted this line of argument. Of course, it has been reported that the Bihar and Orissa Government has expressed its unwillingness unaided to undertake the task of administering Oriya tracts transferred from Madras unless a way was found to reimburse them for the supposed deficit of the tracts proposed to be transferred. We do not consider this attitude entirely unreasonable, for both the provincial legislature and the Central Government have to be consulted by them, however much we may desire that a bold policy should be adopted on their own initiative by the Bihar and Orissa Government. Neither the Report on Indian Constitutional Reforms (in para. 246) nor the Report of the Joint Select Committee of the Government of India Bill (Recommendation on Clause 15) nor Sec. 52A of the present Government of India Act lay down any condition as to the financial question. This is not to say that the financial question is not at all important. Our contention is that it should not supersede other very vital matters which form the prime consideration in respect of the Oriya demand. Under the circumstances we regret exceedingly the decision of the All Parties Conference on the subject, while we readily concede that the question of finance has to be examined preliminary to amalgamation and creation of a provincial status.

Orissan Finances in olden times.

Before examining the question of finance, we should first like to allude to the historical fact that Orissa like several other administrative units was in the past in the full enjoyment of an autonomous government both self-contained and efficient. We do not make this reference with a view to obtain a solution from the past as to the exact question which immediately needs a solution but wish to make out that both history and sentiment are in our favour and the experiment of a separate province is not proposed to be made in the dark. We find from the account of Orissa by Hunter that a substantial surplus was in most cases the invariable rule when the Kings of Orissa governed. Dr. Hunter asserts (see Orissa, Vol. 1, p. 325, et seq.) that under the native dynasty, the revenue sufficed to support an administration infinitely more minute and as regards its higher officials infinitely higher paid than at present under British control. He says (ibid): "Under the Hindu princes it supported, besides, a peasant militia of 300,000 men and a regular army of 50,000 foot, 10,000 horse, and 2,500 elephants. We know from the Mussalman annalists that the Orissa King could at a moment's notice take the field with 18,000 horse and foot. But the public works of the Hindu Dynasty attest the magnitude of their resources in a way that admits of no dispute. Thirty or forty thousand pounds* were not considered extravagant for an ordinary temple. The accumulations of one monarch (Anang Bhim Deo) are stated at £1,296,750 and from this he set apart £406,250 (1,500,000 marhs of gold) for the holy edifice of Jagannath. A similar magnificence surrounded the private life of the Orissa Kings. Their five royal residences (Kataks) still live in popular tradition." And Raja Narasinha Deo spent for the building of the Black Pagoda at Konarak an amount no less than the revenue of twelve years.

Provinces not Independent Fiscal Units.

Before considering the present revenue and expenditure of the Oriya-speaking tracts, it is well to bear in mind a few general considerations. The provinces in India are admittedly the creations of mere administrative exigencies, having grown in a haphazard fashion. They have been considered as independent political entities only recently. The supreme, central government was in existence long before. Even when the provinces began to function, they acted simply as agents or representatives of the central government with neither an independent will nor an independent policy of their own. Till the Reforms of 1921 the provinces spent money allotted to them by their principal and it is only recently that the goal of a political federation and fiscal autonomy has been accepted by every shade of public opinion. But frequent changes in the boundaries of the province as well as the fact that they came under British rule at different times and under different stages of development obviously destroy the hypothesis of treating the provinces as independent fiscal units, capable of all being treated according to a uniform standard of financial relations with the central government or of taxation by the respective governments. Attempts at standardising the financial relations between the provincial governments and the government of India have no doubt been made ever since 1870–71 when Lord Mayo first introduced an element of decentralisation.

* Dr. Hunter wrote in 1872, and the appropriate value in modern terms should be taken to arrive at a proper figure.

No Uniform Standard of Financial Relations with Provinces yet possible.

Although in 1909 the government of India laid down and the Royal Commission on Decentralisation endorsed that the same share of the chief sources of revenue should be given to the provinces, there was no uniformity observed as regards the percentage of each head of revenue allotted to each of them. In fact the standards adopted in 1910–11 in these "permanent settlements" were based primarily on the estimated needs of individual provinces on the actual data of expenditure then available. The scheme of these "permanent settlements" which converted fixed assignments to the provinces into a system of divided heads provided special contributions from the central exchequer; and what is interesting, such contributions were larger than during the period when the quasi-permanent settlements were in force. The Meston settlements of 1921 separated the resources of the central and provincial governments and fixed a system of contributions by the provinces to the central exchequer, but in a number of cases these contributions had to be remitted by the central government, notably in Bengal for three years at the rate of 63 lakhs per annum from 1922–23 onwards. The Meston Committee fixed the "initial contributions" of provinces on the basis of the increased spending power resulting from the redistribution of the revenue heads. And agreeably to the recommendation of the Joint Select Committee of 1919, these provincial contributions have been finally wiped out in the current year. And even at that a final stage has by no means been reached. The recommendations of the Taxation Enquiry Committee in their relation to the Meston Settlement are awaiting translation into action. The Government of India seems committed to idea of giving provinces a greater share of income tax than that accruing under Devolution Rule XV; they are suggesting that the provinces should have the proceeds of flat rate of income tax on personal assessable incomes from all assessees resident within the province; the resulting provincial deficits are proposed to be made up by fixed assignments or by a system of grants in aid for specific purposes. The position indicates that the provinces and the central government have not developed a fixed system of relations.

Provinces not to be left to their own devices.

Since the Reforms the provinces have obtained independent powers of taxation and there have been varying rates of increase of revenue during the period. In a province like Bihar and Orissa, the development has been slower than the more advanced provinces firstly because of the comparatively recent constitution of the province, and secondly because of the low taxable capacity of its population. In provinces like Punjab or Madras the development was more rapid, and for obvious reasons. What we wish to point out is that though it should be the ideal of the federal government of India to attain a common standard of economic welfare for all the provinces, the fact that they are not all equally developed or even capable of identical lines of simultaneous progress, that their possibilities of new revenue resources are also unknown and unrealised, should not be overlooked. While the system of assignments by the Central government has to be deprecated as a permanent arrangement affecting the aim of self-sufficiency of the provinces, the method of provincial contributions will impair the credit of the central government both inside and outside the country and consequently is equally undesirable. We therefore do not think it advisable even if possible to abandon the provinces to their own devices of enhancing their revenues. The insistent demand for provincial fiscal autonomy might not permit that "watchful might of a common central government, supreme as it will be solicitous" to the developmental needs of each province. We therefore consider it necessary to utter this note of warning when federation ideas are in the air, and we are particularly gratified to find that the Nehru Report endorses the sentiment that it is not absolute federation that the country should have a view.

But minimum standard of welfare necessary.

The question of financial self-sufficiency therefore is beset with limitations of a fundamental character. India has nine Governors' provinces and six backward provinces. These backward provinces, for instance, ought not to lag behind in the standard of material prosperity and comfort. But if these were to depend entirely on their own resources, they may not for a long time be able to provide for the people in their charge all the facilities that go to make up civilised life. While, therefore, no absolute uniformity of conditions is attainable or even desirable, we must insist on a minimum standard, below which no province should go in the national interest and up to which certain provinces may not come of their own resources.

Need for a different angle of vision.

These considerations imply that the problem of a separate province should be approached from a totally different angle of vision. By this we do not compromise the position we have taken up in the succeeding paragraphs that the present revenues of natural Orissa are sufficient for her needs so far as her present scale of expenditure is concerned. We have discussed the general question because the financial relations need a further adjustment and in fact the proposals are on the anvil, while the fact that Orissa which has been in four provinces and neglected during a century and a quarter, makes it essential that the general considerations should not be lost sight of in providing the wherewithal for her development as a distinct provincial unit.

Full data not available.

In the examinations of the financial aspect we are however, confronted with an initial difficulty. The figures of revenue and expenditure for a Division or a District are not separately available unless information is gathered from answers to Council interpellations and unless the government makes the calculations separately. In the case of the Ganjam District, however, comparatively full information is available as the average of the three years from 1923–24 to 1925–26 have been worked out and an officer of the Behar finance department was deputed in 1927 to Ganjam and Madras to study the position. There is also no means of arriving at the indirect or undistributed revenue in the case of the Orissa Division. Nor has any data been available for our purposes of Singbhum or the Oriya tracts in the Central Provinces and Bengal. Even the Government has to base its calculations on rough approximations.

Orissa Division.

In 1925–26 the revenues stood as follows for the Orissa Division :—

	In lakhs of Rupees.
Land Revenue	30.54
Excise	31.53
Stamps	12.21
Forests	3.74
Mines and Miscellaneous	0.61
Jails	0.23
Registration	1.73
Law, Justice, Police, Education, Medical, Roads and Buildings	2.62
Total of direct revenue Rs.	83.21
Add on the basis of the comparative population of the Orissa Division and of Behar and Orissa, one-seventh of the undistributed revenue ... Rs.	5.62
Total Revenue ... Rs.	88.23

This Total does not take into account the receipts under local cesses for the years, of Rs. 4.56 lakhs. The recent land revenue settlements just concluded are expected to yield about Rs. 10 lakhs. As to further increases in revenue, we note that the revenues of the Orissa division were calculated once in 1922 and a second time after 1926. During these four years, while the revenues of the entire province increased from Rs. 443 lakhs to Rs. 579 lakhs, those of the Orissa division rose from 73 lakhs to 88¼ lakhs. The increase percentage is less in the Orissa division. But we think that considering the normal increase the revenues of the Orissa division would swell to at least 116 lakhs by 1931 when the first decennium after the Reforms would have been completed.

Deficit of Surplus.

In the absence of data for expenditure, we shall consider the Behar Government's assertion that in 1925–26 there has been 17¾ lakhs of deficit in the Orissa Division after taking into account the undistributed expenditure at one-seventh of the provincial total. This undistributed expenditure provides for headquarters charges, the Governor, the Executive, the Legislature, the Secretariat, the heads of the departments and a share of the High Court. We have said that the settlements have enhanced land revenue by about Rs. 10 lakhs, and even if the contention of a deficit of 17¾ lakhs falling as a deficit in 1926 be true, the balance of 7¼ could be made up by removing the iniquity of having to pay out of normal revenues to pay interest charges on the Orissa canals. The receipts and working expenses of these canals are said to be mutually balancing themselves, while Rs. 8.50 lakhs have to be paid to the Central Government annually on capital account and shown as irrigation charges. Originally these canals were not wanted, and this iniquitous burden was saddled on the provincial revenues under strange circumstances. The recent report of the Adams-Williams Committee which enquired into the Orissa floods write about the Orissa canals: "As the result of a report by Sir Arthur Cotton which has since been based upon incorrect premises the Orissa canals were taken in hand in 1863 by a private company, the East India Irrigation and Canal Company in spite of a warning from Government that the profits anticipated were almost certainly over-estimated. The Company failed in 1868 when the works were only half completed and government took them over and finished them, although on a less ambitious scale than had originally been contemplated. Owing to the huge capital cost, the canal system has never been remunerative; it does little more than pay its working expenses leaving the bulk of the interests on the original expenditure to be met from other revenues. Since 1891, the cost of all new works required for the system has been met from revenue. We do not see why the future generation of Orissa should be penalised for the mistakes, consciously acquiesced in by a government which went out of its way to evince solicitude for the misfortunes of a private company. If this amount be remitted, a measure which is long overdue, the finances of Orissa division by 1931 would be more than self-sufficient.

Ganjam District.

The figures of the Ganjam District are available from answers to interpellations by Sjt. Biswanath Das, member of the Madras Council and a signatory to this report. The Madras government has worked out an average of income and expenditure for the district during the three years 1923–24 to 1925–26, and showed that revenue of the whole district is Rs. 45.84 lakhs while expenditure is Rs. 37.81 lakhs. Mr. U. M. Sen of the Behar Government worked out what he calls "standard figures" which are totally divorced from local conditions or the experience of the Madras Government itself. Sjt. Biswanath Das has gone minutely into the matter, and shown both on the basis of the government's figures, the Administrative Reports, and statistics obtained from departmental officer in the district that there is no justification for departing very much from the data contained in the Madras Government's replies to his interpellations of February, 1926, and September, 1928. We have adopted Mr. Das's figures and do not think it necessary to deal item by item of Mr. Sen's errors. The position stands thus :—

	Revenue.	Expenditure.	Difference.
	lakhs.	lakhs.	lakhs.
Madras Government's averages ...	45·84	37·81	+8·03
Mr. U. M. Sen's standard figures ...	38·63	45·14	−6·51
Our standards ...	52·96	42·58	10·37

The table shown on page 419 will illustrate the position under each head of receipts and expenditure.

Mr. Sen's excluded areas.

Mr. Sen excludes a number of taluks of the Ganjam district whose revenue and expenditure he arbitrarily puts at Rs. 13.57 and Rs. 8.72 lakhs without including therein a proportionate share of expenditure incurred in pay, establishment, contingencies both of office and Officers of the district heads of departments There is no warrant for doing so if even the recommendations of the Philip-Duff Report are taken into account. We shall deduct Rs. 7.17 lakhs from both revenue and expenditure of the total district figures to arrive at the financial position of the portion of the district proposed to be added. This figure is taken from the statement of the Madras Government. Thus from Ganjam portion we shall obtain an additional revenue of not less than Rs. 45.5 lakhs.

Other tracts.

Then there is the Vizagapatam Agency except the Gudem taluk, Singbhum, the Midnapur areas and the C.P. Oriya speaking tracts. Accurate and up-to-date figures of these areas are not available, but the additional revenue would be in the neighbourhood of Rs. 35 lakhs from these areas

Not a deficit Province.

Thus the total revenue of the Oriya-speaking country would be in the neighbourhood of Rs. 197 lakhs with a present scale of expenditure which does not exceed the receipts of the province. The Behar government estimates that the expenditure of a separate Oriya province will be about Rs. 150 lakhs and there would be a deficit of Rs. 20 lakhs annually. We have shown that there would be increase in land

SCHEME FOR SEPARATE PROVINCE FOR UTKAL. [Continued.

AVERAGE FIGURES FOR THREE YEARS FOR GANJAM DISTRICT.

	Receipts (in lakhs of Rupees).			Expenditure (in lakhs of Rupees).
	Madras Government figures.	Sen's Standard figures.	Our Standard figures.	Madras Government figures.	Sen's Standard figures.	Our Standard figures.
1. Taxes on income	—	0.09	.15	—	—	—
2. Land revenue	23.72	18.32	23.72	1.24	0.34	9.64*
3. Excise	11.59	11.23	11.59	0.50	0.82	0.75
4. Stamps	5.56	5.85	5.85	0.12	0.15	0.15
5. Forests	—	1.78	2.50	—	2.30	1.30
6. Registration...	0.87	0.87	0.80	0.58	0.58	0.60
7. Irrigation (XIII)	—	0.90
8. Irrigation (XIV)	3.02	0.02	7.27	5.54	8.79	9.50†
9. Interest (XVI)	0·26	0·26
10. Administration of justice ...	0.33	0.33	0.33	2.00	2.00	2.00
11. Jails and convict settlement	0.06	0.06	0.06	0.50	0.50	0.50
12. Police	0.12	0.14	0.14	6.45	6.95	6.95
13. Education	0.03	0.01	0.01	7.23	8.66	7.50
14. Medical	0.05	0.01	0.01	1.01	1.34	1.10
15. Public Health	0.03	0.01	0.01	0.36	0.42	0.42
16. Agriculture	0.03	0.01	0.01	0.37	0.37	0.37
17. Industries	0.07	0.07	0.07	0.06	0.10	0.10
18. Miscellaneous departments	0.08	0.08	0.08	0.05	0.05	0.05
19. Civil works	0.13	0.15	0.15	2.75	6.00	(Vide items 7, 8 and 9).
20. Superannuation	0.08	0.08	0.08	1.33	1.33	1.33
21. Stationery and printing ...	0.03	0.03	0.03	0.09	0.40	0.10
22. Miscellaneous	0.10	0.10	0.10	0.03	0.03	0.03
	Rs.45.84	Rs.38.63	Rs.52.96 lakhs.	Rs.37.81	Rs.45.14	Rs.42.59 lakhs.

Summary.	Receipts.	Expenditure.
As per average of three years for 1923–24 to 1925–26	Rs. 45.84 lakhs	Rs. 37.84 lakhs
Mr. Sen's suggested Standard	Rs. 38.63 ,,	Rs. 45.14 ,,
Our estimates...	Rs. 52.96 ,,	Rs. 42.56 ,,

* This includes expenditure—22 General Administration.
† This includes expenditure under 41 Civil Works which is Item 19 here.

revenue of the Orissa division, the annual payment of interest on the Orissa canals should be remitted besides the factor of normal increase in revenues. These show that at present the province is not a deficit province.

Future development.

We certainly realise that development of the province would need additional revenues. There is one factor to be considered. The Oriya province contains within its limits the scheduled or backward tracts of (1) Jeypore, (2) Ganjam Agency, (3) Angul, (4) Singhbhum, and other tracts, whose revenues do not suffice the expenditure that must be incurred on them and will not suffice till a minimum standard is reached. There was a discussion in the Legislative Assembly in February, 1927, about withdrawal of Angul from the operation of Sec. 52A of the Government of India Act on an amendment by Sjt. B. Das, a member from Orissa. It may be that some of the provincial governments concerned have been bearing the burden of developing these areas at present, but under the reformed constitution this should be a charge on the Central Government. The claim receives added weight in view of the fact that no legislature, Provincial or Imperial has any jurisdiction over these areas. In our opinion specific assignments should be made to the new province for the purpose, without thereby reviving the old system of doles. As regards expenditure too, we think that a policy of retrenchment will make it possible to cut down expenses which may tend to make the administration top-heavy And if a national policy be pursued both new sources of revenue and possibilities of retrenchment will open out to the province, and a new enthusiasm and a new sense of responsibility will be substituted for the present morass of cynicism that scoffs at a financially self-contained Orissa.

Other Provinces.

The revenue of 197 lakhs of Rupees is in our opinion sufficient for a new province like Orissa to start its career. The province of Assam began its post-reform career with Rs. 182 lakhs, while in 1912–13 its revenues were only Rs. 170 lakhs. The Central Provinces after the Berars were added began with a revenue of only Rs. 168 lakhs, though this was in the pre-Reform days. The province of Bihar and Orissa showed an increase of 79 per cent. in its revenues during the last 16 years of its life, while other older provinces during the same period revealed a lower rate of increase, thus :—

Bengal	63 per cent.
Central Provinces ...	75 per cent.
Assam	63 per cent.

In the matter of land revenue, the Behar part of the province is less elastic than Orissa, because of the permanent settlement. If this result was possible, and Behar could beat an advanced province of Bengal during the last 16 years, we believe Orissa's future is still more hopeful, and that her nation building departments will not be starved because of the over-head charges of a new provincial administration.

Conclusion.

We must also claim special treatment so far as the future development is concerned. Orissa's revenues have till now gone to create equipment in Bengal, Behar and in the other provinces. They have created the balances of the provincial governments. They have added to the Famine Insurance Funds without, in our opinion, obtaining in the case of the Behar administration, an adequate return when her population was stricken with disasters. We therefore deem it necessary that the "watchful might" of the Central Government should be discreetly and beneficently exercised to bring the economic welfare of the Oriyas to the level of advanced provinces. In the Nehru Report and in the resolutions of the All Parties Conference both N.W. Frontier Province and Baluchistan are proposed to be made governors' provinces. Their financial positions stands thus in 1926–27 :—

	Revenue.	Expenditure.
N.W. Frontier Province.	86.2 lakhs.	285.3 lakhs (of which Rs. 99 lakhs is political expenditure).
Baluchistan ...	21.62 lakhs.	82.19 lakhs.

Judged from whatever standards, from the point of view of population, education and revenues, despite all the handicaps resulting from long neglect, Orissa deserves a far better treatment, consistent with her history, her traditions and her aspirations. We note too that the Madras Congress of 1927 did not make any assumptions about financial deficits when they recommended the formation of all Utkal Province. It is but right that the bogey of finance be once for all removed and a more optimistic view taken by these concerned. We consider that linguist distribution of province should not be made conditional on questions of finance, for it is really the principle of self-determination which is involved in this proposal.

B. DAS.
LAKSHMINARAYAN SAHU.
NEELAKANTHA DAS.
LINGARAJ MISHRA.
HAREKRUSHNA MAHATAB.
NANDAKISORE DAS.
MUKUNDAPRASAD DAS
JADUMANI MANGARAJ.
LINGARAJ PANIGRAHI.
BISWANATH DAS.
JOGINDRANARAYAN ACHARYA.
RADHANATH PATI.
RAM NARAYAN MISRA.
NIRANJAN PATNAIK.
GOPABANDHU CHOWDHURI.

Memorandum submitted by B. N. MISRA, Barrister-at-Law, Ex-M.L.A. (Orissa Division).

REGARDING THE UNION OF ORIYA-SPEAKING TRACTS.

I herewith beg to enclose a memorandum for the Amalgamation of the Oriya-speaking-tracts under one of the existing Provinces preferably under Bihar and Orissa to avoid the embarassing question of Finance.

I need hardly mention that the principle of forming Provinces on Linguistic Basis has been admitted on all hands, i.e., the Government of India, British Parliament, the National Congress of India and by prominent and advanced Politicians and Political Leaders of India and England.

(a) In case the formation of a separate Province for Orissa is decided which will be most welcome to the people, the Province ought to be formed of the British District of Puri, Cuttack, Balasore, Sambalpur Singhbhum and Angul from the Province of B. & O.

(b) Phuljhar, Khariar, Padmapur, Chandrapur, Malkhurda from the Central Provinces.

(c) Ganjam District (with the exception of Chicacole and Narsanepetta Taluqs); Jeypore in the Vizagapatam District from the Province of Madras.

(d) Cantai Sub-division and 4 Thanas of Midnapur Sub-division from Bengal.

(e) And the States of Baster, Raigad, Sarang Garh, Jashpur from C.P. together with the 24 States of Ruling Chiefs now existing in Orissa.

It is respectfully submitted that the area, population and finance will justify the formation of a separate Province.

The constitution of Orissa will be as follows :—

Executive Government: A governor with 3 Ministers chosen from the elected members of the Legislature without any executive Council.

Legislative council will consist of as many members as the population and importance of the Province demands.

The Commissioner's post and establishment will be abolished and merged in the formation of the Executive proposed.

The States of the Ruling Chiefs will have the same rights and privileges as are enjoyed by them subject to their affiliations and submissions to any general scheme that will be arrived at after full consideration for all the Indian States.

The scheme for the Amalgamation of the Oriya-Speaking-Tracts is pending before the Government of India for a very long period. Most likely Reports of the several Provincial Governments will soon reach the Government of India's Office and final decision by His Excellency's Government is anxiously awaited for by the people concerned.

A brief survey of the Oriya country will convince your Commission that no other part of India has such a long-standing-grievance as the Oriya-Speaking-Tracts. The province of Orissa has enjoyed no better lot than that of Cinderella as compared with her neighbouring sister provinces of Andhra or Bengal under the benign British Government. No other race has suffered as much as the Oriyas in matters of

A. Education.
B. Court language.
C. Service under Government.
D. Administration of Law and Justice.
E. Representation in the Government as well as in Councils, and public bodies.

This long-standing neglect of the Oriya Interest by the British Government has greatly handicapped the progress of the race—a race that had a glorious past but is now described as backward and is unable to keep pace with the neighbouring races.

The province of Orissa which is rightly described as the "Holy land of India" and which boasts of the finest specimens of Architecture in the magnificent Temples of Jagannath, Bhubaneswar and even in the ruins of Konark, in suffering most miserably and bleeding from dismemberment of her head and limbs.

Geographically viewed the Oriya-speaking Tracts have been cut into 5 parts and are being administered by 4 Provincial Governments viz. Madras, Bihar and Orissa, Central Provinces and Bengal.

It is unnatural that a race speaking the same language, having the same customs and manners, having same traditions and history, living in one compact and contiguous area should desire to be administered by one Provincial Government and be educationally brought under one University ?

MEMORANDUM BY B. N. MISRA, BARRISTER-AT-LAW, EX-M.L.A. (ORISSA DIVISION). [Continued.

It is submitted most respectfully that complaints and representations have been made to the Madras Government often :—The result being the passing of several orders, particularly Government Order of 1876 (recognising Oriya as a vernacular for educational purposes) G. O. of 1890 (for dividing the District or fixing percentage of Oriyas and Telegus in offices of Government), G. O. of 1912 (recognising Oriya as the sole Court language of Gumsur Division) and similar others to remove some crying grievances. But with due respect to the said Government it must be said that the said orders except the last were more honoured in breach than in observance.

The Oriyas living under C. P. have often prayed for Amalgamation of their tracts with Orissa since 1865. Although Sambalpur has been added to Orissa in 1905, still a good portion in the Raipurand Biaspur districts, viz., Khariar, Phulajhar Padmapur Chandrapur, etc., remain untransferred.

In 1903 the Government of India under the régime of Lord Curzon proposed to unite the whole of Jeypore Zamindary and Ganjam District except Chicacole and Narasannapet Taluqs but unfortunately for the Oriyas the scheme fell through.

Since 1903 the Utkal Union Conference (the most important representative organ of the Oriyas living under Madras, Orissa, Bengal and C.P. Governments) have made representations to unite the Oriya-speaking parts under one Government but no result has yet come out.

The Montford Report of 1919 suggested that a Sub-Province for Orissa should be formed " at no distant date." But nothing has yet been done. Mr. S. Sinha moved a Resolution in the old Imperial Council in 1920 which was supported by the Raja of Kanika. The subject was pressed before the Government of India in the Legislative Assembly in 1921. 1922, 1923 and thereafter, by my humble self, B. S, Das, Ex-M. L. A., and B. Das, M. L. A., and many others besides the several public bodies of Orissa and Ganjam and Members of the Madras and Bihar and Orissa Council.

As a result of these representations the Government of India was pleased to appoint a commission in 1924 to ascertain the wishes of the Oriyas of Madras and the Report of the Phillip-Duff commission was the outcome.

Most likely the Government of India have made up their mind to proceed provisionally on the assumption that the Oriya-speaking-tracts in other provinces may ultimately be included in such amalgamation for which Government deserve the grateful thanks of the Oriyas. But at the same time they express a view that the matter is complicated owing to the presence of the Telugus in :

(a) Jeypore Zamindari.

(b) Parlakimidi and Tekkalli Talluqs and endeavour to make a case against Phillip Duff Recommendation. This news has greatly roused the feeling of the Oriya-speaking people and has disheartened them deeply although they find a silver lining in the dark clouds in the enunciation of the principles to be applicable to the transfer of such tracts.

To the Oriyas the Amalgamation of the Oriya-speaking-tracts is a life and death problem.

To the Telgus
it is a question of retention of Official influence, power and position in the Oriya parts.

It being a very critical moment in the annals of Oriya agitation it is earnestly hoped that your commission will be pleased to bestow their best thought on the question.

For a proper understanding of the case I humbly venture to make some suggestions for consideration by your commission as each area has some peculiar circumstances and the application of the principles has not been rightly made.

(A.)

As regards the Jeypore Zamindari the following submissions may kindly be noticed.

Jeypore Zamindari includes the Taluqus of—

	Oriya.	Telugu.
Nowrangpur	142350	1291
Jeypore	140879	3963
Karapur	37398	912
Malakangiri	22932	3976
Padwa	35841	43559
Bissamcuttack	20890	7310
Raygada	18314	14845
Gunpur	22304	35227
Total	440908	111083

With a population of 440,908 Oriyas as against 111,083 Telugus.

The Government of India proposes to leave this area as it presents some difficulties mentioned below.

(1) It is said the Maharaja of Jeypore is against the transfer of his Zamindary.

(2) In the Taluqs of Padwa and Gunpur the majority being Telugus the said Taluqs cannot conveniently be transferred to the Oriya country.

(3) If the above mentioned 2 Taluqs are retained under the Madras Government the Zamindari will have to be split up.

(4) Nowrangpur, Jeypore and Karaput Taluqs although they have about 98 p.c. of Oriyas still they cannot be transferred because they are (a) separated from the rest of the Orissa by the Kalahandi state.

(b) if transferred the addition of the area will be too small for a district.

With due respect to the observations of the Phillip-Duff Commission and the provisional decision of the Government of India it is submitted that the tests of—

(1) Majority of population.

(2) Entirety of estate for transferring areas have been mis-applied in the case of the tracts mentioned above.

That admittedly Nowrangpur, Jeypur and Koraput contain 320,627 Oriyas as against 6,116 Telegus and must therefore be considered suitable for transfer to Bihar and Orissa.

Two arguments have been advanced against the inclusion of this area in Bihar and Orissa viz. (a) it is separated by the Kalahandi state of Orissa and (b) the addition of the area would be too small for a district.

It is submitted that Angul in Orissa, which is similarly separated by Feudatory States, is well managed by the Bihar and Orissa Government. There will be no difficulty for the said Government to manage the Nowrangpur, Jeypore, Koraput area which is equally circumstanced in position, quality, in point of administration of law and justice, both being non-regulated portions or scheduled districts.

That the Jeypore Zamindari considered as a whole contains 440,908 Oriyas as against 111,083 Telugus, i.e., the proportion of Oriyas to Telegus being 80 to 20.

It is most respectfully submitted that the entire Zamindary fulfils both the tests for transferring the area to Bihar and Orissa.

There will be no administrative difficulty to the Bihar and Orissa Government as they are all administering large tracts in Chhotanagpur, the laws applicable and the form of administration being similar in as Jeypore in Angul and Chhotanagpur districts in Bihar and Orissa.

As regards the second objection it may be said that the Jeypore area will be quite big to form a district, if not two, as the Madras Government treats it for the purpose of Police and Local Self-Government administration. The administration charges being moderate it will not be a heavy burden on the Bihar and Orissa Government. Jeypore has got very large possibilities of material development like Singhbhum and Hazaribagh districts of Chhotnagpur. The Bihar and Orissa Government ought to be too glad to have the entire area.

MEMORANDUM BY B. N. MISRA, BARRISTER-AT-LAW, EX-M.L.A. (ORISSA DIVISION). [Continued.

Further it is submitted that a point or test cannot be carried too far and it is nothing but ridiculous to push it to arrive at a vanishing point.

It is not only unsound but dangerous to go on searching village after village, thana after thana, Taluq after Taluq, to provide for each race to transfer a tract. It is enough if the entire zamindari or Revenue Division contains a good majority of Oriyas.

It is said the Maharaja of Jeypore is opposed to the transfer. The reason is not far to seek. (1) The Maharaja was very likely afraid that his zamindari would be bifurcated, the portion containing a majority of Oriyas might be transferred to Orissa and the portion containing a Telugu majority might be left under Madras.

(2) Then again in spite of the overwhelming majority of Oriya population the Telugus have managed to monopolize his Office. Their interest is antagonistic to the Oriya cause and no wonder that the Maharaja might have been misled about the consequences and necessity of the transfer of his Zamindary.

In case of the transfer of the entire Zamindary prudence ought to dictate to the Maharaja not to oppose the transfer against the the wishes all the Oriya Zamindars and others who welcome the change.

The fact that the entire Zamindary contains about 80 per cent. of Oriyas—the fact that Court language of Jeypore, Nowangpur and Koraput is Oriya—the fact 90 p.c. of the schools are Oriya Schools, are sufficient to convince any one to consent to the transfer. What value can be attached to the opinion of the Maharaja when he does not seem to take a rational view of things and does not interest himself in the welfare of the large majority of his Oriya subjects?

What will be the fate of the Oriya schools in the Zamindari?

What will be the Court language of his Oriya subjects if his Zamindari is kept under Madras?

It is to be regretted that the Maharaja is unable to grasp the situation and to form a proper opinion in the matter.

The Government have always to look to the greatest good of the greatest number. After all the Maharaja is one individual only. It may be, the misled Maharaja may change his opinion if matters are properly explained to him. Therefore at this stage his opposition has neither any force nor any reason in it.

(B.)

Submissions as regards the Parlakhemdi and Takkali Sempetti Taluqs of Ganjam.

It is said these Taluqs contain a majority of Telugus hence it is difficult to transfer them.

This argument ought to be considered with several attendant circumstances.

The Phillip-Duff Commission says :—

"The Zamindars in these Taluqs are mainly Oriyas including the Raja of Parlakimdi who is the owner of the largest permanently settled impartible estate in Ganjam District. They appear to be in favour of Amalgamation."

Messrs. Phillip and Duff concluded so far as Parlakimdi is concerned, that while educated Oriyas desire amalgamation of the Taluqs the Telugus who form the majority of the population do not really care much what Government they are under, provided they keep their lands.

They also observe that if the major portion of the Ganjam District including most of the Zamindary area is taken from Madras, the Parlakhimdi estate should naturally go with the majority.

Further these are small Taluqs and will have to be included in the Berhampur division of the Ganjam District. The Berhampur division has a large majority of Oriyas. When it is proposed to transfer the whole of Berhampur Division these two Taluqs ought to be included in the proposal, if perchance they already existed in the said Division instead of Chicacole.

The Telugus living in those tracts are not very ancient inhabitants. They have settled there for a few generations either for service under the Raja or for agricultural purposes in the Raja's estates. They will have no direct dealings with the Government offices and Courts. Their relations are mostly concerned with their landlord who is an Oriya Raja. If the Rajas of Parlakhimidi, Tekkalli, Nandigram, Tarla and Mandasa choose and maintain the records of their Office in Oriya there is nothing to compel them to keep Telugu records. The result will be same whether the tenants live under the Madras Government or under the Bihar and Orissa Government. It may also be added that if the Government is disposed not to transfer Jeypore area simply because the Maharaja of Jeypore does not wish it why the same principle be not applied in the case of the Rajas of Parlakhimidi, Tekkalli, Nandigan, Tarla and Mandasa? Why the wish of the Raja of Parlakhimidi will not prevail?

If the Maharaja of Jeypore who pays a Government revenue of Rs. 16,000 only is to be respected why the Raja of Parlakhimidi, who pays a revenue of Rs. 87,000 to Government, who maintains a Railway for the benefit of his tenants, who has established a Second Grade College and several other schools for the benefit of his Telugu subjects as well, will not receive the same amount of attention?

Moreover the Telugus of Parlakhimidi are accustomed to the Oriya Raja and Oriya system and can easily adopt the language in case of its transfer to Orissa.

Objects of the Amalgamation.—Above all the object of the amalgamation is to decide the Oriya problems for ever. The Oriyas of Jeypore and Parlakhemidi must not be left in Madras, for it will cause hardship and inconvenience to the people and that Government. The Madras Government will have to maintain Oriya educational staff, Oriya Court language and its Officers and staff will have the same difficulty as now.

The Oriyas will also suffer (1) in education (2) in the use of their language in Courts and Kutchery, etc. The interests of Oriyas will always have to be sacrificed for the benefit of the powerful Telugus as the Oriyas will form a small minority in Madras.

What will be the fate of Oriya schools and Oriya Court language if these tracts are left under the Madras Government?

Why the Andhra people who are claiming for Andhra Province and have got Andhra University be solicitous to carry the burden of the Oriyas and Oriya Education?

Broadmindedness and generosity ought to dictate to them to sympathise with the Oriyas in their struggle to stand on their own legs.

The Agency of Parlakhemdi.—Leaving the aboriginals of Parlakhemdi Agency almost all the inhabitants are Oriyas. The aboriginals are reading in Oriya Schools adopting Oriya Language and are imbibing Oriya civilization in all matters. They have so far Oriyaised themselves that they even object to be called Sauras by which class they were originally known.

What will be the fate of these simple people, their education and court language?

The correspondent raises an objection to the addition of the Agency tracts to the plains in forming a district as has been suggested by the Government of India. In this he betrays his utter ignorance of the present system of Government of those tracts by the Madras Government.

The Agency tracts both in Ganjam and Vizagapatam are being administered by the District Officers who are styled as Agents to the Governor ex-officio.

What will prevent the same system from being continued under the Bihar and Orissa Government?

MEMORANDUM BY B. N. MISRA, BARRISTER-AT-LAW, EX-M.L.A. (ORISSA DIVISION). [Continued.

Further these aboriginal tribes are found nowhere in the Madras Presidency except in Ganjam Agency and Jeypore Zamindary. The Sauras and Kandhas [Khonds] of Ganjam Agency are only found in the Kandhamals and other Garjats of Orissa Proper. All measures taken to improve their condition can conveniently be taken by the Bihar and Orissa Government. It cannot be denied for a moment that both the Governments have spent much to improve their condition and to educate them in Oriya Schools, etc.. The Jeypore Zamindary Hill Tribes [Parojas, Sawras, Gadwas] are being trained in Oriya and vast sums have been spent on their education.

Will the Madras Government undo all this and compel the aboriginals to learn Telugu and import Telegu Teachers from South to replace Oriya language and Oriya Teachers ?

Surely it will be a disaster to these Hill people, a death blow to their education and civilization ? If the Madras Government intends to retain Oriya language and Oriya schools etc. in these tracts what objection can there be to hand over the same to Orissa Government ?

The Madras Government or the Madras High Court will not really suffer from the diminution of its area or jurisdiction. For they are already suffering much from the diversity of languages of people under their charge and their officers are compelled to learn so many languages to understand the people to administer the law and justice in those tracts, which greatly suffer when an officer is transferred from the South to the North, the languages, customs and the manner of the Oriyas being greatly different from those of their Dravidian brothers and vice versa.

Owing to heavy work some new districts have been recently formed and more officers are required for the establishments in those districts.

Hence it is submitted that the Presidency will not lose any importances and the Madras Government will be pleased to judge the matter impartially. The weak and backward Oriyas cannot strongly represent their case as against their Dravidian brothers who as a sub-ruling race appropriated the loaves and fishes of the State and hence are very reluctant to part with the Oriya Tracts and raise selfish and unreasonable cries.

Moreover no small number of Oriyas living in Chicacole, Marasannapat, Taluqs and Vizagapatam plains have adjusted themselves to their Telugu surroundings and Telegu language. Hence justly and equitably there ought to be no cries from the Telegus who have chosen to be the tenants of the Oriya Rajas and have cast their lot in the Oriya country.

Khariar, Phuljhar, Padmapur etc., in C.P.—As regards the Central Provinces areas of Khariar, Phuljhar, Padmapur, etc., it is submitted that Phuljhar and Padmapur formed part of the Sambalpur district till 1905. These are as with some States were retained under C.P. without any justification for the same, when Sambalpur was transferred to Orissa. In these tracts the Sahras, Agharis, Binjals, etc. are genuine Oriyas by birth, social customs and manners but in recent census they have unreasonably been taken to be Hindi speaking peoples as they know colloquial language called Laria used by people being in the border of the Chhatisgarh Division in C.P. and Sambalpur District. It is submitted that at home they speak Oriya, and read Oriya religious books such as Bhagabat, Marabharata, and other Puranas. The land tenure in these tracts is the same as that of the Sambalpur District. The majority of the people who are Oriyas are willing to be transferred to Sambalpur. The kuttas saharas and Agharias who form the population of Phuljhar are emigrants from Sambalpur as will appear from the fact that such castes do not exist in any of the C.P. Districts. These people have their relations in the Borhgar Subdivision of Sambalpur.

The observations as regards the Zamindars of other tracts also apply to the Zamindars of these tracts who have no opinion of their own and are guided by their subordinates whose interests are antagonistic to those of the Oriyas. As the Oriyas form a majority these Zamindaries with Khariar should be conveniently restored to Sambalpur District.

Allocation and Appropriation of Finances.—This question does not arise as no new province is being created or additional establishments are to be made or new buildings to be constructed.

The income arising from and expenditure made on the tracts with all the establishments of the Madras and C.P. Governments will simply have to be handed over to the Bihar and Orissa Government who will take charge of the area.

It is hoped the representatives of the Government of India and other Governments concerned will meet and decide the matter as early as they can and place all facts before the Commission.

For these reasons it is respectfully submitted that the entire Jeypore Zamindari and the Ganjam District with the exception of Chicacole and Narasannapet Taluqs and the tracts of C.P. referred above should be transferred to Orissa as was proposed by Lord Curzon's Government in 1903.

For this act of kindness the Oriyas as a race will remain under a deep debt of gratitude to and will ever pray.

SUPPLEMENTARY MEMORANDUM BY MR. B. N. MISRA.

THE DISTRICT OF ANGUL.

An important question bearing on the Oriya problem is the Administration of the District of Angul which has not yet received the benefits of the Reforms introduced in 1921 nor has its inhabitants got all the advantages generally available to people in the neighbouring British Districts.

The District consists of two Sub-divisions.

(1) The Angul Sadar Sub-division covering an area of 881 sq. miles, with a population of 108,315.

(2) The Khodmels extending over 800 square miles, with a population of 74,259.

These two subdivisions are entirely detached being separated by the Band state the headquarters of each Sub-division being 87 miles apart.

The Angul district contains a population of 182,574 and covers an area of 1681 sqr. miles which is much less than the population of many Sub-divisions of other British districts.

It is situated within 70 miles from Cuttack the Headquarters of the Cuttack District. It has an income of not more than a lac and a half.

In spite of the smallness of the subdivisions and peaceful nature of the people it is administered by a Deputy Commissioner assisted by two S.D.O.s and Deputy Magistrates. It has got a large Police force, Medical and other officers, having the paraphernalia of a full District which entails heavy expenditure.

The expenditure as shown in the Budget of 1927 was about 8 lacs of Rupees as against an income of not more than a lac and a half. There being a clear excess of six lacs and a half on the expenditure side.

The Angul Sub-Division came under the direct management of the British in 1847 and the Khondmals in 1855. Owing to the peculiar system of administration as laid down in the Regulation I of 1894 as amended by Angul District Amendment Regulation (IV of 1904) the interests of the people have been greatly neglected. The top-heavy administration absorbs a large amount of money; consequently nothing has been done to improve the conditions of the people.

It is submitted that this District can be converted into a Sub-division of the Cuttack District and be taken away from the Scheduled Districts, and Reforms may be introduced to these parts.

The peopie in spite of disadvantages and neglect of Government have improved educationally and will improve much better if Responsible Government comes into vogue.

There will be a clear saving of six lacs of Rupees to the Province. If any expenditure is necessary on political grounds that amount should be borne by the Central Government and not by the Provincial Government.

It can be well managed from Cuttack as the Headquarters of the Angul District is only 70 miles from Cuttack; moreover there is Railway communication up to Talcher Angul being connected by a motorable road from the railway line. In education and other matters this portion is in no way inferior to many other Sub-divisions of Chotanagpur and Orissa District.

Therefore, it is prayed that the Commissioner will be graciously pleased to consider the advisability of the proposed change as regards this area.

PATNA.

Dated 14th December, 1928.

PRESENT :

ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION, OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE (EXCEPT SIR ARTHUR FROOM AND MR. KIKABHAI PREMCHAND), AND OF THE BIHAR AND ORISSA PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE.

The ORIYA DEPUTATION.

The Deputation consisted of the following:—

1. Babu Braja Sunder Das, B.A., Ex-M.L.C., Ex-M.L.A. Editor, "The Mukur," Cuttack.

2. Birabar Narayan Chandra Dhir Narendra, Ex-M.L.C., Landholder.

3. Babu Gopal Chandra Praharaj, B.A., Vakil.

4. Mr. B. N. Misra, Barrister-at-Law, Ex-M.L.A.

5. Raj Saheb Bhikari Charan Pattanayak, Pleader.

6. Chowdhuri Bhagwat Prasad Samantaraj Mahapatra, Pleader, M.L.C., Ex-Deputy President, Legislative Council, Bihar and Orissa.

84. Chairman : Babu Braja Sunder Das, I believe you are going to act as spokesman of the deputation ?—Yes.

* * * * * * * * * *

86. * * * Witness (Babu Braja Sunder Das): The Deputation demands that all the Oriya-speaking tracts, viz., (1) Present Orissa Division; (2) Singhbhum district in the Chota-Nagpur Division; (3) Ganjam district; with the exception of Chicacole and Narsanpeta taluka as proposed by Lord Curzon; (4) Jeypur Agency under Madras; and (5) Oriya-speaking tracts under Central Provinces and Bengal be united to form a compact United Orissa.

A separate province is our ultimate goal.

We submit that a separate province be formed of the United Oriya Tract. As a good government is never a substitute for self-government, so a partnership in financial prosperity in subordination with any other Indian race with whom we can have nothing in common, can never be a substitute for a separate province. Popular voice is supreme in the present day government and under the reformed conditions the Government cannot do justice to a minority race if the majority race (i.e., the intermediary ruling race) goes against, and wishes to tyrannise over it. We shall be in an insignificant minority in any other province if tagged to it.

We have been so far denied a separate province for the simple reason that Orissa would not be able to maintain the administration. The case has been judged by standards of expenditure which Bihar inherited from the more prosperous and wealthy province of Bengal. It is not possible that the standard of expenditure will be the same in every province, in fact it is not so even at present. We claim that by adopting a less ambitious standard the expenditure can be substantially reduced. Moreover, the Government have not given sufficient attention towards the possible development of revenue in Orissa as it has not been necessary for them to do so. A separate Government will explore all sources of revenue and curtail expenditure to the lowest minimum. The Government of Bihar themselves did this, so much so, that while all other provinces remained in deficit for four or five years after the War, Bihar managed to balance its revenue and expenditure except for a year or two. In spite of its poverty the Government could manage to keep the balance. We humbly submit that without help from the Government of India a separate province will not be able to make much progress. We pray that the financial settlement be so adjusted at least till the next instalment of Reforms that separate Orissa can be run properly.

We again emphasize that an amalgamated and separate Orissa is our goal. These Reforms are unreal to us under present conditions and we will derive no benefit in any further instalments of Reforms, as we have no control under present conditions over the affairs of the administration nor any voice in any matter touching us. On the other hand our position will become worse, if we be tagged to any other single province.

If in consideration of the financial aspects the formation of a separate province cannot be conceded now, we suggest that United Orissa be formed into a sub-province under a Deputy Governor with a legislative council and a minister, as was contemplated in the Montagu-Chelmsford Report.

We declare again emphatically and respectfully that we shall never remain contented under the present miserable existence. Discontent will grow year by year until we get a separate province. British administration has so far been an evil for us, though unintentional. The Governments have always been compelled to neglect us as their attention has been engrossed by the major and more advanced partners and the several provincial Governments have no time to understand, realise, and attend to our crying needs.

* * * * * * * * * *

88. Major Attlee: Do I understand from your memorandum that your people feel so strongly the need for union and self-government that they would be prepared to accept a lower standard of administrative device for the Government?—After we are united, we would prefer a lower standard of government for the present which would be more economic.

89. Do you think that you will be prepared when united even to vote more taxes on yourselves if necessary to make up the deficit in order that you might be a united people?—To a certain extent, sir, if it be necessary.

90. What does "to a certain extent" mean?—Of course I can see there is always an incidence to any taxation, and, so far as the people could bear, we would be quite prepared to go into any fresh avenues of taxation and to tax ourselves for meeting the requirements of the Government.

91. You will be prepared to make sacrifices for your necessary ideal?—Yes, certainly.

92. Why? Would you suggest that as regards what should be included in an Oriya province, the right way will be by taking the opinions of the inhabitants of the outlying areas?—There will be difficulty in such cases in the border tracts where there is always an inter-mixture of different races. And then again there is the question that wherever there are zamindars and landlords their views are respected. In that respect I would rather refer you to the opinion of the Philip and Duff Commission who said that the tenants of the Parlakimedi and other zamindaris in Ganjam though mostly illiterate will be quite prepared to go along with their zamindars.

93. But if you share the views of the landlords, you will lose touch with the tenants?—But, sir, as the zamindars of Parlakimedi, Tekkali and Mandasa are keen and the non-Oriya tenants are indifferent as to where they go as long as they are with their zamindars; so also the tenants of Jeypur are desirous of being united and the zamindar is indifferent to it.

94. If you include a number of Telugu-speaking people, you must have a number of Telugu officials, Telugu schools, etc?—Not too much, sir. Certainly there are a few Telugus also. We do not want to include Chicacole and Narasanpeta where there is an admixture of Telugu and Oriya and a clear Telugu majority.

95. Supposing it is possible to have a separate province, have you any special preference as to what province you would like to come under?—No preference.

96. Would you attach yourselves to either Bengal, Bihar or Madras?—To any province so long as we are united.

97. But on the whole you would prefer to have a separate province?—Yes, on the whole we would prefer to be a separate province.

98. Chairman: As regards the statement in your document which you just now read that "A separate province is our ultimate goal," supposing it could not be obtained now you would still think it a great advantage if a change was made which united your area into a sub-province of some sort?—Yes, sir.

99. Lord Burnham: I would like to resume the question of the Chairman and ask you to define a little more clearly what you would be prepared to accept as part of your demand. When you talk of a sub-province, do you mean that you would be satisfied with a chief commissioner and, we will say, 50 per cent. scale of expenditure in regard to official equipment? Would you be satisfied with that?—As regards the question of a sub-province, of course we sought enlightenment from the Government, local and Imperial, while we were in the council, but we could not be sufficiently enlightened as to the proper definition of the term "sub-province." We sought a definition from the Indian Government as to the real nature and meaning of a "sub-province"; we sought it as members of council by putting questions for explanation, but we could not get it. Our ideas are not very clear on the point. At any rate, we would rather like to put our own construction on it and have, as I understand it, a deputy governor with a legislative council and a minister. That will satisfy us for the present.

100. You use the phrase "Deputy Governor." That has not any very clear meaning to my mind, and I do not know whether there is such an officer in the organisation?—In pre-Reform days there were Lieutenant Governors.

Lord Burnham: Yes, I know . . .

Sir Hari Singh Gour: Under the Government of India Act a Deputy Governor will have to be under some Governor.

Lord Burnham: They have a different status although the Governor's title. But I am not sure what you mean by a Deputy Governor. Therefore it was that I put my question more precisely as to whether you would acquiesce in the appointment of a chief commissioner such as we have in some cases in India?

Chairman: A good instance, if I may suggest to him, is the case of Sind. We know that Sind has got its own special case, but as things are, though Sind is out of the presidency of Bombay, it is really for many purposes treated like a sub-province. It has got a chief commissioner.

Lord Burnham: He is called the Commissioner in Sind. "Commissioner is the distinctive title in Sind—"Commissioner-in-Sind."

Chairman: Again in Sind they have got a system of law courts which is separate from the system in Bombay. In a rather special way it is a kind of sub-province almost though of course it is not satisfactory in the view of many people who urge that Sind should be more completely separated.

101. Lord Burnham: Then what would be the figures of population that you contemplate being brought into this sub-province?—About 15 millions.

Lord Burnham: Then clearly it would be far below the numbers of any province of the Government.

102. Major Attlee: Fifteen millions? There are only 10 million Oriya-speaking people in the whole of the peninsula?—But there are other people who speak Dravidian languages, who are aborigines and are gradually adopting Oriya. They read in Oriya schools, and instruction is imparted to them in Oriya, and the court language is Oriya.

103. Dr. Suhrawardy: Do you include the Muhammadans?—No.

104. Lord Burnham: Could you read out the figures of the different people that you bring into this new province?—(The witness referred to the figures which will be found printed at page 565 of Vol. IV.)

Lord Burnham: The other figures worth giving are: Singhbhum district in Chota Nagpur.—There are 108,584 talking Bengali and 35,000 speaking Hindu.

Ganjam in the Madras Presidency: There are 573,332 speaking Telugu.

Ganjam Agency: There are 6,000 speaking Telugu.

Vizagapatam Agency: There are 170,260 speaking Telugu.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: We are not concerned with these agencies.

Lord Burnham: But these are the districts proposed to be amalgamated into a united Orissa.

105. Sir Hari Singh Gour: The agencies are separately managed. So, we are not concerned with agencies.—Not with Jeypur district proper. We are concerned with agencies where there is a large Oriya element.

Lord Burnham : The point is that there is a substantial number of people, nearly five millions, who are not Oriya-speaking.

Chairman : There is no doubt at all that the records show the figures Lord Burnham has been analysing and that these figures show an addition to the Oriya population of a substantial number of people speaking other languages. However, the question of the boundaries, the proposed boundaries of any Oriya-speaking district is one of the complicated details of any scheme.

Lord Burnham : As Major Attlee points out, I see these figures were given in the address presented to the Viceroy by the conference of 1917.

106. Chairman : There is a tendency for people to embrace in their own areas a little bit more than is really theirs, but I do not know whether the other people will agree.—In the Government of India's letter in 1904, Sir Herbert Risby (then Mr. Risby, himself an authority on ethnology, thus speaks of the aboriginal people in the centre of Singhbhum —"2,30,000 people speaking Munda language—it is believed that in course of time they would be speaking Oriya." He makes the same remarks regarding the Ganjam Agency tracts. They have no written language. They read the Oriya language, and the missionaries who mostly educate them have devised a romanised Oriya for them. They have no written script. They read romanised Oriya.

107. Chairman : This is exceedingly interesting from the ethnological and linguistic point of view. Do I understand rightly that in the area you are speaking of there are some spoken languages, that are understood and spoken, but they have not got any written script of their own, and that as people become educated and require to be able to read and write they have to use some new script or language ?—They use both the languages and read the Oriya language in the Roman script.

108. That is the ground on which you suggest that these Dravidian languages are dialects in essence and perhaps the Oriya language may be regarded as the master tongue ?—Yes.

109. Lord Burnham : There is only one other question I want to ask, and that is in regard to the prospects of revenue in the new province. Of course we know that the land revenue is not fixed in Orissa. On page 37 of the Memorandum presented to us by this Government* it is stated : "It would not be in accordance with the wishes of the legislative council nor would it be possible to exploit the land revenue of Orissa as a revenue producing head." Therefore evidently you cannot expect very much more revenue from that head, I understand ?—From land, yes. Recently a settlement has been concluded. Land revenue is elastic.

110. It is stated here that no large appreciable incomes can be expected under this head. The Memorandum says : "In Orissa the land revenue is not fixed save in some fairly extensive estates and is at present under revision as the result of which it is expected to rise, roughly, from 21 to 26 lakhs a year. But these and a few less important revisions can only be effected at long intervals of 30 years and then only in accordance with strict rules" ?—Yes.

111. Could you define for us exactly what methods you had in mind when you said that you were prepared to make financial sacrifices for this political purpose ? The idea I had was that we could levy a pilgrim tax, or the development of a port which has already been explored might add to the economic betterment of the people. From that source we can get a little revenue. Then again if Ganjam is added from the salt industry in the sea coasts of Orissa we can get some revenue.

112. Sir Hari Singh Gour : "Salt" is Central.—Of course, but if there is an adjustment with the Central Government it may become provincial.

113. Lord Burnham : Are you working coal ?—Yes, we work coal at Talchar. That is a Feudatory State.

114. Do you think you can get anything considerable out of coal ?—Yes, that is the expert opinion that we hear. I cannot say for certain.

115. I am trying to help you to suggest some additional means of subsistence for this new province. Could you tell us what you could do ?—We can tax coal and other minerals. If they are worked in the Feudatory States we can tax them in the process of transition through the British territory.

116. Sir Hari Singh Gour : I think the main object of your deputation is the reunion of all the Oriya-speaking tracts under one Government ?—Yes.

117. The rest is all a detail. Your aspiration naturally runs towards that object ?—Yes.

118. And you think that provincial autonomy will be secured by an arrangement with a main province which will give you autonomy within that province, by having, for instance, a legislative committee and your own members and ministers to run your own province. You will be satisfied with that ?—Yes.

119. That would not increase the overhead charges of the Central Government ?—No.

120. I think to that extent you modify your Memorandum, your demands. Now, I wish to point out to you the difficulty that we have in discussing about this separate province. If you have a separate province you cannot possibly go back to a bureaucratic form of government, say a chief commissionership ?—We do not like that.

121. You want with the rest of India responsible government, with ministerial responsibility in some form. You cannot be left behind. Therefore you must support a ministerial form of government. If you had a separate ministerial form of government under a Deputy Governor, the Deputy of course will be subordinate to some other Governor. Therefore if you have a separate Governor, you must have a separate establishment and a separate legislative council—a Governor, secretariat, executive councillors and ministers, in other words all the paraphernalia of a full-fledged government. So, as you are a poor province and you want to develop the nation-building departments you will be quite satisfied if you remain where you are and have inter-provincial autonomy of the nature I have described ?—Yes.

122. Chairman : I wish you would just tell me, tell me in your own words, what it is you want me to understand from what has been said. What is it that you would be quite content with ?—The amalgamation of the Oriya and placing them under one government, that government being a responsible government of the modern type. But if it is not practicable on financial grounds, then, they should be placed under another government, with a legislative committee or council as the case may be, a Deputy Governor, and a minister to administer the transferred subjects, if there be such a thing, for the Oriya-speaking tracts.

123. Lord Burnham : What do you mean by a legislative committee ?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : Some of the leading members had a consultation with me and I think the general sense of what they really want—I think they are agreed upon it, though they may not be able to express themselves in very clear language—is autonomy by bringing them all together, with a legislative committee of the Oriya-speaking members who will be able to deal with the local needs and requirements, and a minister.

124. Lord Burnham : Do you mean, excuse my asking the question, a standing committee of the legislative council consisting of the Oriya-speaking members who are to deal with matters apart from the rest of the council ?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : Yes. They have it in Berar. There they have a legislative committee to deal only with the Berar questions.

125. Lord Burnham : And these members will not be dealing with the other questions affecting Bihar ?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : They will be members of the Bihar and Orissa legislative council.

* Vol. xii.

126. Chairman : Let us put it like this. We are sitting in this building, which is the building of the legislative council of Bihar and Orissa. When there is a meeting of the legislative council of Bihar and Orissa a certain number of members from Orissa come here. Now, under this suggestion those members coming from Orissa and sitting here will also go on to the Orissa committee or council which will meet either here or in Orissa from time to time. When they do so meet and form a committee what will be their legislative functions? What will they do?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : Certain amounts will be allocated to them, which they will spend.

127. Chairman : A lump sum will be allotted to Orissa which that committee will be responsible to deal with?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : Yes.

128. Lord Burnham : Would they also deal with the budget for Bihar as well?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : Yes, they remain members of the Bihar and Orissa legislative council.

129. Lord Burnham : That is to say, they will not only remain as full members for the whole province but that they also will have separate powers in regard to Orissa?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : That is it.

Lord Burnham : May I suggest that there is a possibility of following the precedent set up in regard to the Scotch Grand Committee. They do not have full powers to deal with measures coming before Parliament; they consider them in their committee stage and they bring them back to the whole House.

Sir Hari Singh Gour : That is a matter of detail.

130. Chairman : It is very important to get the main idea. If I follow rightly, as the result of the discussion which you have been having, you think that these gentlemen, if there is a difficulty in creating a wholly separate province, will feel it is a good plan. In outline they say, "Very well, let there be one "legislative council for Bihar and Orissa, with one "Governor and one secretariat, but let the member "of Orissa have certain functions which they will "discharge as Orissa Committee." I just want to ask this question. So far as Orissa is concerned will the committee have legislative functions in respect of transferred subjects?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : They will not have legislative functions, but they will initiate legislation and the committee as a body will recommend it to the council.

131. Chairman : There will be in the element of the Government of Bihar and Orissa one of the ministers selected by the Governor who would be what we might call the Orissa minister?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : Yes; he will represent the Oriya tract.

132. Lord Burnham : Will the Committee have power to deal with financial matters?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : It will have powers; there will be a grant and a sub-grant.

133. Lord Burnham : It means they will have a bloc vote.

Sir Hari Singh Gour : Yes.

134. Chairman : I am grateful to you, Sir Hari Singh Gour. I will now ask the deputation. You have followed the discussion that has gone on here just now. Do you think, sir, that if there was found to be overwhelming difficulties in the creation of a separate Oriya province, some scheme of the sort that has just been sketched out would be the scheme that your deputation will welcome?—At present I am not in a position to say "yes." I would rather ask your permission to take some time so that we can present you with a sketch of the scheme we would be prepared to accept.

135. That seems to be a very reasonable request. You will understand of course that the Conference is not at all pronouncing an opinion that a separate province cannot be created. It is a very complicated question ; it must be looked at most closely from many points of view and it shall be looked at carefully by all of us. But what I would like you to tell me is whether you think it will be worth while to consider more carefully the sketch of a scheme which Sir Hari Singh Gour has brought to our notice, and if you think it would be, it may be that your deputation would like to send in some supplementary memorandum and explain their views. I am not asking you to abandon or to give up your desire to have a wholly separate province, supposing it turned out that there were difficulties about that, then every one would like to know what is your deputation's view about the suggestion of a separate Orissa committee composed of the Orissa members with the powers which have been suggested. Let us know in due course what you think about that * * *

Witness (Babu Braja Sunder Das) : Yes, sir.

136. Chairman : I think that is a good plan Raja sahib?

Raja of Kanika : Yes, sir.

137. Dr. Suhrawardy : Would you kindly tell me what is the percentage of Muhammadans in your province?—About 3 per cent.

138. I was for the separation of Orissa from Bengal when I had the honour of representing the Mussalmans of Orissa in Bengal legislative council. That is why I am interested in the question. Are the Mussalmans of Orissa with you in your demand for a separate province?—Yes.

139. Is there any Muhammadan in your deputation today?—One, Khan Bahadur Abdul Majid, could not come.

140. In the event of a separate Oriya province being created, are you prepared to support the Muslim demand for separate electorate and effective representation in your province?—We have referred to this in our memorandum.

141. You have no objection to the Muslim demands for separate electorate and effective representation?—No, so far as Orissa is concerned.

142. You have got no communal tension in Orissa?—No; Orissa is the only place where communal element is not to be found.

Maulvi Sayid Mubarak Ali Sahib : They are a very happy family there.

143. Sardar Shivdev Singh Uberoi : I would like to know the particular disadvantages which the people of Orissa are suffering from due to the present administration for which they want a separate province of their own because I have not been able to find them in both the memoranda submitted by the deputation and by the Government. What are the particular disadvantages you are suffering from under the present administration?—For instance, educational disadvantages. In Madras, the Oriya people have to read Telugu and Urdu, the Oriya people in Singhbhum have to read Hindi and Bengali and the Oriyas in Central Provinces have to read Hindi and Urdu.

144. Oriya has got a special script of its own?—Yes

145. There is no disadvantage to the Oriyas of Bihar, I understand, so far as language is concerned?—No.

146. What other disadvantages are you suffering from?—Administrative difficulties. All the educational institutions are in the centre; we are placed 600 miles off the centre. So it is quite natural that the attention of the Government would not be diverted to reach such a long distance.

147. Do I understand that there are a sufficient number of high schools in Orissa?—There are a good many of them but they are not sufficient.

148. Only the colleges are here in Patna?—There is a first grade college in Orissa; but then for post-graduate studies there is not sufficient provision. There is no engineering college, there is only an engineering school; there is no medical college there whereas there is a medical college here; other industrial colleges are in the centre. It is very difficult for a poor province like Orissa to send its children all the 600 miles for education.

149. Supposing these institutions for higher education are provided in Orissa, then of course this want would be met?—Educational want would be met.

150. Any other point that you desire to state?—One thing I would like to point out in this connection is this. When Orissa was separated from Bengal and joined to Bihar as a separate province the first Governor who visited Orissa in a public announcement said that half the attention should be paid to Orissa. I put it to you, sir, to enquire and find out how much attention is paid to Orissa. In the Government service, in the High Court, in the university, in the secretariat, you will find only a handful of Oriyas, about twelve in number, who were retained when the province was created; and since then there have been only very few admissions.

151. Is there any statutory prohibition for the Oriya people to enter these institutions?—There is none.

152. It is only the distance which prevents these people to come and join these institutions?—Yes, it is distance and the attention of Government is diverted to those who are nearer to them; that is quite natural.

153. Have you not got sufficient representation on the legislative council here?—I cannot call it sufficient; of the 76 elected members we are only 10.

154. Is there any other disadvantage you are suffering from that you would like to tell the Conference?—In Midnapore in the census of 1891 the number of Oriyas was 5 lakhs; then in 1901 they became 2 lakhs; in 1911 they became 1,80,000 and in 1921 they became 1,40,000. So within 30 years they have come down from 5 lakhs to 1,40,000. They are not all dead; there was no epidemic. The thing is that they were all denationalised. They were made to read Bengali in the institutions, the court language was Bengali and so they were forced to use that language which paid them most.

155. Sir Hari Singh Gour: It comes to this, is it not, that it stands in the way of your national development?—Yes.

156. Maulvi Saiyid Mubarak Ali Sahib: I hope you will not misunderstand me when I put you a few questions. Let me make it plain that I am one with you in your aspirations. Are you aware that if the scheme sketched out by our friend Sir Hari Singh Gour is adopted, that is, for the appointment of a legislative committee, the Bihar members will have the same voice as they have now in all matters concerning Orissa that will come before the legislative council?—No. You know we have asked for time to consider the scheme.

157. Will you please tell me if all the Oriya-speaking tracts are amalgamated into one province, you will be prepared to make sacrifices and tax yourselves to pay your way?—I have already said that we would.

158. Sir Hari Singh Gour: To a certain extent?—Yes.

159. Maulvi Saiyid Mubarak Ali Sahib: Are you aware that your representatives in the legislative council have made constant efforts to have the present arrangement of land revenue annulled and to get them permanently settled?—Yes.

160. If this is going to be done there would be no possibility of expanding your land revenue?—There are other sources.

161. If the land is permanently settled, there will probably be no possibility of getting any increase from the land revenue?—I cannot say whether the incidence of land revenue has reached its limit in Orissa. Even if the rules allow it, I think it would be difficult on the part of the Government to tax further than a certain point. So far as the incidence of taxation is concerned, I can say this much that even if the incidence has been reached, there would be no harm in granting permanent settlement to Orissa.

162. I think I can take it that you are not keen in having your area permanently settled?—We are keen. We will find other avenues for taxation.

Memorial by THE CATHOLIC BISHOP OF RANCHI.—Representing the Catholic Aborigines of Chota-Nagpur.

This memorial which we have the honour to lay before you, represents the wishes of the Catholic community of Chota-Nagpur.

This community numbers 155,000 members, all of them belong to the aboriginal races and are present at this time in Chota-Nagpur. The figure given above does not include the many thousands working as coolies in the tea gardens of the Doars and of Assam. These too are keenly interested in the preservation of their special land-laws as they intend returning to their own country. According to the Census of 1921, out of a natural population of 16 lakhs, three and a half lakhs of the inhabitants of the Ranchi District were then in the tea gardens. We estimate that at least 60,000 of them belong to our community.

For fifty years, the Catholic Mission has been working with undiminished energy and prudence among the aboriginals. The Missionaries have been living among their people, and in their constant desire for the uplift of these races have acquired an intimate knowledge of the mentality of the aboriginals and of the conditions under which they live, of the dangerous measures to be avoided and the safeguards to be provided and therefore, we can state unhesitatingly that all the aboriginals, animists as well as christians, would be ready to endorse this petition.

In this petition we will develop the following three points:

First point—Our experience of the conditions in Chota-Nagpur, makes it evident to us that it is of vital importance for the aboriginals that their land laws and customs should remain untouched whatever the measure of self-government granted to other parts of India and that adequate safeguards should be provided lest these special laws be at the mercy of a non-aboriginal administration.

Second point—It is altogether necessary to take such measures as will ensure that the help given up to now by the Government, to foster education among the aboriginals, be not diminished but rather increased.

Third point—It is not enough to keep intact the land laws of the aboriginals. These laws should be administered to them by sympathetic officials intimately conversant with these laws and with the mentality of the people, who prefer personal government to lawcourts' decisions.

If these safeguards are granted there is not the least doubt that the aboriginals will respond to the care taken of them and fit themselves to take their place among the other races of India without any fear of being trodden down. Were these safeguards to be denied them, they would lose their lands and would soon be reduced to the level of outcasts and hewers of wood among the other races. Ray Bahadur Sarat Chandra Roy, resident in Ranchi, would be able to answer any questions in connection with these three points.

EXPLANATION OF THE THREE POINTS OF THE MEMORIAL.

First Point.—The granting of responsible self-government may or may not be a distinct advantage to many of the peoples of India. To the aboriginal races (Oraons, Mundas, Kharias, etc.) it would be a distinct disadvantage.

The reason is that the degree of civilisation attained by the aboriginals of Chota-Nagpur is still so far below the degree attained by the other races of Bihar and Orissa, that the aboriginals are unable to meet these other races on an equal footing.

No doubt their own social customs and land laws admirably meet their own requirements but would not at all fit them to keep their rightful position were they made to enter into competition with other races.

Education is bound to remove gradually this weakness, as a matter of fact, education is making great strides among the aboriginals. But it will take still some years before education produces its civilising effects.

As matters stand now, an illiterate Bengali is more wide awake, more civilised than an aboriginal who has completed the primary course of schooling—or even the secondary course. The illiterate Bengali indeed obtains all the advantages arising out of his civilised surroundings; the educated aboriginal loses much of the fruits of his education on account of the backward society in which he lives.

The aboriginal society is still in the primitive stage, in which the genuine concept of individual property is unknown. The aboriginals are not free to sell their land according to their own pleasure but must follow in this the tribal laws. This is based on their idea of communal property. Neither have they the power to make a will. This shows at once how far removed they are from the degree of civilisation attained by other races.

The special customs as to the disposal of their lands have been accepted by sympathetic officials as law and embodied in the Chota-Nagpur Tenancy Act. The aim of the Government in this case was to save the aboriginals from the more advanced races. Had the Government not done so, the aboriginals would have lost their lands and their hope to be raised to a higher degree of civilisation.

The Government rightly considered this protection of the aboriginals as a point of duty. In fact, practically the whole of the cultivated area of Chota-Nagpur has been reclaimed from the jungle by the aboriginals and their ancestors.

For this work of converting jungly tracts into well laid and terraced fields, the aboriginals have a special talent. That work involves patience and laborious effort. Years may elapse before the newly made lands produce enough to support the pioneer, and in the meantime he must live as best he can on the products of the jungle and defend himself and his crops against the wild animals that infest it. Hindoos and Mohammedans who have within the last couple of hundred years come into Chota-Nagpur have shown little aptitude for the work of reclamation and little desire to undertake it. Their superior intelligence and education and their proficiency in taking advantage of the simplicity of the aboriginals have, however, enabled them to devise various means of appropriating for themselves the lands reclaimed by the industry of the latter.

The first champions of the aboriginals were the Christian Missionaries who defended them from false charges in the courts and protected them from eviction, and by representing their grievance to Government, obtained a sympathetic hearing which resulted in the passing of the Chota-Nagpur Tenancy Act. This act admits as law the tribal laws of the aboriginal society. These laws so intimately connected with the constitution of the aboriginal society and at the same time so essential to its welfare would once more be in danger of being ignored or suppressed were Chota-Nagpur to remain joined to Behar and Orissa, the while a greater measure of self-government would be granted to India.

In such a contingency, these privileges would be inevitably considered as a mere obstacle by the more clever races who desire to obtain a footing in Chota-Nagpur and to wrest from the aboriginals their ancestral lands.

Even now, notwithstanding the safeguard of the Tenancy Act, full protection is not enjoyed by the animist aboriginals. Their simplicity leaves them open to the wiles of the other races and so, even now, some lose their land.

There are some, who, to pay off a debt of 100 Rs. have mortgaged for fifty years fields producing a crop of paddy worth from 50 to 100 Rs. One mortgage deed stipulated a term of 100 years. All these mortgage deeds having been registered before the passing of the Tenancy Act (1908), are considered quite legal.

These examples show clearly the simplicity of the aboriginals.

As soon as the Government was made aware of the injustices done to the aboriginals, by applying to them the land laws of Bengal, the Civil Servants, who then used to begin their career in Chota-Nagpur as Sub-divisional Officers, took up the cause of these poor people. Since that time they have remained their sincere well wishers. It would be a great pity were these ryots to lose now this beneficent patronage. The Chota-Nagpur Tenancy Act and the Assam Labour Act are striking proofs of the great work done by the Civil Service for this country.

Again, in February 1927, in the Bihar and Orissa Legislative Council Mr. J. D. Sifton, I.C.S., admittedly the greatest living authority on Chota-Nagpur, withstood to the utmost "the withdrawal of safeguards in Chota-Nagpur" which was then vehemently urged by a great number of the members of that Council. The very same question was raised a little later in the Delhi Legislative Assembly and Mr. J. Donovan, I.C.S., ably championed the rights of the aboriginals.

From the above it appears that many non-aboriginals would like the "privileges" of Chota-Nagpur to be withdrawn and that the Civil Servants alone take their stand as the defenders of the aboriginals. We may, indeed, say that the instructions given by His Majesty the King, in his charge to the Governor of Bihar and Orissa, have been conscientiously obeyed: "We do charge you—to take care of those who—from their lack of education, specially rely on our protection and cannot as yet fully rely for their welfare upon joint political action."

What has been said up to this, should not be understood as implying that the aboriginals are a hopelessly primitive race. They are not. And we affirm, with the full knowledge we have of them, we affirm that due protection given at the present time, will gradually and surely make of them well-instructed citizens, able to take and keep their rightful position among the communities of India.

Second Point: Education.—We said just now that these races will without doubt amply repay the care bestowed on them by Government. In fact they show a genuine desire and aptitude for education. This is proved by the Educational Report, Bihar and Orissa of 1927, which shows the percentage of children actually going to school in comparison to the total number of children of school going age.

For Bihar only the percentage is 21%.
For Chota-Nagpur the percentage is 20·4%.
For Ranchi District (a part of Chota-Nagpur) it is 27%.

Again, the total population of Bihar and Orissa is 38 millions, that of Chota-Nagpur is 5·6 millions or a little more than 1/7 of the total population of the province. Yet the number of all kinds of schools in Chota-Nagpur is greater than 1/7 of the total number of schools in the province.

	High School.	Middle English.	Middle Vernacular.	Primary.
Bihar and Orissa Province.	139	330	250	30,000
Chota-Nagpur only	20	58	40	4,820

These very satisfactory figures go far to show, and even to prove, that the aboriginals are hastening to fit themselves to take their place among civilised races, yet once more be it said education does not at once bear its civilising fruit.

It might be thought that the great number of schools and pupils in Chota-Nagpur is to be ascribed in a great measure to some quite special help given by government. This is not the case for however much the Government wished to assist the aboriginals, other factors had to be considered, and these factors have prevented the beneficent action of the Government in such a way that the Chota-Nagpurians do not obtain their fair share of educational grants. Indeed, were it not for the assistance so generously given by the missionary bodies, the above given figures would have to be changed and greatly diminished.

We have shown that the aboriginals manifest a real readiness to avail themselves of any educational facilities offered to them, we have shown the great need they have of education to preserve their community from disruption and annihilation; and therefore it appears evident that they have a special claim to the continued sympathy and liberal help of Government. Under the new conditions, after the granting of a new measure of self-government to India, if Chota-Nagpur remains joined to Behar and Orissa, the aboriginals will in vain look for that sympathy from the legislative bodies. The past shows clearly that little support can be hoped for, in the Legislative Council for any measure benefiting education in Chota-Nagpur.

Third Point: The Administration of the law.—Up to this, we have explained that the aboriginals require protection and have a right to claim it. Then in the second point, we have proved that, considering their desire for education, we may safely affirm they will amply profit by that protection to raise themselves. We wish now to point out that their mentality is such as will respond readily to "personal" government, but will be unable to adapt itself to a mechanical and complicated way of administering the law.

Education is of recent growth in Chota-Nagpur, hence it has not yet leavened the mass of the people. They are not yet able to understand the, to them, complicated machinery of the courts and therefore the present system of administering the law is often detrimental to their best interests. Hence also, they distrust the law-courts. Three reasons may be assigned for this:—

First: the technicalities of the courts are mysteries to them;

Second: the magistrates are sometimes imperfectly acquainted with the customary law as embodied in the Chota-Nagpur Tenancy Act;

Third: the law-courts do not always give full justice to the aboriginals and help to undermine their moral character.

We add a few words, by way of explanation to each of the above three points.

First point: Their ignorance of the forms of law and procedure leads them to damage their case, often too, they do not grasp the meaning and purport of the questions put to them and their answers therefore appear to be insincere. The rules regulating evidence are too complex for them and in fact when their case rests mainly on oral evidence, they have hardly any hope of proving their right.

Second point: It is only natural that an officer who had his training outside Chota-Nagpur should find it rather difficult to grasp the full meaning of the privileges and customs of the aboriginals. Of course this want of knowledge has its influence on the decision.

We do not ask that an officer trained in Chota-Nagpur should always remain in that country as his training does not make him unfit to serve elsewhere. But we would propose that all officers to be employed in Chota-Nagpur, should be required to begin their career in that area.

Third point: The unexpected decisions sometimes given by the courts, have led the aboriginals to think of a lawsuit as of a trial of wits in a pejorative sense. so that, out of fear and distrust, they will often rather lie than say the truth. They go so far as to say that a lawsuit is a fight irrespective of justice. If then by lying they can obtain what is not rightfully their own, "well, the Sarkar has given it to them and therefore everything is for the best."

It is hardly necessary to point out that this must be grievously harmful to their character and that the causes of the low opinion they have of the lawcourts should be removed as adequately as possible. Litigation is not as prevalent here as in Behar. Recourse to litigation is not to be encouraged but measures might be taken to prevent the lawcourts to sap their honesty and truthfulness. These aboriginals are fundamentally more simple and also more truthful than many other races. Among them debts are acknowledged even after a considerable number of years. Limitation is a concept alien to them. Now the law has introduced the limitation of three years for ordinary debts. The aboriginals understand this to mean that after three years of non-payment, the debt is annulled, with the consequence that some aboriginals make an abuse of the law of limitation: they mortgage their land, intending to use the law of limitation to escape repaying the mortgage money, whilst resuming their land with the help of the magistrate. This evil is very widespread and consequently confidence is on the wane between aboriginals.

To secure better justice, it seems then to be not only desirable but even of the utmost importance, that many cases should be tried informally, without lawyer, by the magistrate whilst on tour, in the village itself. These magistrates, trained as we said above, in Chota-Nagpur and consequently knowing the customs and mentality of the people, would be in a far better position to come to a just decision. Again, their sentence would be accepted willingly by the aboriginals as they prefer personal government by sympathetic officials, to government by lawcourts. Mr. J. D. Sifton, I.C.S. expressed the same idea: "for advanced areas, for advanced races, Government is a system of rules, procedure, parliament and councils with a hierarchy of lawyers who interpret and control the mysteries regarding it. For backward areas and for backward races, Government is a person and not a system." (Behar and Orissa Legislative Council 18th February 1927.)

We may resume in a few words, the several points of this memorial as follows:

The aboriginal races of Chota-Nagpur require the continued protection of the Civil Service to save them from losing the lands they now cultivate and from the danger of being brought down to the degraded condition which is the lot of the Kamias or serfs of Palamau and Hazaribagh, who are themselves the semi-hinduized remnants of former land-owning tribes.

They need that paternal protection also, to enable them to rise to a higher degree of culture.

That such a protection will produce its full fruit is abundantly shown by what has been said above about their desire for education and about the efforts they are making for their self improvement.

Such a protection will be most beneficial to them if it includes a simple way of administering the law by sympathetic officials trained in Chota-Nagpur.

Therefore we are ready to welcome any proposal which will efficiently safeguard their special land laws and customs, promote education among them and give them a simple and paternal way of settling their disputes.

LOUIS VAN HOECK,
Catholic Bishop of Ranchi.

Memorandum submitted by Rev. KENNETH KENNEDY, Bishop of Chota-Nagpur.

It has been represented to me that instead of presenting to the Statutory Commission a separate memorial in the name of the Anglican Missionaries and the Aboriginal Inhabitants of Chota Nagpur, among whom the S.P.G. Mission has been working for 60 years, it would be better, in view of the great similarity in the points put forward by the leaders of the Anglican Community with those dealt with by the memorial of the Roman Catholic Mission, to submit to the Commission an endorsement of what has been presented by the Bishop of Ranchi. The two Missions work largely in the same districts, and inevitably their experience to a great extent coincides. Merely to repeat what has already been said seems to be an unjustifiable waste of time of the Commission.

I may therefore briefly say that the three points emphasized by the Bishop of Ranchi are exactly what we had agreed, out of an even longer experience of the Aboriginal people of Chota Nagpur, to be of primary necessity for their well-being : viz. :—

(1) The retention, and protection from unsympathetic alteration, of the tribal land laws and customs of these people ;

(2) The continuance of special help to foster education among them;

(3) The importance of having officials who will be guided by intimate knowledge of the peculiarities of the people and their hereditary customs, rather than by a desire to administer any code or system of government which, however excellent in itself, is wholly foreign to Aboriginal ideas.

My personal knowledge of Chota Nagpur, extending over 37 years, enables me to recall repeated occasions when the attempt to apply laws and customs in force among the non-aboriginal inhabitants of other parts of India has led to widespread discontent, amounting in the year 1900 to armed resistance. The experience gained by the results of these attempts has been embodied in the special laws and administration which have for the last twenty years brought peace and prosperity, with steady advance in education and self-respect, to the people of Chota Nagpur.

I and two other members of our Community have successively sat as representatives of the Aborigines in the Legislative Council of Bihar and Orissa since its establishment, and we are able to appreciate the probable effect on the interests of these people of giving unreserved control over them to any body whose sympathies are principally, and naturally, with those classes of the community whom the Aborigines look upon as their hereditary enemies, viz., the Hindu and Mohammedan immigrants who have used their superior intelligence, and the facilities afforded by the land laws before their modification, to oust the simple people who had reclaimed by their industry all the cultivated land of Chota Nagpur from jungle. Almost more to be dreaded are legislators who, for the sake of uniformity in this vast country, would ignore the peculiarities of the comparatively small, but actually large, aboriginal population—a population approximately equal to that of the Irish Free State

I present this as representing the considered opinion of the entire S.P.G. Anglican Mission working in every District in Chota Nagpur.

Memorandum submitted by The BISHOP OF CALCUTTA and METROPOLITAN OF INDIA, BURMA AND CEYLON.

Having spent fourteen years in the Chota Nagpur Division of the Province of Bihar and Orissa, as Bishop of the Diocese of Chota Nagpur, during which time a large portion of each year was spent in touring through the villages, and having, in addition, from July, 1915, till leaving the Diocese in July 1919, taken charge, at the request of the Government, of some 300 schools controlled by the Gossner Mission, I desire to endorse the representatives made by the Bishop of Ranchi on behalf of the Roman Catholic Mission, and by the Bishop of Chota Nagpur on behalf of the Anglican Mission in that Division.

Having during the nine years since my translation to the See of Calcutta frequently toured through that portion of the Santhal Parganahs in which the Church Missionary Society has been working, I further desire to endorse the first four proposals embodied in a Memorandum placed before the Honourable Members of the Statutory Commission by the Rev. T. Lenman on behalf of Missionaries, leading Santhals and others who have identified themselves with the uplift of the Santhal people.

In my experience of 23 years. I have seldom met an Indian, who was not himself an aboriginal, who took any real interest in the development of these attractive but backward peoples, but I have had bitter experience of the way in which such men have taken advantage of the simplicity or weakness of the aborigines to deprive them of the land which their ancestors had won from the jungle by strenuous labour.

Memorandum submitted by the CHOTA-NAGPUR IMPROVEMENT SOCIETY.

In response to the invitation from the Indian Statutory Commission to submit memoranda, the Chotanagpur Improvement Society, representing the principal aboriginal peoples of Chotanagpur, which number about 20,00,000, humbly begs to submit the following :—

With a view to the right understanding of the standpoint of the aborigines of Chotanagpur, the Chotanagpur Improvement Society deems it necessary to narrate at the outset a short history containing the sufferings, feelings and thoughts of the aborigines who till now are smarting under a sense of injustice and unfair treatment meted out to them from time immemorial.

Our country, known as Chotanagpur, now within the province of Bihar and Orissa, inhabited mostly by the aboriginal race, was very little known until quite recently, when the summer seat of the new province was set up at Ranchi. We the aborigines are a people who are very backward in everythng intellectually, politically and otherwise in comparison with the rest of the people of this province. It is a well-known fact that this central tableland now known as Chotanagpur was full of dense forests, the abode of wild animals. In those days, when the modern instruments of protection were unknown, it was dangerous to clear the ground and settle down. However, braving these dangers of the primitive forests, our forefathers cleared the jungles, levelled the grounds and prepared fertile lands and established villages in the hearts of dense forests. Thus our forefathers became the first settlers of this land. The wild land of Chotanagpur has been turned, so far as possible, into a beautiful garden by the aborigines of Chotanagpur, our ancestors, by the sweat of their brow and at the sacrifice of numerous lives.

Since the beginning of the British rule in this part of India the authorities would appear to have ignored the fact that it is the ancestors of the aboriginal population of Chotanagpur who first cleared the primeval forest, brought the virgin soil under cultivation, established the first settlements and made smiling villages spring up all over the country which they then owned by right of prior occupation.

It was not until the early years of the British rule that the systematic campaign against our ancient rights was undertaken by alien "landlords" constituted by the British Government over the heads of the aboriginal peasant proprietors, and the times, which were out of joint, greatly favoured them. The early British administrators, then ignorant of the real history of land-tenures in Chotanagpur and misled by interested information and supposed analogy with really dissimilar things in other parts of Bengal and Bihar, came to recognise the Chotanagpur Raja and "Zemindars" as proprietors of the soil like Bengal or Bihar Zemindars; and from this initial and radical error sprang erroneous decisions of courts and acts of legislatures in the shape of inequitable land laws and tenancy laws which have since played havoc with the ancient rights and status of the aborigines of Chotanagpur, thereby giving rise to a chronic state of discontent.

Ages have passed and long years have gone by and the aborigines of Chotanagpur are still left in a state of deplorable backwardness. The aborigines of Chotanagpur form a separate people by themselves. They radically differ in custom, manners, language and religion from their non-aboriginal neighbours of the surrounding Divisions. Chotanagpur presents a surprising contrast in respect of social organisation and intellectual attainment to the rest of the province. In the keen economic competition and struggle for existence the aborigines lag far behind their non-aboriginal neighbours who naturally defeat the aborigines in the struggle, consequently the general progress of Chotanagpur has been very much retarded.

Since the time when Chotanagpur was separated from the Province of Bengal Chotanagpur is not at all free from the encroachment of outsiders who naturally look upon the aborigines of Chotanagpur as outcasts and untouchables. Such treatment meted out by the non-aboriginal element to the aborigines is a constant source of trouble to the aborigines and has been a fruitful cause of chronic unrest and discontent and occasional risings among the aborigines of Chotanagpur. Moreover, it is impossible for the Government to pay sufficient attention to the uplift of the neglected aborigines in preference to the other elements of the population who naturally mind their own interests more than anybody else's. In fact the aborigines feel that they are at the present even more neglected than when they were under Bengal Government. Even the name of Chotanagpur has been omitted in the title of this new province which is most regrettable. The members of the Legislative Council of Bihar and Orissa, with the exception of a chosen few, cannot enter into or voice the sentiments of the aborigines whose ways, manners, customs and temperaments radically differ from those of the people inhabiting both Bihar and Orissa.

The deepest wound in the heart of the aborigine has been the one caused by alien ideas of land tenures introduced into Chotanagpur by British Laws. The Village organisations among the aborigines in the good old days had been the very type of democracy but at present that system has deteriorated through want of encouragement and even actual discouragement by the current laws. The aboriginal principle had been the village for the villagers. To-day the principle of village system is that the village belongs to the Chief and his Lieutenants, the tyrannical so-called Zemindars in Chotanagpur. These are mostly non-aboriginals brought in by the Chief from outside Chotanagpur against the wishes of the people.

Before the arrival of these Zemindars, according to the then village system, the lands were of one description forming the common stock of agricultural lands of the village community. Since the introduction of the Zemindars the lands of the village have been divided into two classes, viz., the Majhias and Rajhans. This division was made to reduce the aborigines, the real children of the soil, to mere serfs. According to this division the majhias lands (generally the best lands of a village) were those usurped by the Zemindars and taken in their direct possession and the Rajhans lands also came to be supposed to be the chief's or "landlord's" and "permitted" by him to be cultivated by the villagers on payment of rents generally determined by the chief's lieutenants. Thus the original aboriginal clearers of the soil have nothing left to call really their own. This unjust action of dispossession of lands by the chief and his lieutenants in dividing it up into two classes was never accepted and recognised by the aborigines. It is only after the so-called "Bhuinhari Settlement" that the aborigines were compelled to recognise the action by force of law which in vesting the Rajhans and Majhias right on the chief and his lieutenants respectively portioned out a meagre share for the aborigines in the form of Bhuinhari and Khuntkatti lands. At present, to all intents and purposes, the aboriginal people are serfs and the village organisation is "feudalistic." The Chotanagpur Tenancy Act has only confirmed these unjust divisions of lands and aggravated the life-long grievances of the aborigines. On the one hand, the people have been ousted from their own lands and, on the other hand, owing to the neglect of the "landlords" to do their duty to their "tenants," and also from natural causes, the lands of Chotanagpur have become deteriorated and the produce has become woefully reduced within recent years.

In the opinion of the Chotanagpur Improvement Society there will be no peace in Chotanagpur as long as the artificial distinction between the Rajhans and Majhias and Bakast lands is not done away with and all such lands not brought into the common stock of raiyati lands of the village. Under the present condition there is bound to exist a perpetual party feeling between the chief and his numerous lieutenants on the one side, and the aborigines on the other. Government do not appear to have ever realised the gravity of the situation. No Government separating these two parties will be a democratic and responsible Government.

The Chotanagpur Improvement Society wants reconciliation and peace in Chotanagpur and therefore begs to make the following proposals :—

(1) That the system of Rajhans and Majhias lands be abolished from Chotanagpur.

(2) That the rights and interests of these lands be vested in the village communities which shall deal with them respecting such provisions in the Chotanagpur Tenancy Act which specially safeguard aboriginal interests and that the rights of use for necessary domestic, agricultural and house-building purposes in jungles and grazing rights in gairmajruwa lands be freely granted to all tenants under the supervision and controlling power of the village corporations.

(3) That each village should have its own corporation for self-government in civil matters and judicial panchayats in certain matters and executive body in dealing with village lands.

(4) That the Chotanagpur Tenancy Act be amended in accordance with the principles contained in the above three proposals.

(5) That a less complicated system of laws and administration of justice may be introduced so as to suit the simple habits and limited intellect of the aborigines.

(6) That the aboriginal areas of the province, namely Chotanagpur together with the Santal Parganas and the District of Sambalpur, be formed into a separate Province or Sub-Province with a more direct and paternal form of administration.

(7) That if this is considered feasible, as indeed it should be if the aboriginals are to be saved from ruin, the Governor of the new aboriginal Province or Sub-Province, as the case may be, may have a Council of his own, composed of members elected one from each thana area or at any rate three or four from each subdivision.

(8) That an Aboriginal Regiment be maintained at Ranchi manned and staffed purely by the aborigines.

BASIS OF FRANCHISE.

(1) That the franchise be extended to every male member of the age of 18 of all the Bhuinhar and Khuntkatidar families of Chotanagpur and to every other tenant paying a rent of Rs. 5/– a year and to every male aboriginal of age who has read up to the Lower Primary Standard at any recognized school.

(2) That if it be decided to constitute the aboriginal tracts into a Sub-Province with a Legislative Council of its own, under the Behar Government, at least four seats be reserved for the representatives of aborigines in the Bihar and Orissa Council, and that such members be elected by the aborigines themselves.

(3) That in either case one seat be reserved in the Legislative Assembly for a representative of the aborigines from each aboriginal district.

The Legislative Council electoral roll of 1923 for the Ranchi district was very disappointing, for the method adopted in preparing the Council electoral roll for the said district has done a great injustice to the rural population. In the said district the number of voters in 1920–21 was 7,414, whereas in the year 1923 it has been reduced to 6,653. Thus a fairly large number of voters found no place in the list of 1923. The method adopted in preparing electoral rolls, as we aboriginals can make out, is that officers consult the Khatian prepared years ago and go to various thanas, and make enquiries from the village chowkidars, thanadars and chowkidari Tahsildars as to the names of persons who are eligible as voters and then the list thus made is hung up in the thana. Thus the major part of the population, who are illiterate, receive no proper information as to the publication of draft list and if they know of it they could take no steps. The publication of the list in the thanas is of no use to the illiterate villagers and thus as far as the aborigines are concerned, the correction of the list cannot be effected in this way. The method employed in preparing the electoral roll should be that responsible officers should be sent to each village and that the village headman (Munda, Mahto, Pahan or Jeth raiyat) instead of the village chowkidars be utilised for helping the officers in preparing the lists and that the draft publication be read out in the presence of the assembled villagers and claims and objections be received orally then and there or, if made later, in writing to the officers concerned.

Many voters cannot register their votes in some polling stations, the time limit fixed for registering votes being very short. Some polling stations are located at a distance of 30 to 35 miles from the villages. In a district like Ranchi, where the means of communication are not convenient, voters have to come from a distance of 30 to 35 miles on foot. All elections in this district should take place between the months of November to May.

Franchise to vote in the Self-Governing bodies may be more extended. For D B. elections the following classes of persons be included in the list of voters :—

(a) Every male member of age of the families of Mundari, Khunt, Katidars and Bhuinhars.

(b) Aboriginal raiyats who pay a minimum rent of Rs. 5/– or 2a. 6p. as cess per year.

(c) Every male aboriginal of the age of 18 holding a Lower Primary Examination Certificate from any recognised School.

PROPOSAL FOR DIVISION OF EXISTING PROVINCES.

Little heed is paid to the needs of Chotanagpur and Chotanagpuris by those responsible for the welfare of the Behar and Orissa province. Even resolutions moved in the Legislative Council of Bihar and Orissa by our chosen representative for the establishment of educational institutions or other improvements in Chotanagpur do not find favour with most members from other parts of the province. The aborigines of Chotanagpur keenly feel that so long as this division remains tacked on to B. and O. and is not provided with a separate administration of its own, together with other aboriginal tracts of the province, the material and intellectual progress of Chotanagpuris will hardly receive the impetus it badly requires, and backward Chotanagpur will helplessly look on while its ever-increasing revenues will go to feed and develop other Divisions of the province. And yet no other Division of the province is half so backward or stands in half as much need of all available revenues for its economic and intellectual development as this hitherto neglected Division.

For the purposes of good administration Chotanagpur should be given its own special administration with its special laws, objective and substantive, special executive officers and specialised judiciary, and pursuing a steady policy of filling up in time all posts under Government in Chotanagpur with suitable aboriginal candidates, just as a similar policy is being pursued in other provinces. No measure appears to us, however, better calculated to conduce to our welfare than the formation of Chotanagpur with the aboriginal tracts of Orissa, the Santal Parganas and perhaps the Central Provinces into a separate administrative unit with its own administrative head and a council of its own. So long as this Division is tacked on to more advanced areas, its people will ever be neglected and pressed down and they will ever remain unfit for effective Self Government.

It may be added that the Chotanagpur Improvement Society, representing the entire aboriginal population of the Ranchi District, cannot too strongly emphasise the necessity of giving the aboriginal tracts a separate administration of their own with its own Legislative Council and its own elected Ministers. So long as the administrative unit is not composed of a more or less homogeneous population, the position of the backward aboriginal tracts, if attached to more advanced tracts, will be like that of the friendship of the dwarf with the giant in which the dwarf is sure to go to the wall. We Chotanagpuris are painfully consoious of the fact that, ever since the constitution of the "reformed" Councils, Chotanagpuris have been receiving much less consideration or even attention than they used to receive in "pre-Reform" days. If the Feudatory States of Orissa, which are mostly inhabited by aboriginal population, and the Khondmals are joined together with Chota Nagpur and the Santal Parganas, there will be one homogeneous Province under a suitable form of administration, and the Governor or Chief Commissioner, as the case may be, of this aboriginal Province may also act as the Political Agent of the Orissa Feudatory States, thus saving the pay of a separate Political Agent.

LAW AND JUDICIARY.

We keenly feel the unsuitability of the present administrative and complicated judicial system to the simple aborigines of this Division. No one with a knowledge of the country and its people can shut his eyes to the great mischief that has been done and is still being done by throwing the aboriginal people into the melting pot of one common administrative and judicial system and common laws with their more advanced fellow subjects, and the urgent necessity of introducing a simpler system. There can be no gainsaying the fact that no measure will contribute to the rescue of the aboriginal people of Chotanagpur from economic and moral ruin so much as special laws and a special administrative system less cumbrous than those now obtaining. The present lack of familiarity of our own courts and officers with our language and customs, combined with the aboriginals' lack of comprehension of the complicated laws of Procedure and Evidence and Limitation and the like, has been and is still a fruitful source of miscarriage of justice and consequent discontent amongst the aborigines of Chotanagpur.

It was under the present system of administrating justice that our rights were swept away, giving rise to what are called "vested" rights and interests in favour of alien "Zemindars." The present system of laws and administration of justice affords but little protection to the aborigines and their rights in these and other matters. Our Executive and Judicial officers, for the most part ignorant of the history of our land tenures, afford us but meagre protection. And to add to our misfortunes, Executive and Judicial officers who are from time to time transferred to this Division are transferred to other parts of the Province even before they acquire a sufficient working knowledge of its peculiar customs and land tenures and languages. The proposed Panchayat courts under the Village Administration Act are indeed calculated to go a little way in improving the administration of justice in so far as petty cases and particularly cases among the aboriginals are concerned; but in the much larger number of cases that arise between us on the one hand and the Zemindars and Mahajans on the other, we aboriginals are placed at an almost hopeless disadvantage by the present machinery of administrating justice with its cumbrous procedure and its subtle laws of evidence and pleadings which are beyond the comprehension of the ignorant aboriginals, and its system of pleading through lawyers which is ruinously expensive for us.

GROWTH OF EDUCATION.

Little heed is paid to the growth of Education in this part of the province. The authorities seem to forget that the aboriginals are unlike their neighbours who have a civilization of thousands of years behind them. The policy that is pursued, being the same for aborigines and non-aborigines, is quite unsuitable to this Division. The kind of education afforded to the Bengalis, Beharis and Oriyas is quite unsuitable for the aborigines of Chotanagpur. Consequently the education that is now provided is of little practical utility to an aboriginal and this may account for the apathy which is at present shown to education by an aboriginal.

The Chotanagpur Improvement Society makes the following recommendations for the growth of education among the aboriginals of this province:—

(a) That Compulsory Primary Education be introduced. That the education at the primary stage be imparted through the medium of languages spoken in the area.

(b) That a board consisting of aboriginal members be maintained to conduct and look after the education of the aborigines.

(c) All Inspecting Officers in the aboriginal area be selected from among aboriginal candidates; and under no circumstances should non-aboriginal Inspecting Officers be appointed to hold charge.

(d) That recurring grants be made both from the provincial as well as the central exchequers for the education of aborigines.

(e) Special facilities may be afforded to the aborigines for University Education. At least one aboriginal student be granted state-scholarship every year to pursue higher studies in foreign lands.

(f) That a Government Degree College in Arts and Science be forthwith established at Ranchi. Our representative in the local Legislative Council moved a resolution to that effect in the council, but failing in his attempt to secure this, he moved again for the establishment of at least one Intermediate College in Arts and Science; but government did not think fit to grant even that modest demand, although lacs and lacs of rupees are being lavished over Colleges at Patna where (in the Science College) provision has been made very much in excess of the demand. In Chotanagpur, on the other hand, a travesty of an I. A. College has been set up without a building of its own and without sufficient choice of optional subjects suited to the capacities of aboriginal students. Now that, in spite of manifold disadvantages, the I. A. classes at Ranchi have justified their existence, Government should no longer put off the establishment of a Degree College in Arts and Science at Ranchi. Such a college should specially look to the needs of the aboriginal students. In the existing I. A. classes, for want of proper optional subjects suitable for aboriginal students, most aboriginal students cannot take their admission as no arrangements exist for teaching such optional subjects as Geography, Elementary Science, Botany, etc., which are more suitable to them than Mathematics or Sanskrit, which are of little practical value for them.

(g) That there should be aboriginal members to represent the aboriginal interest in the Senate and Syndicate at the Patna University.

(Rev.) JOEL LAKRA.
(Ray Sahib) BANDI RAM.
(Rev.) GABRIEL HEMROM.
DAUD KACHCHHAP.
JONAS SURIN.
MAHALI URAON.
BHANDRA URAON
PETER HURAD.
DAVID DAN FRANCIS KACHCHHAP.
EMIL KERKETTA.
PRABHUSAHAY SUREN.
JAIMASIH EKKA.
SUKRA URAON.
CHRIST PAL KACHCHHAP.
JOHN EMMANUEL NAG.

Officers and Members of the Executive of the Chota Nagpur Improvement Society, Ranchi.

Memorandum submitted by Rev. T. LENMAN, M.L.C., embodying the Opinion of Missionaries, Representative Santals, and other non-Officials, regarding the Administration of the Santal Parganas District in the Province of Bihar and Orissa.

The Santal Parganas is a non-Regulation District containing about three-quarters of a million Santals and other aborigines along with a very large semi-aboriginal population.

The special Regulations in force in this District, which in its present form dates from just after the Santal Rebellion of 1854, owe their origin to Sir George Campbell, Lieut.-Governor of Bengal, who in 1873 or thereabouts, issued certain Rules for the administration of the Santal Parganas District, rules which are still valid and excellent, and which were intended to protect the Santals, a simple race of aborigines, from the oppression of their more sophisticated neighbours. The Santal Rebellion itself was solely due to such oppression.

The District is a large one, containing six Subdivisions, some of which contain a much larger Santal element than the others. Also, the Government Estate of the Damin-i-koh, which is situated in part of the four sub-divisions of Dumka, Godda, Rajmahal and Pakaur, contains a preponderating aboriginal population, Hindus and Mahomedans, generally termed "Dikkus," being for the most part, segregated in "Bazars." As regards the non-Damin area, the Dikkus have in many cases followed, and frequently ousted, the Santals who reclaimed the land and brought it under cultivation.

The whole of the Damin and the sub-divisions of Dumka and Jamtara (except the towns of Dumka and Jamtara) are non-Police tracts, police jurisdiction being vested in Santal Headmen, known as Parganaits within the Damin Estate, and as Sardars outside the Damin. Their powers approximate to those of a sub-inspector of Police. It is an economical system, and one suited to the genius of the aboriginal races, and it might be considerably extended not only within this District, but also to others where such races are found in large numbers.

The principal features of the non-Regulation system are:—

1. Special rules regulating the criminal and civil procedure of the Courts, designed to simplify and cheapen the administration of justice.

2. A Tenancy system which is intended to discourage the transfer and alienation of lands. Within the Damin Estate the rules are strictly opposed to transfer of any kind. Outside the Damin Estate, in certain areas, lands are transferable or saleable under certain conditions.

3. A very large measure of autonomy in village and police administration in the Damin and non-Police tracts.

4. Usury Laws regulating the rate of interest payable on loans. The amount of interest must not exceed the amount of the loan. This rule is constantly evaded owing to the illiteracy and improvidence of the aborigines.

In recent years there has been much agitation on the part of interested persons, zemindars, moneylenders, and lawyers especially, to have this system abolished and the District brought into line with other "Regulation" Districts. This agitation has been carried up to the Legislative Assembly at Delhi, and to the Legislative Council at Patna, and both these bodies have passed motions in favour of the change. The debates in both cases were not conspicuous for any very intelligent understanding of the system itself, or of the issues involved in the proposed change of administration.

We are of the opinion that this agitation has been deliberately engineered by those who have everything to gain by the exploitation of the Santals, that the agitators represent nobody but themselves, and that the Santals, and probably the bulk of the general population other than Santals, are strongly opposed to any such change, knowing that they have little to gain and a very great deal to lose by it. Common experience goes to prove, that, even under present conditions, wherever a landlord can find a loop-hole or a way to evade the rules, he is merciless to the Santal tenant. The latter if he goes to law must perforce employ a pleader if he is to overcome the argument of the longer purse, and to do this he must, in most cases, have recourse to the money-lender. By the time all three have finished with him he is generally worse off than he was before. This experience is a very common one, especially in the Regulation Districts, and in Bengal the local Government has had to introduce special tenancy regulations to protect the interests of Santals in those districts where they are found in large numbers.

We are emphatically of the opinion that the non-Regulation system should be retained for some long time to come. Its advantages are very great and we think that its retention is an absolute necessity if the Santals are not to be driven out of the District altogether. At present the Santals are a contented, law-abiding, loyal people, confident in the good-will and the ability of the Government to protect them. If this protection is removed, then instead of their being, as they are, an asset to the Government, there is a very real danger of their becoming a serious and troublesome political problem.

If it is asserted that the Santals are, numerically a minority of the population of the District, we would reply that these are days when minorities are generally recognised to have definite political rights, and we are fairly certain that such rights as the Santals at present enjoy would soon cease to exist altogether were Government protection to be removed. In other Districts where there is no such protection and the Santals have come under the influence of the Hindu population the result has been pitiable. They have greatly deteriorated, adopting from their neighbours only what is bad and grotesque, while at the same time they are being continually ousted from lands which they have brought under cultivation, by being rack-rented and oppressed in other ways by Hindu landlords. In the Santal Parganas, if the protection should cease, and the Santals, as we believe, be no longer able to sustain themselves in their old homes or to find new ones elsewhere, it would not be long before they would succumb to the political agitator who would, in that case, find in them material after his own heart, and they would become a serious problem to the Government.

Further, the great majority of the non-Santal population of the District are to a large extent just as greatly in need of protection as the Santals are. It is essentially a backward district, and the semi-aboriginal population is very considerable. It will be a long time before these latter are capable of self-dependence.

We appreciate the force of the assertion which is sometimes made by those who dislike the system, that protection of a backward race tends to destroy self-dependence and renders the protected races effete and lacking in political stamina. We agree that protection in itself is not the ideal form of government, but in this particular instance the Santals are so seriously handicapped vis-a-vis their Hindu neighbours that we are strongly of the opinion that they would be in every way the worse and not the better for the removal of any of the restrictions which at present enable them to exist at all in the District. In so far as they are to-day a healthy and thriving race they are mainly so because of the protection they have received. Without it we believe that their numbers would be very much smaller and they would be a down-trodden community.

MEMORANDUM BY REV. T. LENMAN, M.L.C. [Continued.

We do not assert that protection by itself is sufficient to create stamina in a backward people. Nor do we claim that the non-Regulation system has succeeded to the extent intended by the Government. We believe that, generally speaking, Government officials who are intimate with the District would endorse this. In certain directions, in details of administration it is capable of improvement, but in essentials, and in basic principles, it is, we are confident, the only system which is suitable to the district and people. It might even, with very great benefit, be extended to adjacent districts also. We believe that the administration can be improved in certain details and we are preparing to submit proposals to the Government of Bihar and Orissa for such improvements as we believe will steadily contribute to the growth of self-dependence and to the general uplift and advancement, socially and politically of the aboriginal races in this district and adjacent areas. It is, we are sure, no less the desire of Government than it is our own, that the people themselves should desire, when they are able to fend for themselves, to be emancipated from Governmental leading strings.

We do not wish to burden the Statutory Commission with mere details of administration which fall within the competence of the local Government. We would only stress the importance of retaining the present system of government in the Santal Parganas in the interests of the people most closely concerned, and in this recommendation we believe we have the entire support not only of every non-official who knows anything at all about the District, but also of the whole Santal population, and of most of the Government officials who have had practical experience of the system of administration.

Our proposals are as follows :—

1. That the Santal Parganas continue to be regarded as a Backward District for the purposes of administration.

2. That it be governed by Regulations passed executively by the Local Government with the approval of the Central Government, and that its administration be excluded, for the present, from the purview of the Provincial Legislative Council. This Council has hitherto shown very little regard for the interests of the aborigines of the Province, and the latter have little to hope for from the various political parties of the country as these at present exist.

3. That with a view to the steady development of racial self-dependence of the aborigines such provisions of the Local Self-Government Act as appear practicable to the Local Government be gradually applied to this District, this policy to proceed pari passu with the growth in fitness of Santals to be employed by Government to administer this Act.

4. That the special cadre of officers known as the Santal Commission be revived.

This District was formerly administered by a special body of men known as "Santal Officers." They were mostly Anglo-Indians who spent most of their official career in the District. They were encouraged to learn the language, were specially trained in the local system of administration, and were expected to tour about the villages and to get amongst the people. In recent years, for various reasons this most excellent system has practically ceased to exist. Deputy-Magistrates and other officers who have served in other Districts are posted to this District, and in the nature of the case, these men, however good they may be, can know little or nothing about the people, their language or their customs, while the system of administration being different from what they have been accustomed to, some of them, no doubt, start off with a prejudice against it, and this must affect their work adversely, even if unconsciously. Then too the motor car has done away with the old camping system, and we submit that the result has not been altogether to the advantage of the people or conducive to efficiency. It is difficult for these men, good officers all of them, to pull their whole weight in working a peculiar system unless they are part and parcel of it. We suggest therefore that the Santal Commission be revived and that either Anglo-Indians or Indians be recruited for it, that a knowledge of the local vernacular be obligatory, a sound training in the local form of administration be given them and that they be encouraged to get amongst the people. It ought never to be impossible, as it is only too frequently the case at present, for an illiterate aboriginal to speak to a Deputy-Magistrate in Court in his own language.

5. That the present basis of electoral franchise be expanded to enable the aboriginal population of the Province to be more truly represented in the Legislative Council. The present franchise is of such a limited nature as to effectively prevent any proper representation of the aboriginal races of Bihar. The Santal Parganas, for instance, has three elected members of the Provincial Legislative Council—two Hindus and one Mahomedan Two of these are Congressmen, and the other an Independent with a strong bias towards the Congress Party. They do not in any wise whatever represent the large aboriginal population, whose interest in politics, especially of the Congress pattern, is nil. But it would probably have made a very great difference if every Santal village Headman and Parganait had had a vote. These men have a stake in the country, they are the recognised leaders of the people, and their number is sufficiently great to make itself felt in any election. So long as the franchise remains as it is at present the aborigines will continue to lack representation and to take no interest in politics.

We pass this suggestion on to the Commission for their sympathetic consideration. We would not restrict the vote to Santals only but would give it to all pradhans and headmen.

Dated, Barharwa, E.I.R. Loop Line,
May 20th, 1928.

(Rev.) T. LENMAN,
Church Missionary Society. Nominated member of the Legislative Council to represent aborigines.

The Substance of this Memorandum which bears the signature of the writer, has been submitted to and received the approval and endorsement of the following Missionaries, representative Santals, and other non-Officials, amongst others :—.

Missionaries :—
- Rev. W. J. Tillott, Pathra, Santal Parganas. Church Missionary Society.
- Rev. R. Rosenlund, Santal Mission of the Northern Churches.
- Rev. P. O. Bodding, Santal Mission of the Northern Churches.
- Rev. M. A. Pedersen, Santal Mission of the Northern Churches.
- Rev. J. M. Macphail, M.D., United Free Church of Scotland Mission.
- Rev. W. Dempster, M.D., United Free Church of Scotland Mission.
- Dr. Ronald Macphail, United Free Church of Scotland Mission.
- Rev. W. Miller, United Free Church of Scotland Mission.

Santals :—
- Rev. C. H. Koomar, Church Missionary Society.
- Rev. J. Soren, Church Missionary Society.
- Rev. L. Murmu, Church Missionary Society.
- Rev. S. Murmu, Church Missionary Society.
- Christo Das Tudu, Headmaster, Pathra M.E. School.
- Mr. E. H. Koomar, Offg. District Inspector of Schools, Santal Parganas.
- Mr. R. R. Kisku Rapaz, Spl. Dy-Inspector of Schools, Santal Parganas.
- Mr. S. S. Murmu, Sub-Inspector of Schools, Godda.

DEPUTATION ON SUBJECT OF THE "BACKWARD TRACTS."

Mr. P. J. Soren, Sub-Inspector of Schools, Rajmahal.
Mr. I. K. Tudu, Sub-Inspector of Schools, Pakaur.
Mr. R. M. C. Soren, Sub-Inspector of Schools, Jamtara.
And over 80 other signatures.

Other non-Officials :—
Mr. S. S. Day, M.L.C., Late S.D.O. Rajmahal, Deoghar and Dumka.
Mr. S. P. D. Shaw, District Inspector of Schools, Santal Parganas.
Rev. P. L. Singh, M.L.C., Nominated member representing aborigines.

PATNA.

Dated 17th December, 1928.

MORNING.

PRESENT :

ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION, OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE (EXCEPT RAO BAHADUR RAJAH AND MR. KIKABHAI PREMCHAND), AND OF THE BIHAR AND ORISSA PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE (EXCEPT THE RAJAH BAHADUR OF AMAWAN).

The "BACKWARD TRACTS."

Mr. J. A. Hubback, I.C.S., Special Officer, Reforms, Government of Bihar and Orissa.

Mr. R. E. Russell, I.C.S., Revenue, Secretary to the Government of Bihar and Orissa.

Mr. M. G. Hallett, I.C.S., Collector and Valuer.

Khan Bahadur Muhammad Hamid, late Settlement Officer, Sambelpur.

Mgr. L. Van Hoeck, Catholic Bishop of Ranchi.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. K. Kennedy, Bishop of Chota Nagpur.

The Rev. T. Lenman, M.L.C. (representing the Missionaries).

281. Chairman : I think we had better begin, Mr. Hubback, with a few questions to you. Perhaps I may try to shorten matters on behalf of the Conference as a whole. First of all I have a few questions which are more geographical than anything else. As I make it out, we are really here concerned, are we not, with Chota Nagpur, which contains five districts ?—(Mr. Hubback) Yes.

282. And with another group which we may call the Santal Parganas and Angul, which are dealt with under an additional section of the Government of India Act. There is also Sambalpur, which lies outside Chota Nagpur ?—Yes, it is part of the Orissa division and not of the Chota Nagpur division.

283. To put the thing in terms which will be understood by those of us who come from Great Britain, as I make it out the area of Chota Nagpur is about the size of Ireland. It works out to about 38,000 square miles ?—38,000 square miles is the total area of all the backward tracts, including Chota Nagpur.

284. They come to more than Ireland, which I think is 32,000 square miles ?—Yes.

285. The Chota Nagpur area consists of Hazaribagh, Ranchi, Palamau, Singhbhum, and then I suppose there are the Santal Parganas and Manbhum. It constitutes altogether between one-third and one half of the whole province ?—38,000 square miles out of 84,000 square miles of British territory.

286. Let us see how these are dealt with under the sections of the Government of India Act. There is a section, is not there—section 71—which makes it possible for regulations to be made for the peace and good government of an area in British India which will take it quite outside the regular scheme of legislatures and ministers which ordinarily applies ?—I would not put it precisely in that way.

287. Put it in your own way and tell us what section 71 does ?—Section 71 permits the Secretary of State to apply the section to any part of British India. When the section has been applied it is then possible for the Governor-General in Council, on the advice of the local Government, to make regulations for the area to which the section has been already applied which have the force of law; that is to say, it is a way of making positive legislation for these particular areas.

288. I understand that has been done in reference to the Santal Parganas and Angul ?—That is so.

289. Just make this clear to me. Does the law which is passed by the provincial council of Bihar and Orissa apply to the Santal Parganas ?—No.

290. Or to Angul ?—Not without the definite Act of the Governor under section 52A, by which he can apply it either in full or subject to such exceptions or modifications as he thinks fit.

291. Turning to section 52A, I understand that section of the Act will apply to all these districts of which we are now speaking ?—That is so.

292. Both the Santal Parganas and Angul and the others ?—Yes, but Angul has additional restrictions.

293. I am still speaking of section 52A. Never mind whether anything else applies : does section 52A apply to all these areas ?—Yes.

294. Just describe to us (I have it before me) what section 52A does ?—If I am permitted to take Angul first, section 52A permits the Government of India by notification to restrict the application of the present constitution, the general Constitution of India, in certain backward tracts. That notification was published immediately after the Reforms came in, on January 3rd, 1920.

295. I see the reason why you mention that. If you take the first page of this Memorandum on the backward tracts*, you will see the year is omitted. It is at the end of the first paragraph. The notification there set out is that of the Governor-General in Council "dated the 3rd January," but it does not give the year. It is 1920, immediately after the new scheme of Reforms came into operation?—Precisely.

296. As I follow it, to begin with the result of it is that all these areas I have just recited have thus been declared and notified to be backward tracts?—Yes.

297. When they are thus declared to be backward tracts, the Governor-General in Council may then make directions, the substance of which is set out on pages 333 and 334† of this document, is not it?—And also on page 332†. As regards page 332†, the Governor in Council can direct that "any Act of the local legislature of Bihar and Orissa shall not apply to the said territories or to any part thereof, or shall apply thereto subject to such exceptions or modifications as the Governor may think fit."

298. Those exceptions and modifications are, I think, to be found on pages 333 and 334†?—No; I beg your pardon, but I am afraid that is not so. That is as regards general legislation, legislation applying to the whole province. The exception on page 334† applies specially to laws solely applicable to all or any of the territories specified in this notification.

299. I was not saying what pages 333 and 334† contained; I was saying pages 333 and 334† were the pages which would contain whatever the Governor-General in Council's directions were. However, explain it in your own way.—There is a special provision for legislation applying particularly to the territories that are notified; that is to say, for example, the Tenancy Act for the district of Ranchi. That would come under the powers given at the top of page 334†. At the same time, the Governor has also powers to restrict the application of a general Act, an Act applying to the whole province; he can restrict its application to any of the backward tracts. The effect is described on pages 348 and 349†, paragraph 26, of the Memorandum on the backward tracts.

300. Let us see if we agree as to the results. I think I follow it. So far as the Central Legislature is concerned, if the Central Legislature is minded to pass a law which will be solely applicable to this scheduled area, the law must contain a provision that it shall come into operation only at a time and subject to such modifications as the Governor-General in Council directs?—Yes.

301. That is what I meant when I said you would find part of it on page 333†. It is stated on page 334†, is not it?—Yes.

302. The other provision is to be found, as I make it out, on page 333†, namely, that so far as the Angul district is concerned at any rate there is in effect no transferred subject, so that section 46(1) of the Act is construed as though the whole field was reserved?—That applies only to the district of Angul.

303. So it says at the top of page 333†. Then I understand in the areas to which section 71 applies (the Santal Parganas and Angul) there is not only a restrictive or restraining power, but a positive enacting power by regulation?—That is so, precisely.

304. Mr. Cadogan: I want to ask you one or two questions, Mr. Hubback, on the constitutional issue. The Chairman has already brought out the fact that the districts of Chota Nagpur and the Santal Parganas and Angul have all been notified backward tracts under section 52A?—Yes.

305. He has also brought out the fact that the Santal Parganas and Angul are governed by regulations under section 71, and that is not the case with regard to Chota Nagpur?—Yes.

306. I want rather to elaborate that. I want to know whether I have got this quite right. I want to compare the two systems. The chief characteristic of what I may call the Santal system, the system under section 71, is the concentration of all the principal activities of government in the hands of commissioners, deputy commissioners and subordinate officers: that is it, broadly?—Yes, broadly.

307. To enter into further detail, the system operates to check litigation, to protect the poor litigant, and I think provides some modification of the law of usuary in favour of the debtor?—Yes.

308. While on the other hand, in Chota Nagpur there is no such power under section 71?—That is so.

309. Nor is the jurisdiction of the ordinary courts, or the application of the ordinary laws, excluded to anything like the same extent. There is no suggestion is there, that Chota Nagpur wishes to be governed in the same way as the Santal Parganas? May I put it in this way. Subject to the three points brought out in the various memoranda—that is to say, the retention of the tribal land laws, the fostering of education by Government, and the employment of sympathetic officials who have a knowledge of the country—I take it that Chota Nagpur is content with the form of government which at present obtains. Am I right in saying that?—Broadly you are, but there is just one point I should like to make, and that is as regards Kolhan, which is about one-third of the district of Singhbhum. That is an area inhabited almost entirely by aborigines, it is a Government estate, so that Government is the sole landlord, and in practice the Santal Parganas system has been kept going there, though it has not got the legal backing of section 71.

311. Mr. Cadogan: Although the systems of government are not the same in the various districts, there is this striking similarity in the situation, is there not? The local Government only instituted these special methods of governing the tracts after the existing laws had been proved quite unworkable, and when a crisis had been precipitated by what I might call open rebellion?—That is certainly so as regards the Santal Parganas.

312. But was not it following upon a rising in Chota Nagpur?—(Mr. Hallett): The rising there was much later. I think it was about 1890 and no fresh legislation was undertaken after that.

313. It was not in consequence?—(Mr. Hubback): No constitutional legislation, no.

314. I do not quite know to whom to address my next question, as to the representation. I gather from the Government memorandum that in Bihar and Orissa, aborigines represent 14 per cent. of the population: is not that so?—I think that is a fairly close figure.

315. I do not know whether the Bishop of Ranchi would like to answer these questions. On the question of representation in the House, in Chota Nagpur the aborigines I believe are 58 per cent. of the population?—(Mgr. Van Hoeck): Yes.

316. The remaining 42 per cent. of the population, how do they compare with the aborigines?—The remaining 42 per cent. of the population, of course, are Hindus and Muhammadans, who come from outside.

317. Are they in a much higher state of civilisation, or not?—Very much higher, I should not say as a general rule, namely, all of them, but among them there are Bengalis, for instance, there are Muhammadans that have certainly a good high state of education and civilisation, while amongst the aboriginals there is none—of course, if I say none I do not exclude, perhaps, half a dozen or a dozen or so; but that is, I think, the real position.

318. With regard to the 58 per cent. are those who have adopted the Hindu religion and customs, and so on included?—I think the 58 per cent. included all the aboriginals, whether Hinduised or not Hinduised.

319. While on the subject of representation, the number of aboriginal electors is very disproportionate, is it not?—(Mr. Hubback): Perhaps I may answer the question. Page 347† shows the figure.

320. Mr. Cadogan: I understand that their interests are represented in the legislative council by the nominated members, besides any members whom they may be able to elect in the general constituencies in those areas in which they have a preponderance of the votes. I think there are nine members in the general constituencies from the districts?—Yes.

* Vol. XII, p. 332.

† Vol. XII.

321. Would it be fair to say that seven out of these nine cannot be identified in any way with the interests of the aborigines?—Only one is nominated who is an aboriginal; is not that so?—There is one aboriginal who is elected for the Singhbhum district, and there is the member of the Provincial Committee, Rai Bahadur Roy. Those are the two in this document whom I take as being really representative of the aboriginal.

322. Only two; that is what I am driving at. I wanted to find out how far they were representative. Then I want to ask one or two questions on the characteristics of the aboriginal population, because it must be the determining factor in considering what measure of reforms, if any, is appropriate. They have been described, I think, in one of the memoranda as a contented, law-abiding, loyal people, confident of the good will and ability of the Government to protect them. Now, I have only read the outline of their history, but it seems that directly they are exploited they become anything but law-abiding and trustworthy?—(Mgr. Van Hoeck): They really are trusting in the Government, and they want to demonstrate in some way to Government their wrongs. That is what they attempted to do in the risings.

323. During the non-co-operation movement they came completely under the influence of the non-co-operators, as far as I can make out?—(Dr. Kennedy): That is not the case at all. I can give you an instance. In Murhi, where there is a large bazaar, 30 miles from Ranchi, the non-co-operating agents who came there and tried to stir them up were driven out of the bazaar.

324. A number did come under their influence, I understand?—A small percentage.

325. Chairman: May I just be clear, Dr. Kennedy, your headquarters would be Ranchi, I take it?—(Dr. Kennedy): Yes, but at the time of the non-co-operating movement I was living in Murhi, the place I have just quoted.

326. Mr. Cadogan: Another question on their characteristics. They are not hopelessly primitive, and they have potentialities for development. The education statistics bear that out, do they not?—Yes.

327. I think your point is that for the present they require protection, but they will profit by it so that ultimately they will cease to need it. That is the point, I think, of all those who have submitted memoranda on the province?—Yes.

328. Has there been any agitation from the aborigines or from any other part of the community in any legislature indicating any desire to bring the backward tracts completely within the ambit of the Reforms?—None.

329. Surely there has been discussion and debate? Has not there been a discussion?—Not from the aboriginal side.

330. Surely there has been a discussion in the Central Legislature and also in the local legislature?—(Mr. Hubback): There have been these discussions, but they have not originated from the aborigines.

Chairman: I had understood the position, from reading these pages, to be this. I think the position was that as far as could be ascertained the aboriginal themselves had shown no disposition to ask for being brought more completely under the normal scheme, and that so far as regards political discussion, the discussion had been in the Legislative Assembly, but was not instituted by those who specially spoke for the area.

331. Mr. Cadogan: There is, I think, a demand in all the memoranda that the present basis of the electoral franchise should be widened: is that so?—(Mr. Lenman): Changed.

332. I think there has been a suggestion to enable the village headman to have a vote, for instance?—I think that is the case in the Santal Parganas. I think most of us would agree with that. I cannot speak for the other areas.

333. Chairman: Your headquarters are in the Santal Parganas?—Yes. The headmen are the elected representatives of the villagers.

Mr. Cadogan: That is all I have to ask.

334. Chairman: Might I just ask you gentlemen to give your opinion on one or two additional broad points. First of all, I should like to collect your opinions, both the officials and the others who have a long acquaintance with this area. Do you consider that there has been material progress in an educational sense, in the sense of uplift in the aboriginals, during the last ten, fifteen or twenty years?—(Dr. Kennedy): Yes. (Mr. Lenman): Yes.

335. What is your view about that, for instance, Mr. Hallett?—(Mr. Hallett): The advance is much more marked in the Ranchi district, which I know fairly well, than it is in such a district as Singhbhum. That is largely due to the influence of the missions up there. Singhbhum has a very limited mission field, and on the whole I do not think they have advanced to such an extent as the Mundas and Oraons who live in the Ranchi district.

336. You think the advance has been most striking in the Ranchi part of the area?—In the areas affected by the mission work.

337. Khan Bahadur Hamid, what do you feel about Sambalpur?—(Khan Bahadur Hamid): In Sambalpur there has been a good deal of advance in the matter of education in the non-aboriginal part of the population.

338. Another general question I should like you gentlemen to help us about is this. In some respects the interests of the aboriginals may not be the same as the interests of the other inhabitants of the area, or at any rate of others who come to the area. There is some reference to exploitation and so on in these documents. Do you think there is any indication of improved relations between these different elements in the population?—(Mr. Russell): As far as the Santal Parganas are concerned I would say "No"; the aboriginal has nothing to do with the non-aboriginal if he can help it. The two communities keep entirely to themselves and the relations between the two are mostly limited to moneylending and the receiving of rents or litigation.

339. Might we know the views of the Bishop of Ranchi, the Bishop of Chota Nagpur and Mr. Lenman?—(Mr. Lenman): I agree with Mr. Russell entirely. (Mgr. Van Hoeck): In Chota Nagpur proper I think the position is much the same. There may not be such great antipathy, but there is certainly not great sympathy. The relations do not become close except, as has been mentioned, with rgard to money-lending, the payment of rent and such things; otherwise the aboriginals keep very much to themselves. (Dr. Kennedy): The relations are more peaceable on account of the passing of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. There is not such frequent friction between them now, but it is deep in the minds of the aboriginals that these immigrants from outside are their hereditary enemies, and that they are restrained only by the British Government from exploiting them as they did before the passing of these Acts. That is why non-co-operation made no headway amongst them; they know quite well who are their protectors against the exploitation which would otherwise be their fate.

340. There is a third general question which rather follows on the others; probably again it is a case for individual opinion, but we should like your guidance. What would your views and advice be in the interests of these people? Do you think the stage has been reached when they should have increased opportunities for securing their own political representation, for instance by lowering the franchise or something of that sort, or do you think that for some time to come they will be better dealt with by nomination or by the protecting hand of Government?—(Mr. Hallett): My personal opinion is that the second alternative is absolutely required. (Mr. Hubback):

I agree with that. (Dr. Kennedy :) I concur in that view.

341. You will appreciate that these questions are of great importance to the Conference. I think you will agree with me we always have to be careful, when men of good will are trying to raise the level of those that are backward, that we do not keep them backward by continuing indefinitely to treat them as incapable of exercising any sort of political function, when it may be you can raise them only by giving them the opportunity, within proper limits, of taking greater care of themselves and one another. You know the difficulty; it presents itself all over the world?—(Dr. Kennedy :) I thoroughly appreciate it; but if you let a child walk too soon it is liable to become bandy-legged.

342. But if you do not let it walk at all it will fall down whenever it tries?—(Mgr. Van Hoeck :) It is not necessary to keep them constantly in bondage. As a matter of fact there is another system which I do not know whether you mentioned ; instead of having the protecting hand of Government always over them many aboriginals desire to be put under their own Government, of course with a Chief Commissioner or Lieutenant-Governor or someone over them. The whole tract would be homogeneous, and within that tract, since they would all be of the same standing, you might grant them higher political powers. Then it will be their own business. I know them well; from conversations I have had with them I do not think any of them will appreciate a widened basis of representation. Why? Because they are still like children, as the Bishop of Chota Nagpur has said, and anyone who is not an aboriginal has his own advantage to look for and can bring them round. It is astonishing to see the simple ideas by which they allow themselves to be carried away. Hence they say: "If we had our own Government here, whatever we decided would belong to us and we should have to consider ourselves alone." I think then they would take a much greater interest. Among themselves they have meetings where they discuss tribal matters with the greatest interest, because they know there they are their own masters, and what they decide they can insist on being done; they know that whatever are the disadvantages and advantages it has been decided on by their own people.

343. There is a difficulty, is not there, in the fact that interspersed among them is this other population, living in the same area and which in many places forms a quite substantial percentage?—Knowing the aboriginals, I would say they would look to their own advantage, but they would not do things to the disadvantage of others. That is what I think. They would keep secure their own rights as they are now; they would insist on that; but as far as I know the aboriginals they would not go further and willingly and knowingly try to do harm to the others. They would simply try to save their own position; that is all.

Chairman : I should like to make one observation, both to you gentlemen and to my colleagues here in the Conference. This is, of course, a most interesting subject, of which it is most attractive to learn all the details. At the same time, we must remember that even on this subject the Conference is primarily concerned with the constitutional question; that is to say, it is concerned with considering what is the proper structure of the Constitution of British India so far as it is affected by this special situation. It is not the business of the Conference to decide, and therefore it is only incidentally relevant to discuss, whether a particular set of people should or should not be dealt with under a particular section; the important question is, are sections such as section 71 and section 52A sections which are found to have a useful application in British India, as for instance here, and is the scheme which they authorise a scheme which needs to be provided for constitutionally in somewhat different terms. What particular declaration is made or what particular schedule is drawn up is of course not a matter which the report which may proceed from this inquiry would decide.

344. Major Attlee : I gather that in the Santal Parganas you have a very complete indigenous organisation, have you not?—(Mr. Russell :) Yes. There is a complete organisation over the greater part of the district. The village is the unit.

345. Are those villages self-governed to some extent?—The Code of law regulating the village customs and rights is administered primarily by the headman, and the ryots of the village have a right to approach the sub-divisional officer or the deputy commissioner if they are dissatisfied with his decision.

346. Is there any larger unit than the village? Is there any sort of tribal gathering?—Yes. In the portion of the district known as the Damin-i-Koh which is an aboriginal reserve more or less there is a higher stage than that. Groups of villages ranging from about 15 to 50 are under the control of one man called parganait who is elected by the headmen of the group and he performs police functions as well as judicial functions. He is the head of the tribal judicial organisation and he has certain judicial functions delegated to him by Government.

347. There is in fact an indigenous system of self-government?—Yes.

348. I should like to know how far that obtains in the rest of Chota Nagpur?—(Mr Hallett :) There also is a similar system in one part of Singhbhum, the Kolhan, while in the rest the village system has practically died out. It is the same there as in Bihar in respect of village self-government.

349. You say it has died out. Is there any kind of organisation among the aborigines?—(Dr. Kennedy :) There is a very complete organisation with regard to social matters. They have a number of villages grouped together and one man is chosen as the head and he determines the things about outcasting and things of that sort.

350. That is really the point. It does not matter very much whether he performs this function or that. You have in effect there a habit of self-government in certain matters by the aborigines?—Yes.

351. Do you think on the whole that it is fairly administered?—(Mgr. Van Hoeck :) I think the system works fairly well. (Mr. Lenman :) It is the only system which can work very well among the aborigines.

352. I was interested in what the Bishop of Ranchi was saying. Would you suggest that possibly the best way to treat this area would be to take it out from the present province and have a separate organisation with possibly a headship and thus develop the indigenous system?—(Mgr. Van Hoeck :) This, I think, is in the mind of very many of the aborigines, that is of those who have some education. I think that is really what they would like to have. They want to have a self-contained area having the same problems. They do not want to treat the others as their enemies provided everybody within that tract submitted to the same laws. Then they say there will be scope for looking into their private affairs. At the present time, if I may make a further remark, this is very difficult. At present Bihar is much more advanced than Chota Nagpur and has its own very serious problems. It is very difficult for one man to attend to very serious problems on one side and to very serious problems which are quite different on the other. What the people of Chota Nagpur feel is that unless they are taken by themselves and considered as a group their problems cannot receive sufficient attention however much one might be sympathetic. Even from the most sympathetic man they cannot expect all that they want if he has to look to so many other things. The Bihari has first to look to his own things.

353. Chairman : Perhaps it might be put in this way. I gather from what you say that the view of these aborigines is that they do not feel able to trust the Bihari to look after them?—I would not say that they distrust. Whether it is the Bihari or some other they do not think so far. You may put the very best man; but since he has his own problems, since he has his own interests, naturally they feel "you are yourself busy about your own problems and our problems will not receive as much attention as they require."

354. Major Attlee: Do you, gentlemen, agree in this view?—(Dr. Kennedy:) I think the Chairman has put it very mildly. The attitude of the aborigines to the Bihari and to the Bengali generally is "Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes."

355. The point I want to put to you is this. What do you think of the idea? Do you think it is a good thing if these tracts were formed into a separate government?—I see two sides to that question. I refrained from mentioning that point in my memorandum and I would rather not be compelled to answer that. I will have to discuss it at considerable length if I have to give my opinion.

356. I would just like to ask one other question and that is the impact of industrialism on the aborigine. I think a good many of your aborigines go and work in the mines., I do not know if they go to Jamshedpur. But what is the effect on the aborigine when he comes back home or when he stays there? Perhaps he remains much as he was before on the whole when he comes back home.—(Mgr. Van Hoeck:) I would say this. There is an organisation in Chota Nagpur which sends labourers to the Andaman Islands. It is being very well arranged by the Government. They work in the Andamans and they are allowed to come back. All the conditions are settled before they go and when they come back they return with a certain amount of money and they become more industrious and the people certainly like to go there. As for the mines, I believe the mines in Chota Nagpur have the same effect on the aborigines as they have anywhere else. They do not improve the aborigines at all. As a matter of fact I have spoken to very many of the people who have come back from the mines and they say they will not go back to the mines unless they are compelled to do so on account of starvation. They may be very poor and they may have scarcely anything to eat, but they would not like to go to the mines. I believe this is simply because there is no organisation. They go to the mines as any other workman goes and whatever money they earn they spend it as once.

357. In any case you agree the aborigine requires the greatest possible protection in the light of the industrial developments that are taking place?—I think he would. On account of the want of education none of them can occupy in these industries any position above that of the simple labourer and that is the great difficulty. As long as their own people cannot occupy the position of clerks—taking the smallest position to begin with—scarcely any improvement is possible. That is why they especially ask for special organisation for themselves.

358. Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy: Mr. Hubback, you now say that "four million" on page 103* of the memorandum is a mistake for 5½ million?—(Mr. Hubback:) The figure given on page 103* of the main memorandum is 4 million. It was taken from an old administration report. To the best of my ability I estimate that 5½ million is more likely to be the right figure than 4 million.

The Chairman: I understand that it is agreed that the following correction might be made: On page 103* of the Government memorandum strike out the words "four million" and substitute "5½ million."

359. Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy: On page 337* of the book you speak of the "long struggle between these aliens and the aboriginal population" of the Ranchi district. Again on page 338* you speak of the "subordination of the cultivators to the landlords in many places." In the same page you speak of the great power of the landholder over his tenants in Hazaribagh. Now in these circumstances do you not think it desirable not to strengthen further the power of the landlord over the aborigines?—I should certainly be averse to a modification of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act in that sense.

360. I am not talking of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act at all. Do you not think it desirable not to strengthen the power which the landlord has over the tenants either in council or in some other way?—I think the question will mainly arise in the Tenancy Act. In general I agree with you.

361. Now do you not think that in the Bihar council the landlords are over represented?—I certainly would not say that.

362. On page 126* you give a list of the men elected to the council according to which the landlords are 38 in 1920, 30 in 1923 and 27 in 1926. That is they are exclusively landlords. Then you give other classes such as lawyers, politicians, European planters and so on. But there are also landlords in these groups, are there not?—In the sense that they hold a certain amount of land in addition to their ordinary profession?

363. Many lawyers do hold land and even European planters do hold; is that not a fact?—Perhaps two or three of those mentioned on page 126, apart from landlords, hold a certain amount of interest in land.

364. So you agree that apart from the landholders given there, there are also landholders among other classes mentioned there?—Yes, a few.

365. And that is why we read in the Bihar and Orissa Administration Report for 1921, page 15, that in the election of 1920 out of the 76 elected members for the legislative council, 45 represented the landowners and out of 10 for the Legislative Assembly 7 represented the landowners? Is that statement of fact correct?—I assume so. I am not responsible for that statement.

366. Do these numbers 38, 30, 27 represent the great landowners?—No, certainly not. They include everybody whose main interest is in the land.

367. Then is the statement in the administration report of 1921 incorrect?—I am not responsible for that statement.

Chairman: One does not assume always that because a man belongs to a particular class, if he is elected by a general electorate to serve in the council he represents the particular class to which he belongs.

Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy: There is the Government statement and it may be taken for what it is worth.

368. Chairman: Is the point of the questions which you are now putting really this, that you want to support the view that the backward tracts should remain under the special system which now prevails?

Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy: No; the backward tracts should be separated and formed into a separate province by themselves.

Chairman: I do not think the question as to how many landlords or landowners there are in the legislative council would necessarily go to prove that. I thought your point was this, that it was not desirable that the backward tracts should come under the control and power of the legislative council but it was desirable that in some way or other they should be specially treated having regard to their special interests and needs.

Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy: In this way the interests of the Chota Nagpur people will suffer by being under a council where the landlord element predominates.

369. Chairman: That is exactly what I thought. Just tell me what was the year of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act?

Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy: 1908, sir. That has not given the full relief that the aborigines require and which they deserve.

370. Chairman: At any rate you do not want to alter that part of it which is favourable to the tenants?

Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy: Certainly, sir.

371. Chairman: And I suppose you might perhaps think that the legislative council of the province with its considerable landlord element might not be a body which, if left entirely to itself, would preserve the tenants' rights in Chota Nagpur?

Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy: Yes, sir. And not only that, but any improvements that the ryots would require might not be favourably considered by the council. Therefore, they want a separate council in which their interests will be sufficiently represented.

372. Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: Is it not necessary here to know, sir, from Mr. Hubback and Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy whether any attempt has ever been made to thwart or to amend the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act in such a way as to adversely affect the interest of the tenants?

Chairman: So far as I know, it has not been the case, and I do not know if anything is suggested. Still the fact remains that as things are any attempt to pass legislation which might be thought to be to the prejudice of the Chota Nagpur tenants will be an attempt to come under the special section of the Government of India Act, and, therefore, necessarily will be checked. I am not making any criticism against anybody. But that is the present position.

AFTERNOON.

Deputation on subject of "Backward Tracts" (continued) together with Deputation from CHOTA NAGPUR IMPROVEMENT SOCIETY.

The Deputation consisted of :—

Rev. Joel Lakra, President (Spokesman).
Rev. Gabriel Hemrom.
Rai Saheb Bandi Ram Uraon.
Mr. P. Hurad.
Babu E. Topono.
Babu Patras Dungdung.
Babu Laurentius Barla.
Pandit Masih Dayal Kujur, and Babu Emil Kerketta.

1. Chairman: Rev. Joel Lakra, you are the president of the Chota Nagpur Improvement Society? (Rev. Joel Lakra): Yes.

2. And the spokesman of the deputation you have introduced?—Yes.

3. I understand the gentlemen in your deputation represent both non-Christians and Christians of the Roman Catholic Mission, the S.P.G. Mission and the Lutheran Church?—That is correct.

4. We have, of course, your Memorandum and we had the opportunity of studying it. Shall we for the moment leave that matter and put some questions dealing with the general subject? A little later on we will ask you if you have anything in addition to say?—May I request the honourable members of the Commission to allow us to read an address at the beginning.

5. Chairman: It is very good of your deputation. We shall, of course, be very glad to have the address. But do you think it is quite necessary to have it at first? We want to go on with our business in view of the fact that we have these other gentlemen also here and some of them have to go away soon. Would you mind if we postponed this for some time later? (After a stop.) Might I just see a copy of the address? (A copy was handed over to the Chairman.) I think, if you do not mind, Mr. Lakra, as it is rather a long document we will ask you to do this a little later in the afternoon. For the moment you and your deputation might be content just to be present here as some other questions are being put which affect the aboriginals of the Chota Nagpur area. We shall be glad to take the opportunity of hearing your address later on?—Thank you.

Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy: I understand that in that address they are putting forward a scheme and probably a perusal of that may simplify the cross-examination.

6. Chairman: Would you mind, Mr. Lakra, if I treated it as having been handed in to me. If you like I will summarise it to the Conference now, and that will be treating it as having been handed in to me?—Yes.

Chairman: This is an address, gentlemen, presented by the deputation and is signed at the end by the members of the deputation. It says :—

"As representatives of the aborigines of Chota Nagpur who number about five millions, we beg to accord a most cordial and respectful welcome to you. We are sincerely grateful to you, sir, for your having come to this distant country at great discomfort, loss and trouble to yourselves, only to listen to our grievances and aspirations and to settle a satisfactory constitutional scheme for us by which our grievances may be remedied and aspirations fulfilled as far as possible.

"We feel confident, sirs, that after you have patiently heard and sympathetically considered our case, you will be convinced of the justice of our demand for a more suitable and progressive Constitution which will afford us full scope to develop more rapidly on lines suited to the genius of our race and which will enable us to attain to the full height of our capabilities for political, social, economic and intellectual development.

"Of all the different communities of India it is we, the aborigines, sirs, who have suffered the most and the longest at the hands of alien peoples. Since the early days of British rule we have been gradually reduced from the position of peasant proprietors holding villages in joint ownership to that of humble cultivators of gradually descending degree of subordinate status down to mere serfs on lands which our ancestors reclaimed and owned. Alien Hindu interlopers have been enabled to do this by either fraud or force partly through our own simplicity and mainly through the mistakes committed by the British Government in throwing us without taking account of our past history, into the melting pot of a common law and common administrative system with more advanced districts. It may rejoice the heart of the mere student of comparative jurisprudence to see in Chota Nagpur every successive grade of rights in land arising out of the disintegration of the primitive village communes, but you, sirs, who are bent upon the sacred task of devising means of social and political amelioration for the inhabitants of his country, will, we are sure, feel grievously pained at the havoc created on our rights by the introduction of an unsuitable administrative and legislative system in Chota Nagpur.

"True, some belated protection from further spoliation of our rights was sought to be given in the last decade by a tardy tinkering with our tenancy law . . ."

That refers, I suppose, to the Chota Nagpur Nagpur Tenancy Act of 1908?—Yes, sir.

"But that law which is based on a wrong fundamental assumption has not been and cannot be effective in checking further inroads on such miserable remnants of our ancient rights as are still left. To heap insults on injury, these alien landlords despise us as 'Mlechhas' and despicable creatures — more brutes than men, and actually stigmatise us as 'Kols' which we understand is a Sanskrit term for 'pigs.'

"But we too, sirs, are human beings, with a long past—longer than that of any other race in India, with a native genius for democratic government.

"If the claim of our Muhammadan fellow-countrymen that either as kinsmen or as co-religionists of quondam rulers of India they form an important minority in the country and as such are entitled to more than their proportionate share of representation in the legislature and in the services—(which we do not certainly grudge them)"—(meaning that their claim is just?) "We aborigines, sir, can with equal or perhaps greater justice claim that as descendants of the earliest known owners of Indian soil and with more hoary traditions of sovereignty in the land, we too are entitled to as much or perhaps greater indulgence and an equal, if not a larger, share in the government of our own people. The Mahabharata, the national Epic of the Hindus, records the achievements of the Munda sovereign, Jarasandha who ruled northern India from Rajgriha or Rajgir in this very district of Patna, and our tradition speaks of Karakh, or Kurush, one of our ancestors who once ruled over what is now the Shahabad district and gave his name to that country as Kurushdes, as Buchanan in his memoirs tell us and Montgomery Martin in his Eastern India records. Similar traditions of the ancient rule of our people over other parts of India might be cited in profusion.

"But to turn from ancient history and tradition to contemporary facts. At the present day the aborigines of India number sixteen millions out of which as many as five millions and a half or more than one-third inhabit this most artificial and heterogeneous province of Bihar and Orissa, mostly in a compact body in Chota Nagpur and the Santal Parganas. Whereas, we aborigines form more than one-seventh of the population of this province and our brethren not more than one-tenth, they have succeeded in securing a place in the Bihar Cabinet and a decent representation in the Bihar legislature and in the judicial and executive administration of the province and in other public services, but we, sirs, have no one to represent us in the Cabinet, our representation in the council is farcical and our representation in the public services is negligible."

7. Let me just ask you this. There are at present, are there not, in the council here two members who are nominated and in addition to that you have amongst others secured the return, for instance, of the honourable member for the Ranchi district, Rai Bahadur Roy, who is here, undoubtedly by your votes. Is not that so?—Yes. Rai Bahadur Roy is perhaps the only one who really represents us.

8. Well, no doubt, he does represent you anyway. Then you go on to argue—

> "Rules by a Cabinet, of which all the Indian members hail from the landlord class, a class whose interests have always been antagonistic to ours, and who must necessarily fail to appreciate and sympathise with our needs and aspirations, and with a legislature in which the landlord element preponderates and predominates, we cannot resist the feeling that our interests stand little chance of promotion or even protection. And, as a matter of fact, our painful experience of the last nine years of what people in Chota Nagpur call Bihari rule and landlord rule, goes far to justify that apprehension."

Then you say that you have been denied your fair share in the financial arrangements for the educational and other advancement of the different parts of the province. You consider that the Chota Nagpur area has not had the necessary funds for a medical school, or an engineering school, or an agricultural school or a degree college in arts and science.

In the second place you say—

> "Suitable aboriginal candidates for appointment to public services are now frequently passed over in favour of Bihari and Oriya candidates."

In the third place—

> "The administration of justice in Chota Nagpur is mostly in the hands of Bihari or Oriya officers . . . who have no knowledge of the peculiar customs and habits, languages and mentality of our people . . ."

Then you give in quotation what Sir Andrew Fraser wrote in the Quinquennial Administration Report.

In the fourth place you say—

> ". . . the elaborate and intricate laws of procedure and evidence which may be suitable for advanced districts but are beyond the comprehension of the bulk of the aborigines are productive of much hardship and injustice to these backward peoples. If we were given our own legislature for the backward tracts, matters would have been quite different. A council composed almost wholly of men of a higher culture would regard any attempt to simplify the law as a retrograde and reprehensive step. As for the inequitable provisions of our tenancy laws, any attempt made in the interests of the aboriginal tenants to alter them would be foredoomed to failure . . ."

In the fifth place—

> "In the Bihar council, the aborigines have very little chance of a favourable hearing, whereas the other important communities are fairly well represented . . ."

In the sixth place—

> "Such European officials as in pre-Reform days evinced genuine sympathy with our needs and aspirations and sought to understand and help us so far as they could, have, under the present changed circumstances, very little chance of doing so.. In the present form of council government they are naturally more concerned with the wishes and opinions of the senior partner . . ."

In the seventh place—

> "In the council where the interests of the aborigines are often in conflict with those of the landowners or certain large mining or financial interests, the former are naturally likely to be sacrificed in favour of the latter."

In the eighth place you argue that this artificial arrangement cannot be expected to create a common nationalism and that such an unequal combination is bound to result in the less evolved party losing the good traits of their character and imbibing the worst features of the so-called culture.

> "Finally, the present administrative union of Chota Nagpur and the Santal Parganas with Bihar is harmful to the senior partners as well . . . ."

The you say that "the aboriginal tracts have been illogically tacked on as a superfluous appendage to Bihar and Orissa" and then you go on to say what you consider should be done.

> "In our opinion, the only suitable scheme appears to us to be the establishment of a separate administration under a sympathetic and well informed Governor directly under the Governor-General and a separate legislature for the aboriginal tracts now loosely and illogically tacked on to Bihar and Orissa."

The advantages you mention are these—

"In the first place such a province will form a uniform homogeneous administrative unit. It is this tract which is described in the last census report of Bihar and Orissa as the Greater Chota Nagpur. The aborigines who form the bulk of the population of these tracts are all racially, linguistically and culturally akin . . ."

"In the second place, when we shall have our own legislative council and minister we shall be in a far better position . . ."

"In the third place, we shall have a separate judicial and executive service . . ."

"In the fourth place, the question of communal representation which is bad everywhere will hardly arise in the proposed aboriginal province. Guarantees may, however, be provided for such minority interests as may exist."

"In the fifth place, a separate administration and legislature of our own will inspire in our people greater national self-respect and self-reliance."

Then you say—

"The first and indeed the only serious objection that may be raised against the scheme is the financial resources of the proposed province. To this our humble answer is that with the surplus of revenue that is left over after paying for our district administration and with the addition of such grants and financial arrangements as we confidently expect, the Central Government will be pleased to make in fulfilment of their responsibility for the improvement of the backward tracts, it may be possibly by strict economy to pay our way . . ."

Then you discuss also the subject of the smallness of the province and argue that it is big enough. Some other objections, you say, may be raised for the scheme and you argue for its advantages. I understand that that is the substance of what in this document you wish to put forward?—Yes. We have also put forward two other alternative schemes though less satisfactory than this.

9. I think I have summarised it fairly?—Yes.

10. Would you just tell me this: According to your understanding, in the old days to which you refer, was the system in your area one in which the village was owned by all people who lived there jointly?—Yes.

11. And in the old days, as you understand it, did the villagers pay tribute to anybody else?—In fact it was not called tribute; it was a kind of subscription they used to pay.

12. To some superior?—Yes. It is only when the Muhammadans conquered our country our people were compelled to pay that.

13. Then I understand there has been, as you describe in this document, a successive disintegration; many of your villages now are not owned by a joint ownership but they are broken up?—Yes.

14. One result of that is that it is difficult to get a village represented by votes from voters because the individual voter may not have the qualification. Is not that so?—It depends on what we call qualification.

15. Qualification at present is—is it not—the paying of a certain amount of rent or land revenue?—That is the understood qualification, but we do not know what should be really the qualification.

16. You think that there ought to be a different one?—Yes.

17. Chairman: I want you to bear in mind that the Bishop of Ranchi has to get away. Would it be convenient for you, Mgr. Van Hoeck, to add anything about this?—(Mgr. Van Hoeck): With regard to the scheme which has been proposed, I believe that really no insistence is sought to be placed on going back to the old customs. I would simply say this much that the problems which agitate the minds of the aboriginals should be examined very carefully to see what can be done. It seems to me that for this purpose there will be an advantage in having a separate administration.

18. Chairman: I think this deputation seems rather to differ on this point from what we heard this morning. We heard this morning a strong consensus of opinion from the various gentlemen before us that it was right to treat this area rather differently from the rest of the province of Bihar and Orissa and a general indication was given that what has been done to treat it separately was right. These gentlemen apparently wish to go further and say that they would like to be entirely separated from this province; they have nothing to do with it.

Mgr. Van Hoeck. I do not know whether that is the implication which they have in mind. As I said this morning, there are very many problems in Bihar which are quite different from those in Chota Nagpur. Therefore if Chota Nagpur is tacked on to Bihar, say, under one Governor, however sympathetic and qualified that Governor may be, yet it is really a super-human task to manage these two areas with their varying problems.

19. Chairman: You see, gentlemen, it comes to this. This deputation is urging, from their point of view, very naturally, that they should be not only separated from the ordinary administration of the province of Bihar and Orissa, but there should be what I may call a full-fledged province of their own, their own central administration, their own Governor, their own minister. That is the question which is raised by the deputation, I think.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: They want a reformed government like the rest of India.

20. Chairman: The question, it seems to me, is whether or not this very natural ambition of the deputation cannot at this stage very wisely be recommended. I do not know if you have any views about it, Mgr. Van Hoeck, but if you have we should be very glad to hear them.

Mgr. Van Hoeck: I am sorry I did not make myself clear this morning. In the memorandum which has been presented by us we do not speak of any form of government, we simply state that special protection should be given to these aboriginals to safeguard their rights. But now the question goes further and asks whether we would insist on more safeguards or whether we sould like the area put under a separate administration, under a Chief Commissioner or a Governor as head of the province. I should certainly prefer the latter course because if there are special protections for you it does not certainly encourage you to self-respect if you are constantly made to feel that you are inferior to others; if you are separated then there is no longer that sense of needed protection.

21. Chairman: May I ask how you feel about it, Dr. Kennedy?—I want to know the views of all you gentlemen because you are so disinterestedly concerning yourselves in helping the backward tracts. Whether you would take the responsibility of recommending that they should at this stage take a step forward in their own self-government—that is the real question. Can this district treated by itself be wisely encouraged to do that now?—That is what I want to know from you.

Dr. Kennedy: If there are sufficient safeguards to prevent any loss and if certain extensions of the present system are made, I think that would be a more prudent course to follow. At present I do not think on the whole that they are sufficiently developed to run a separate province without some outside help. Now, where is that outside help to come from?—If it is to come in what I might call an irregular way, from other people of the country, then I do not think that they would be better off in the new province than they are at present. You would have a certain number of people, some might be enthusiasts, others might be adventurers, who would hold a great many of the offices and posts in the country. At the present stage of development they cannot get on with filling these administrative posts by aboriginals.

22. Chairman : Might we ask what Mr. Lenman thinks about it ?

Rev. Lenman : I think this is a new suggestion to have an entirely separate province for the aboriginal tracts. I have not really thought out this point, but I would rather agree with Dr. Kennedy that at the present moment we would not be able to do without outside help in the administration of any province that might be created.

Chairman : What I gather is this. It seems to me that the consensus of opinion on the part of a body of gentlemen who are now before us is that to put Chota Nagpur in the position of being simply one of the ordinary parts of the province without any special provision for its needs or administration would be a mistake, and in so far as there has been a separation, you, gentlemen, think it is right there should be. The question then comes to this : Whether that separation should be maintained as it is or what is the direction in which it might be improved, and I gather that the view of these very wise advisers of the last deputation would be that it is a mistake to be too rash or to go fast. The real thing to do is to see that the protection which these people enjoy is maintained, possibly with a view to their own advancement.

Lord Burnham : May I submit to you, sir, that the creation of a fresh province for this area cannot seriously be contemplated ? If it is to be a sub-province of this province or some other province, then of course it is a different matter. The question that arises in this connection is whether under this province or any other province they would wish to be under the paternal direction and control of the Government of India with merely a commissioner and such machinery as he requires to deal with their affairs.

Sir Hari Singh Gour : As the two deputations do not see eye to eye, may I suggest that the two deputations be heard separately ?

Chairman : I think that is right. We had better continue from where we stopped before we rose for lunch. I think we should ask our friends of the Provincial Committee if they would just put briefly the points which they think it necessary to put more particularly with reference to the proceedings of this morning.

Mgr. Van Hoeck : I may say, sir, that when I speak of " their own province " I do not mean to say that all the officials of the province should come from that province. That is not my point. I do not know what is the intention of the deputation. I only want to say that they must have their own administration, let it be under the chief commissioner with his own councils or whatever it is. As a matter of fact, not that the aborigines can by themselves administer the province and furnish all the officials. When I speak of their own province I mean a separate adnimistration for them.

23. Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy : You think that a separate administration for them is desirable ?—Yes, that is what I think.

24. If they cannot have a separate province, would you suggest any other scheme ?—There is the other suggestion that they may have a sub-province with a sub-governor or deputy governor whose main duty will be to be in charge of this province and who will be under the authority of the Governor here. It will give this advantage that there is a special man, call him a chief commissioner or a deputy governor or anything, whose business will be to deal with the problems of that particular area, a sub-province or whatever you may call it.

25. So you think that if there cannot be a province, at least a sub-province would be desirable for that area ? Yes, I think so.

26. Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy : And it will be preferable to the present system ?

Chairman : He has already answered the first part. He has used the phrase very generally and said that a sub-province is a good idea; but as regards the present system we have to see how far there is a separate administration at present.

27. Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy : You think that a sub-province with a deputy governor whose special charge will be to look after the aborigines is more desirable than the system under which they are at present administered ?—I think so.

28. Now supposing for financial considerations even a sub-province cannot be granted, then would it be suitable for them to have something like a compartmental government, that is to say, they would elect a number of representatives, with a minister to guide them, and in the council they would discuss measures concerning them. What do you think about such a system ?—I believe that more or less it is the same as a sub-province.

29. If the deputy governor is found to be too expensive then what do you suggest ? In this case, though they are tacked on to another province they will have a separate cabinet, a separate council, and so on ?—I have not considered that point, but the question comes to this. Of course, the best thing would be to have a Governor with a separate province. The next best would be to have a sub-province with a deputy governor and the next best would be to have a minister with a separate council. But do you intend that their matters shall also be discussed in the general council of the province ?

30. No ?—Then in that case it will be a sort of sub-province.

31. You consider that that will be the next best ?—I think so.

Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy : And anything other than that would be injurious to the interests of the people ?

Chairman : I think, Rai Bahadur, you have carried this matter as far as it can fairly be carried. After all we all appreciate the interest which he and Dr. Kennedy and these other distinguished gentlemen take in the area. But you cannot ask everybody at a moment's notice to provide a new Constitution. That is the business of all of us to consider. I think you have got out facts which are important for us. You got out first of all the fact that in the view of these gentlemen they would not wish to see Chota Nagpur thrown back without any distinction. They attach great importance to its being kept separate and its problems considered separate. You also got out the fact that the best that could be devised would be separation so that the problems might be given full consideration without other things diverting attention. But whether it can be done by a Governor or a chief commissioner or a minister or the rest of it, if you allow me to suggest it, it is a very difficult constitutional question which I hardly think we can fairly ask these gentlemen.

32. Sir Hari Singh Gour : I understand you emphasise the one fact that these backward people require special consideration and consequently it does not matter what is the machinery for giving that special consideration provided that machinery is adequate ?—Yes.

33. You will be satisfied with it ?—Yes.

34. And your colleagues will be satisfied ?—Yes. I may add one thing. In devising that machinery this should be kept in mind, namely that their self-respect should be maintained. They should not be made to think constantly, " I am an inferior and therefore I must not bother about it."

35. It must preserve their individuality and promote their self-respect ?—Yes.

36. If these two conditions are fulfilled the rest of the machinery is immaterial ?—Yes.

(At this stage Mgr. Van Hoeck withdrew.)

37. Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy : Do you not think, Mr. Hubback, that under the present council the aborigines have no chance ?—(Mr. Hubback) : I think their interests are very liable to be neglected at present.

38. Is it not a fact that the aborigines appreciate the franchise and you had the largest number of voters attending the polls among the aboriginal constituencies ?—Yes. I think the main reason for that is that they do follow the dictates of their headmen and their headmen understood that the Government wished to make a success of the elections, purely a numerical success.

39. Have you a personal knowledge of the motive which actuated them to go to the polls in large numbers?—I am afraid that is not first hand. That is only the impression gained by the election officers, though in some of the districts they did come forward no doubt from many other motives besides that, possibly as a civic duty.

40. But you do not know why the Chota Nagpur people came in large numbers to the polls?—The aborigines certainly polled a very large percentage.

41. Is it not a fact that they have a system of election of headmen amongst themselves?—Yes, in certain parts.

42. In the Ranchi and Singhbhum districts?—Certainly in the Kolhan; but I gather Ranchi does not so well maintain the system.

43. You have no personal knowledge of the Ranchi district?—No.

Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy: You say on page 350* of the memorandum, "The local and central legislatures have shown signs on several occasions of treating the problems of the backward tracts from an a priori point of view, with little regard to actualities."

Chairman: What he says is that there are several occasions and signs of them have appeared.

44. Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy: Is not that because the members have no knowledge of the actual state of things in those tracts?—Certainly.

45. That is the reason?—Yes.

46. If we had a larger number of representatives from these tribal tracts, would not that improve matters?—It will certainly; it gives the council more information.

47. And if they had a council of their own, is it not likely that they would pass measures which would benefit them?

Chairman: If you excuse me the answer to that question is quite obvious if everything else is assumed. If you had a separate political organisation, if you could get the people together in one council, no doubt they will act together. It is no use spending time on such questions.

48. Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy: Is it not a fact that in this Council when outside members moved a resolution to abolish the restrictions on the election of president or chairman of district boards, and when another resolution was moved for the abolition of the Santal system, the members from Chota Nagpur stood up for the system?—Those members who had close touch with the aborigines certainly did.

49. So you agree that it would be harmful to Chota Nagpur to remain tacked on to Bihar?—I think there would be advantages in a separate province if it is financially possible. That is purely my personal opinion.

50. Babu Lakshmidhar Mahanti: With regard to Angul, am I right in thinking that Khondmal subdivision is geographically separate from Angul?—Angul district consists of two entirely separate blocks.

51. Apart from administrative convenience, the two parts are not common?—Khondmal is distinctly more backward than the other subdivision.

52. In Angul itself 77 per cent. of the population speak Oriya?—I cannot say off-hand.

53. I see from the district gazette here that in Khondmal 84 per cent. of the population are Khonds?—Yes.

54. Am I right in saying that up till now they have not got a high school?—I am afraid I am not closely acquainted with the administration of Angul to that extent.

55. There is no representative institution in Angul?—There is no representative in the council. It is outside the Reforms scheme.

56. There is not even a local board or district board or anything of the kind in that area?—There is no local board or district board in Angul.

57. And in spite of this it is run as an ordinary district, that is with a deputy commissioner, a subdivisional officer and other machinery just as you find in an ordinary district?—No. For one thing it is at present under the political agent who also looks after the Feudatory States. It is classed with the Feudatory States in that way.

58. Chairman: I understand it is administered by the Government of India or on behalf of the Government of India and it is quite outside the area of any Governor of the province so far as the legislature is concerned. At present it does not elect a member and in that respect it is like the North-West Frontier Province?—Yes.

59. Babu Lakshmidhar Mahanti: Although the income is about 1½ lakhs the expenditure is more than 5 lakhs?—I think Mr. Tallents gave the figures the other day. It is something like that.

60. Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: This morning you said, Mr. Hubback, that seven out of the nine members coming from Chota Nagpur cannot really represent the interests of the aboriginals?—(Mr. Hubback): It is something like that, I think.

61. Now, I would like to know from you how you have come to that conclusion? Is it merely your personal opinion about those nine representatives, or you have grounds for maintaining an opinion of that nature?—I think I have grounds; but that is my personal opinion.

62. Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: May we know your grounds?

Chairman: In regard to these matters of opinion, one is bound to base one's view on the impact of a whole series of things. It is very difficult, I think, as you know, to ask this witness to detail the grounds for his opinion which obviously is merely a personal view.

Witness (Mr. Hubback): It is, as you say, sir, made up of a very large number of impressions which it would be very tedious to relate.

63. Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: Then, can you give me some idea as to the other people that are living in Chota Nagpur? According to the figure given in your book here, it appears that the aborigines are about 58 per cent. in Chota Nagpur?—(Mr. Hubback): I should suggest, if I may, sir, that the question should be asked of one of the non-official witnesses who have more close knowledge of the district.

Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: I thought I would be able to get that information more correctly from you, especially because in this book it is written . . .

Chairman: Will you please repeat the question? I believe you referred to the statement in the book that in the Chota Nagpur area the "Aboriginal and semi-aboriginal tribes . . . make up nearly 58 per cent. of the population."* (Page 337*.) And then I thought your question was as regards the balance?

Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: Yes, sir.

Chairman: What is it that you want to know?

64. Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: What is the constituent part of the balance?

Witness (Mr. Hallett): As regards the balance, they are mostly all aboriginals in origin, but they have risen in the social scale and they have become Hinduised. They are, as far as my experience goes, less intelligent and have less ability than Hindus of Bihar.

65. Chairman: What is the meaning of saying "they have become Hinduised"?—(Mr. Hallett): It largely depends upon the enumerator who makes up the figures in the census. Various methods are laid down for guidance in deciding as to who is aboriginal and who is Hindu, but generally those who were taken as Hindus are persons who have taken up certain parts of the Hindu religion, but they have not abandoned entirely their aboriginal religion.

66. Babu Chandreshvar Prashad : Therefore, you do not think that being merely Hinduised their interest is in any way adverse to the interest of the aboriginals in general ?—(Mr. Hallett) : By saying that there is a large number of animists who have become Hinduised, it means that they are classed as Hindus and not as aboriginals. That takes away about 30 per cent. of the population. Then there is 10 per cent. of the Hindus who come in from outside and whose interests, as history shows, are more or less against the interests of the aboriginal tribes.

67. All the same they are people who have settled in that country—I mean the 10 per cent. who you consider are more or less against the interests of those aboriginals are settled in that country ?—(Mr. Hubback) : Yes, they have settled in certain parts of that country.

68. And they too have some stake and some interests there ?—They have interest, certainly, but I do not know about their stake.

69. It is quite possible that they are in a minority of 10 per cent. But anyway they have some interest and some stake there ?—Certainly, yes. (Dr. Kennedy) : May I answer that ? You said they have some interest . . .

70. I want to know whether they have, or they have not. It is for you to say ?—(Dr. Kennedy) : Their interests are most frequently in opposition to the interests of the aborigines. That is the point that I should like to be brought out.

71. To make my question clear, what I want to know is not whether the interest that this minority possesses is standing adverse to the aboriginals or not, but the point is whether they have got some stake and interest in the place where they live ?—(Mr. Hubback) : They own property there.

72. Chairman : This 10 per cent., what are they ? Are they Bengalis ?—(Dr. Kennedy) : They have a varied origin. A certain number are Rajputs, and a considerable number, an increasing number, are Bengalis of varied social positions. There are now a certain number of Bengalis who have acquired lands and who have mostly been connected in some capacity with the Law courts, and they have opportunities of acquiring lands ; and there are the Marwaris and the Telis (oil-men) who have come in as traders.

73. Then about the other question, what part they do play in the area ?—Some have come as traders ?—Yes ; that is the case with some of them.

74. Who does the moneylending ?—Money-lending is chiefly done by the Marwaris and the Telis.

75. You say some of them have considerable stake there ?—Most of them are petty landholders. Only a few have considerable estates. Then there are a number of various castes who have been retainers of the Maharaja, or some other landlords, and have been assigned some landed property on which they live. (Rev. Joel Lakra) : May I say a few words, sir ? I think these non-aboriginal people in the villages generally are not landowning people, but they have been imported either from Bihar, or from other provinces, even from Orissa. There are servants and different other kinds of professional people among them. The Rajas, when they came there, brought these non-aboriginal people with them. They are dependent on the zamindars for their maintenance.

76. Babu Chandreshvar Prashad : Then my point was, do you think that the seven members out of nine who do not really represent the interest of the aborigines come from the class of this minority ?—(Mr. Hubback) : Yes, I know it.

77. But at the same time you will probably agree that the percentage of aboriginal electors is much higher than this minority that represents only 10 per cent. of the population ?—(Mr. Hubback) : If you look at the table at page 347* you will see that in two or three districts the aboriginal electors have got a substantial majority of votes. For instance, in Ranchi 66 per cent., in Singhbhum 63 per cent., and in South Manbhum 52 per cent. of the electors are aboriginals. In all the other constituencies they are in a rather considerable minority, and I take it that they do not all vote solid and therefore we may expect them to lose not only the seats where they form a minority of electors, but they might lose others as well. In fact they do not put up a candidate, except in Ranchi and Singhbhum.

78. Anyway, the percentage of voters here is much higher than the number of votes that might have been recorded from the 10 per cent. of the population ?—Yes, they are generally wealthy people.

79. Chairman : If I turn to page 347* I see, for example, that in the Santal Parganas the aborigines are 51 per cent. of the population. The non-aboriginals are therefore slightly less than half of the population. In the previous column I read that only 33 per cent. of the people on the electoral roll are aboriginals. Therefore, 66 per cent. are non-aboriginals. I did not understand you when you said that a majority of the population has a minority of votes unless you want to say that a minority of the population has a majority of the votes ?—I am sorry, Sir, I misunderstood the question.

80. The question put to you was that the minorities are a still smaller fraction of the voters ?—I should say that the non-aboriginals have a great many more electors than the aboriginals.

81. Sir Hari Singh Gour : Proportionately to their percentage ?—Actually.

82. Babu Chandreshvar Prashad : When a question was put to you whether you consider it would be better for the aborigines that they should be represented through nomination or through election, you said that you consider it would be better through nomination ?—I do not remember having said that. I was never asked a question about that.

Babu Chandreshvar Prashad : The point is this, sir. It was pointed out by you, sir, whether anything could be achieved by lowering the franchise of these places so that a greater number of aboriginals would come as voters, and thus ensure their number in the council, or whether it would be better for them to be represented by nomination, and the witness was asked which of these two would be safer for them. In answer to that, if I heard him correctly, Mr. Hubback said that he would prefer nomination.

83. Chairman : It is only a misapprehension and it is a good thing to get it right. Mr. Hubback, what is your view about that ? Do you think yourself that it is desirable to preserve or increase the nominated representation of the aboriginals, or do you think that any more representation could be given by the method of election ?—I think they are now sufficiently advanced to depend on a larger element of election in regard to their representation, but the question that I was answering this morning, sir, I think, was whether they could depend entirely on their elected representatives to look after their interests, or whether it was necessary to retain any form of safeguard . . .

84. Chairman : By nomination ?—Not by nomination, sir, but by provisions of the Act.

85. That is a different point. I would rather agree with Babu Chandreshvar Prashad. I too thought that your view was that nomination, so far as it goes, should be preserved ?—I certainly think that an element of nomination should be desirable.

86. And you think that the present nominated element is too big ?—I do not think it is, sir. I should like to see more elected members too.

87. Babu Chandreshvar Prashad was only asking you whether, if you want more elected members, you could get it by lowering the franchise. Experience goes to show that though they have got an actual opportunity for returning members, they have not in all cases used their opportunity ?—I am very doubtful what the result would be if you lower the franchise.

88. Babu Chandreshvar Prashad : Coming to nomination as such, do you not think that they have got a very effective system of organisation?—Not everywhere; by no means.

* Vol. XII.

89. But at least in places where they have got it, if the village headmen are asked to supply Government with a panel of names for nomination, do you not think that there would be people who would be properly representing the interests of the aboriginals rather than those who are nominated at random?—I think, possibly. I am not precisely aware how the nomination is carried out, but possibly the suggestion you make would be advantageous for getting a suitable nominee.

90. Are you aware of the Government ever getting a memorial or representation of that nature from these aborigines?—I have no recollection of ever having seen it.

91. You have admitted at least that two people are really representing their interests?—Certainly.

92. One is Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy and another is Babu Devendra Nath Samanta, who is a Munda himself?—Yes.

93. I find that last August, when speaking in the council, Babu Devendra Nath Samanta said: "Some two years back influential aborigines approached Government with a prayer that Government should be pleased to nominate some of the aborigines whom they named to represent their interests in the council, but Government paid no heed at all and nominated members according to their own sweet will to suit their own purpose"?—I am afraid I cannot say anything about that.

94. Chairman: I think the witness has already agreed that it might be a good plan if Government were invited to give their attention to the suggestion made by Babu Chandreshvar Prashad of the headmen being asked to supply Government with a panel of names to select a suitable nominee from?—(Mr. Hubback): Yes; I would not go further than that. It is merely my personal opinion, Sir.

Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: I would like to read out another passage from the speech of the same member, and should be glad to know if Mr. Hubback subscribes to that view or not. Talking about their grievances and their condition under the present system of Government—I mean by keeping them as backward tracts—Babu Devendra Nath Samanta says: "It is not because our grievances are not known to Government that they have not been redressed but because Government are not willing to redress them. We have firm belief that Government want that we the aborigines should be kept in the same state as we were a long time ago. The House will be surprised to learn that some three or four years ago the district authorities of Singhbhum, i.e., the then deputy commissioner at Chaibassa held the opinion which he had the honour to express in writing that it is undesirable that free studentship should be granted to the aborigines to enable them to prosecute their studies and to make them bad Babus." I wish these were not correct. It is simply because this man (Babu Devendra Nath Samanta) is supposed to represent the real interest of the aborigines and as he himself happens to be a Munda, I just wanted to place that before this Conference for their information.

Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy: That speech, sir, was in reference to the Government's power of nomination to the district boards in addition to the elected members the aborigines have got there, and then they sent up a petition to Government that so far as nominations were concerned Government might be pleased to nominate so and so.

Chairman: May I have the reference to the book you were quoting from?

Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: It is from the official report of the Bihar and Orissa legislative council proceedings, dated the 21st August, 1928, pages 316 and 317.

Chairman: The reference to nomination there is with reference to nominations to district boards according to the Rai Bahadur.

95. Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: The only other thing which I could not make very clear this morning and I would like to get from you now is this. Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy referred you to page 126* of the bigger memorandum which has been submitted by our provincial Government. So I have only to ask you this much, if "landlords" include all those who have any interest in land?—(Mr. Hubback:) It does not mean only the great landholders.

96. Maulvi Saiyid Mubarak Ali Sahib: Supposing, Mr. Hubback, the demand for a separate province or sub-province is not granted, what safeguards would you suggest for the aboriginals mentioned at page 348* of this small pamphlet (memorandum of the Bihar and Orissa Government on the backward tracts of Bihar and Orissa)?—Could you put me on to the particular passage?

97. Just before paragraph 25, on page 348*. The passage runs: ". . . it is not surprising that the aboriginals, where they are intelligent enough to appreciate the position, view with great apprehension the prospect of being placed without any safeguard under a council so composed." What safeguards would you suggest?—Well, the present safeguards I consider satisfactory.

98. You think that they ought to continue?—Something in that form, but if the Constitution of the province as a whole is changed the safeguards will have to be changed too. For example at present the reserved side of the Government can definitely put through, under section 72E, essential legislation on reserved subjects if the Governor certifies that such legislation is essential for the discharge of his responsibilities for that subject. But I am not at all sure that the result of this enquiry will leave that power untouched.

99. Mr. Athar Hussain: Is Chota Nagpur also a deficit area?—Yes.

100. Chairman: It would seem, Rai Bahadur, that the extract which was read out just now refers to nomination to the council and not to nomination to the district boards. A quotation is not the same thing as proving the independent truth of the fact. The statement that was made was: "Some two years back influential aborigines approached Government with a prayer that Government should be pleased to nominate some of the aborigines whom they named to represent their interest in the council." You think that means district council?

Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy: Then I am mistaken. I thought it was for the district boards.

Chairman: As they have only two nominees in the legislative council, "some of the aborigines" seems rather generous. However, it is doubtful. If necessary, we can have it looked up.

101. Sir Hari Singh Gour: I wish to ask this question first. You say on page 348* that the safeguards you have got at present are quite sufficient. These safeguards I think are the safeguards which are referred to at page 353*, is it not so?—Where is the passage?

Sir Hari Singh Gour: On page 348*, paragraph 24, last line.

Chairman: It does not seem to me that it says so.

102. Sir Hari Singh Gour: Mr. Hubback was asked by my friend on the other side what were the safeguards he would suggest, and he said that the present safeguards were quite sufficient. Will you (to Mr. Hubback) kindly tell us briefly what are the safeguards which exist at present?—Well, in the first place, Angul is kept out of the Reforms completely. In the second place, the Santal Parganas on the legislative side is open to positive legislation by regulation. The Santal Parganas is also, under section 52A, subject to the negative action of the Governor or the Governor in Council, that is to say, the reserved side of the Government, in preventing legislation of a general character passed by the legislative council from being extended to it.

* Vol. XII.

103. Limiting the operation?—Limiting the operation of Acts of the legislative council, and also limiting in particular the operation of special Acts, Acts confined to the territories. There is also the power to which I have just referred, which is a general power under section 72E by which the Governor can in effect pass legislation which he considers absolutely essential in the face of his council, on reserved subjects.

104. Is that what you mean at page 353*? You say there: "It is perfectly true that the system is one of personal rule, and that it is open to attack on the stock grounds."?—No. The Santal Parganas are much more protected than the Chota Nagpur districts. I certainly wish to maintain the present protection for the Santal Parganas, but I do not wish to extend the Santal Parganas system to all and every part of Chota Nagpur. I should like to see it extended to the Kolhan.

105. Have you got in your province, or at any rate in Hazaribagh, what are called serfs? I will just read this passage, because you will then be able to understand the context. It is in paragraph 12, page 338*. "In a large part of this district, as in Palamau, the power of the landlord over his tenants is very great, in spite of the protection which the tenancy law affords, and there is in both districts a large body of agricultural serfs. These serfs, known as Kamias, are persons who for a loan of a few rupees have bound themselves, and not infrequently their families and descendants, to work for a particular master until the debt is repaid. As they seldom have any chance of earning any money, and their labour brings them nothing but their bare upkeep, the repayment is indefinitely deferred. The sale and purchase of Kamias is carried on under the guise of taking over their debts." Now, that is a system prevalent in this part?—That is in Hazaribagh and Palamau districts.

106. But, what have your Government done to stop this system?—The answer is on page 338*. "An attempt was made in 1920 by the pre-Reforms Government to break down the system by enacting that the Kamia bonds could not be enforced in the courts. . . . The success of that Act has been very small, since the Kamias are still far too ignorant and depressed to appeal to the courts."

107. That is to say, beyond passing a small Act, you have not taken any executive action to put down this? This is clearly within the meaning of slavery as defined in the Indian Penal Code?—I take it from you that it is.

108. You have not taken any action to save these people from their bondage?—Well, one or two things have been done. A sub-division was specially created in Palamau district about the same time as this Act was passed in order to watch the situation there and do what we could. But if people will not complain it is extremely difficult to remedy this state of things.

Chairman: A long-standing social custom is very difficult to alter, but it is a very distressing state of affairs.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: Very akin to that is the system of forced labour, the begar system, under which you force a man to work without paying him anything.

109. Chairman: I wonder if you would ask Dr. Kennedy about this, or shall I ask him. One has heard in various parts of the world about this system, this curious system of bondage. What is your experience about it?—(Dr. Kennedy): I know of it in both these areas, in Palamau district mostly, but to some extent in Hazaribagh also. Bonds are signed which bind a man to serve his lifetime, sometimes binding the children to serve, in repayment of a debt or advance.

110. Sir Hari Singh Gour: The debt is transferred?—No, they cannot. If the property of the zamindar or the person with whom the bond was executed was to pass from his hands, that would be the case.

111. An open traffic in slaves?—He would not sell the bond. I have not known a case of a bond being sold; but if the land passes into the hands of somebody else the kamia would pass with it.

112. Chairman: It really is rather different from what is called slave trade, but it is an analogous system which many people are greatly concerned about. Might I just ask this of you. Has the system in your experience extended or has it become less, or is it the same as when you began first working in this mission field?—It has become less to a certain extent in the Hazaribagh district. I am not quite so intimately acquainted with Palamau district, but at a missionary conference that we had lately we discussed this subject and the missionaries who brought it up there said that they did not think that in spite of the Act of 1920 it really had diminished at all.

113. Sir Hari Singh Gour: Would you please oblige the Conference by telling us as to how far the system prevails? How many cases occur? To what extent does this system of serfdom prevail in the district of Hazaribagh and neighbouring districts?—I could not possibly estimate the number of cases.

114. In general?—Quite generally, over a considerable tract in the Palamau district.

115. We will put it in this way. Every second or third landholder has serfs of this kind?—(Mr. Hubback): It prevails over a great part of Palamau. I can give you the precise figures from the settlement report.

116. Sir Hari Singh Gour: Thank you. My next question is as regards the begar system. You have a system of forced labour here; you ask a man to give labour for nothing?

Chairman: Is that peculiar to the particular area we are investigating?

117. Sir Hari Singh Gour: Yes. (To Witness): You have got the begar system here?—Yes.

118. To what extent and where is this prevalent?—(Mr. Lenman): I have a note here which was sent to me by the Scottish missionaries working in the Monghyr and Hazaribagh districts and they specially asked me to bring this matter before the Commission. Under the heading "Begari forced labour and the Kamia system," they say: "A grievous complaint on the part of aborigines is that they are sometimes compelled to give free labour to their landlords or creditors under threat of eviction or other consequences if they refuse. They know that this forced labour is illegal, but it is customary, and the force of custom is stronger than the force of law. We suggest that the law should be more rigidly applied in order to prevent all forms of forced labour; we urge also that steps should be taken to abolish the kamia system by which a man pledges his labour for an indefinite period in payment of interest on a loan—the creditor refusing to accept repayment of the principal lest he should lose the man's services." It is very common in the district in which the Scottish missionaries work. It is not usually prevalent in the Santal Parganas.

119. There is a statement in the proceedings of the legislative council that even the Government resorts to the begar system?—(Mr. Russell): In the Damin-i-Koh portion of the Santal Parganas where the indigenous system of local self-government is working, the parganaits are charged with the maintenance of the village roads and they perform that under their own arrangement by village labour for which Government does not pay. That is the extent of the so-called forced labour.

120. So, you have got it?—You can call it forced labour if you like.

121. Rev. Lenman: Is it not in consideration of the fact that the rent charged is very low?—(Mr. R. E. Russell): Yes, among other reasons.

* Vol. XII.

122. Sir Hari Singh Gour : On page 364 of your legislative council proceedings I find that Maulvi Abdul Bari says that forced labour has led to rebellion?—(Mr. Russell) : That is entirely untrue. I was deputy commissioner for four years in that district, and I have only had one complaint about begari, and that was because the headman distributed work unequally between the various villagers.

Chairman : That shows the advantage of evidence as compared with quotations.

123. Sir Hari Singh Gour : May I just ask you as to what estimate you have formed of the intelligence of the aborigines? Do you think it is sufficiently high to be trusted with a measure of self-government? Have they the natural intelligence and aptitude for self-government?—(Dr. Kennedy) : They have very good common intelligence, but their education is only a comparatively recent matter. There are a certain number of them who have now risen to important positions, deputy magistrates, and so on, in government service, and there are a certain number of them who are quite fitted to take part, but I do not think there are enough of them to man a province.

124. The intelligence that they have got, you think, would justify a measure of reform in the direction of self-government being extended to them also?—The number of people who are fitted for it would not in my opinion justify it.

125. Of course they cannot have a self-contained province manned by themselves. But they have got sufficient intelligence and aptitude for political work to justify being given the same chance with the rest of the people in Chota Nagpur to return their own representatives to the local council?—You first asked me to say whether they have sufficient intelligence to be trusted with a measure of Reforms and now you are asking me whether they have sufficient intelligence to vote. They have quite sufficient intelligence to vote and to understand any issue put before them.

126. They understand the value of the vote?—Yes, a certain number of them. You should not go too low down in the scale.

127. Sir Hari Singh Gour : In other words, if we can form an electorate, you think that there would be no difficulty in getting a sufficient number of people to vote for the members of the local council?

Chairman : I do not think that is the effect of the evidence given. I understand (I may be wrong) that Dr. Kennedy in his document says that he is in general agreement with the views that are expressed by the Bishop of Ranchi. What the Bishop of Ranchi says is this: "Education is bound to remove gradually this weakness, (that is to say, to fit them to keep their rightful position) as a matter of fact, education is making great strides among the aboriginals. But it will take still some years before education produces its civilising effects. As matters stand now, an illiterate Bengali is more wide awake, more civilised than an aboriginal who has completed the primary course of schooling, or even the secondary course. The illiterate Bengali indeed obtains all the advantages arising out of his civilised surroundings; the educated aboriginal loses much of the fruits of his education on account of the backward society in which he lives."

Sir Hari Singh Gour : This memorandum deals with education, while I am dealing with intelligence.

Chairman : I am sorry. I thought you were suggesting to him that they were qualified to vote.

Sir Hari Singh Gour : I simply wanted to know whether they have intelligence.

128. Chairman : The question is, have they got natural intelligence and if education is given to them can they make use of it?—(Mr. Lenman) : So far as Santals are concerned they receive their education under a very severe handicap. They have to imbibe their education through the medium of a foreign language. Their own vernacular is Santali and the vernacular here is Hindi; the difficulty is not that Hindi would not be a useful vernaclar to learn but that the Hindi which is taught is totally different from the Hindi which is spoken.

129. Lord Burnham : I wish to put one question to the spokesman of the deputation so as to clear up the matter finally. Supposing that no proposal is adopted to constitute a separate province of the district of Chota Nagpur and the rest, would he prefer to remain under the existing restrictions about which we have heard so much this afternoon or not? —(Rev. Joel Lakra) : By "restrictions" do you mean restrictions to protect our people?

130. I mean the provisions which ensure exceptional protection by virtue of the action either of the Governor General in Council or the Governor in Council, to what are called the backward tracts with which we have been dealing?—I personally feel that the present protection amounts to almost nothing.

131. Chairman : Let me put it this way: Would you like the legislative council of Bihar and Orissa to be freely entitled to repeal the existing Tenancy Act of Chota Nagpur without any interference by the Governor or the Governor General?—No, sir.

132. Do you think that the protection which you need and which makes it impossible for such an Act to be passed except with the special assent of the Governor General or the Governor is of any value to you?—There is some value.

133. Dr. Suhrawardy : In view of the fact that you have returned to the council a gentleman from Bengal, would you prefer, under the present conditions, if no separate province is likely to be created, to be a part of Bengal or a part of Bihar?—To that question I think I might say this much that we would benefit more if we are connected with Bengal.

134. Sir Hari Singh Gour : What is the view of your deputation? Do you want to be continued to be classed as a backward tract?—By calling it a backward tract if you were to stop the wave of self-respect and independence which may be developed, we would certainly not like to be classed as a backward tract.

135. You do not like protection if it will encroach upon an extension of your rights?—I think there is a confusion about protection. The deputation feels that not only we want protection but that our rights should be respected.

136. What will you prefer, a paternal or a popular government?—We would like a popular government to as much as we would have a representative system of Government, by an elective method, and a paternal one in the sense that the Governor and other officials of Government should be in more direct and sympathetic touch with the people.

137. Raja Nawab Ali Khan : You want something like the Land Alienation Act of the Punjab?—I do not know about the Punjab.

138. You want something to preserve your lands; they should always remain with you or you can only sell them to another member of your community?—Yes.

139. Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy : If you have a separate government of your own, would you not preserve such restrictions as may benefit your people?—Yes.

140. Babu Chandreshvar Prashad : I gather that the members of your deputation are most anxious to save and preserve your lands?—Yes.

141. Your claim is that you are the original people of Chota Nagpur and Santal Parganas and you have developed the villages; as a matter of fact you were something like peasant proprietors. Now you find that somehow or other some of your lands are being alienated or taken away either by sale or by some other way by other people who are Bengalis, or Biharis or Marwaris. So your anxiety is to preserve these lands for yourself. If some law could make it possible that the lands will never go to anybody else except to the aboriginals—if some such law or safeguard could be made in a Constitution—then would you like to be brought for all other purposes to the same level as the people of the other parts of the province? Would you like to have all the advantages which the other people of the province have got ?—We want not only protection of our lands but we want to be treated as quite a separate people by ourselves.

142. My intention is only this much. You know the Commission is here to consider what sort of constitution would best suit you and you have come before us to say what would best suit you. We want to know whether your greatest anxiety is for the protection of your lands or whether there are any other special things which you want should be dealt with in a different manner from the rest of the province ?—Yes, there are many things. Our judicial system should be quite different; our educational system should be different. The Government must concentrate its attention on the development of our people. We are now almost neglected by the Bihar and Orissa Government; the name of Chota Nagpur has been taken away from the province; we do not exist, so to say.

143. Sir Hari Singh Gour : You want more money for education ?—Yes, for education, for the development of agriculture and other things which are connected with our country.

144. Babu Chandreshwar Brashad : You said that you want a different educational system. Have you any idea as to what difference it should have from the ordinary course of education that is being imparted in the other parts of the province ?—I think our education must be according to our social needs which are quite different from those which obtain in Calcutta or in Patna; we want to adapt our education to our social conditions and needs so that it may fit us more for our struggle in life.

145. Chairman : Have you got a written language ?—Yes.

146. Recently people have got some character which reproduces the sounds, but have you, traditionally, any written language ?—No.

147. Maulvi Saiyid Mubarak Ali Sahib : I understand from you that you would like to have a peculiar form of government which will suit your own particular purpose. Is that so ?—Yes.

Memorandum submitted by YADAVA (GOPA) MAHASABHA.

I beg respectfully to offer you on my own behalf and on behalf of the deputation representing the Yadava (Gope, Ahir) Community our most respectful and sincere welcome to this ancient city, which was the metropolis of the Mauryan Emperors. Pauranic Texts and Historical Researches testify to the part which the ancient Yadava (Gope) Community played in the political and religious activities of the Hindu history of that period. References to the past glory of our ancestors are, we admit no solution for the social, educational and political difficulties that have so long depressed this one of the most ancient castes. We have full faith in the justice which you and your colleagues will endeavour to do to the cause of Indian Political Reforms; and our faith is equally strong in the sense of your duty towards the millions of the downtrodden subjects of His Majesty the King-Emperor, whose political future is entirely in your hands. To raise educationally and politically the Yadava (Gope) Community and other equally indigent and backward castes inhabiting this Province is, we believe, one of the missions entrusted to you, by the Command of the King-Emperor, and the British Parliament.

Our Community represents about one-tenth of the total population of Bihar and Orissa and is second only to the Mahommadans. It is one of the bona fide cultivating castes, and physically one of the sturdiest and strongest races. To that extent the Government has a great potential man-power in our Community, which was considerably utilized during the late war. The demand being made by Government for recruits for the army the Community made a ready response by immediately organising a special Ahir Recruiting Committee and incurred expenditure according to their humble means. Our community has always since then acted on the side of order.

I beg humbly to submit the following, being the minimum concessions, which your kindness and sympathy has encouraged me to formulate for the educational and political amelioration of our Community :—

I. That my Community believes in the gradual grant of Self-Government culminating ultimately in the Dominion Status within the British Empire, as a very very large percentage of the populationis extremely backward in Education and, therefore, politically depressed. It further prays that in any further instalment of Self-Government, the interests of this Community should be properly safeguarded. Unless it is done democratic institutions will benefit the few advanced castes and communities.

II. That there should be an adult male suffrage. Sufficient provision should be made to safeguard particular interests, communal, local, social and economic. A sufficient number of seats should be reserved for the Yadava (Gope) Community so long as their representation on the legislative bodies be not reasonably adequate due to their educational backwardness and also to influential parties exploiting the suffrage for their own political ends.

III. That there should be Provincial autonomy with a second chamber subject to the interference of the Central Government in case of misgovernment and also in matters affecting peace and tranquillity of the Province and the Country. The Executive should be made responsible to the legislature.

We subscribe to the scheme of the election of members of the Lower Chamber as proposed by the Hon'ble Sir Ganesh Dutta Singh, Minister of the Local Self-Government, Bihar and Orissa. This indirect election should continue for some years till the general voters are sufficiently educated in their sense of duty as electors.

The Higher Chamber should consist of members directly elected by the electors; their qualifications being made higher than the qualifications of voters for the existing Legislative Council. Nominations of officials and of members representing particular interests should continue.

IV. That the local self-governing institutions should continue to be mainly elected bodies. Nomination of persons on such local bodies should be on the ground of particular interests and expert knowledge. The control of the Provincial Government should be effective in case of mismanagement and abuse of powers.

V. Justice should be made cheap by extending the Village Administration Act to the utmost extent, Government Officers supervising and exercising control with a view to minimise the cases of abuse of powers.

V. (a). The strength of the Indian Army should be increased. Yadvas (Gopes) of this Province should be enlisted in all armies and granted King's Commissions; their proportion being based on population in comparison with other military castes.

VI. The representation of this Community in the various services under Government being a negligible number, qualified Yadavas (Gopes) possessing minimum qualification prescribed by the Government should be given preference continually for some years till the Community is fairly represented. Hitherto Government service has been the monopoly of the few influential castes.

VII. The primary education should be made free and compulsory. In secondary and higher education a certain number of scholarships should be reserved for the poor deserving students of this Community; also free studentships be reserved for the boys and young men of our Community.

In conclusion, I beg respectfully to submit that the Community is extremely grateful for the honour done to it by permiting it to represent its case through the deputation. I hope that the interest of this large population in the Province will receive adequate consideration in any recommendation that you may be pleased to make for the grant of political rights and privileges to this Province and the Country.

Memorandum submitted by the ALL-INDIA YADAVA MAHASABHA.

We, the members of the All-India Yadava Mahasabha, deem it a great honour and privilege to lay our humble petition before your Commission. The most liberal, enlightened and sympathetic wielders of our destinies have deputed you to make suggestions for the administrative reforms for this country. You are the sworn friends of the backward and helpless communities, the great champions of the minority. Our body represents all the sects of the Yadavas: Yadu Ahir, Gwala, Gopa, Idayan, Ahar, Nomda, Hayahaga, Gowli, Gola, who do not number more than two crores, which are a minority of the Hindu population, and are held as a backward community. We therefore have a double faith in your sympathy and integrity.

Before, however, setting out in detail the views of our community, we beg to ask you to peep at our history and see how the ancient Hindu History is loud in its praise of the Yadavas. Hundreds of Yadava kings ruled over India for centuries together. In the time of the Mighty Aurangzeb, Yadavas supplied Governors, built ports and furnished soldiers. The troublesome days of the Sepoy Mutiny found in them all over the country unceasing adherents and ready supporters of the British Government. The Yadava soldiers had fought with zeal, pluck, devotion and valour on all fields of active action and had consecrated foreign soil beyond the seas with the purest Krishna blood.

The Yadavas, true to the blood of their forefathers, are, in spite of their indigency and the other untoward circumstances, physically very strong and in every part of this country they afford protection to the weak, thus constituting the most effectual man power in India, on which the deep rooted and affectionate British Government may reckon upon in any emergency.

Despite the great and meritorious services rendered by this martial clan, it is still one of the most backward communities. The absence of its representation in the legislatures, the scarcity of its numbers in the lower and higher grade of Civil Service have all contributed towards the poverty and misery of its people. The cost of education prevents parents of ordinary means from giving the requisite amount of education to their children. The cost at which Justice is granted in India is beyond his means. His repeated solicitation for military service bring him no happy reply and it is but incumbent that the earliest steps be devised in his rescue and amelioration.

The following are the recommendations which we the representatives of the All-India Yadava Mahasabha submit for your most generous considerations and

I. (a) There should be an universal suffrage based on a residential qualification.

(b) There should be a direct election on the principle of proportional representation.

(c) Particular interests, communal, local, social and economic may obtain adequate representation, by a system of a second vote for business premises, professions and university men. The representation of minority may be introduced by allowing each voter to cast only one vote according to the system of preferential, transferable voting, where more than one member is to be elected.

(d) The existing parties are not real political units, differing with one another on any grave policy question. All parties are unanimous in their fundamentals. The parties are now tending to be formed on communal basis.

(e) The public has become keenly interested in all public questions; there is nothing of importance which escapes the criticism of the educated Indian to-day.

(g) The number of officials should be 15 per cent. and among the non-officials Yadavas and other minorities should have reserved seats in all legislative bodies in proportion to their population in each province.

II. The necessity of enlarging certain provinces is strongly felt. The extension of self-governing institutions to other areas than the nine provinces is also extremely desirable.

III. The local self-governing institutions should be made purely elected bodies with full control over the transferred subjects within their jurisdiction. The officials of the provincial government should have a minimum control over these bodies. The only justification for the interference of the government officials should be when the peace and tranquillity of the self-governing areas so demand. There shold be a separate purse for the local self-governing bodies.

IV. As the provinces are taken to be the first convenient areas for the experiment, in responsible government in India, it is desirable to give more scope to the legislative councils and the ministers. The number of the transferred subjects should be increased and the purse for the two subjects be separated. Joint responsibility of the ministry is extremely desirable.

V. The necessity of making the executive responsible to the legislature is strongly felt throughout India and we strongly recommend that executive should be made responsible to the legislature.

VI. The provinces should be made autonomous as far as possible. The interference of the supreme government should only be justified when the peace and the tranquillity of the whole India demands an interference.

VII. (a) The Reign of Law should characterise British India.

(b) Justice should be made cheap in respect of time and place.

(c) Strength of the Indian Armies should be increased.

(i) Yadavas should be enlisted in all Armies and granted King's Commission.

(ii) The number of their soldiers should be in proportion to the other military castes and in proportion to Yadava population.

IX. Deserving Yadava students should be elected continually for some years for the different Civil and Provincial Services until the community is fairly and adequately represented in various executive and judicial departments of the government.

X. Primary and secondary education should be made free and compulsory.

In conclusion, we pray that our above-mentioned demands may be carefully considered, keeping in mind our large population and the meritorious military services.

Memorandum from Dr. R. V. KHEDKAR, YADAVA, M.D., F.R.C.S., VEDANT BHUSHAN, Vice-President, ALL-INDIA YADAVA MAHASABHA.

We beg to state that the All-India Yadava Mahasabha is a representative body of the Yadavas, an important community among the Hindus whose population comes to about two crores; viz., one-tenth of the total Hindu population. The Yadavas are named by different names in different provinces.* We are submitting for your information copies of the proceedings of this Mahasabha for the last four years. We request that among the Hindus the claims of our community may be given due consideration, and in public services, public administration, public forces and in district, local and municipal boards, councils and assembly we may be given separate representation strictly in accordance to our population with power to vote for and send our own members like the Sikhs where questions of election to representative bodies are concerned. We may be permitted to vote for our own members or our seats be reserved in all public bodies from a local board to the assembly in proportion to our population.

We beg to submit that among the Hindus the public services have been the monopoly of only two or three castes. We are not represented at all in public services. We therefore request that due regard may be paid and our men be given appointments both in gazetted and non-gazetted grade in (1) Indian Civil Service, (2) other All-India services and Provincial service, etc., strictly in accordance to our population. Even where selection is made by a competitive examination, due regard may kindly be paid to our men and those may be selected from our community who secure the highest marks among the candidates of our community. We request that among the Hindu candidates the same consideration be paid to the candidates of our community in competitive examination as is done with the Non-Hindus in such examination in comparison with the Hindus with a view to give the Non-Hindus a chance of rising and getting their proportionate representation. A similar consideration is also necessary by the Government to give all the communities in the Hindus equal chance of making themselves fit. If such a consideration among the Hindus is not paid by the Government the result will be that only those communities which have risen owing to some favourable circumstance will go on rising and the other communities will never get a chance.

We therefore submit for your consideration that the recruitment in public services should be strictly made on communal basis in accordance with the population of a particular community and we want to draw your special attention to one particular point, viz., among the Hindus the recruitment be started on communal basis. So far when the communal question is raised to make a proportionate representation in matter of recruitment, three classes are checked, viz., (1) Hindus, (2) Muslims, (3) Christians; but the attention of the Government has not been drawn to the fact that among the Hindus only a few selected communities are benefited whose population is very small and the masses are left out. To this important point we draw your special attention and request that all the communities should receive equal consideration and the Yadavas should receive their due share. We suggest the maintenance of a periodical check to keep the uniformity of proportionate representation in public services. This check be carried out by the Central and Local Government and heads of Departments according as the appointment relates to Central and Local Government or is under the head of a particular department. Under the Imperial or Provincial Service the introduction of such a check would be most beneficial and would effectively check the overwhelming majority of one particular community in any particular service. There is already order of the Government of India that no class or community should represent an overwhelming majority in any particular Government service; but this order is not practically followed since there is no check and the result is that only two or three communities among the Hindus are over represented and other communities are left out. We therefore suggest the introduction of strict check as an imperative measure with a view to safeguard the interest of all the communities and hope that commission will pay due consideration to our suggestion.

With regard to Indian education we say that primary education should be made free and compulsory and the present system is most defective inasmuch as it does not give the students a chance of earning their livelihood by independent means beyond services. It also makes them physically weak as many other unnecessary books are prescribed as text-books in the course. We therefore suggest that technical education may be given on a more extensive scale and such arts may be taught as to make them fit for living an independent life. We also suggest that military training should be made a compulsory subject in the school.

We also submit for your information that the Yadava community is a very loyal and faithful one. It has always co-operated with the British Government in times of need. In this connection attention is invited to pages 24 to 26 of the All-India Report, 1925 (enclosed)* in which various Governors have acknowledged the faithful services of the Yadavas. In consideration of this we request that you will kindly have special regard for our request as contained above and hope that our claims will be favourably considered.

We further request that in the military department, like the Rajputs, Gurkhas, etc., separate regiments of the Yadavas may be ordered to be maintained and that a suitable number of the Yadavas may be appointed Commissioned Officers in the Army.

We request that in the Military College at Dehra Dun and also at Sandhurst two Yadava candidates may be annually selected by Government to make themselves fit for serving as Military officers and special concessions may be granted to them.

Many members of the All-India Yadava Mahasabha will give evidence if called by the Commission. A deputation of the All-India Yadava Mahasabha will meet you when you next visit India.

We are representatives of the All-India Yadava Maha Sabha.

* Alico, Gope, Yadawas, Idaiyan, Sadgop, Goal, &c.

* Not printed.

PATNA.

Dated 18th December, 1928.

PRESENT:

ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION, OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE (EXCEPT MR. KIKABHAI PREMCHAND AND RAO BAHADUR M. C. RAJAH), AND OF THE BIHAR AND ORISSA PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE.

Deputation of the PROVINCIAL YADAVA (GOPA) MAHASABHA and the ALL-INDIA YADAVA MAHASABHA.

The Deputation consisted of :—

Provincial Yadava Mahasabha.

1. Rai Sahib Sri Ballabh Das, Zamindar and Honorary Magistrate, ex-President, All-India Yadava Mahasabha and President, Executive Committee—(Spokesman).

2. Babu Navadwip Chandra Ghose, M.A., B.L. High Court Vakil, Patna.

3. Babu Swayambar Das, B.A., B.D.E., District Inspector of Schools, Patna (Spokesman).

4. Babu Ramdhani Lal, Merchant, Ramdhani Lal—Sita Ram Firm, Patna City.

5. Babu Sipahi Bhagat—Proprietor, S.B. Dairy Farm, Dianapur.

6. Babu Keshava Prasad Mandal, Zamindar, Madhapura, Bhagalpur.

7. Babu Srimant Narain Kirhary, General Secretary, Yadava (Gopa) Mahasabha, B. & O., Bhagalpur. (Absent).

8. Babu Bhuwaneshwari Prasad Mandal—Zamindar Madhapura. (Absent).

9. Babu Ganepati Mandal, B.A., B.L., Pleader, Bhagalpur.

10. Subedar Bahadur Gumani Ram (Retired) Shahabash. (Absent on account of illness.)

11. Babu Raghubans Prasad.

12. Babu Jamuna Prasad Rawat.

13. Babu Rajdeo Sinha.

14. Babu Harbans Narain Sinha.

15. Babu Lalit Narain Mahoon.

16. Babu Ambica Prasad.

17. Babu Munshi Mandal.

18. Babu Ganesh Das, Orissa. (Absent).

All-India Yadava Mahasabha.

1. Dr. R. V. Khedkar, M.D., F.R.C.S., D.P.H., L.M., L.R.C.P. & S., L.F.P. & S., Vedant Bhushan (Retired) Civil Surgeon and Lecturer in Surgery, Grant Medical College, Bombay, Ex-President, All-India Yadava Mahasabha and President, Yadava (Gopa) Mahasabha, B. & O.—(Spokesman).

2. Babu Navadwip Chandra Ghose, M.A., LL.B., High Court Pleader, Patna, Behar.

3. Bala Prasad, B.A., Zamindar, Kamptee, C.P.

4. K. Khamani Singh, Rais and Zamindar, Mooradabad, U.P.

64. Chairman : We have two documents dealing with this matter. One really reached us from the United Provinces. It may be that the Provincial Committee may have a copy of it, but it is much to the same effect. It is U.P. 481, and the other is a document of this province, B. & O. 900 (Memorandum from the Yadava (Gopa) Mahasabha Bihar and Orissa). Now Mr. Khedkar, you, I think are representing not the Provincial Mahasabha ?—No, sir, All-India.

65. And you, I think, Mr. Sri Ballabh Das, are the spokesman for the Provincial Mahasabha ;—No, sir.

66. To which of you, gentlemen, could I address a question or two ?—(Babu Swayambar Das) : I have been given the honour, sir.

67. I am very glad, Mr. Swayambar Das. Now, do I understand that these different names which one sees in the document, Rai Sahib Sri Ballabh Das, Babu N. C. Ghose, etc., really refer to the very large Hindu caste of Gowalas ?—Ordinarily we are called Gowalas, but we have discarded that name and have adopted the ancient name of Yadava. Of course, Yadava includes Gopas and Ahirs in this province. These are the names by which my community is known in this province.

68. Is it more than one caste ?—No, sir.

69. One great caste ?—Yes, sir.

70. In point of size, numbers, in this province, how do they compare with other Hindu castes ?—It is the biggest; the next biggest caste is the Brahmin.

71. It comes to this then, that this is the biggest Hindu caste in the province ?—Yes, sir.

72. Looking at the census report I see that Gowalas are put down as over three millions. Is that right ?—Yes, sir.

73. Brahmins are put down at 1,800,000 odd and Chamars at over a million. So, your caste is the biggest of all?—It is about twice the number of the next biggest caste.

74. We have all looked at your document, and I have just picked out two things from it. You refer on page 455 to your support of a scheme for the "election of members of the Lower Chamber," which as a matter of fact has been put forward personally by Sir Ganesh Dutta, Minister for Local Self-Government in a personal memorandum.† It is a method of indirect election. Now, just tell me in your own words what is the scheme in outline which you approve of?—In each village the voters will elect one or two men from among them, and they will be delegates for the election of members for the Lower Chamber.

75. So, you would have a sort of primary constituency which would consist of headmen or the like, and these selected persons would vote for a member. That is the sort of scheme?—Yes.

76. Would you mind just telling the Conference—we need not argue it—but tell us why you think that system is one which your Mahasabha would be prepared to support?—We pray for adult male suffrage, as the number of voters would be otherwise very large, and perhaps it will be impracticable for the election officials to control so many.

77. Is this your idea, that the primary electors, headmen and so on, would be elected in the first instance on the principle of adult suffrage?—Yes, sir.

78. And then the persons so elected would in their turn elect the members?—Yes, sir.

79. Now, the other point which I was going to pick out is about paragraph 6. You say that the representation of your community, the Yadavas, in the various services under Government is very small? Yes, sir.

80. And you suggest that the balance should be redressed by giving preference continually for some years to members of your community?—Yes, sir.

81. Speaking generally, what are the members of your community engaged in?—What is their class of occupation?—They are cultivators in this province. I have said in the memorandum that we are bona fide cultivators; we are one of the cultivating classes.

82. You are not, as I follow, one of the five highest castes, but, of course, you are higher in scale, this great community, than the lowest class; You are in the middle?—We are regarded below the four higher castes (Brahmans, Babhans, Rajputs and Kayasthas); yes, we occupy the middle position between the higher and the lower castes.*

83. As a matter of fact, as things are now, are there any members of your caste who are members of the council?—No, sir.

84. If you are so numerous as three million and are bona fide cultivators, as I have no doubt you are, carrying on agriculture successfully, how is it, when you attach so much importance to your own participation in public life, that no member of your caste ever been elected?—There are very many influences working against our members being returned.

85. Even as things are now, the franchise in the rural districts is such as gives a vote to a great many of the cultivators. Is not that so?—Quite so.

86. And I suppose a very large number of members of your caste have votes?—Yes.

87. Why do they not use them to return somebody of your own caste if your caste is so anxious to be represented?—There are many influences working against our members being returned. There is the zamindar's influence and then there are the political exploiters.

88. What I feel sometimes when I hear that statement is that political exploiters will not be very successful if other people refuse to be exploited. In the long run, you know the exercise of constitutional liberty largely depends upon people having enough?—That is due to our backwardness in education and also poverty. Very few of us are in Government service; we cannot exercise influence on our own electors.

89. Sardar Shivdev Singh Uberoi: May I know whether any members of your community ever stood for election?—Yes.

90. But they have not yet succeeded?—No.

91. Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: Might I point out, sir, that in the first council a candidate of their community was returned?

Witness (Babu Swayambar Das): Yes, sir.

92. Chairman: How does your great community get on in the matter of electing members to district boards?—Not so well as we would wish, but still there are members in these bodies.

93. Is there anything, Dr. Khedkar, which you wish to add?—(Dr. Khedkar). I would like to add that we should have reserved seats in all the services and the council because our men are very backward and they are under the influence of other people.

94. You will excuse my pointing out, Dr. Khedkar, that whatever may be said for the method of reserved seats if it is applied in some very exceptional or critical case, it is not a method, I imagine, which you think can be applied indefinitely, and again and again to every sub-division of the community that anybody can think of. It is desirable—is it not—as far as possible, to encourage citizens to share their powers of responsibility with their neighbours even if their neighbours do not belong to exactly the same caste?—We are an agricultural class and we are paying more taxes than others and we think that some special attention should be paid to us.

95. How many Hindu castes are there in all?

Sir Hari Singh Gour: 3,500.

96. Chairman: Yours is a very large and important one and obviously there cannot be reserved seats for every caste?—I would request your Honour to have separate electorates for backward communities so that we shall have some chance to get in.

97. Up to what point do you think, in the range of Hindu castes, one should go if one were to pass out of the backward communities? Are all castes backward except the top five?—I would make the division from the point of literacy; there are only one per cent. of our members who are literates—I mean English-knowing people.

98. I see your point. Is there any other point which you want to mention specially, Dr. Khedkar?—For secondary education very many scholarships are given to the advanced classes. We would request you to give some of them to backward communities.

99. What is the total number of your caste in the United Provinces?—It is four million.

100. Is it the largest single caste in the United Provinces?—I think it is the second largest.

101. Which is the largest?—Brahmins.

102. I suppose for the purpose of the census we must take Ahirs. You see in the United Provinces they are over 3½ millions, Brahmins are 4½ millions and Chamars are very nearly 6 millions?—(Babu Swayambar Das.) There are Ahars as well as Ahirs; these are separately returned in the census; though they practically form one caste.

103. Sir Hari Singh Gour: Would you like to have the election confined to Yadavas; Would you like to have your candidates elected by your own caste?—Preferably.

104. Supposing that were not possible what would you like to have?—From the provincial point of view, I have said that we want adult male suffrage and we want independent election.

105. As cultivators how are your interests different from the other cultivators?—There are cultivators who are coming in larger numbers in the services; they are coming into local bodies and district councils.

* Appendix, page 460. † See Vol. XVI.

106. Can you tell me how you, as cultivators, differ from the general body of cultivators?—I do not understand the question. As cultivators we may not differ.

107. As cultivators, are not your interests the same as other cultivators?—As citizens our interest are not the same, so long as we are kept back in the services, in the representation in the council and other local bodies. (Dr. Khedkar): Some of the cultivators in the Bombay presidency are Brahmins and they are educated. So at the time of the elections they have more liberty to choose their own men.

108. I would say you had better educate yourself?—But give us free primary education and help in the secondary education.

109. You could ask for free primary education, but you cannot have political rights till you have educated yourselves?—(Babu Swayambar Das): It is the State which should come to our rescue.

Chairman: We quite see the importance of the case you have in your mind. How best it should be dealt with the Conference will have to consider.

110. Rai Bahadur S. C. Roy: You have said that your candidates cannot expect to be elected by reason of the zamindars' influence and the tricks of the political exploiters and you advocate indirect election?—Yes.

111. Will not the zamindar be able to influence a fewer number of electors, as we shall have in indirect election, than he can do when the election is primary, that is to say, when every one has a vote?—Zamindars are zamindars; there are big zamindars, there are small zamindars and there are petty zamindars.

112. What I mean is, is there not a greater chance of that influence being used to the disadvantage of your people if the number of electors is small?—We do not think so because in that case we shall be able to combat the influence which might be brought upon our community. The few electors will be within our influence; they will be within our sight.

113. The entire villages are not inhabited by your people?—No, but where our population is large as compared with the population of other castes and where the influence of the zamindar is not so very great we have a chance.

114. But that chance you have now?—I do not think so.

115. Do you not think that indirect election will be to your disadvantage rather than to your advantage?—That is a matter of opinion. (Dr. Khedkar): I have requested in the memorandum that we should have proportional representation in addition to the adult franchise; that will help our community a great deal.

116. Indirect election will not help you in any way and so you are giving it up?—I am talking about the memorandum submitted for All-India.

117. Chairman: It stands like this: I am obliged to you, Rai Bahadur Roy, for bringing out this point. The provincial deputation in its memorandum and apparently by its spokesman is rather attached to the idea of indirect election about which you pointed out that if there are fewer people who are going to elect, it does not necessarily diminish the outside influences upon them. On the other hand, I think the other body, represented by Dr. Khedkar, is not very much wedded to the idea of indirect election but pins its faith on proportional representation. Is not that so?—Yes, sir.

118. Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: You understand that if there is adult suffrage the number of voters would be large but if indirect election is introduced, the number of voters who will be primarily concerned in the election of the members to the council would be decreased. Now the question is whether this decreased number would come under the influence of the zamindars or not. I would suggest to you, is it that you thought that possibly the village headmen who would be elected indirectly could be supposed to be above all influences because they would be elected by all the villages and perhaps by a secret ballot? You think that they would be persons who would be above all influences and therefore it would not be possible for influential zamindars or anybody to bring them under any compulsion?—Babu Swayambar Das): Yes.

119. That is to say they would be above compulsion?—Yes.

APPENDIX.

(Vide ANSWER TO Q. 82.)

12th February, 1929.

Gentlemen,

With reference to letter No. E.M. 271, dated the 1st February, 1929, of the Assistant Secretary, Mr. R. H. A. Carter, requesting for a further explanation, we have the honour to supplement a note elucidating the position of our "Yadav" caste.

The spokesman, Mr. Swayamber Das, did not understand the question 82. "You are not, as I follow, one of the five highest caste . . . You are in the middle . . . in reply to this he meant "middle" in the sense of prosperous condition of the present Hindus. But, in truth from the religious and historical basis of Bhagwad Gita the Yadvas are second among the Hindu national castes as in the Hindu ancient Code the castes were framed as Brahman, Kshatriya, Vaishya and Shudra.

About 3000 B.C. the Kshatriyas were further divided into Solar and Lunar Dynasties, but in the time of Shri Krishna both of them had relations by intermarriages; such as Shri Krishna's sister was married to Arjuna who belonged to Solar dynasty. But, after the fall of Yadav through poverty these two sects were completely separated 600 to 1300 A.D.

The Solar Kshatriya (Rajputs) were greatly influenced by Buddhism and began to have intermarriages with Shudras and even in modern times that practice has been still continued. But the Yadavas kept intact in themselves and established great kingdoms of their own in Nepal and South of Vindyadhari hill, the history of the Gopa Rashtra, Kalchari and Deogiri Yadvas is bound in history.

After 1300 A.D.

During the Moghal period, fighting Yadvas were ruined by poverty and exclusiveness as they had not done intermarriages with other rising castes. They continued this practice even up to the present period and have thereby remained unhelped and unnoticed so far by the castes who got advanced in education and wealth like Brahmans, Rajputs and Kayesthas. But they have kept up their martial spirit and have fought like brave soldiers under the flag of the British in all the previous wars. In the last war 100,000 Yadva recruits were supplied by our community.

Thus, gentlemen, you will observe that the Yadva community though poor in wealth and education, still has ancient purity and chivalry of the Yadav race of Shri Krishna. So, it has maintained the Second number of the ancient division of castes. Khedkar's "History of Yadavas" gives details of this ancient community.

Regarding Kayesthas.

They are Kshatriyas, no doubt, but are not considered to have kept up the purity of their either Solar or Lunar dynasty which is mixed up in them. Moreover, they have never been the fighting soldiers in numbers in any of the past British wars. They are almost clerical and mercantile people. Thus, they cannot have the right of being classified as Martial people of the Second or Third Division.

Regarding Babhans.

They are not considered as pure Brahmins either by classical knowledge or pure habits. They have never been our priests to conduct religious ceremonies in our homes. They are mixed in blood with other castes. Pure Brahmins do not eat with them and intermarry. Thus, they can never be superior to us.

Therefore, if a new classification is to be made on the principles of Tradition and Purity of blood the Hindu castes shall be classified as follows:—

1. Brahmans of pure blood and culture.
2. Yadvas
3. Rajputs } Kshatriyas.
4. Kayesthas
5. Babhans.
6. Vaishyas.
7. Shudras.
8. Untouchables (Depressed).

The enclosed extracts will throw more light and convince you of our statements.

In conclusion, we have the honour to say that as Yadvas are numerically greater (over 20 millions in British and Native States) and traditionally superior in history, they belong to the Second caste of the Hindus.

We beg to remain to be,
Gentlemen,
Your most obedient servants,
(Sd.) R. V. KHEDKAR,

M.D., F.R.C.S., D.P.H., L.M., L.F.P.S., L.R.C.P. & S. (Retired), State Surgeon, Ex-President All-India and Bombay Province, Yadava Mahasabha; now Vice-President A.I.Y.M.S., and President B. & O. Sabha.

(Sd.) SRI BALLABH DAS,

Zamindar and Hony. Magistrate, Ex-President A.I.Y.M.S., Gulzarbagh, Patna, now Vice-President A.I.Y.M.S. and President B. & O. Executive Committee.

Extracts.

Sir H. M. Elliot's supplementary Glossary S.V. says:—

The Ahirs were for some times the Universal Rulers of India.

In "Tribes and Castes of Bengal," Vol. I, page 282 Mr. Risley writes: "The tradition of the caste bears a highly character and progress to trace their descent from the GOD KRISHNA whose relations with the milk-maids of Brindaban play an important part in the Hindu Mythology. KRISHNA himself is supposed to have belonged to the tribe of Yadvas, or descendant of Yadu, a nomadic race, who graze cattle and make butter, and are believed to have made an early settlement in the neighbourhood of Muttra. In memory of this tradition, one of their sub castes, in the North Western Provinces is called Yadu, or Yadubansi, to the present day.

The Yadav Gavli community claims descent from the Great Yadav families to one of which Shri Krishna the eighth incarnation of Vishnu belonged. The whole of the North India, Guzerat and Deccan were once ruled by the kings of the Yadva families.

Imperial Gazetteer, Vol. XX, page 168 says:— "The family of Yadavas is generally known as belonging to Deogiri though that place was not their capital till early in 13th century. They belonged to one of the ruling feudatory families, but after the fall of the Chalukyas they became independent and pressed southwards to contend for the Sovereignty of the Deccan. Yadav Ramchandra lived in 1309. He governed all the territory formerly ruled by Chalukyas and in addition the whole of the Konkan and part of Mysore." "Poona district passed under the domain of Deogiri Yadavas during the 12th and 13th Centuries. With the fall of Yadavas Poona came under the domain of Delhi."

Bombay Gazetteer, Vol. X, page 193, says: "Early in the 12th Century Konkan (Ratnagiri State) was taken by the Yadavas of Deogiri or Daulatabad. One of them, Sinhdeva (1075 to 1113), is said to have seized Panhala near Kolhapore and conquered Konkan." And at page 439 it says: "In the 10th century 933 A.D. the rulers of Savantwadi were Yadavas."

Statesman, 27th January, 1914, Calcutta, says: "It is said that originally the warrior caste of Kshattriyas were the protectors of Brahmans and cows alike. But a division of labour came about in the course of time with the result that some Kshatriyas were at last confined to the protection of the sacred men. While the term Gopa or Gopat (Ahir is another synonym used chiefly in Behar where the castes are especially numerous) was used to designate the protector of the almost equally sacred animal. In consequence of the wandering life they had to lead, seeking fodder for their herds, they did not always enjoy the privileges of priestly attention; they also lacked the facilities for education and so through poverty and ignorance and the ill-treatment of an unappreciative world the Gwalas gradually fell from their high estate. Another claim which the humble cow-keeper makes to social distinction is founded on the prominent place he holds in the Krishna legend. That God is his patron Saint. The story goes that Krishna was a prince of Royal blood the son of Vasudeva. He lived with Nanda who was also a king and Kshatriya by caste. Then the Kansa the wicked king who was Krishna's maternal uncle made war upon them, Nanda and Krishna were compelled to fight for their lives. They were able to keep their cattle and these cattle which they kept in turn kept them. So it comes to pass that Gopal or Gopalak is one of the names by which Krishna is known."

Mr. Bhattacharya, a distinguished historian, writes in his book the "Indian Castes and Tribes": "It seens very probable that the Yadubansi Rajputs are derived from the Yadubansi Ahirs."

"The Narayani Army which the Krishna organised and which made him so powerful that his friendship was eagerly sought by the greatest kings of his time, is described in the Mahabharata as being all of the Ahir caste."

Major S. H. E. Nicholas, 95th Russels Infantry, writes in the "Journal of United Service Institute of India," Vol. XL, No. 182:—

"The Jadubans Ahir has no false pride.

"All the Jadubans Ahirs, whom I have talked to, claim descent from Rajputs, in fact from Krishna himself. Their tribal appellation certainly seems, to my mind, to imply a Rajput origin.

"Government determined on the formation of Ahir companies in 1898, and four companies were ordered to be raised, two in my regiment, the 95th Russels Infanty, and two in the 98th Infantry."

The following extracts are from the book on "Jats, Gujars and Ahirs," compiled by Major A. H. Bingley, page 14: the Ahirs make excellent soldiers. It has been truly said of Ahirs that they are mainly without false pride; independent without insolence, reserved in manner but good natured, light hearted and industrious. There are no more loyal subjects of His Majesty in India, and none who are more attached to such of their rulers who mingle freely among them.

"After ten years experience of them, I emphatically endorse the opinion that Ahirs are eminently fitted for the profession of arms.

"In my opinion the enlistment of Ahirs has proved a great success, and Government would do a good stroke of business in raising more companies of them. There are only four Ahir companies in the whole of the Indian Army.

"When you come over the names of the Martial race of India and think of the Gurkha, Rajput, Sikh, Dogra, Jats, Pathan and Panjabi Mohammadan, do not forget the Jadubans Ahir."

Sir Harcourt Butler made the following reply as the Lieutenant Governor of the United Provinces to the Ahir Representatives of the Punjab, U.P. and Delhi on the 9th July, 1918 :—

"Gentlemen, I thank you for your loyal and complimentary address. I am glad to meet you this morning and to hear from you about your achievements, your hopes, your aspirations and your history. Your history is an ancient one and you are justly proud of it. You have told me this morning what I knew before that you were loyal in the Mutiny and I know of no occasions on which your community has not been loyal. You certainly responded in the present crisis, which I am the first to acknowledge, and I thank you on behalf of the Government."

The Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab, Sir Michael O'Dwyer, referred to the Ahirs in his convocation address on the 22nd December, 1917, in the following eulogistic words :—

"I will take another instance, that of the Ahir. In the Punjab they are comparatively a small tribe restricted to two or three districts around Delhi where they are known as sturdy agriculturists who can make a living in the barren sandy soils which less hardy and persevering tribes would despise. But they are endowed with a strong tribal spirit and great cohesion and some of their leading men assisted also by a few young men who are graduates of the Punjab University realising the duties and responsibilities presented by this Great War, appealed with such success to their traditions and their tribal feeling that the Ahirs of the southern Punjab stand out to-day as the first Hindu tribe in India in the proportion of men sent to the Army. That great rally is not to be forgotten either by the tribe or by the Government in whose cause it has been put forth."

The following press note issued by the United Provinces War Board and published in the Leader in the month of August, 1918, will show the great enthusiasm shown by the Ahir Communities in enlisting themselves as recruits during the Great War.

"Some interesting details of the fighting men supplied by various castes in the United Provinces may be gleamed from the statement showing the constitution of the Indian Army on the 1st January, 1918. It is not possible to publish the actual number of men who were then serving; but the following comparative percentages show what progress has been made by some of the leading castes. During the year 1917 the greatest progress was made by the Ahirs whose number increased by over 1000 per cent. In other words the Ahir community furnished during the War ten times as many Ahir recruits as there were Ahirs serving in the Army a year before. This is mainly due to the constitution of special Ahir companies for men of this caste and to the efforts of the Ahir Mahasabha."

Mr. AKHOURI RAGHUNATH SAHAYA, Police Inspector, President of the Subordinate Police Association.

120. Chairman : Mr. Akhouri Raghunath Sahaya, are you an Inspector of Police in this province?—Yes, I am.

121. I am given to understand that you are the president of an association called the Subordinate Police Association?—Bihar and Orissa Police Association.

122. Just tell us first of all please what that Association is, what its ambition is and what are the ranks of police that may be included in the Association?—The inspectors, sub-inspectors, and writer head-constables are included in it.

123. What is the membership of your Association?—It is from 1,500 to 1,700.

124. How long has your Association been in existence?—For the last seven or eight years.

125. I imagine it is formed in order to look after the interests of those ranks of the service which are called subordinate?—Yes.

126. We should like to understand about your own service. How long have you been in the Police service?—I entered the service in 1907.

127. In what rank was that?—I entered as a sub-inspector.

128. And in due course you have been promoted and you are now an inspector?—Yes.

129. Just as a mere matter of interest as we go, is the entrance by examination or by selection? How is it done? How do you come to be appointed?—Now it is purely by selection.

130. And when you were appointed?—Then also it was by selection.

131. Let us see if I have got the organisation of your force correctly. At the top there is the Inspector-General, Mr. Swain. He told us that there were three Deputy Inspector-Generals and I think one Assistant Inspector-General?—Yes; the Assistant Inspector-General is his personal assistant.

132. Next to him there is a superintendent of police for each district and under the superintendents there would be deputy superintendents and assistant superintendents and then the inspectors; is that right?—Yes.

133. So that the next higher grade to you would be really the deputy superintendent?—Yes.

134. I think the thing on which the Conference will be glad to have your view is this. One question that certainly arises is the question whether the police force in a province should remain what is called a reserved service, that is to say, remain under a member of the executive council who is not responsible to the local legislature or whether the service should be transferred as it is called, that is to say, be in charge of a minister who would be responsible to the local council. What I would like you to tell me is this. Are you able to give us any information as to the view of your Association generally speaking on that subject as to whether they would be in favour of it or whether they would not be in favour of it?—I think, sir, we would not favour a transfer at present.

135. I wish you just to tell me in your own way what are the reasons which you have for that view?—We think that the efficiency and the betterment of our conditions of service and contentment would be marred, or at least greatly suffer, if it becomes a transferred subject. It should not be made so at least till a change in the mentality and the attitude of the people and the council towards us is forthcoming.

136. You are reading that, are you not?—Practically I have collected my thoughts and put them in writing.

137. It is a very wise thing to do. But you will excuse me if I ask how it came to be written down. Was it because after the suggestion was made that you might come to give evidence you thought it well to collect your views and put them down on the paper?—Yes. But long before that we had submitted a sort of note to the Inspector-General of Police and it was done before it was known to us that I was going to be examined.

138. The Inspector-General of Police told us of what he had learnt of the views of your Association when he was here and I gather it is the fact that your Association made a report to him?—Yes.

139. As to what you are reading now, are you reading from your report to the Inspector-General or the substance of it?—Practically it is the same with some additions.

140. You are expressing to us in substance, are you not, what you formerly expressed to Mr. Swain?—Yes.

141. Would you mind just telling me this? Was the report which was made to Mr. Swain by your Association considered by any committee?—The members of the central executive council, as we call it, are scattered in different places. But we have got some of our principal members here among the members of the central executive council. We had a sort of informal meeting, consulted some of the prominent members, such as the ex-presidents and so on and then we drafted the report Then we called also for the opinions of other members from the mofussil.

142. Do you mind just answering this question? Please answer it entirely. You are quite free to answer. Were those meetings and that opinion you hold without any external suggestion? That is to say, was it your own doing or did other people suggest that a particular view would be welcome or approved?—Nobody suggested anything to us.

143. It is an independent act?—Yes.

144. Now we will go back to the reason. You say in what you read to me just now that you are afraid that efficiency will suffer?—Yes.

145. What do you mean by that? Why?—Because there will be too much interference with our duties.

146. Just make it quite clear what is in your mind, because after all this is a mere prophecy; it is estimating what might happen. What do you mean by interference? What is it you are afraid of?—I think I am allowed to speak out very freely?

147. Very freely?—What we think is that if there is a minister at the top he is likely to be approachable by other people who will go and tell him "this constable or this sub-inspector is bad" and things like that; and all sorts of people will come and tell us "this is what the minister wants you to do." Such things will happen; that is to say, in other words, we will not be quite free and impartial as we would like to be and as we are now.

148. Just tell me on one other subject. I dare say you know because I think it was reported in the papers that when Mr. Swain was here he was asked some questions about corruption in the police force. I will tell you in substance what he has said. He told us that he thought there was an improvement in the intermediate ranks, but he feared that there was a very strong custom among the ordinary constables and the like to receive payments and he said he thought 99 per cent. of them probably in that sense were corrupt. On the other hand he said he was satisfied there was a great improvement in this respect that there was not the bringing of false charges in the way in which they had sometimes been encouraged. Well now, what do you say? You are an inspector and I see from the returns which have just been sent in that so far as dismissals for corruption in the ranks of inspectors are concerned, they are practically free. Perhaps the other members of the Conference might like to know the figures; I will have them circulated. The figures are for five years, 1923–27. Apparently in those five years in this province there have been 118 cases where a man has been dismissed for corruption and 271 more cases in which he has been otherwise punished and this is divided among inspectors, sub-inspectors, head constables and constables and I am very glad to know that as far as the inspectors are concerned there are only two cases of dismissals in the five years and as far as other punishments go, there are only three cases and what is perhaps better still is that for the last year, 1927, there was no case either of dismissal or of other punishment among the inspectors. With regard to sub-inspectors the figures are 15 cases of dismissal, taking the five years together, and 34 cases otherwise punished. Head constables 21 cases of dismissal and 31 cases otherwise punished; constables 80 cases of dismissal and 203 cases otherwise punished. Now, Inspector, you have been in the force for some years. What do you say about the prevalence of corruption, that is to say, taking money for doing their duty in the force?—I think in spite of our starving wages the subordinate ranks have improved marvellously during the last twenty years.

149. It is suggested to me that it is not the right way of putting it. It may be put—taking money for doing something in connection with your official work. Defining it like that, you think the position has greatly improved?—Yes, in spite of the very poor wages that we are getting.

150. When a case has come to the notice of the inspector such as yourself—I suppose from time to time such cases may come to your notice—what does an officer like youself do? What is your action about it?—I would like him to be prosecuted or dismissed or punished in some other way.

151. If you find out that it is true, of course?—I will make my own enquiries and if I am satisfied that the complaint is true I would like the man to be punished

152. Is there a report made by the inspector to his superiors?—Yes.

153. You report I suppose to the superintendent?—Yes.

154. But who decides whether the case is made out?—If it is a criminal case the magistrate decides.

155. Who decides whether the case is sufficiently serious to justify a prosecution?—The superintendent.

156. Is it any part of your duty when a case of corruption is suspected, to make enquiries and see whether there is evidence to support the suspicion—Certainly it is.

157. You do that?—Yes.

158. Then I suppose the question as to whether the case is one which justifies prosecution on the evidence is decided by your superiors?—Yes.

159 One other question. You say that the rate of pay is still not very high?—Quite so; it is very poor.

160. Do you think the present rate of pay is one of the causes or encouragements of corruption in the ranks?—Certainly it is one of the main causes.

161. Since you have been in the service, and especially in recent years, you had sub-inspectors under you. Do you think—let us take the last ten years—that you detect an improvement in freedom from corruption among sub-inspectors?—Yes, there has been a vast improvement.

162. Has the pay of the sub-inspector been raised?—Yes, it was raised some years ago.

163. Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: The first thing that I would like to know from you is whether it has been resolved by your Association that you should represent the views of the Association?—Yes, in the sense that we had a sort of informal meeting where it was decided that I should come and represent them being their president.

164. There has not been a general meeting of the Association?—It is advertised for the 26th of December at Muzaffarpur; that is our annual conference.

165. I want to know whether there has been a general meeting of your Association for your election as the representative of the Association?—I am already their representative because I was their president at the last conference and I continue to be the president for the whole year, that is until the next president is elected. Every president remains in office for one year.

166. I quite realise. The question is that no special resolution of that sort has been passed in the council that you should go and represent the case of the Association before the Statutory Commission?—No.

Chairman: I may make it quite clear. My impression is—it is quite second-hand—but my impression is that after the suggestion was made, and if I may say so very properly made, when

Mr. Swain was here and he was asked a question: "Are any people whom you refer to willing to come to give evidence?" then a message reached the Conference that if it was decided to call anybody, this gentleman of the Bihar and Orissa Police Association was quite ready to come.

167. Babu Chandreshvar Prashad:. I am much obliged to you for that information, sir. (To the Witness): It has been read out to you by the Chairman to what extent corruption is prevalent among the police. Of course we remember that. Mr. Swain has already told us that corruption was prevalent among 99 per cent. of the constables and head-constables, 75 per cent. in the grade of sub-inspectors of police and about 50 per cent. in the cadre of inspectors of police, and that he takes an optimistic view of things about the future. Now I would like to know whether you also subscribe to this view?—I do not.

168. You do not? You think that corruption in the police department is not so prevalent as has been stated by Mr. Swain, the Inspector-General of police?—Well, it is so difficult to make a division by measures. But surely, as I said, the police to-day is not what it was 20 years before. There has been marvellous improvement, as I said for the last twenty years.

169. That is not my question. I simply wanted to know from you whether you subscribe to the views that have been expressed by the Inspector-General of Police?—Pardon me. I have already said that I do not agree to that percentage.

170. Would you let us have the percentage that you would fix?—It is so difficult to fix a percentage. But all that I can say is that surely there has been tremendous improvement.

171. Chairman: I just might just point out, if you do not mind, that the two questions seem to be rather different. It is quite right to ask the witness, and we are very glad to hear his answer that he would not accept the high estimate that was suggested. That is a very important fact. But after all it is not possible for him to give us the percentage of corruption as it would be for the head of the department. In the nature of things the head of the department gets the reports from the inspectors from all the districts. Is that not so?

Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: I thought possibly, sir, that as he was the chairman of this Association and as an inspector he must have some information about the constables.

Chairman: I attach equal importance to the answer that he has already given that the estimate given by the Inspector-General is in his opinion somewhat high.

172. Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: Another question that I want to ask you is that whatever you find here stated about the constables and sub-inspectors and inspectors of police does not in any way reflect the general morale of the public, or does it?—Your question is not quite clear to me.

173. My point is this, and I want to make it perfectly clear to you. You find that after all a statement has been made that 99 per cent. of constables are corrupt, 75 per cent. of sub-inspectors are corrupt, and about 50 per cent. of inspectors are corrupt. Now the question is, is it because all Indians have got such a low morality, or is it because the general atmosphere of the police service has been such, or that the temptations that are generally offered in the police line are responsible for this extent of corruption?—If I may be permitted, I might ask whether you want me to give you reasons for the corruption, is it not?

Chairman: Yes.

Witness: Then I would like to give you my reasons. It is mainly due to inadequate pay and allowances, partly due to want of better treatment at the hands of the council, the magistrates and the superior police officers, and the habit of the parties in the wrong to offer bribes.

174. Chairman: By "habit" you mean "custom"?—Not exactly custom. It is like this—if I am in trouble, I think if I pay something, I could get out of that trouble.

175. Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: You have just now said that sometimes when people are in trouble they feel that by bribing it is possible for them to get out of that trouble?—Yes, that is human nature.

176. You know that ideas of that nature are not possible for people to conceive unless they know the percentage of their success in such efforts?—But, did I not tell you that, twenty years before, the police was very bad? And that reputation has been shadowing the police everywhere. After all, bribery is not confined to the police alone. You must know that.

177. That is not the point. I do not want to make any complaint against the police service. You must never be misunderstanding me like that. All that you have been pointing out just now is that perhaps 20 years before there was an atmosphere like that, the police have since then very much improved, and it is possibly because of their past bad reputation or good reputation, whatever it may be?—No; it was certainly the bad reputation that was shadowing us. No doubt about that. I should be very frank in telling that.

178. All the same you agree that it is not the general tendency of the mass?—What?

179. Corruption?—To offer bribes?

180. No; it is not a question of offering bribes. Taking of bribes is a low morality?—Yes.

181. That, you do not think, is a general tendency of the people?—Neither is it a general tendency of the police.

182. Of the police? Right you are. Then you have said that possibly low pay is the reason for this corruption?—I have given you many reasons; low pay is one of them. And allowances, for instance. When a sub-inspector goes out, or inspector goes out, he does not get sufficient to perform his journeys, and things like that. And then partly to want of better treatment at the hands of the council and the public, the magistrates, and even the superior police officers, and, as I said, the habits of the parties in the wrong to pay.

183. Now, so far as the Council is concerned, I should like to know whether the measures that have been recommended for increase of pay have been successful in the council or not? Of course I do not expect that you have very much information about these affairs?—Yes, certainly. I have tried to follow it. If you will kindly put any direct question, I will answer.

184. The question is whether measures recommending increase of pay for the people in the Police department have been successful in the local council or not?—So far as I am aware, there has been up till now no such measure before the council, but then there were proposals by the Inspector-General to the Government which were turned down because they were never sure of getting them through the council.

185. Do you know that there has been since 1921 an increase of about 20 lakhs in the police budget?—Yes, there has been some increase.

186. And most of that goes to the increased pay of sub-inspectors and constables?—The pay of the sub-inspectors and inspectors, as I said, is the same now as it was eight years ago when it was increased. After that there has been no increase although we have been crying ourselves hoarse for it.

187. So you think that the increase in the police budget has not gone to make any increment in the pay of constables and sub-inspectors of police?—Well, you know the constables are drawing Rs. 15 now, and you know how they are living. How the increased provision in the police budget has gone I cannot tell you.

188. I am not discussing at all as to how they are living at present. The whole question is I have not been able to make myself quite clear about the increased allotment in the police budget. Some time before it used to stand at a figure of 41 lakhs. After that it was about 60 lakhs, and now it stands at about 80 lakhs. The whole question is, since this increase has come and the police budget has almost doubled, has the pay of the constables and the sub-inspectors increased or not?—Doubled since when?

189. Since 1912?—During this period the sub-inspectors got only one increase, from Rs. 50 to Rs. 80, with a sort of increment which comes to them at Rs. 10, sir, after five long years of waiting.

190. But we were told by Mr. Swain, your Inspector-General, that constables used to get something like Rs. 7 or 8 before that?

Chairman: The matter seems to me to be very fully set out at pages 166–9,* and while I do not want to stop you, the inspector, even if he is the president of the Police Association, cannot know the legislative mystery.

Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: I simply wanted to point out, sir, that as a matter of fact so far as the increment of pay of the Police department is concerned, the legislative council has been very sympathetic.

Chairman: Well, that is done. On the other hand, if you look at the book here you will realise that if there is fierce opposition to certain other heads in the police budget, then of course the general effect is that the police budget in some way or other will suffer as a whole. It may be that the opposition is justified in moving particular reductions, but you cannot expect the police administration to say everywhere that they do not mind the votes against any special branches, or votes against particular services. Paragraph 228* proves quite clearly the attitude of the legislative council. It says:—"Yet the police budget has been the object of persistent attack there. The motions for reduction fall into three classes: (a) reduction of a nominal amount, implying a censure on the department; (b) reduction under particular items; and (c) lump reduction from the budget as a whole." On the other hand, at page 167* it is said quite clearly that: "It may be said that the direct results of the council's control on the police budget in the past seven years have not really been unfavourable. Government have been able to secure sufficient support from the non-official benches to maintain intact the standard of police administration" and so on. Mr. Swain read out, you remember the approval of the council. Do you want to criticise that?

191. Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: No, sir. May I put a few more questions? (To the witness): You have said that the members of your Association feel very much apprehensive about their efficiency if a transfer of control is effected; that is to say, if your department is brought under a minister?—Yes, I did.

192. You have at the same time also said that you feel that efficiency would be lowered, and it might happen in this way, that a minister would be approached by some people and some people might come and tell you that the minister likes to do this way or do that way. That is what you suggest?—Yes.

193. Beyond that perhaps you have got no grounds to support your views?—I have got other grounds as well.

194. May I know what they are?—For instance, the question of the betterment of the conditions of our service and contentment would also suffer.

195. Am I to understand that you apprehend that if a change of control is effected, your prospect of betterment is gone, and that the minister would necessarily be apathetic to it?—Having regard to the attitude of the council in the past with regard to the police budget, we have grounds for that fear.

196. That is exactly why I put that question, sir, because it is stated at page 166* of the report itself that out of forty-one motions for reduction the majority were withdrawn being only token motions, and that clearly shows that they were intended more or less for the purpose of eliciting information rather than effecting the actual cuts proposed.

Chairman: Do I understand you to think that the account given at pages 166, 167, 168 and 169, taken as a whole regarding the attitude of the council and all those is inaccurate, or you think is accurate?

Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: I personally should suppose that it is not very fair to the council.

Chairman: I assure you that none of us wishes to be in any way unfair I want to say that the general effect produced on my mind is that there has been a good deal of opposition to the police and to the police budget as a whole. I quite agree with you in regard to what you said was the attitude of the council on the question of increase of pay to the police subordinates. Of course the inspector has given us the reason for his apprehension, and the reason for the opposition of the council is partly because the council does not feel that it has got sufficient responsibility, and it is a perfectly good argument to consider that if you entrust the police department to a minister and to the council, their attitude to the minister may change. I think myself that this witness was brought forward simply to ascertain this fact about corruption, and that has not been challenged. The fact remains that the Inspector-General was accurate when he said that he had this information from these gentlemen, and we now learn that it is a fact, and you have heard the grounds, right or wrong, on which this witness has based his opinion.

197. Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: Only one more question, sir. Is it possible for you, or for any man in your position to hold views against your own officer?—Yes. For instance, you have heard even in this Conference, that I do not agree with the Inspector-General's percentage.

198. Sir Hari Singh Gour: You have said, Inspector, that you are afraid that people will go and speak to the minister about the sub-inspectors and so on. But have you any reason to suppose that people do not go and speak the same thing to the executive councillor?—As I said, they are not so very approachable. They are quite aloof now.

199. Mr. Athar Hussain: Perhaps you say they are not dependent on the vote of the council?—That is another thing. That is exactly what I have in my note.

200. Sir Arthur Froom: Regarding this corruption amongst the constables, you told us that when they are detected in taking bribes, they are punished?—Yes.

201. There are always two sides to the bribery. One is the man that accepts the money, and the other side is the man who gives the money. In cases of these corrupt practices, is the man who gives the money to the constable also punished?—I think very rarely. There might be 1 in 100 cases.

Chairman: The form in which punishment takes place sometimes in the police force is dismissal. There is no corresponding punishment possible in the other case.

Babu Chandreshvar Prashad: There is prosecution.

202. Chairman: How many cases of prosecution or conviction of the police were there last year?—I could not tell you.

203. Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan: I am not at present asking you as to the advisability of transferring the police department to Indian agency or not, but as you have made a statement against the transfer of police to the minister, I want to ask you this question. You are aware perhaps that a minister who is in charge of a department has mostly to consult the head of the department about matters of high policy. He does not as a rule interfere in the details of the administration. Are you aware of that?—I think the minister is supposed to have his own will, which he imposes on the department.

* Vol. XII.

204. Not in every case?—I think a strong minister would do so.

205. But that is not the general etiquette of ministers. They cannot go into the details of administration. It is mostly the duty of the Inspector-General. In such matters as the promotion or appointment or such things, it is the Inspector-General of Police who does it. Is it not so?—Nowadays the Inspector General does it, promotion up to inspectors.

206. In other departments, for example?—I have no experience of the system prevailing in other departments.

207. But you can understand this broad question, that the Inspector-General of Police makes the appointments. As regards the sub-inspectors, it is the Deputy Inspector-General of police who is generally responsible for such appointments?—In this province at least the final appointment of sub-inspectors also is made by the Inspector-General.

208. It may be so in this province, but in the Punjab it is not so—and I do not know about other provinces. Now, supposing the Inspector General is subordinate to a minister and your department is transferred to a minister, the Inspector General would mostly have to do with the appointments of inspectors. Then, do you think that the minister would be liable to intrigues in the administration of the police force, may listen to some recommendation or other in making appointments or interfere in other ways? Is that your view?—Yes. In other words he would influence appointments, promotions and punishments.

209. But a minister in charge of police would act in the same manner as a minister in charge of other departments. Would he not?—Yes, but the Police unfortunately is a very peculiar department.

210. But, why should he interfere? Why should the minister in charge of Police particularly interfere in the administration of the police, in the details of the department, and a minister in charge of other departments should not so interfere?—I cannot tell you, sir, about other departments, but what we are afraid of is this, that in matters of appointments, promotions and punishments, punishments especially, there are likely to be a great many injustices. The superintendents for instance will be under the minister, and they will be keeping an eye on him, and things like that will happen.

211. But, what then would be the function of the Inspector General? Is he a mere spectator?—All cases of punishment do not go to him. That is why we say this. If Police at all becomes a transferred subject all powers of dismissing sub-inspectors and higher ranks should be confined to the Inspector General only. Those powers should be taken away from the superintendents and deputy Inspectors General. In fact, we have been pressing for it for some years.

212. Chairman: I think all we are concerned to know is what is his view, and his view undoubtedly is this, for what it may be worth, that he thinks that both in the matter of appointments and in the matter of promotion his class of officer is safer as things are now, and his own view, right or wrong, is that if the transfer of police was effected there would be a risk of punishments and promotion not aways being done on the merits of the case. That is his point. I am not at all saying whether that is right or wrong, but that is his view?—Yes, sir.

Chairman: Yes, I have no difficulty in understanding what he wants to say. Whether it is right or wrong is a different matter.

Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan: If that is so, supposing Indianisation of the police force takes place.

Chairman: I think that is quite a different point. Indianisation is the question of whether an officer is an Indian or European. The matter on which this witness has been giving us information is not, in my view, that, but on the question of where the control of the police should lie.

Memorandum submitted by the BIHAR LANDHOLDERS ASSOCIATION.

The Bihar Landholders' Association which submits to the Indian Statutory Commission on Reforms its statements and opinions in the following pages on some of the subjects which will fall within the scope of its enquiry, is an organization of the Zamindar community of the province of Bihar and Orissa. The Association is one of the oldest institutions in the province, a body which is duly registered and recognised by Government. Its views are sought for and opinion invited by Government on questions of public importance. Its importance was recognised even when this province was a part of the presidency of Bengal. It has always in the past tried to serve crown and country, and its services have been from time to time greatly appreciated by Government. The Association has stood loyally by Government in times of political stress and strain, and its members, individually and collectively, have given them, their ungrudging help and co-operation in the maintenance of law and order. The Association has received special consideration at the hands of His Majesty the King-Emperor and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales during their vists to this country, and it had the privilege of entertaining His Royal Highness at a very large and successful garden party in the heyday of the Non-co-operation movement.

The Association has been in existence since 1878 and has its branches in the province. The members of the Association number 870 and belong to a class which holds a substantial stake in the country and is conservative in outlook and sober in thought. Its members are thus drawn from high social status, and among them are men of light and leading in the province, who can legitimately claim a share of the credit for the successful working, in the province of Bihar and Orissa, of the Reforms of 1919, howsoever halting and disappointing these have been to them. The services of its office-bearers and members have been sought for and availed of by the local Government. Its President, the Hon.-Maharajadhiraja of Darbhanga, and the late Rai Bahadur Krishna Sahay, one of its former Secretaries, were members of the Executive Council, while the present Indian member of the Executive Council was one of its Vice-Presidents, and of the two present hon'ble Ministers, one was a prominent member and the other was one of its Secretaries before they accepted their offices.

The Association will furnish, in time for the arrival of the Commission on the Indian shores, the names and addresses of its members who will be willing to be examined by the Commission, for the elucidation, if necessary, of the points raised in this memorandum It regrets that it cannot do so now, because its members are at different places for a change on account of the heat of the plains.

We reserve our right to modify the views contained in this memorandum, if necessary, as well as to furnish such supplementary materials connected therewith as may be available in a reasonable time before the Commission finishes its labours in this country.

In a country like India where illiteracy is appalling and political education among the masses is nil, we have to guard, as cautiously as is consistent with the idea of progressive realization of responsible government, against any catastrophic change in the system of administration. For these reasons, while democracy is yet on its trial in other politically advanced countries of the West, it must remain for the present for India a distant goal to be reached by successive stages. Any extension of the franchise as it exists at present, conferring by a mere stroke of pen suffrage on people innocent of the alpha and beta of the political powers and privileges which this innovation will undoubtedly bring in its train, must be ruled out of consideration. It will yet take time before the present electorate, brought into existence by the introduction of the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms eight years ago, will be able to appreciate in its proper bearing a modicum of the political significance attached to the vote which they have been called upon to cast. Most of these voters have never availed themselves of the opportunity of exercising their franchise, while others must have been at the polls so far only once or twice.

The Bihar Landholders' Association considers the present basis of franchise, for which the late Secretary of State and Lord Chelmsford were responsible, as irrational in so far as it violates the well-known principle of representation on the basis of taxation—a principle which should form the bed-rock of every representative system of government. In view of the illiteracy rampant among the masses, this maxim should be particularly and steadily kept in view in determining the basis of franchise, in order to ensure political advancement through the process of evolution and not of revolution. We propose therefore that the present electorate should be scrapped to make room for the construction of a new one, which should be based on the principle of representation in the legislatures of the different section of the people in strict proportion to their respective contributions to the exchequer of the State. We may for this purpose divide the population broadly into three divisions representing in the main the three important interests which provide to-day the sinews of war for the upkeep of administration. These are: the Zamindars and landowning classes paying revenue to Government, the ryots paying road cess and the assessees who pay tax on their incomes and are drawn either from the services or professions, or from business, commerce and trade. The future electorate should be composed mainly of these interests which should have seats in the provincial legislature fixed in the same ratio which these interests bear to each other in regard to their financial liability to the State. This will ensure representation in the government of the country of the sections and classes of the people which ought to have a potent voice in its affairs. This scheme, in the opinion of this Association, will afford a rational and scientific basis for the franchise.

The method of election at present offers many difficulties which can be minimized by adopting a more suitable one in its place. India is a country of long distances, and the polling stations are such a far cry from the homes of the voters that it is not at all surprising that most of them are disinclined to go there or that corrupt practices on such occasions become the order of the day. This state of affairs not only generates unwholesome tendencies in the voters, but also retards their political education, as most of them have not the time and inclination to attend the polling station. It would therefore be desirable to reconstruct the present electorate as well as the existing system of election. In a country where even the knowledge of the three R's has not made any appreciable headway among the population, the direct system of election which has been set up by the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms, bringing in its wake a large mass of voters who cannot know their new political responsibilities in the circumstances now existing, has come in for a good deal of well-deserved adverse criticism. It will take decades before the present voters can rise equal to the occasion. While, therefore, we would like very much to go back upon the present system of election, to one somewhere midway between the present and the indirect system that prevailed under the Minto-Morley scheme of Reforms before 1919, we do not recommend such a course as it would mean a retrograde step. But in view of the wide franchise already existing, and for the reasons stated above, we are emphatically opposed to the extension of the present franchise even by an iota.

While fully appreciating the merits of the system of voting by ballot, it can hardly be denied that the system encourages secret and underhand tactics which are calculated to demoralise both the candidate and the electorate he seeks to represent. We would therefore recommend open voting, which will quicken in the electors the habit of decision, induce in them a spirit of independent outlook, and elevate their moral tone. It will give them an opportunity of exercising their discretion and acting up to their convictions undeterred by interested parties.

The representation of the communal minority on religious lines can also be provided for in the scheme we have propounded above as the basis of franchise. If a communal minority, for instance the Muslims accept joint electorate with reservation of seats, such reservation of seats for them can easily be made in the three interests, namely, landlords, tenants, and assessees composed of service, and professional and commercial classes. In case they would accept only separate electorate, such an electorate may be created for them in these three groups. This Association would prefer the system of joint electorate with reservation of seats, a scheme with which is associated the better minds of the Muslim community in this country. There remain the Christians, the Parsis and the Sikhs. The first two have been so tolerant and catholic in their conduct that they have never had any hardship imposed on their religious observance by any community, nor need they entertain any apprehension of their position and interests in the India of to-morrow. We look to them for the enlightened lead which they have so often given the country in the past, and we have no doubt that if they persevere in such broad-mindedness as they have already displayed, their example will have a salutary effect on any community which may hold tenaciously to separate communal electorate. These communities are in such an extreme minority and are of so much local importance in two provinces only, namely Bombay and the Punjab, that we would prefer to learn what those provinces and the communities themselves have to suggest before advancing any detailed proposals for their representation.

There is some force in the contention that the nomination of the so-called representative of a community by Government depends, not on his competence to act as the faithful custodian of the interests of that community, but on his capacity to please and humour the powers-that-be. We, however, recognise that considerable difficulties will be encountered in creating an electorate and devising a method of election for Labour and depressed classes. We can only suggest that the representatives of the labouring classes may be returned by such of their organizations as Labour unions, the franchise being confined to their members, or to the members of their executives. The same system of election may be applicable to the case of the depressed classes, if these have some organization of their own. We can suggest no other alternative and therefore feel that if this method fails the only course left is the nomination of the representatives of these classes by Government.

In all systems of representative government the relationship that should exist between the constituents and their representatives is a matter of vital importance. This relationship, as it exists in the western countries, is conspicuous by its absence in India at this stage of her political advancement. This is due to the indifference of the representatives which, in its turn, is possible on account of the ignorance and lack of political education of the constituents. The voters, being unaware of their privileges and responsibilities cannot and do not exert a wholesome influence on their representatives. Yet there ought to be some such check to prevent the will of the representatives, untrammelled by the opinion of their constituents, from developing into caprice. It is through the close association of the representatives with their constituents that the views and wishes of the latter can find faithful reflection in the legislatures. The importance, therefore, of the representatives coming into frequent contacts with their constituents cannot be overstated. Such frequent contacts will have yet another advantage which ought to be secured by all means. The presence of the members of the legislatures in the midst of their electors will stimulate among the latter a well-informed interest in the public questions of the day and help the growth of political education among the masses. They will realise the manifold advantages of the representative system of government, and feel that it is they who are the mainspring of the Government. They will realise at last that much depends upon themselves, their vigilance, and the intelligent exercise of their franchise in working out their social, political and economic salvation. With the masses awakened to their real powers and responsibilities the members of the legislatures will turn to their real masters for instruction and inspiration to guide their conduct in the legislatures. The representatives will also become more zealous of their duties, as they will have to render periodically an account of their work to their electors and await their verdict.

The growth of parties is one of the well-known features of every well-organised public life in countries which are governed by parliamentary institutions. The success of parliamentary government depends to a very large extent on the presence of well-defined political parties. The functions that these parties perform have therefore an importance all their own. We cannot do without them in the parliamentary government of this country, which is now the decided goal of the British Parliament. Parties have already sprung up in this country during the last few years, but with the exception of one which has a good All-India organization, others by themselves are at present inconsequential bodies working in provincial legislatures. Yet these may form a splendid nucleus for strong parliamentary parties as in some of the provincial councils. Political awakening, now proceeding apace, is at present confined to a small intelligentsia in every province. This is why these parties have no following outside the council lobby, nor have they the necessary funds to start their own organs for publicity and propaganda. Thus the present political parties in some of the provincial councils are handicapped in carrying on their legitimate activities, and propagating news and views which, by stimulating interest in public affairs, help the spread of political education. The Swarajists, who have large funds, have been also unable to do any of these things on a proper scale, beyond setting up candidates for the central and provincial legislatures and local self-governing bodies. We feel that with the basis of franchise we have proposed above and the strengthening of the position of the Ministers on the lines we suggest below, these parties will take a more definite shape and be in a position to discharge their functions in the manner we consider so desirable.

There are some difficulties which are proving obstacles in the path of the formation of parties, particularly in some of the provinces. One of these is the existence of the communal group in the council, which cannot take the place of a parliamentary party. These groups have their origin in separate communal electorate based on religious persuasion. So long as this state of affairs continues it will hamper to a very large extent the formation of political parties. Such communal electorates and groups are aggravating religious animosities and, if persisted in will perpetuate in the provinces communal parties striving for political power and patronage. It may lead, at least in some provinces, to government by communal majority. This may create deadlocks in the legislatures at times and do incalculable mischief to the cause of parliamentary government. We may, however, hope that before long a better outlook in the relations existing between the two major communities will dispense with the present arrangement.

Another difficulty to which we would refer is the lack of proper incentive for the formation of a party wedded to the policy of carrying on King's Government in the present circumstances. The heat and burden of carrying on parliamentary government is to-day borne entirely by the Minister responsible to the people, and he is not unoften placed on the horns of the dilemma. His difficulties are immensely heightened because he has not the support of a party composed of elected members of the council, which would support him throughout. It is not an enviable position in which he is placed when he is obliged to seek the support of an official bloc. Indeed the support of this group, as long as it exists, will always be available to him, but he should, as far as possible, be independent of it. There are other difficulties in the way of the formation of strong Ministerial parties in the provincial legislatures. But one of these which can easily be removed is the absence of patronage in the hands of a Minister with which he could weld his followers into solidarity. We propose that in future Ministers must have a potent voice in dispensing titles and decorations, and on his advice these should be conferred. In higher appointments, reserved to be made by nomination by Government, the recommendations of the Ministers should always be respected.

It will not do to throw all blame on the Ministers by saying that they have not done their best to organise parties of their own. They are creatures of circumstances over which they have no control. With ignorance reigning in the country nothing is so easy as to generate prejudices against one who throws in his lot with the Ministers, who are regarded as not merely playing second fiddle to government but even as subserving the purposes of an alien Government. It requires rare courage on the part of an elected member, who has his eyes fixed on the general election, to face the odium of the public by joining the ranks of Ministerialists. Nor have the Ministers any of those inducements as in Great Britain which will keep intact the allegiance of their followers. Yet as parliamentary government is set up in this country, with a strong opposition party manipulating all the means at its disposal to wreck the constitutional machinery, it will seem not only eminently desirable, but, in fact, a sheer necessity to bring into existence a strong constitutional party which would correspond as nearly as possible to the great Conservative party of England, consisting mainly of the landowners and people with a permanent stake in the country. It should be possible to create such conditions as would be conducive to the birth and growth of such a party, a power for immense good in the political evolution of the country. Yet another difficulty which occurs to us as standing in the way of the formation of a strong constitutional party is the scant courtesy shown at present by the members of the Executive Council to the Ministerialist party, whose views and representations they often ignore. Even the intervention of the Ministers does not carry much weight with the Executive Councillor. This probably causes the Minister's party to leave him in despair and break up into pieces.

The question of the growth of informed public opinion is closely interlinked with the growth of parties. With strong and energetic political parties in the country, it would be possible to create in the minds of the people an interest in the discussion of questions of public importance. The more the public have opportunities through the agencies of such parties to consider the pros and cons of such questions, the more would it be conducive to the growth of informed public opinion. At present the electorates, not to speak of the masses, have no idea of the machinery created by the M. C. Reforms, nor of the privileges and responsibilities which it has conferred upon them. The very conditions which promote the growth of informed public opinion are conspicuous to-day by their absence in our public life. What is of the utmost necessity to-day is to set up without delay, in the absence of active political parties, an agency to carry on publicity in certain directions. This agency should explain in the two principal venaculars of the province, in short pamphlets the true meaning and scope of the political reforms, the functions of the legislatures, and the part which the electors play in them and the privilege they have of moulding the form of government and of shaping its policy, and the responsibilities that are thus cast upon their shoulders. The agency should also keep the electors informed of the important proceedings of the council. The Government and Ministers may also from time to time enter into defence and explanation of their measures and policy. This is all the more necessary to combat the prejudices which are formed in the absence of vernacular newspapers temperate in tone and sober in outlook Until these have come into existence it will be suicidal to the best interests of the country to sit tight and leave the masses to wallow in political ignorance and rust in prejudices created for them by the extremist vernacular press. A resolution to broadcast vernacular summaries of the proceedings of the Bihar and Orissa Council was adopted by that Council in the year 1923, but it was not taken up in earnest, and was given up as a failure. It seems that the experiment was not given a fair trial. To say that there was no demand for the publication is to presuppose that there was already political consciousness in the electors as early as three years after the inauguration of the present Reforms. If these publications had been continued they must have forced themselves upon the attention of the people for whom they were meant and stimulated their interest in politics. The masses in India are inarticulate, and it is expecting too much of them that they should apply for these publications, or express their appreciation by correspondence. Political and public bodies were so much occupied with the hectic days of Non-Co-operation that they had not by that time shaken off its influence. Their pronounced aversion to official publications may also explain the indifference. At any rate things have much improved since then and it may be hoped that the Commission will see the advisability of recommending the formation of such publicity organisations by Provincial Governments.

Public opinion is not much in favour of the nomination of officials to the legislatures. But we recognise that the legislatures will need expert advice and technical knowledge. Hence it will be desirable to reserve a few seats for officials, which should be filled by nomination of the heads and of the secretaries of one or two of the more important or technical departments. The only justification for the presence of officials such as the Secretaries of various departments is that they are to assist the Ministers. A plea like this, if resorted to at all, will not hold good in view of the fact that these Secretaries are as much birds of passage as, if not more than, the Ministers themselves. In the circumstances the bulk of the statistics and information, if not all, supplied on the floor of the council through the lips of the Ministers and of the Secretaries are supplied to these officials by the permanent heads of the departments, by whom we mean the Registrar, or the Assistant Secretary, and the staff working under him. While the Secretaries and the Under-Secretaries come and go, like the Minister, these permanent officials go on for ever till the end of their official careers. The services of the secretariat and of these permanent heads will always be available to the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary. It is time that the office of Parliamentary Secretary provided for in the Montagu-Chelmsford Report should be created in every legislature. This will come as a handy patronage to the Minister and add support to his elbow. Besides, it will offer opportunities of training to capable men, and will mellow them through the sobering influence of office.

The territorial divisions of the country for administrative purposes into provincial units have been open to grave objections, and this for valid important reasons. No uniform principle has been followed in setting up these provinces, and it is no wonder that the Indian public have urged from time to time their redistribution on a linguistic basis. Nowhere is this defect more conspicuous than in our own province. Orissa has been tacked on to Bihar, although the former is far from the latter involving a good deal of administrative inconvenience. This is why two of the Judges of the Patna High Court have to hold what is known as circuit courts in Cuttack, and the Governor of the Province has to spend from two to four weeks every year there. It is but natural that the people of Orissa should clamour for the fusion into one homogenous whole of all the Orya-speaking tracts now scattered in different provinces. They feel, and indeed rightly, that while they are kept as appendages to other provinces, they cannot but play second fiddle to Bihar, and cannot grow to full political manhood. It is a well-known fact that Orissa is at present a financial millstone round the neck of Bihar. If, therefore, that part of Orissa which is in the leading strings of Bihar is freed from this control, it will be to the mutual advantage of both. We strongly recommend this course, as it will help the Orya people, who are at present wrenched away from one another by an artificial division, to come into their own and work out their economic and material salvation. We also feel bound to recommend that the present area of this province, relieved of its Orya-speaking tracts, should receive an accession of territories from the neighbouring provinces of Agra and Oudh. These provinces are unusually large in area, and it would probably be conducive to administrative efficiency if some districts contiguous to this province were cut out and added to it. Besides, there is much of affinity, socially and dialectically, between some of the districts of the United Provinces (such as Ghazipore, Gorakhpore, Ballia and Benares) and those of Bihar (such as Arrah and Chapra). These transferred districts will be in close proximity to the metropolis of this province and hence there is no ground for entertaining any fear of their interests suffering in any respect by their amalgamation with it. If the cession of Benares is objected to by the U. P. Government, we would not insist on it. Another very important reason which will support our proposal is the fact that this province has much in common with these contiguous districts of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, in so far as the system of land revenue is concerned. These are the districts where permanent settlement of the land revenue mainly obtains as in our own province.

The local self-governing bodies have been of late broadbased on very liberal lines. Their constitution has a very large percentage of popular elements, and the official nomination has been reduced to an ineffective voice. The present proportion of nominations must remain intact with a view to secure for these bodies the expression of expert advice. This is very necessary, and we believe that the valuable assistance which has been rendered by the nominated officials, will be readily admitted by the elected members. These bodies have been given full autonomy in their affairs unhampered by official control. While we would not recommend a return to any feature of the old regime, we feel that it will be too much to argue that a full use has been made of the present opportunities and that any extension of these is needed at present. It is for these reasons that we hold that the present relationship of these bodies with the officials of the Provincial Government should continue. This relationship has a wholesome influence on the district boards and municipalities, where members have not yet displayed a full sense of their responsibility. The control by the Provincial Government should also continue as now. It is the only safeguard against the remissness of the executive of these bodies and against corruption in them. The Provincial Government should however make liberal grants to these bodies for the promotion of such schemes as deserve help and encouragement. The Government should not shake off its financial liability in this matter. The contributions to the Government exchequer are drawn from Indian villages, and it is therefore proper that Government should be more liberal in future than in the past to the district boards which cannot easily raise new taxes from the rural population which has inelastic and unexpanding sources of income, which very often shrink owing to frequent droughts and floods.

This Association considers that the constitution of the district boards needs a slight readjustment. This can be effected by allowing landholders, paying the minimum cess of Rupees one thousand, special representation through separate electorate. This will introduce into the Boards elements which will not be drawn into the meshes of petty intrigues. It will be a gain to the District Boards, whose affairs are deplorable at present. It is also advisable, for these reasons, to make it obligatory on every district board to appoint an executive officer, who should be placed as far as possible above the influence of the members. While he should be appointed by them, and his conduct may be discussed by them in the same way in which the conduct of the executive is discussed at present in the legislatures, his dismissal should rest with the Chairman of the board and the district magistrate acting jointly.

It is also the view of the Association that there should be a Road Development Committee, the personnel of which should be appointed by Government. The recommendations of this Committee should guide the board in so far as questions coming within the purview of the Committee will be decided by the board. The Committee's function will be merely advisory, but it must be emphasised that its recommendations should be given proper heed to. The function of the Committee will not extend beyond proposals for the construction and repair of roads. It is also desirable that half of the revenue from the road cess should be placed at the disposal of the Committee.

The constitution of the Provincial Government is open to much criticism, on account of the new system introduced by the M. C. Reforms, known as dyarchy. Its authors never claimed for it perfection, nor are any human institutions ever perfect. On the contrary, it was considered to be an experimental step, and the late Mr. Montagu and Lord Chelmsford were fully conscious of its short-comings. But it was difficult to conceive of a better device to suit the transitional stage after 1919. Dyarchy has laid bare in all their hideousness its own defects in the period in which it has been on its trial, but it should not disappoint whose who never built extravagant hopes on it. On the contrary, it has worked remarkably well in those Provinces where it has been left undisturbed; it has been thrown out of gear only when determined and persistent efforts have been made to wreck it. If the success of administration depends upon the form it takes, it equally depends upon the men who work it. Given good will and honesty of purpose even a bad system of Government will work with the least possible friction.

As we have proposed in the beginning of this memorandum, the legislature enlarged, if necessary, should mainly consist of the representatives of the three interests into which the present population of the country can most suitably be divided. But what we would like to emphasise here is the brief span of life which is allotted to the Provincial Council and to the Legislative Assembly as well as to the Council of State. This must be extended for these reasons. In the first place, it has been found that the members returned in a general election, largely elected for the first time, take the first year of their office to assimilate the new environments in which they find themselves, and to pick up parliamentary procedure. In the second year, they can be useful, but the third year quickly following, opens up before them the vista of the next general elections, when their interest is transferred from the legislature to an electioneering campaign which absorbs all their energies. Secondly, the Minister cannot initiate, within the short term of his office, a programme of policy and see it through. Nor can the next Minister, after the next general election, take up quickly the thread of work left by his predecessor in office. Thirdly, it is undesirable that the normal business of the country should be disturbed in quick succession every three years. This is open to very serious objection, not only because no country would like every three years to put up with the worries and expense of a general election, but also because in India this disturbing affair generates, each time that it takes place, a tremendous volume of communal animosity. We would therefore suggest for these weighty reasons that the life-time of the Legislative Assembly, and of the Provincial Councils which would under our scheme become the lower chambers, be extended to five years, and that of the upper chambers, both in the Central and Provincial Governments, to seven or eight years.

The position and powers of the Governor should be left intact, as these are by no means extravagant. We are against any power being given to the legislature to curtail the equipment and paraphernalia of Governor, necessary for the maintenance of the dignity of his office. They have conformed as far as possible to the practice of a constitutional ruler, and it may be hoped that as the Provincial Government corresponds more and more closely to a full fledged parliamentary cabinet system they will continue to act as strictly constitutional rulers.

The position of Ministers in relation to the Governor needs only such orientation as the implications of the cabinet system necessitate, otherwise the status quo should be maintained. It is highly desirable that one half of the number of Ministers should be drawn from each chamber and that the upper chamber should be the recruiting ground for the Chief Minister, who should have the responsibility of choosing his colleagues. This will promote solidarity in provincial cabinet which is soon to take the place of the present system of administration. The Ministers must work on the basis of collective responsibility. This will be in the interest of the healthy growth of parliamentary government in this country. It will stop Ministerial intrigue, averting much of the bickerings which interfere with the efficiency of administration. The essence of parliamentary government is the collective responsibility of the Ministers. But in India, partly due to the defective system of dyarchy, and partly to communal animosity, the principle of joint responsibility has been honoured more in the breach than in the observance. Much of this deplorable state of affairs is due to the absence of a strong political party in the council pledged to support the constitution. We have already dealt with the question of political parties in one of the foregoing paras.

The classification of subjects into transferred and reserved departments needs abolition by the transference of all subjects except three. The subjects now described as reserved should be transferred to the Minister, with the exception of Law and Order and Revenue. These should be transferred to the Central Government, and made imperial subjects. This will do away with dyarchy. Another alternative which suggests itself to us is that these subjects may be retained as reserved and form a new separate portfolio in the direct charge of Governor. They will thus to a certain extent remain within the purview of the local council, which will more effectively prevent breeding in the Police a spirit of irresponsibility. Revenue may also be classed as a transferred subject if a statutory safeguard is provided to maintain intact and inviolable the pledge given by Government in the past with regard to the zamindari tenure known as Permanent Settlement of land revenue, and to prevent attack on it either by direct or indirect taxation, proposals for which we have heard mooted lately. In passing, we may be permitted to note that this system was accepted by the zamindars in the beginning at a great loss, and that they suffered this loss for a long time. Now that they have improved the land by their own resources and exertions, it will be against all accepted canons of fair play, justice and public policy to throw them overboard, and turn loyal and influential supporters of Government into a discontented community.

We consider that the inauguration of second chambers in all provinces is not only desirable but extremely necessary. The present uni-cameral legislature in the provinces is a popular assembly which will go on reflecting in its deliberations the prejudices and idiosyncrasies of an unenlightened proletariat. As a popular assembly, it will be prone to be swayed by the gusts of feelings of the unthinking masses. It will be the last place for a dispassionate discussion of public questions. Yet it will be the provincial legislature which will play in an ever increasing degree a very important part in the life and affairs of the people. It would therefore be necessary to constitute a revising chamber working side by side with the popular chamber. The necessity of an upper chamber will become all the greater when we bear in mind that there will, in all probability, always be, in this country, so long as the present alien Government continues, a political party strong enough to be reckoned with, which will be actively ranged against the Government and will try to wreck any constitutional machinery set up by it. If England, with its literate population and informed public opinion, has felt the necessity of a revising upper chamber consisting of the conservative elements in society, there is no reason why the system of bicameral legislature should not be introduced into this country. It will not do to dismiss this idea by saying that there are difficulties in the way of this suggestion being given effect to; nor need the setting up of as many upper chambers as there are provinces frighten anybody. We note that in the past this question has not engaged the attention that its importance demands. But we hope that the present Commission will be impressed with the force and validity of this proposal.

What will be the constitution of this chamber is the next point to be discussed in this connection. We would not lay down any hard-and-fast rule as to the number of seats in the upper chamber. It should consist of the holders of hereditary titles from Raja and Nawab to all higher orders and the heads of impartible estates. It should be noted that in this province such persons number only some half-a-dozen. They should not have to depend either on nomination or election but should have hereditary seats.

Five seats should be reserved to be filled by nomination by Government from among (a) retired Ministers, (b) ex-members of the Executive Council either of the Governor or of the Viceroy, (c) retired members of the High Court bench, (d) ex-Presidents of the various legislative bodies, and (e) ex-Vice Chancellors of the University, resident in the province concerned, or (f) from among those who have as non-officials rendered notable service to the country by their long connection with its public life, and who would be unwilling to face the music of a general election, but the benefit of whose advice and ripe experience the country can ill-afford to lose. Eight seats should be filled by nomination from officials, including the Ministers and the members of the Executive Council. The rest of the seats, which will be fifty per cent. of the total number, should be thrown open to election. The qualification for voters in the present special constituency of the landholders for the Provincial Council should be retained, each district forming a constituency and returning one member. A member of the future equivalent of the present Council of State should have the right to take his seat in, and take part in the discussions of, his provincial upper chamber. Four seats should be filled by the election of members of the lower chamber, as well as of ex-members of the provincial councils who have put in ten years of service in them. One seat should also be reserved for the planters in the province. Five seats should be filled by election by the representatives of the assessees of income-tax and super-tax to return one member in each division. One seat should go to elected representative of the Indian Mining Federation and one to that of the Indian Mining Association.

The table below will show at a glance approximately the various elements and their strength that will go to make up the composition of the provincial upper chamber.

Hereditary.	Nomination.		Elected.	Total.	Remarks.
	Official.	Non-Official.
6	8	5	34	53	To this total add the present number of the members of the Council of State for the province of Bihar and Orissa, which varies from two to three. We can not say now what will be this figure in the new constitution of this body.
	13

This constitution will give a fair proportion of the seats in the upper chamber to the intelligentsia and will be a step towards ensuring fair representation to the landed class. Every shade of opinion will find its representation in the chamber. Its members will be drawn from people of high status, sober outlook and mature experience in life, who may be relied upon not to undertake hasty or ill-conceived legislation. Government should therefore be content with nominating to this chamber a few officials, not exceeding eight, including the Ministers.

We are in favour of the grant of full provincial autonomy, independent to a large extent of the control and superintendence of the Central Government, with such reservations as to the transfer of subjects to the Minister as we have indicated in one of the foregoing paragraphs.

As regards the Legislative Assembly the franchise must be based, as for the Provincial Council, on the principle of representation according to the proportion of taxation borne by the three sections of the people, namely, the revenue-paying classes like the Zamindars, the road-cess paying class like the tenantry, and the income-tax-paying class like the business and professional men. We can think of no more equitable basis, and there is no reason why people with a large stake in the country, who are vitally interested in legislation and affairs of the country, should be shut out to make room for others. In the Council of State, too, the present franchise can suitably be reformed by confining the voters' list to persons paying a road-cess of Rs. 5,000 or a Government revenue or income-tax of Rs. 12,000. We consider that the Council of State should be constituted upon much the same lines as the provincial upper chamber.

In conclusion, we must say that under the present Reforms scheme the land-owning class has been unfairly dealt with. Their position has been ignored, and there is the smouldering fire of discontent among them. Though smarting under a sense of wrong they have through good and evil report stood loyally by the Reforms. They have, however, entertained the hope that the present Commission on Reforms will give them their due share. The late Mr. Montagu and Lord Chelmsford disposed of their claims by saying in their memorable report that, besides the five representatives of the land-owning class returned by five special constituencies, as in the provinces of Bengal and Bihar and Orissa, more Zamindars would come into the councils through general constituencies. As matters stand at present, it is in rare cases that a real member of Zamindar community is returned by the general constituency, and wherever they are so returned, they have a different interest to serve. Not only this. These members of the Zamindar community lose their own identity and are driven into the arms of the extremist in the ranks of the Indian politicians, with a view to secure their return to the council in the next general election. They therefore act, as they have themselves so often admitted, not only against their own interests, but also against their convictions. While we feel that as a matter of course young Zamindars drawn into public life will imbibe liberal ideas and outlook—and we are prepared to appreciate and welcome this tendency—we cannot but record our concern at the demoralization which is taking place in our ranks. We are not so unimaginative as to complain of the inevitable, but we must raise our voice of protest against an arrangement which offers inducement in the path of Zamindar members of the legislature to shout with the mob in their political exigencies. The Zamindars form the centre of political gravity of the country. Once their position is disturbed Government will be courting serious consequences. If it is deemed desirable that they should come in larger numbers in the public life of the country, if it is deemed necessary that we should move towards the goal with well-ordered steps and not at giddy paces, and if the country is to be saved from anarchy and chaos, the Zamindars must be encouraged to take part in public life by being given an adequate representation of their community in the legislature and government of the country. We base our claims on our merits, guided not solely by our own narrow interests but also by the large interests of the country as a whole.

SUPPLEMENTARY MEMORANDUM BY THE BIHAR LAND-HOLDERS ASSOCIATION.

Since we submitted our Memorandum in July last, the subjects that are engaging the attention of the Indian Statutory Commission, have been discussed thread-bare from different angles of vision. To these discussions we have attached due weight. We have had also the benefit of further deliberations with the members of the Bihar Landholders Association as a result of which we would like to exercise the right, which we reserved in our Memorandum, of supplementing and modifying it.

But before we do so, we think it necessary to give a brief description of the position which the Zamindars occupy in this province.

We propose to show that the Bengal Tenancy Law has created a situation which cannot end unless the Zamindars were to surrender all their rights and interests, and extinguish themselves as a class to satisfy the ever increasing and never ending demands of the tenants.

It must be remembered, in order to appreciate the true predicament in which the Zamindars in this province have been landed, that land in Bihar has a very high degree of fertility whose average produce per acre would be Rs. 100 to Rs. 200, but the rent payable by the tenant who enjoys the produce to the Zamindar is about Rs. 3.8.0. per acre which is the average for the most fertile districts of Muzaffarpur, Darbhanga, Saran and Champaran. In contrast to this it may be pointed out that where Government occupy the same position as Zamindar, the rental that they realize is considerably higher compared to that realized by the Zamindars. In Angul where land is not even half as fertile as in Bihar, the Government get a rental of Rs. 12·8·0 per acre, and in Khas Mahal too, Government realise a rental of Rs. 12·6·0 per acre. In the two sister provinces of the United Provinces and Bengal, where land is not as fertile as in Bihar, the rental realised by the Zamindar is higher than that in this province. In the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, the Zamindars have a right to enhance rental up to 50 per cent. of their rental. But in Bihar the Zamindars cannot enhance their rental for more than annas two per rupee after fifteen years.

The relations between the Zamindars and their tenants in this province as well as in Bengal are governed by what is known as the Bengal Tenancy Act. There has been recently an agitation to amend the Act in both the provinces. The Zamindars have themselves agreed to this course, for while they would not oppose any reasonable demands of the tenants they consider also that the present Bengal Tenancy Act is not an unmixed blessing to themselves. The amendment of the Bengal Tenancy Act in Bengal is now an accomplished fact. The Bengal Zamindars have made large concessions and have gone so far as to meet the wishes of Government and Swaraj party in this matter. But what is the result? The tenants remain as unplacated to-day as ever before and the agitation against the Bengal Tenancy Act amended only a few months back is going strong. In such circumstances, if we were to surrender all our rights, and nothing short of this would satisfy the tenants, we would be reduced to the position of a mere collector of rental of Rs. 3·8·0 per acre. The history of the world would nowhere present another picture of landlord like this.

We feel, therefore, strongly that nothing but special electorate would secure our proper representation.

There is another important difference between the position of the Zamindars in this province and that of the Zamindars in the sister provinces of Bengal and U. P. There is a large number of impartible estates in those provinces. But in Bihar proper there are not even a dozen impartible estates. This has led to the existence of a large number of petty Zamindars. The number of such Zamindars in non-Muhamadan rural constituencies comes to over 17,000, and if their franchise is brought down to the level of the tenant, as we propose, their number will increase to three or four times. At present revenue payment is the qualification for a Zamindar voter while cess payment is that for a tenant. There should be the same basis of franchise for both, namely cess, having regard to the fact that Zamindars and tenants pay cess in equal shares (each paying half and half). Cess payment has been also recognised as an alternative qualification for the Zamindars in their special constituencies.

The same amount of cess which qualifies a tenant to become a voter should be fixed for the Zamindars also. As matters stand at present, such a large number of Zamindars go without representation, for a few of such Zamindars that are returned by the general constituency sacrifice their own interests and convictions simply with a desire to get into the Council. This is another reason why special electorate for the Zamindars is a necessity.

It may not be out of place to point out here that the structure of Indian body politic has a peculiarity all its own. The different strata of society differ from each other by a considerably gap. One class or community has a particular gift, capacity or characteristic which is conspicuous by its absence in any other. The Brahmins can boast of a very high percentage of literacy, yet the percentage of literacy in the population as a whole stands at the lowest possible figure. There are communities whose military prowess is as great as it is small in other communities. There is a small class of craftsman to be found in particular towns or localities, whose skill is the marvel of the world, but then there are other craftsmen all over the country who are so hopelessly incompetent in their calling that it is no wonder that the low wages paid to them on account of their unskilled labour excite the sympathy of a foreigner. There are classes and communities who are noted for their administrative capacity which is hardly a virtue in others. The Zamindars have distinguished themselves especially as good administrators and it is permissible to hope that they can play an important part in the administration of the country.

What we next want to impress upon the Commission is the fact that we have lost much by the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms. Under the Minto-Morley Reforms the Zamindars had already five special seats reserved to them. This was half of the total rural seats, the other five having been given to the district boards. It was considered at the time that the Zamindars would be able to come in through general constituencies also. This expectation has been now belied, and a few Zamindars who have managed to be returned have done so at the cost of their convictions as they have frankly confessed to us. If the Zamindars have failed to secure representation through general constituencies, the fault is not theirs. So long as Zamindars and tenants remain as two distinct classes, so long as tenancy laws recognise distinct rights and interests for them, and so long as the Zamindars do not surrender these rights to the tenants, the Zamindar candidate has not the ghost of a chance at the polls. Then we need not forget that the voters are illiterate, and there are clever designing people to create bad blood between the tenants and the Zamindars and to fan the prejudices of the former against the latter with the sole desire to promote their own interests at the cost of both the parties. Candidates have in the past succeeded thus by exploiting the ignorance and prejudices of the tenant voters.

We feel therefore that the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms have been unfair to us. Under this scheme while the number of seats for others have increased by leaps and bounds, the Zamindars' seats have not only remained stationary but their relative strength has considerably decreased.

We look to the present inquiry to give us our due. We will be content if the Commission would accept another suggestion which we make here in place of our original proposal adumbrated in our former Memorandum. Let Zamindars and tenants have equal numbers of seats in the legislature. By a long standing convention Government have themselves recognised that these two communities have equal share in land and tree, and on this basis their respective rights and interests have been all along assessed.

It is also on this basis that the assessment of local cess payable by the Zamindar for his own share and for that of the ryot is fixed. In the Bhaoli or produce rental system too, the settlement office and judicial courts fix as a minimum share of the Zamindar a half of the produce.

Election for Assembly.—We are of opinion that the present system of election for the Assembly is defective. At present the constituencies for the Assembly are so large and unwieldy that members cannot keep themselves in touch with their voters. We would prefer indirect election for the Assembly, the electoral colleges forming electors. This will make the members of the Assembly responsible to an intelligent body of people. If further power or responsibility is to be given to the Assembly, it should be accompanied with the introduction of considerable stable elements.

Law and Order.—We feel that our view with regard to the subject known as Law and Order must also be modified. We have already expressed our doubts in our former Memorandum as to the desirability of making Law and Order a direct concern of the Central Government. We are more convinced than ever before of the impracticability of this course. Nor would the reservation of this subject in the charge of an Executive Councillor as different from a Minister responsible to the legislature meet the situation. We have therefore come to the conclusion that this subject as also Revenue should be transferred to the Minister provided that:—

(1) A second chamber in each province is set up;

(2) The personnel of the provincial cabinet will be recruited from both the Houses;

(3) The position of the Ministers is so secured that they would not be compelled to resign unless both the Houses concur in a vote of want of confidence in them; and

(4) The constitution, proposed by us in this supplementary to our last Memorandum, for the Lower House is accepted.

MEMORANDUM SUBMITTED BY BIHAR AND ORISSA MUSLIM ASSOCIATION.

Provincial Second Chamber.—We would amend the constitution proposed by us for the Upper Chamber in a province thus:—

1. Automatic seats. The following classes of people should have a right to sit in the upper chamber by virtue of their position without the necessity of offering themselves for election:—

(i) All Rajas and Raja Bahadurs, hereditary and personal; (ii) all Nawabs, hereditary and personal; (iii) all proprietors of impartible estates paying a revenue of Rs. 10,000 or above.

2. By nomination. Ten seats must be filled by nomination by Governor from among ex-Ministers, ex- Members of the Executive Council, ex-High Court Judges, ex-Vice-Chancellors and and ex-Presidents of the provincial legislature resident in the province concerned.

3. By election. Fifteen seats should be filled by representatives of land-holding constituencies consisting of voters who pay either Rs. 4,000 as Government revenue or Rs. 1,000 as cess. Five seats should be filled by representatives of commercial classes. Ten members to be selected by Lower House from a constituency consisting of the members of the Lower House and ex-members of the council. Total 30.

All Ministers must be ex-officio members of the House. Experts may be nominated from time to time when necessary, but they cannot vote.

The Upper Chamber will share equal right in initiating legislation with the Lower House. It will have a revising power with regard to Money Bills which will originate in the Lower House alone. The Upper Chamber can amend as well as reject Money Bills.

Upper Chamber in Central Government.—The Upper Chamber of the central legislature will consist of same elements as make up the provincial Upper Chamber and will be drawn through similar three channels thus:—

(1) Automatic seats. We propose to introduce the principle of hereditary seats in this Upper Chamber also as we have done in the provincial Upper Chamber. For this purpose, all Indian title-holders above those of Raja Bahadur should have the right to sit in this Upper Chamber.

(2) By nomination. A certain number of seats to be filled by Governor-General from among ex-Members of the Viceroy's Executive Council, ex- Presidents of the Central Legislature (both Houses), and ex-Chief Judges of High Courts, resident in India.

(3) By election. The remainder of the seats to be filled by members elected by voters enjoying substantial property qualifications or paying high income tax and by members returned by the Legislative Assembly and the provincial Upper Chamber and also by the representatives of such other interests as may be of all-India importance.

In conclusion, we would point out that we have only indicated changes in the present constitution which is based on responsible system of Government on the lines of western countries with slight modifications here and there suitable to local conditions. But we feel very strongly that India requires a constitution which should not be a blind imitation of the West. India's peculiar conditions, circumstances, habits, sentiments, traditions, temperament and atmosphere require a constitution which should be an admixture of suitable features of both the eastern and western statecrafts. We hope this Commission will be able to evolve a constitution of the type which would confer blessings upon all classes and communities in India.

Memorandum submitted by BIHAR AND ORISSA MUSLIM ASSOCIATION.

INTRODUCTION.

In presenting the case of the Muslims of Bihar and Orissa for the safeguarding of their minority and communal rights and interests in the ensuing political, economic and administrative readjustments and Reforms we propose to take advantage of the suggestion offered by the Secretaries of the Statutory Commission that we are "not expected or required to deal with all subjects covered by the Commission's terms of Reference but only such as especially concern the case to be put forward" by us. Our reply to their invitation to present our case will "not cover the whole field under each head but will be limited only to particular matters desired to draw attention to." This will, of course, not be taken to imply that Bihar and Orissa Muslims are one whit less interested in any other matter affecting British India and the Province or, as Mr. Lloyd George has just put it, in "the whole field of the future governance of India which lies open to the Commission."

If anything the Muslims are even more interested than others in the general political progress of this great country, to which they have given their own glorious traditions of organised democratic Government and of the generous treatment and status of minorities, as well as of recent executive institutions and civic and financial developments which still form the basis of modern Indian Administration. Equally are they interested in the economic and administrative reconstruction and reform of an existing order of things where, to quote the greatest chronicler and statistical authority of British Rule in India, Sir W. Hunter, "from the highest official to the lowest there is a firm conviction that we have failed in our duty to the Muslim subjects of the Queen. The great section of Muslims were declining under (the present system of British) rule; and in every District the descendant of some line of princes is sullenly and proudly eating his heart out among roofless palaces and weed choked tanks. The Muslims were excluded from the army and the law; and revenue administration passed out of their hands; the judiciary was either Anglicised or Hindunised, while the Permanent Settlement (and its pitiless Resumption Laws) led to the wholesale eviction of Muslim landlords and purchase of their estates (after deliberate or accidental defaults) by their Hindu servants. The Hindu Collectors of revenue were transformed into landlords and their Muslim masters became their serfs." That Indian Muslims are always giving actual proof of their vital interest in British rule, as well as in the progress of self-government, is undeniably demonstrated by the fact that the proportion of Muslims in the Army to their total population, according to figures supplied by Government of India during the Great War was much higher than that of any other community.

We whole-heartedly and emphatically join in the popular demand for Indianisation of the services and the Army, the immediate termination of Dyarchy and grant of autonomy to the Provinces; and the introduction of the fullest responsiveness to public opinion and of representative government in all nation-building Departments of the Administration. We join unequivocally in the demand for the long and unjustifiably overdue separation of the executive and judicial functions, the abolition of the entire India Office and of its control over the Governments in India, in the granting of larger powers and broader franchise to the local bodies and the legislatures, and fullest responsibility of provincial cabinets to the legislatures and in the joint responsibility of Ministers. We also demand the curtailment of the present extensive and dangerous powers of the Provincial Governors to veto all important measures, to dismiss any or all the Ministers and to resume direct charge of any or all the departments, to secure passage of any legislation he considers essential, to restore any budget heads voted down in the legislatures by the simple and elastic process of arbitrary certification. We join also in the protest against the appalling growth of administrative expenditure and the disproportionate enhancements of salaries and allowances to the Superior Services, and against the consequent starving of the nation-building departments of Education, Sanitation, Industries, Agriculture, etc. We resent also the indirect and damaging control of the Finance and Political Appointment Departments and its members in charge over the expanding activities of these other Departments, which has been complained against vainly by many Executive Members and Ministers quite recently.

We are, in our memorandum, confining ourselves to those other and even more fundamental and immediate questions of administrative and economic readjustments where the Muslim interests cannot, for some time to come, be adequately reviewed or pressed for in joint or national demands and representations. This we do in no schismatic or anti-national spirit; but merely to secure that fair distribution of material rights and intellectual and social developments which can alone make uniform progress or efficient administration possible. That such separate and special rights and interests exist has been repeatedly and unreservedly accepted alike by the Indian and British Government and by all sane political leaders. That the safeguarding of them is an urgent and important problem is amply recognised in all the Despatches, Reports, Pacts and Constitutions hitherto evolved, and has recently been emphasised by the communal tensions and riots, which are admittedly the natural result of politico-economic maladjustment under present form of the Reforms, as frankly confessed in the official review of "India in 1926–27." That these minority claims cannot be recognised by "a purely mathematical treatment especially in Bihar and Orissa, U. P. and Bombay" has been asserted in his dissenting minute to the Government of India's Fifth Despatch by Sir William Vincent, an executive member of the Viceroy's Council from our Province, where he said "Lord Minto gave on behalf of the Government of India a binding pledge to the Mohammadans which Lord Morley endorsed and Lord Hardinge repeated that their position should be estimated not merely on their numerical strength but with respect to their political importance." That these rights are not merely conditioned by or limited to religious differences we will make clear in subsequent detailed chapters, and this has been comprehensively indicated quite recently by Mr. Lloyd George when he drew pointed attention to the fact that "a great practical difficulty arises from the fact that religion divides the people into separate communities in a way for which there is no precedent or comparison in any other country . . . and the Muslims would view with horror any arrangement by which the preservation of law and order would (in the present transitional stage) be naturally left in the hands of the Hindu majority." That these special interests constitute a fundamental problem even in cases where there is numerical majority has been analogously admitted in the joint Report of 1919 where it is pointed out that all over India the non-caste "other Hindus," who number about one-fifth of the total population of India, are (politically and socially) in a similar position to the Madras Panchamas, and were unrepresented in the Reformed Council of 1909." This was also emphasised by the Government of India in the famous Fifth Despatch as follows:—"If the Reforms of 1919 are not to start with a heavy handicap . . . we cannot expect co-operation and good will of the non-Brahmin so long as there is no provision to secure their interests. The Madras representatives upon the subjects committee of the Statutory enquiry of the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms declined to recommend the transfer of any subject in the Madras Provincial Government unless separate provision is made for the non-Brahmins; and we are certain the Madras Government share this view." If this is the unabashed attitude and position of a community which has, as the Franchise Committee pointed out, "an overwhelming electoral strength of 22 to 1 and electors preponderance of 4 to 1," it is not difficult to understand the position of the Muslims who are in minorities of 11 per cent. in Bihar, 4 per cent. in C.P., 3·5 per cent. in Burma and only enjoy a nominal majority of 54 per cent. and 55 per cent. in two out of 9 Provinces where, however, they are almost equally under the domination of Hindu moneylenders, lawyers, Zemindars and landlords agents (as graphically pointed out ever since the days of Sir W. Hunter) and where their present election strength is still considerably less than that of the Hindus and their representation in council approximates to 30 per cent. only. In the Superior Services of the Government of India Muslim representation stands at 2·9 per cent. as against 20 per cent. for Hindus and 77·1 per cent. for Anglo-Indians and Europeans, whereas the Muslim population in India is 24·07 per cent. With regard to this unsatisfactory position of the Mussalmans in the services an ex-President of the National Congress and Muslim League and ex-Executive Member for Justice and Police, the Maharaja of Mahmoodabad felt constrained to remark that "the Muslims regarded separate and adequate representation as a sine qua non of their adhesion to the introduction of popular franchise." They would have no hesitation in withdrawing their support (from the Reforms and national agitations) if they find that under the proposed scheme their position in the administration of the country would be worse off than what it is at present. It is but natural that they should not like to be dominated by any other community. As pointed out by the Right Honourable Mr. Amir Ali in a letter to the Times in 1920, tampering with the communal representation of the Muslims (in electorates and services) would "create distrust both in the pledges of the Government and of the Hindu leaders." The 10·85 per cent. Muslims of Bihar and Orissa and 22·07 per cent. of India are not reactionary enough to deny "all goodwill and support to national or Reform Schemes" and insist on "non-transfer of any subject," like the Non-Brahmin majorities of Madras, nor (as Lala Lajput Rai admits in his press letter of 27.4.28, about the Democratic League of the Punjab 31·8 per cent. Hindus cum 11·09 per cent. Sikhs) would Muslim "like Government to resume its pre-reform absolutism, unless this undemocratic body of foreign dictators could give us a constitution which would reorganise communal representation" in favour of the Punjab Hindus. But we wish it to be distinctly understood that we want effective and automatic safeguards of our minority and communal rights to be incorporated as a fundamental clause in all future constitutions and administrative and services schemes. In the present conditions in India we would not recommend the transfer of the subjects of law and order as well as of Justice and Defence. Equally would we then hesitate to ask for the withdrawal of the present check by the Governors and the Viceroy over the Ministers or over majority votings of Budget heads or essential legislation. We would also have the greatest difficulty in asking for larger powers of financial and administrative independence of Municipal, District, Local and other bodies if we continue to find that present conditions persist when, controlling in Bihar and Orissa populations of 11 lacs,

3 crores and 2·6 crores respectively and finances to the extent of 48 lacs, 1·5 crores and many lacs annually, as they did in 1925–26, they possess only 1, 1 and 2 Muslim Chairmen respectively out of 58, 19 and 46 "bodies," and as admitted by the Government "in the 1924 elections Muslims did not secure even their former position and the 1927 elections turned out even worse," so much so, as Mr. Naim proved in Council, that "out of 29 Local elective bodies Muslim were entirely unrepresented in no less than 27." We will have more to say presently about the almost complete exclusion of Muslims in most local bodies from educational grants-in-aid; from expenditure on Maktabs and Urdu Schools, grants for Buildings, Furniture and Library, grants to Muslim Primary and Secondary Schools.

Methods of Representation.—The present system of representation by means of separate electorates should continue. This principle of representation has been definitely recognised in the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms as the Southborough Commission says: "The Montagu-Chelmsford Report recognises the necessity of communal Representation for the Mohammadans. All Local Governments and most of the evidence we received is unanimously in favour of this. The Hindus are in substantial agreement with this common desire; as expressed in the National Congress-League compact of December, 1916, at Lucknow (which the Government described as a landmark in Indian politics and an accomplished fact) so also are a great majority of associations, political and non-political. We also agree with the advice of the Local Government of Bihar and Orissa, Punjab, Bengal, U. P, and Bombay, not to revive a controversy that has been largely composed already." The Government of India in its Despatch on this report also admits that "India is not prepared to take the first steps towards responsible government upon any other road. In determining the ratio in the various Provinces we should have to start with certain established data: (1) The Mohammadans have been definitely promised some electoral advantage on the ground of their political importance; (2) They are the poorer community; (3) Their Census strength by no means corresponds to their political importance; past history and the presence of Muslim centres count for much; (4) We think it a valid answer to observe that the effect of a minority depends upon its being large enough to have the sense of not being overwhelmed." Since, however, "the controversy" has "again been revived," in an anticipatory attempt all over Hindu India to cloud the issues before the Commission, it may not be out of place to very briefly review the history of these minority rights and communal representation in India, Europe and elsewhere in past and in recent politics.

Classical history presents definite and numerous instances of such safeguarding of minority rights and fixing of communal, political status of subject races, foreigners, aliens and even of slave communities in Rome, Greece and elsewhere. We Muslims had most elaborate and even over-generous mandatory political and religious enactments for the safeguarding of the special and communal rights and liberties of the subject non-Muslims and the Christian and Jewish foreigners. These safeguards were invariably incorporated in the instruments of appointment of all the distant Governors all over the vast Islamic Empire.

Nor is the doctrine of communal representation new to India. Its history since 1909 has just been given and we cannot do better to prove its effectiveness in nation-welding than to quote from a Hindu ex-Minister, Mr. Chintamoni in his evidence before the Reforms Enquiry Committee on August 18th, 1924, when from his vast administrative, political and journalistic experience he said that owing to the grant of separate electorates to Mohammadans in the U. P. District Boards there was "less friction between the Hindus and Mohammadans." But history in this respect goes much further back than 1909. "It has been acknowledged that there is in favour of communal representation a large volume of weighty opinion" held presumably after thorough enquiry and mature deliberation by responsible statesmen of the high position of Lords Dufferin and Lansdowne (of course then this applied only to nomination and appointments). We have to consider whether there has been such a development of unity of purpose and identity of interests and such an improvement of political relations with the Hindus as to justify the ignoring of this weighty consensus of opinion."

"The Morley-Minto Reforms of 1909 secured communal representation to the Muslim. Repeated failure of the community to get some of their best men elected convinced the authorities of the necessity for a special electorate; but only a limited number of seats was reserved for these special electorates. Finding, however, that this arrangement failed to secure the required representation even those progressive members of the community who were so long opposed to separate representation, realised that the interests of the community would continue to suffer unless the special electorates could return a much larger number; and they prevailed upon the leaders of the Hindu community to acquiesce in an agreement by which Mussalmans could secure adequate and effective representation at a concordat in the Congress-League meeting of 1916," which has been consistently respected by all the successive Viceroys and Secretaries of State and the British Parliament. Similar separate and adequate representation has been vouchsafed to the Sikhs of the Punjab and in even more generous measure to lesser communities like the Europeans, the Landholders, Miners, Planters and the Universities, as well as by nomination to the Indian and European Chambers of Commerce, Labourers, Aborigines and the Depressed Classes.

And yet it is unblushingly asserted that communal representation and the protection of the linguistic, educational, social and administrative rights of minorities is merely in "an experimental stage; and is in Europe just being tried only in new States that are in state of flux." The vain tinkering with the political and communal rights of the Irish, which had to end in establishment of a separate kingdom of Roman Catholics is safely forgotten. So also is the tenacity with which French Canadians have clung to their own language and educational policies culminating as early as 1867 in Article 93 of the British North America Act, laying down that ". . . where in any Province a system of separate or Dissentient schools exists by Law and Union, or is thereafter established by the Legislature of the Province, an appeal shall lie to the Governor-General in Council from any Act or Decision of any Provincial Authority affecting any Right or Privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic Minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to Education."

We have the first hand testimony of a historian and a constitutional authority like Dr Shafaat Ahmad, D.Litt., M.L.C., to assure us that "the Minority clauses have worked on the whole most satisfactorily in the new European States." It is significant that these clauses came into being at the instance and insistence of Tiger Clemenceau, the democratic President of France, the original home of modern liberty, equality and fraternity, and that they are foundation of a separate section of the League of Nations concerned exclusively with minority clauses called the Minority Section. Indian nationalists, the Government and the Parliament should take special and effective note of the following extract from the original letter of M. Clemenceau to the President of the Polish Republic dated June 24th, 1919, laying down policy of the Allies: "It is believed that these populations (inevitably speaking languages and belonging to races different from that of the people with whom they are incorporated in the New European States) will be more easily reconciled to their new position, if they know that from the very beginning they have assured protection and adequate guarantees against any danger of unjust treatment or oppression. The very knowledge that these guarantees exist will, it is hoped, materially help the reconciliation which all desire; and will indeed, do much to prevent the necessity of its enforcement."

A more lucid exposition of this deliberate policy of the Allies for protection of minority rights cannot be found or expected. And if this is true, according to the Allies of Europe, how much more so must it apply to India where the two main sections differ not only in race and language but also in religion, traditions, civilisation and culture, in economic organisation and in fact almost the whole range of material and spiritual interest. As to what the nature and extent of these minority rights are, we need quote only brief extracts from Dr. Shafaat Ahmed's first-hand review of the treaties and constitution guaranteed by the League of Nations to Poland, Czechoslovakia, Esthonia, Jugoslavia, Germany, Hungaria, etc. We shall only give running excerpts from all of them to bring out the main points: "So closely intermingled that the population of a single village might be divided between three classes with different race, language or religion . . . The Government binds itself to see that judicial and administrative posts, especially those of sub-prefects, are filled wherever possible, by persons, belonging to racial minorities and knowing their language . . . This denationalisation under the pressure of political, economic or social institutions was the real grievance of many of the racial groups which made, for example, the Austro-Hungarian Empire. It could only be remedied either by cutting the group out of the Empire and investing it with a separate existence (cf. Ireland) or by guaranteeing its rights against the arbitrary power of a majority ; (cf. our united, dogged and inflexible demand and the accomplished landmark of Lucknow concordat). . . . The Magyars form only 20·6 per cent. of the population of Slovakia and before the war held all the 461 posts in the higher judiciary and official services of Slovakia and 2,156 out of 2,202 posts in courts, prisons, schools and medical departments, but after the war (and the Allied policy and League guarantees) they now held only 3,335 officer's posts in the entire administration as against 9,591 held by the Slovak population . . .Subjects of the State belonging to racial minorities can freely make use of their national language in the Hungarian Parliament as well as in the Local and Provincial bodies and their committees and the laws and decrees of Government are to be published in the language of all the racial minorities . . . especially in the use of their mother tongue in education, as well as in the local administration and the administration of justice . . . every citizen possesses the right of safeguarding his nationality and of cultivating his national language and customs . . . and where specific sums of money from public funds in the budgets of State, local or public authorities, are to be devoted to education, religion or philanthropy a due share in the use and enjoyment of such funds shall be secured to such minorities . . . Polish nationals who belong to racial, religious or linguistic minorities shall enjoy the same treatment and security in law and in fact as the other Polish nationals . . . In particular they shall have an equal right to establish, manage and control schools and other educational establishments. Poland will provide . . . adequate facilities for ensuring that in primary Schools the instruction shall be given to the children of such Polish nationals through the medium of their own language." Lord Bryce informs us, not about the new states but about the ancient and truly democratic Swiss Republic that though in nearly every canton representatives of minorities find their way to the Executive Council, still in order to assure the representation of minorities, several cantons have adopted the system of proportional representation, for everybody feels that each important section should have its spokesman and its share of office . . . and in the Federal Executive Council custom prescribes that one councillor shall always come from the French speaking canton of Vaud . . . one taken from a Roman Catholic canton and one from the Italian speaking Ticino." In this way all the races and religions of Switzerland are represented. The "Italian Swiss form only 5 per cent., yet in order to win their confidence the Swiss Government publish all its Government documents in three languages—Italian, French and German." He that runs may read the parallelism between Muslim demands and each of these minority rights even amongst peoples similar in habits, customs, civilisations, economic and political organisations and even spiritual development. As this parallelism is an object-lesson in itself, we will not further labour the point that the protection of minority rights and communal representation (not only in legislatures but also on the even more important local bodies, in the cabinets and services, in the University and Schools and in all political and administrative agencies, Boards and Committees) is not a new or an intrinsically suspect political agency; but has been recognised from olden times and by the new League of Nations and Allies Conferences to be the only agency for securing confidence in the Governmental and national authorities and that the very knowledge of their statutory existence does much to prevent the necessity of these clauses being blatantly enforced. As to the detailed application and measure of these safeguards we propose to deal with these under separate heads.

One essential point, however, we wish to make quite clear; these safeguards and constitutional guarantees of communal representation and fair-play must form an organic part of the new constitution, just as they do in the case of the League of Nations and other guarantees which can be changed only "with the consent" of the guarantor League or Parliament. The great powers in their Treaty with Poland laid down: "Poland undertakes that the stipulations contained in the Articles 2–8 (re rights of minorities) shall be recognised as fundamental laws; and that no law, regulation or official order or action shall conflict or interfere with these stipulations nor prevail over them." The French in Canada have secured certain rights by the British North America Act of 1867. "In October, 1927, at a Conference of the Provinces of Canada it was proposed that the Dominion Parliament should be invested with the power to amend the constitution in 1867. The French minority refused its assent, and the project fell through." This quotation is significant in view of the fact that "the difference between the two races were not one of party or principles only . . but with exceptions which prove the rule all the British were on one side and all Canadians (French) were on the other," as we are assured by W. P. M. Kennedy in his "Documents of the Canadian Constitution." After this we fail to see the logic or political wisdom of the Government of India in their Despatch of 1919 rejecting "as wholly unworkable the provision that proposals affecting the interests (presumably even if fundamental) of other communities (? omission) only with the assent of a large majority of the community affected." Nor are the elaborate a priori arguments of Mr. Montagu and Lord Chelmsford at all convincing on this point in view of the fact that they confined their analogies and reasonings to a country like Britain which has long forgotten its Shakesperian days of social and administrative tyrannies over the Jews, and where solidarity of interests and purposes, as well as insular geographical position makes it impossible for political institutions to develop out of communal origins. Surely the Lucknow Pact falls far short of the Canadian or League of Nations precedents when it provides "that no bill or any cause thereof, nor a resolution introduced by a non-official member affecting one or the other community, which is to be determined by the members of that community in the Legislative Council concerned, shall be proceeded with, if three-fourths of the members of that community in the particular Council, Imperial or Provincial, oppose the Bill or any clause thereof or the resolution." This provision appeared so reasonable, even to the Hindu leaders, that they have always supported it after having evolved it in cordial co-operation with the Muslim leaders at the Lucknow concordat. Even Lord Morley had to modify his views on the fundamental nature of such safeguards, and wrote in his Reminiscences: "It is better to compromise than to extinguish the rights of nationalities, when these are based on so fundamental a principle as attachment to a religious ideal or so innate a feeling as the sentiment of nationality; it is not justice to ignore the claims thus created in favour of a theoretical uniformity." The League guarantees such rights, and Switzerland has long honoured them constitutionally, even "wherever a considerable fraction of minority populations exists" and the determination of what constitutes a considerable fraction is not left to the government concerned, but is to form a subject of reference to the League of Nations and to be fixed by definite enactment.

Since the Lucknow pact, however, three things have occurred: (1) The Mahasabha leaders like Dr. Moonjee and Messrs. Kelkar, Lajput, etc., have tried to repudiate especially this part of the compact, and to wriggle out of the whole commitment after it had for years been accepted by Government, Congress and Parliament as an accomplished fact; (2) The Government of India in their despatches have tried to explain it away as "mere political negotiation rather than deliberate reason," and contemptuously waved it aside as "closely affected by accidents of place and personnel"; (3) Communal tensions, riots and majority resolutions in Councils and local bodies have multiplied. In spite of Lord Irwin's fervid, noble and genuine appeal to the leaders and the masses, "40 communal riots took place in India in the year ending April, 1927, resulting in 197 deaths and 1,598 injuries, of which 34 developed from music before mosques or during the religious ceremony of one or the other community . . . goodwill has been protested but not translated into action . . . Hindus with greater aptness for English study, subtler minds and strong economic position accepted (with a vengeance) all the implications of a Parliamentary majority and of responsible government of a democratic type, with its tremendous powerful central doctrine of government by majority . . . yet in most essential things in life Hindus and Muslims always kept aloof." This is from the government of India review for 1926–27. "Here in Bihar and Orissa," says the Quinquennial Education Report, "Complaints have been received now and then that teachers foster feelings of hatred in their pupils by their advice, actions and teaching . . . and mutual ill-feelings and recriminations . . . are becoming every day more and more acute." We need not say who the aggressors are in these recriminations when we know which community preponderantly mans the teaching staffs of schools and patshalas. The Local Government Resolution on the Police Reports of Bihar and Orissa for 1921–27 year after year draws pointed attention to "the growth of communal riots which numbered 71 during one year alone and culminated in the now notorious Shahabad Riots of 1926 which broke out at Sassaram and the Bakr-Id riots on the borders of Muzaffarpur and Darbhanga and 10 riots and great tension in Balasore . . . as well as in other distantly separated parts of the Province which entailed much heavy work on the police and grave anxieties especially during Bakr-Id, Desahra, etc. . . . and animosity caused owing to the Sudhi and Sangathan movements." Even within the sacred precincts of courts of Justice we find numberless cases of gross miscarriage of justice owing to sheer communal bias. Owing to the delicate nature of this aspect of the question we refrain from citing instances of such "communal" action in civil and Sessions Courts. But the most recent case of Patna City itself we may safely quote on this point. In the Government appeal judgment against acquittal of a Hindu clerk (charged with embezzling public money) originally tried by a Hindu Senior Magistrate, the Honourable Mr. Justic Macpherson unhesitatingly observed: "Especially deplorable is it that owing to the fact that the accused was of one community and the gazetted officers and the Head Clerk were of another, a communal flavour was recklessly imparted to the case; and thereupon so many Government clerks and peons, all belonging to the community of the accused, concertedly perjured themselves without scruple in support of the egregiously false and cruel defence evolved that the embezzler had made over the money to the Head clerk (a Muslim), and the (Hindu) Magistrate had not only rejected the simple and straight-forward case of the Crown and accepted the transparently concocted case of the defence, but should have written a judgment, not only intemperate and unbalanced but so biassed that Counsel for the accused could only throw it over as impossible to support."

The Muslims of Bihar and Orissa and of India, therefore, now insist that in the same way as in Europe the linguistic, religious, educational, political and administrative rights of the Muslims must be regarded and constitutionally fixed as fundamental. They cannot be changed by the Indian Parliament or any Provincial or local legislature or Boards containing a non-Muslim majority or a Muslim majority dominated (like the non-Brahmins of Madras or Muslim of Bengal, as emphasised in Government of India Despatches) by caste Hindu landlords, officers, agents and money-lenders. The sanction must be the sanction of the British Parliament and fundamental Muslim rights, which we are indicating subsequently, incorporated in the "constitution" of India and safeguarded against all hasty change, till such time as the ultimate growth of mutual trust and goodwill, of political as opposed to communal public morality and conscience and of a more "uniform level of culture, education and economic developments" make the Muslims themselves call for this change by the guarantor British Parliament.

The Commission has very rightly put the subject of electorates in the very forefront of its note inviting memoranda, because it now forms almost a single issue test problem of Indian Politics, high, local or rural. Intrinsically this question is not so important as that of guaranteed fundamental safeguard of minority rights and communal representation. But it becomes unavoidable in the state of things depicted above which, to quote the Director of Information, is "likely to grow in intensity with further extension of the Reforms, bringing India face to face with some of the problems.....of self-government and precipitating a (greater) struggle for powers and emoluments of office and, in fact, for control of the machinery of government." Besides, this problem has been further complicated by the timorous, sophisticated and piecemeal manner in which the otherwise unimpeachable transitional process of separate electorate has been tried out in India; thus putting further back the happy day when "necessity of its enforcement" may be prevented by spontaneous confidence. In spite of "the weighty concensus of opinion" since the days of Dufferin and Lansdowne, separate electorates did not exist before 1909, when, however, it was introduced only for microscopic number of Provincial Council seats, the bulk of the seats remaining open to the Muslims as general constituencies. These latter were, except in one solitary and abortive instance, never contested by Muslims in Bihar and Orissa. And all over India Muslims failed to get even their best men elected through them from Council, landlord or University constituencies, Mining, Commerce or Industry, presumably because they have not (like the non-Brahmins and Europeans and Anglo-Indians) "any earthly chance of being returned." This arrangement, therefore, proved unsatisfactory and inadequate to secure Muslim representation even in majority provinces like Bengal and the Punjab. Accordingly in 1919 a more thorough-going policy of separate electorates was adopted in the minority provinces and the same also extended to the two majority provinces. But still separate election was confined to the seats for the Local Council, Assembly and the Council of State, and did not extend to local bodies or the so-called mixed constituencies. The result has been that communal pressure has failed to be relieved in higher political spheres, while communal tension was being accentuated by the hysterical and suicidal majority actions and elections in the growingly rich, powerful and wide awake local bodies. This danger became so imminent that an 86 per cent. Hindu majority in the U. P. Council spontaneously introduced separate election in the District Boards elections; with the result that even Mr. Chintamani says "separate electorates to District Boards had removed one cause of friction."

Similar removal of friction in Municipal, District and Local Boards is the most urgent problem all over Urban and Rural India; and we will soon demonstrate this unanswerably with facts and figures about the local bodies of Bihar and Orissa. It is worse than futile to have separate electorates in higher legislatures if it be not also introduced in the lower training grounds where really self-government is actual and operative in the everyday political, educational, sanitary and economic life of the masses of Indian population. The present position is anomalous and inter-communally fraught with dangers which have only just begun to become apparent in their lurid nakedness. Nor has "there been such a development of unity of purpose and identity of interest or such improvement of political relations" as to justify the removal of the separate electorate altogether. The only logical and safe alternative, therefore, is to give this system a thorough, fair and unfettered trial right through the whole gamut of our representative and administrative institutions.

Separate electorates seem, for the present, the only form of protection for Indian minorities, scattered over large areas aggregating 18 lacs of square miles, and differing widely in quality and quantity of intelligence, discipline and economic and political organisation. Examples of virtual exclusion of Muslims in all mixed constituencies, as already pointed out, and in all local bodies where joint electorates prevail merely point this moral. If to quote again from the Southborough Report backed by subsequent Parliamentary sanctification, they secured this "even perhaps at the cost of disregard of sound constitutional forms." If "Reservation (of seats in mixed electorates) is not acceptable to non-Brahmins because they mistrust candidates in whose election Brahmins would take part, however limited may be their number of votes," if the astute "organised" Mahrattas, who, according to the Southborough Committee, "number five millions as against 14 millions other Hindus and possess predominant voting strength in the five districts" where they abound, have claimed and got separate electorate in spite of the Franchise Committee's unequivocal and strong protest, what chance then is there, under conditions already indicated, that Muslims who are not in a 22/1 majority but 10/1 minority in Bihar and Orissa and who eat, think, worship and live differently, will not "mistrust" co-religionist puppets who will be put up as creatures of the landlords, moneylenders, lawyers and politicians of an aggressive and overwhelming majority community? We have no desire to be hard on our black sheep, who are under such cruel domination and will not show up such individual cases which are already familiar in Municipal District and Local Boards, wherever joint elections prevail in minority and even majority provinces with Hindu domination.

Separate elections for the Peers exists and has existed for centuries in at least the Upper Chamber of the Mother of Parliaments. It existed in Austria-Hungary, in Cyprus and in Palestine. We fail, therefore, to see the honesty of political wisdom of the tirades that are indulged against it by Majority Hindoos, who, however, claim 50 per cent. and secure 33⅓ per cent. representation in the Police of a would-be Province, where they will be in a minority of 3 per cent. Nor do we see why Lord Olivier, himself a Peer of the Realm, should lose his customary clarity of thought and generosity of sympathies and "despair for a constitution resting on the disastrous expedient of communal representation aggravated and intensified by communal jealousies and hostilities" (which the Lucknow Pact and the separate electorates of U. P. District Boards have been authentically admitted to have largely composed already). That Indian Muslims do "have a case" was admitted in 1923 by the Leader of the Assembly, Sir M. Hailey, when he said: "However much some of us may desire to see the end of communal representation (through separate electorates) the history of the past three years has shown us that India at large is not yet ready to abandon it. There may come a time when education and social advancement will secure that result, when all such difference will be lost in the larger sentiment of nationality or social service But that time is not yet."

We have already quoted the authority of all successive Secretaries of State, Viceroys and Commissioners to establish the fact that, in minority Provinces, Muslims should get an allotment of seats much "in excess of their numerical and mathematical strength" in order to make their representation effective by "making them feel that they are not overwhelmed." In the "accomplished landmark" of Lucknow Pact Hindu leaders have admitted that an effective minority can do them no harm, while it secures the permanent goodwill and confidence of their Muslim compatriots. The 25 per cent. of seats in all legislatures allotted to Muslims in Bihar and Orissa by them has been inviolably upheld by the Franchise Committee, Government of India Despatch, Parliamentary Joint Committee and embodied in the Reforms Act. This 25 per cent. also approximates to the more scientific dissent minute allotment of Sir W. Vincent when he said that "the strength of Muslim interests in Bihar and Orissa, U.P. and Bombay calls for some further moderate adjustment (from what the Committee and the Despatch had conceded). . . . Some special constituencies (like Indian commerce, landholders, University, etc.) cannot be suitably subdivided on a communal basis and in these it can be expected that non-Mohammadan interests will predominate. . . . (I would, therefore,) where Mohammadans are in a majority let them get representation in that proportion and where they are at their weakest let us double that proportion."

After this it is unnecessary for us to add anything beyond our rightful claim that; (1) Muslims in Bihar and Orissa should be guaranteed (in the new "constitution") representation by separate electoral rolls at the fixed ratio of 25 per cent. of the total number of seats in all legislatures; (2) that they should be allotted the same representation in all local bodies except in Chota Nagpur and Orissa where their "proportions may be doubled" as there, their percentage ranges from 1.7 to 8 per cent. in rural areas; (3) that areas of constituencies, qualification for franchise and seats should be scientifically readjusted to suit this ratio in reference to Muslim electors; and (4) that "no law, regulation or official action shall prevail against" this fixed allotment. Let us give a fair, conscientious and whole-hearted trial to this system as it is the only salvation for political India till we again (and on a more permanent and intrinsic footing) restore the mutual confidence and affection and the consequent administrative facilities of the short-lived and artificial Rapprochment days of 1919–20.

A general point we would make about the legislatures and especially about Provincial legislatures, before we begin our specific requests and demands about them, is to urge Government members not to be so nervous or procrastinating about answering questions and supplying information and figures called for. This has been one of the greatest stumbling blocks in the way of popularity of the Councils and of the birth of a tradition of sobriety and responsibility among the Councillors. We admit that with "no powers of initiative" members and especially minority members, may be inclined to let off energy and relieve their depression at majority dominance by asking too many questions. But this is merely natural and will soon work off; unless resentment is courted by lack of patience and tact on the part of those who sign every official letter as "our obedient servants" and have actually got a glorious tradition of "Service" to be proud of. For instance, in the writing of this memorandum, extreme difficulty was experienced in wading through a mass of barren questions in local Council on points of Muslim representation, enlargement of responsibility of public bodies and workers, etc. We know this is a difficult subject to lay down specific constitutional clauses about. But equally have we watched its baneful effects in Council, Press and public in unduly and undeservedly discrediting Reformed legislatures; so we insist on the constitution makers to end or at least mend this state of affairs. For instance, there might be great difficulty in securing good debaters and tactful and helpful Government representatives among officers who have for years specialised in field, file or "expert" work; and the growing volume of Council work may be a serious hindrance to overworked Secretaries and Heads of Departments. In that case, it might help efficiency to relieve these officials of Council duties and select, or train a separate set of officers to present the Government views of one or several departments and to supply information with respect to them and take part in debates and even carry on propaganda for popularising Government generally and Government policies in specific matters by mixing freely and intimately with the Indian leaders of thought and politics in and outside the Councils. Also, the Ministers must have Parliamentary Secretaries to do the routine part of these duties for them and leave them time and peace of mind to conduct the more important piloting of serious measures in Council and to carry on their important and heavy normal administrative duties. Then alone will disappear all complaints of hindering rather than helping by Government replies, or of inefficient or snappish budget and Money Bill speeches. Nor will exuberant junior secretaries feel any necessity to repeat warnings in loud chorus to bring impatient or inexperienced Councillors to their senses, as if arrogating to themselves the powers of the Speakers of the Indian Parliaments. All these are not "minor points" but really major irritants. Safeguards should be made for adequate representation of Muslim interest in the Cabinet by Statutory provision. Also, in view of the political power residing in the will of mathematical majorities in legislatures, would ask for grant of some special power, to be used only in exceptional cases, to enable the Governor to save the situation when a majority makes a dead set to oust a conscientious minority community Minister or create a deadlock in departments under his charge, or to hastily reject measures brought forward by him or to exasperate his community by private bills affecting it adversely in fundamental matters. Apart from this we would ask for withdrawal of all initiative powers on the part of the Governor, and especially so in the case of money matters and legislative resolutions. We consider the checking effect of the Viceroy's assent quite enough in the Assembly on the analogy of similar assent and signature of the Emperor, whose Vice-regent he is, for measures passed by both Houses of Parliament. In the case of Provincial Legislatures there may be the further check of the Government of India's sanction being necessary to all Bills involving fundamental or material change of policy or principles.

With the grant of Provincial autonomy and larger and quicker Indianisation of services, we would, as a natural corollary, ask for much enhanced powers of initiative and administrative responsibility for the legislatures; because it is primarily to check and direct the governmental agencies that legislatures exist. And as these agencies are growingly manned by Indians, so should the accredited representatives of the Indian peoples have more control over them. Specially in budget and allotment matters should these powers be extensive and final, except in so far as intercommunal adjustment is concerned, which should, as already indicated, be governed by specific fundamental clauses which shall not be subject to whims of majorities or "the accidents of time, place or personnel." As a natural result of these enhanced powers we would ask for a larger number of sittings during each session and in the whole year—especially of sittings devoted to private business, which, as already indicated, will tend to increase, in the first instance, even disproportionately. The present 30 or 40 days' total yearly sitting of the Bihar and Orissa Council or Assembly, however convenient to minimise the main "delaying powers of legislatures," will be grievously insufficient for anything like real responsible autonomy.

If Provincial Governments are to be autonomous (which is the minimum joint demand of India) and Central Governments largely so (limited only by the Viceroy's direct charge of defence and foreign portfolios), we take it that there will be need for no official members, bar the Ministers and their Parliamentary Secretaries, in the Provincial and Central First Chamber. But in order to help in the training of the new Councillors and to supply information and expert advice impartially to all parties and communities, we would demand the presence, for some time to come, of Government officers and experts in the Councils who will be able to take part in the debates but not vote, a practice by no means new to Indian legislatures and prevalent in many deliberative and representative institutions all over the world. These non-voting members to be in addition to the Parliamentary secretaries in all and official members in the Viceregal portfolios of the Central legislatures. For the Bihar and Orissa Council we would suggest the number of such officials to be 18, corresponding to the number of main departments under the Local Government. We will not specify the departments as at present constituted, because it might be necessary to re-shuffle or re-group them for Council representation purposes after Provincial autonomy is introduced.

Regarding bicameralism and federalism, opinion is veering round in its favour among Muslims and other minority communities as a further and effective check on hasty or majority or extremistic legislation by the greatly enlarged legislatures. We think that Muslims would not be opposed to bicameralism even in the Provinces if (1) thereby the conservative and over-orthodox Hindu elements were not unduly fortified in the power they already possess as majorities in the Provincial first chambers; (2) the landlords and money-lenders who are already dominating over them are not unduly fortified in their political power; (3) no double representation is secured to these classes as such in both chambers; (4) the Second Chamber is not used as an arbitrary or reactionery instrument of normal legislation, but is constitutionally limited to functioning as a revising senate of wiser, old and more learned law-givers; and (5) it does not possess any drastic powers over money bills. With these safeguards guaranteed in its constitution we would welcome a Second Chamber in the Bihar and Orissa legislature.

CASE OF BIHAR AND ORISSA MUSLIM ASSOCIATION. [Continued.

ALLOTMENT OF SEATS AND FRANCHISE.

Regarding franchise and numerical strength of legislatures and allotment of seats in them to Bihar and Orissa Muslims it may be helpful if we review the present position in all of them very briefly for Bihar and Orissa. A few facts and figures will explain the present political and economic local position :—

Population.	Area.	Population Urban.	Population Rural	Rev. and Rts.	Hindu.	Moham-madans.	Literate.	Illiterate.
B. & O. Total	Sq. miles.			Lacs.
1923–24 ... 34,002,189	83,161	1,374,765	32,627,424	236	8·284%	10·85%	103,706 Female	15,281,315
					28,166,459	3,690,182	1,482,551 Male
Bihar ... 23,380,288	42,360	964,053	22,416,235	177	—	—	—	—
Orissa ... 4,968,873	13,736	174,449	4,794,424	34	—	—	—	—
Ch. Nagpur 5,653,028	27,065	236,263	5,416,765	25	—	—	—	—

Occupation 1921 :—Agriculture 81·4 per cent. Industry 6·6, Trade 3·8, Transport ·8 } All mostly rural.

Administration 3 per cent., Profession and Arts 7 per cent., Public Forces 3 per cent., Domestic Service 15 per cent., Living on Incomes 2 per cent., Insufficiently described 3·5 per cent.

In literacy :—Hindu Males 1/16, Hindu Females 1/400; Muslim Males 1/18 per cent., Muslim Females 1/189 (as per Government Education Department Records).

In Education 1924 :—Per 1,000 of Population, 2 Secondary and 21 Primary School Scholars.

NUMBER OF ELECTORS IN 1928.

PROVINCIAL COUNCIL.

	Council of State.	Assembly.	URBAN.
			Patna.	Tirhut.	Bhagalpore.	Orissa.	Ch. Nagpur.
Muslim	1,970	7,983	5,020	2,892	3,636	X	X
Hindus	422	69,360	17,201	11,835	10,632	5,549	4,850
Land-holders ...	X	129	131	84	65	73	36
			RURAL.
			Patna.	Tirhut.	Bhagalpur.	Orissa.	Ch. Nagpur.
Muslim	—	—	5,817	5,670	10,961	1,381	5,423
Hindus	—	—	98,035	36,204	43,825	47,695	65,667

European 1,959, University 795, Planters 50, Mining Indians 19, and Europeans 117.

Total Votes Polled (vide Secretary of State's Report Figures 1925–26).

	Council of State.	Assembly.	Local Council.
			Urban.	Rural.
Muslim	83%	59·4%	61·2%	64·5%
Non-Mohammadan	79%	52·3%	49·4%	62·5%

The Indian Councils Act of 1909 fixed maximum number of seats as:—

India Council 60, B. & O. Council 50, out of which in the Indian Legislative Council on 4-11-1912 there were officials 27, non-officials 33, of whom 27 were elected, B. & O. electing 1, Council 1 and land-holders 1. In Provincial Council on 21-9-1912 there were 19 nominated (of whom not more than 15 officials) and 21 Elected, of whom Muslims 4 and mixed constituencies of Municipalities, 5, District Board 5, land-holders 5, Mining 1, and Planting 1.

The Franchise Committee in 1919 proposed 20 out of 80 elected seats in the Assembly for Muslim and the Fifth Despatch 18 out of 78. And in the Local Councils the Committee proposed allotment of 20 seats in B. & O., 53 in Bengal and 55 in the Punjab, 24 in U.P., 28 in Bombay, 12 in Madras and 9 in C.P. The actual constitution of the B. & O. Council is now 103 total, of whom 27 are nominated and 76 elected. Of the nominated not more than 18 are to be officials (including 2 Executive Members) and for special classes and interests shall be nominated; Aborigines 2, Depressed classes 2, Industries 1, Bengali settlers 1, Anglo Indian 1, Indian Christians 1, and labour 1, of the Elected Muslims 18 (Rural 15, Urban 3), Non-Muslims 48 (Rural 42 and Urban 6), Land-holders 5, Planters 1, European Mining 1, Indian Mining 1, University 1, and European residents 1.

In the present Assembly B. & O. has 12 seats, of whom Muslims get 3, Non-Muslims 8 and Land-holders 1. In the present Council of State B. & O. Muslims get 1 seat and non-Muslims 2 seats, plus 1 extra seat alternate elections. The above figures show that B. & O. Muslims are getting (as they must continue to get) 25 per cent. elected B. & O. seats in the Council of State and the Assembly; but 1 seat less than 25 per cent. in the Provincial Council. That the populations of Orissa and Chota Nagpur are only about one-fifth and land revenue one-eighth each of Bihar proper, though the area is about one-third and half of Bihar respectively. That the urban population is only one-twenty-third that of rural; but the unfranchised electors given to urban areas is about one-fifth that of rural, which is abour four and a half times in excess; and the number of Urban seats one-fifth and one-seventh of rural for Muslims and non-Muslims. That literate males are 11 times as many as illiterates, and literate females 150 times as many as illiterates. But that proportionally Muslim male literates are about equal to Hindus, but Muslim females over double of Hindus. That Muslims have shown a far greater keenness in elections and polled about 20 per cent. more votes in Urban and 3 per cent. more in Rural areas in elections to the last Provincial Council, and about 14 per cent. and 6 per cent. more in the Assembly and Council of State respectively. And that an overwhelming 82 per cent. of the population depends directly on agriculture (and a very large per cent. of those in industry and trade are also really dependent on agriculture) and are rural in their habits and pursuits.

The Bihar and Orissa Muslims therefore demand: That they should be constitutionally guaranteed 25 per cent. of the elected B. & O. seats in the Council of State and of the total B. and O. seats in the Assembly, in both of which 30 per cent. seats should be reserved for Mohammadans as argued out by Sir W. Vincent in the Fifth Despatch on the Joint Report. Of the total seats in the Provincial Council and in the Local Second Chamber, if one is established, they demand fully 25 per cent. The grounds for this claim we have already fully established, e.g., inadequacy of mathematical minority and impossibility almost of getting election through any mixed constituency. We may further state that the democratic traditions of Islam, the growing literacy of Muslim males and still more so of Muslim females, and the keenness Muslims have already shown in their communal electorates, where they exist as much as their practical disfranchisment in joint ones, all justify the above claim of B. and O. Mussalmans.

They should also get the same proportions in all the Committees, Sub-committees and Advisory and other Boards established in these legislatures and their deputations and representatives chosen from them for Indian and Foreign Leagues Conferences, etc.

They should get statutory protection in the matter and fundamental legislation affecting their community as indicated in the Lucknow pact and safeguards for their Ministers as suggested in this note.

Council of State.—They would like to see the franchise for the Council of State broadened and that Chamber to be reconstituted on a proper revising Chamber basis, instead of being used, as it now is, as a normal agency for pushing through and even initiating whatever the Government considers essential legislation. The power of initiating any legislation should be withdrawn, as also power over any money bills accepted or passed by the First Chamber. They would, however, allow, say, 25 per cent. of the seats in this Second Chamber to be reserved for official and nominated members in order to advise the Senate and even actively guide in the revisory proceedings. Apart from this the only checks on hasty or refractory legislation or action on the part of the First Chamber should be possessed as indicated by the Viceroy.

They would therefore also insist that high property qualification alone be not insisted on, but that a considerable proportion of the electors be on an educational and age basis—say graduates and renowned Pandits and Ulemas.

The election should be direct, as at present, and the franchise qualifications and number of seats be roughly the same as for the present Assembly.

Assembly.—The desire that the qualifications for voting and standing for the Assembly should immediately be made the same as for the local Councils now; but that graduates and Pandits and Maulavis be also added to the rolls. The number of seats should be increased to a little more than the present total of elected seats in all the local Councils; and the Assembly to be made purely an elective body.

That its powers over money bills and budgets be final, subject only to the Viceroy's Veto; but that a measure passed in two successive Assemblies shall become an Act. In other matters its proceedings should be subject only to confirmation by the Second Chamber and the Veto or signature of the Viceroy, except in case of legislation affecting minority communities.

That 30 per cent. of seats be allotted to Muslims and one-eighth of the total seats be allotted to B. and O. sub-division, securing 25 per cent. of these seats to Bihar and Orissa Muslims.

That the number of seats allotted to landlords be drastically reduced in the Assembly in view of the facts that they possess special representation in the Second Chamber. Landlords and European Interests may continue to hold the same number of seats in the enlarged Assembly as they hold now, but those held by Indian Commerce and Sikhs should be proportionately increased with increase of personnel. Further, that one seat each be allotted to Indian representatives from each of the cities of Delhi, Cawnpore, Calcutta, Bombay, Rangoon, Madras and Karachi. Non-Brahmins, Depressed Classes, Anglo-Indians, Labour Industries, Mining and Universities should also get some fair representation by separate or joint electorates, according as they desire.

Local Council.—(a) In the Local Council the franchise should be on a universal adult basis, as this alone will level up the representation of Urban and Rural areas and give some measure of ultimate fair play to the 82 per cent. agriculturists.

(b) If, however, this franchise be considered too broad for India at present, we would still suggest adult suffrage in all towns; because in no country, not even in England, has literacy been absolutely universal before universal adult suffrage was introduced; and the training already given in corporate existence in Urban areas should be a sufficient guarantee of elective efficiency. In rural areas, however, for the next ten years only the franchise qualifications may continue the same as at present for District and Local Board elections, with such modifications as are found inevitable on enquiry or are needed to effectively enfranchise the agriculturists, the cottage industrialists, the rural traders and the labourers.

Bihar and Orissa Muslims would not object to introduction of bicameralism in Provincial Government, provided it be on: (1) Similar conditions regarding powers, etc., as laid down for the Central Upper Chamber, (2) that landed seats are in that case reduced in the First Chambers and educational qualification amply recognised, and (3) 33 per cent. of seats are reserved for Muslims merely to serve as a further revisory and checking influence on hasty or provocative communal legislation against minority communities.

We demand that election to both Local Chambers be direct in all cases, that residential qualifications be only insisted upon for the whole Province and not for each constituency, and that the Council and Second Chamber, the Committees, Boards, deputations and representations from them be on a purely elective basis within 25 per cent. reservation for Muslims and adequate representation for depressed classes only.

The number of seats in the Local Second Chamber should be one-quarter of that of the First Chamber, and that in the Council proper (the First Chamber) on a basis of 1 lac of the total population to each seat in the general constituencies, and in special and communal constituencies on a ratio tallying with the proportion between the number of seats allotted and the number of electors in that constituency.

The Services.—In no country in the world are the services as important an agency of public good as they are in India. Nowhere are the public servants, under the Government, as well as local bodies, so almost exclusively looked up to for guidance, for control and for active help as in India. Now to modern political organisation, India still affords unique opportunities to the public servants of contributing to the growth, the prosperity, the peace and the happiness of the masses as much of the classes. No other agency is here in such intimate living contact with the masses and has such an overwhelming share in the shaping and control of their destiny. For good or for evil, the services have, ever since the uprooting of indigenous self-governing institutions 2 or 3 centuries ago, directed and controlled the nation's destiny and executed its policies almost exclusively. And for another quarter of a century at least will this continue to be so, while India laboriously and with many a lapse and travail accustoms herself to those new and modern machineries of Swaraj which are being fast evolved or imported.

The struggle and the bitterness about representation of the different communities in the services has thus a very much deeper meaning and a nobler significance than merely that of "loaves and fishes." Whatever the ostensible "constitution" or policy established, a very great deal does, and for decades to come must, depend on how and who directs and operates it in actual working. The administration may constitute only 3 per cent. and 1.48 per cent. of the populations of Bihar and of India respectively, but it is because they are virtual Directors of the Nation's destiny that Britons and Indians, Hindus and Muslims, are competing so eagerly for their due or undue shares in it. Whatever side or false issues and war cries or false alarms may be raised in the battle thus joined, the plain issue remains the same; "and the Reforms have, by bringing India face to face with problems of self-government, precipitated the struggle for powers and emoluments of office and, in fact, for control of the entire machinery of Government," as says "India in 1926–27." As there is more and more of withdrawal by a dislodgable Bureaucracy, as more and more people new to power and responsible politics come into formal sway, the more will the experience and training, the technical skill and administrative efficiency, of officers be effectively used and be valued. As we approximate more to self-government, the more will the influence of these guides, philosophers and friends of the public bodies and leaders increase in the first instance; and the more will there be action and reaction of opinion and actions public and official.

It is by way of recognition of these factors in present and recent politics that the Lee Commission has emphasised the need for Indianisation of the Services and as a present ideal, fixed the percentage of Indians in the Superior Services at 50 per cent. in the I.C.S., 50 per cent. in Police, 75 per cent. in Forest, 60 per cent. in Irrigation, 50 per cent. in Customs, 75 per cent. in Telegraph and 75 per cent. in Railways. In actual working out, however, and because of refusal to fix a higher ratio of immediate recruitments, these percentages are nowhere like established. Government of India had to admit in 1924 that the percentage of Indians in the Superior Services under it was 20 per cent. for Hindus and 2·9 per cent. for Muslims. The Commission, however, grievously failed to carry this policy of fixation of ratios to its logical conclusion; and omitted to fix similar definite ratio also between the Hindus and Muslims and any other minority communities sufficiently important in any province. That this fixation is even more important called for and salutary is proved undeniably by unfortunate incidents and positions in the different services.

If such is the position while a centralised Bureaucracy still reigns supreme, how much more will it be so under Indianised and self-governing conditions, when the present checks are removed and "the powerful central idea of Government by majority" comes into full operation. Unless a fixed, frank and uncompromising ratio is mutually settled between at least the two communities who aspire to Indian self-Government, and accepted and legalised by Government orders and enactments, not only will constant bickerings soil our records of self-Government but the greatest of all human tyrannies will reign supreme in India; the tyranny of a people over a people under unmitigated and disorganised democracy. Policies, however generous and humane or progressive will be executed exclusively for the benefit and to perpetuate the monopolies of the majority communities by the preponderantly Hindu officers, and their actions will be confirmed by Hindu Ministers, Councils, Chairmen of Local Bodies. Any remedial measures will be immediately whittled down and rendered nugatory, and India will become a sorry spectacle of a Hindu oligarchy.

The Muslims of Bihar and Orissa demand that they should get 33 per cent. of all posts under Government, University and all local bodies (except in Orissa and Chota Nagpur where their due proportion is to be doubled as already stated).

The present position in Bihar and Orissa is far from satisfactory, either in gazetted or non-gazetted and lower services. On the 1st January, 1928, there was not a single Muslim officer on the Bench of the High Court or the Superior Services in Medical Departments. The total percentage of Muslim in all the five superior services was 3 per cent. against Hindus, 22 per cent. and Europeans and Anglo-Indians 75 per cent. In the gazetted services of all the 18 or 19 departments of the Province, Muslims were 16 per cent. to Hindus 64 per cent., and Europeans 20 per cent.; Muslims having poorest representation in the Imperial (6 to 54 Hindus), subordinate examinations (37 to 113), education (26 to 152), medical (14 to 104) and public health (4 to 30) as against the Hindus. In the Upper and Lower Division of Secretariat Muslims are outnumbered 6 to 1 by non-Muslims (of whole and overwhelming majority are Hindus and Kayesths). Total for both divisions is 58 Muslims against 332 non-Muslims. The worst disproportion for Muslims is in the Irrigation, Civil Hospital and P.W.D. (Drawing Section) where they are 1 in each as against 18, 20 and 12 respectively of non-Muslims; and in the Departments of Education (4 to 23), Public Instruction (6 to 31), Excise (2 to 16), Industry (3 to 8) and P.W.D. (General) (5 to 28).

The position in the other lower services of the Departments and District and Divisional and sub-Divisional Headquarters can be well imagined.

Sir Malcolm Hailey, as Home Member, laid it down in 1923 by public declaration that it was "the definite policy of the Government of India to prevent the preponderance of any community, caste or creed in the services under it." Local Governments followed up this salutary lead; and the Bengal Government in 1925 laid down by order of Governor-in-Council that in 45 per cent. vacancies filled by direct recruitment, Government reserves the right to appoint Mohommadans alone provided they possessed the minimum qualifications or secure only the qualifying marks in competitive tests. In the Bengal Secretariat staff 33 per cent. of all vacancies are reserved for Muhammadans as the very minimum proportion to be immediately established. The Bombay Government has made it obligatory in all recruitment to give "a fair proportion to Muslim in the Presidency proper and 50 per cent. in Sind." The Madras Government has "accepted the policy of giving preference to candidates from communities, which have not got a due share of appointments in Public Service, and accepted the proposal of the Muhammadan Staff Selection Board that in proposing lists of candidates suitable for clerical as well as other appointments in public service the following percentages should be adopted as a general rule: Non-Brahmins 40 per cent., Muslims 20 per cent., Indians 10 per cent., Depressed Classes and others 10 per cent." The U.P. Government notified on 29.5.23 that of the "6 vacancies to be filled in the Provincial Executive service, 2 shall go to the Muslims." Similar acceptance of Sir M. Hailey's policy has been made by all Local Governments, except Bihar and Orissa and Assam (where, however, it is now under consideration).

In the N.W.F. where Hindus represent 3 per cent. Lala Lajput Rai led a deputation to the Viceroy claiming 50 per cent. Hindu officers and men in the police and executive forces and it is believed that the Viceroy promised him and is actually giving 30 per cent. for Hindus at least in the former service. What then is there so disproportionate in the Bihar and Orissa 11 per cent. Muslims demanding representation at 33 per cent. ?

The Muhammadans merely want what their numerical plus communal importance entitles them to; and are entitled to very much more in view of the cumulative exploitation of past decades, and the greater "sympathy and protection" needed by the masses and classes of their community economically and politically. They will certainly not be satisfied with less if their rising generation is to be prevented from sowing the seeds of discontent or drifting into anarchism and thus starting the reformed administrations and self-governing and responsible institutions "with a very heavy handicap" indeed.

To prevent this is our most earnest and fervent desire. Similar desire has been expressed by Government, if not carried into effect as much as we have a right to claim. And it is a happy augury for New India that at least some honourable exceptions among our Hindu patriots have fully realised this fact. An aristocrat, a bureaucrat and majority community leader like the Maharaja Dhiraj of Burdwan has recently and unequivocally reviewed the suggestion made by a Brahmin Judge of Madras that to secure equity, peace and fairplay in India, and to help the harmonious evolution and socio-political functioning of our nationhood, 50 per cent. of all posts and of all official and public positions in all grades and sections and of service should be reserved for the Muslim Community after providing for similar guaranteed representation out of the common total to other considerable minority communities. After this need we add more than to point out that in order to bring up Muslim representation to the 55 per cent. prescribed by his solemn promise to Muslims, the Congress leader, the late Mr. C. R. Das, insisted that Muslims should get 100 per cent. of immediate recruitment till the above ratio was passed.

Local Bodies.—Far more important than even the Legislatures is the growth of self-Government and nation building through local bodies. If Indian politicians and constitution makers would devote more than the scant attention now paid to these bodies they will earn the undying gratitude of the 90 per cent. poor and disorganised humanity that lives in India's 685,665 villages, of the 80 per cent. population that depends almost directly on agriculture or the, at least, 14 per cent. of cottage industrialists and rural traders and of landless agricultural and other labourers whose number has swelled from 1 to over 4 crores in the last three decades. Then alone will Parliament and the Political leaders absolve themselves from the blame now attaching to them that in spite of all tall talk of trusteeship and national and social service their efforts at reform and progress are almost exclusively focussed on the insignificant proportion of population in the administration, professions and arts and the public forces who in Bihar and Orissa, for instance, number only 3 per cent., 7 per cent. and ·3 per cent. respectively.

Lord Rosebery even in England complains that the obsession of the best minds of the nation with higher politics results in a tragic waste of energy and resources and in a dangerous neglect of county councils and rural organisations. How tragic the effect of worse neglect of similar institutions and of rural and agriculturists development is in India will appear from the following figures showing the tremendous populations and growingly extensive public funds and departments of day-to-day public life which are intimately controlled by local bodies in Bihar and Orissa:—

1925–26.	Total No.	Population under them.	Total expenses through them.	Educational expenses under them.	Elected members.	Nominated members.	Non-Mohammadan Chairman.	Mohammadan Chairman.
Municipalities ...	58	1,171,003	40,73,950	2,75,053	780	89	57	1
District Boards...	19	31,522,441	146,04,629	40 lacs	466	80	18	1
Local Boards ...	46	26,336,880	Several lacs		408	120	45	1
Union Boards and Committees ...	59	295,409	1,41,394	15,693	318	86	Practically all.	X

Municipalities spend roughly 8 per cent. of total incomes on Education, 16 per cent. on Public Works, 30 per cent. on Conservancy, 8 per cent. on Establishment, 6 per cent. on Lighting, 7 per cent. on Water Supply, 2½ per cent. on Drainage and 11 per cent. on Medical relief. They spend Rs. 38,015/– on school buildings and Rs. 2,55,290 on Primary Education alone.

As to District Boards, the opening of Primary schools rests with them. Government declared on 28.7.21 that they spend roughly 29·5 per cent. on Education, 15·9 per cent. on Medical Relief, 43·6 public works (schoolings, buildings, &c.), 2·2 per cent. on Establishment, 1·7 per cent. on Veterinary, ·01 per cent. on Vaccination and 2·7 per cent. on Water Supply. They control 2,292 miles of metalled and 14,611 of unmetalled roads and maintain 466 Dispensaries and 22,791 Schools with 730,360 pupils.

Union Committees spend 54 thousands on establishment, 19½ on Village Roads, 4¼ on Drinking Water, 29 on Drainage and Conservancy, ¼ Dispensaries and 16 on Education.

And yet we find one Chairman each in all the three classes of Local Bodies. The number of Muslims elected in Municipalities is very low, sinking down to 1 at Purulia and nil at Puri, but still we find not a single Muslim nominated in 11 Municipalities.

Regarding District Board elections we find Government admitting in 1924 that "Muslims were keenly disappointed at the results in which hardly any of their candidates were successful," and in 1927 that "their position still further worsened." In four of them not a single Muslim was elected and in nine only one or two out of an average of 25 to 30 elected in each of them. The position in Local Boards elections was even worse as there was not a single Mohammadan in 27 and only one or two in 12 out of an average of 10 to 15 elected in each of them.

This although for instance in District Boards election from 1 to 28 Muslims stood for election in each of the Boards of Bihar.

After this we cannot be surprised to find the grievous iniquities against Muslims in all distribution of public funds, contracts, employments, educational and philanthropic expenditure and establishment of Urdu Schools and Maktabs. Such is the result of joint electorate system in the only department of self-government in which it exists in Bihar and Orissa. In the expenditure by District Boards on Middle Vernacular and Primary Schools for instance we find only Rs. 60,191/– spent on Urdu Schools and Maktabs and Rs. 11,63,472/– on Hindi Schools and Patshalas, being 47,192/708,192 in Bihar proper where Muslims are about 13 per cent., 11,381/480,405 in Chota Nagpur where they are 7·5 per cent., 1,618/174,875 in Orissa where they are about 2·5 per cent.

Again, regarding Chupra District Board, it was stated that when elections were first started "members said that they would open Schools and no injustice would be done to Muhammadans and the election programme of 1924 promised to open Urdu Lower Primary and Upper Primary Schools and this hope was emphasised in the 1927 programme; but nothing has been so far done. Hindu members later said they would give money for Muhammadan education when Government grants-in-aid were received, but though (very generous) grants are now received nothing is given for furniture for Maktabs or buildings for Urdu Schools; while Patshalas are being constructed and Hindi and Sanskrit Schools established every year. The programme was an Urdu School in each Muslim village; but only one School was started in 1925; and a competitive Hindi Middle English School was started in close proximity supported by powerful Hindus and 8,000/– spent on its buildings. Muslims are told there are no funds for them and dirty attempts are made to break up this new School. The Chupra Muslims therefore pray that quarter share of Board funds should be inviolably given for Muslim education, quarter of the members should be Muslims and Chairman and Vice-Chairman should be Muslims alternately and the Membership should be confined to real residents of villages and not townsmen who are not true representatives.

Similar tales could be told of many District, Local and Municipal Boards all over the Province, of lack of Muslim share in the now extensive and summary powers of the local bodies and the ridiculous share in the expenditure for Muslim Schools, Teachers and Educational Establishment. In one case the Government did all it could, to expel from a Board a Hindu member who has been actually sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment, but for admittedly communal reasons this was staunchly and unitedly opposed by the overwhelming Hindu majority. For specific and national reason we refrain from giving actual details of majority high-handedness in passing aggressively anti-Muslim regulations and orders regarding the slaughterhouses, hawking of beef and even mutton.

Muslim, therefore, demand that the extended and growing summary powers given to local bodies should be constitutionally subject to the proviso that :—

1. 25 per cent. of the members be Muslims (except in the Orissa and Chota Nagpur districts where Muslim population should be represented by double its ratio in each area).
2. That 25 per cent. of all expenditure on education should be reserved for Muslims in order to help them to make up the leeway of years of neglect and after this is made up should always bear a fair proportion to their population.
3. That 33 per cent. of all employees and teachers under each body be Muslims.
4. That all regulations and orders affecting the Muslims should be subject to approval of 75 per cent. of the Muslim members and the Local Government should decide whenever there is any dispute as to whether or not any measure falls under this category.
5. If the Chairman is Hindu, the Vice-Chairman should be Muslim and on alternate election this position be reversed.
6. That there should be 33 per cent. Muslims among the auditors employed under the Local Fund Audit Act and that all auditors be definitely instructed to report on the ear-marking and actual expenditure of the Muslim share in the Local Board's budgets every year.

Nor are these demands preposterous when we find the League of Nations insisting as a fundamental clause in Czecho-Slovakian Constitution as already quoted, that "specific sums from the budget of Local or other public authorities shall be devoted to education, religion or philanthropy with a due share in its enjoyment secured to such minorities."

The Hindu Minister for Local Self-Government in Bihar and Orissa in announcing the Government's policy on Mr. Naim's L. S. G. Bill said: "I fully realise the anxiety of the Muslim community and their apprehension that they have no chance of representation unless they get separate electorates."

That apart, however, from communal lapses and such rural neglect as is common to modern world such extension of powers and resources to local bodies and Government responsibility for facilities for much more technical help and educative propaganda is fully deserved, is admitted by the Government in its review of the Administration of Municipalities and Local and District Boards in 1921 to 1926. It is admitted that in the last few years "general efficiency was higher . . . there has been improvement regarding disposal of audit objections (some local bodies) are improving, good and smooth working, and others excellent after three years' bankruptcy and demoralisation and making rapid progress in sanitation, conservancy, roads, water supply, markets and electric installations, etc. True there are exceptions where there are party factions, neglect, apathy and even in rare cases misappropriation and lavish remission and dilatory realisations." But these are after all only exceptions that prove the rule that Local Self-Government in India is slowly but surely coming into its own.

Growth of Education.—In the political evolution and progress of a country educational extension must always play an important part. Without sound education the electorate will not be able to intelligently exercise its powers. In order to create an intelligent electorate, conscious of its powers and responsibilities, it is necessary that the distribution of facilities for education must be adequate to all communities.

So far as education of Mussalmans in this province is concerned, they are fairly advanced in collegiate and higher education. But in the middle stage the proportion of Mussalmans is very low, the number of Moslem pupils in middle stage being 2,242 or 7·3 per cent. of total number of pupils in middle stage. This is mainly due to the absence of facilities for instruction in Urdu in most middle schools. Out of 591 middle schools there are only 178 which provide Urdu teaching. This state of things must be remedied and adequate facilities must be provided for Urdu teaching in middle schools.

There is great demand among the Moslem population for primary education as evidenced by the increase in the number of recognised Maktabs to 3,477. The Maktab is a primary school in which instruction is given in Urdu and in the religious principles of Islam. These primary institutions are very essential for the development of religious instincts and the growth of Moslem culture. But the number of these institutions form a very sad contrast to the total number of 27,428 primary schools in the province. The grant to Maktabs was only Rs. 3,19,579 as compared with the grant of Rs. 50,61,320 to primary schools as a whole in 1926–27.

A reference may be made here as to the needs of various areas in the matter of primary education. In Purnea, where the Moslem population is above 40 per cent., out of 12 Middle Schools there is not one which may offer facilities for Urdu teaching and out of 133 Primary Schools there are only six Urdu Primary Schools and out of 1,317 Lower Primary Schools there are only 327 Urdu Lower Primary Schools. In the Santhal Parganas, where the Moslem population is about 25 per cent., out of seven Middle Schools there is not one providing Urdu teaching and out of 68 Upper Primary Schools there is not a single Urdu Primary School and out of 1,229 Lower Primary Schools there are only 105 Urdu Maktabs. The total expenses on education in this district is Rs. 1,41,999 while only Rs. 5,228 is spent on Moslem education. In Champaran, where the Moslem population is about 20 per cent., out of 18 Middle Schools there is only one Urdu Middle School and out of 1,187 Lower Primary Schools there are only 194 Urdu Maktabs. In Bhagalpur, where the Moslem population is 10 per cent., out of six Middle Schools there is not one Urdu Middle School and out of 175 Upper Primary Schools there are only six Urdu Upper Primary Schools and out of 1,390 Lower Primary Schools there are only 123 Urdu Maktabs. Owing to inadequate facilities in this area 20 Moslem girls have to join Sanskrit Schools in the Municipality and 121 Girls Hindi Schools in the villages and 18 Moslem boys Hindi Middle Schools and 672 Moslem boys have to join Upper Primary Hindi Schools. In Hazaribagh, where the Moslem is over 10 per cent., out of nine Middle Schools there is only one Urdu Middle School and out of 55 Upper Primary Schools there is only one Urdu Upper Primary School and out of 765 Lower Primary Schools there are only 64 Urdu Primary Schools. In Ranchi, where the Moslem population is 10 per cent., out of 13 Vernacular Middle Schools there is only one Urdu Middle School and out of 101 Upper Primary Schools there are only two Urdu Primary Schools. In this area 3,489 Moslem pupils are receiving education in Lower Maktabs and there is no provision for them at all for further education. In Palamau, where the Moslem population is only 10 per cent., out of five Vernacular Middle Schools there is not a single Urdu Middle School and out of 39 Upper Primary Schools there is only one Urdu Upper Primary School, which is inadequate for 2,791 Moslem boys receiving education in Urdu Maktabs. In Patna, where the Moslem population is only 10 per cent., out of 17 Vernacular Middle Schools there is only one Urdu Middle School. It is difficult to imagine how one Urdu Middle School can provide education for 9,330 Moslem boys who are being educated in Urdu Maktabs. In Saran, where the Moslem population is over 10 per cent., out of 24 Vernacular Middle Schools there are only five Urdu Middle Schools and out of 104 Upper Primary Schools there are only five Urdu Upper Primary Schools and out of 1,342 Lower Primary Schools there are only 83 Urdu Maktabs. This state of affairs calls for serious consideration and how could there be Swaraj or responsible Government when elementary privileges of education are withheld from an important section of the population. Provision should be made for adequate facilities in the matter of Moslem education and an equitable system of grants and grants-in-aid for purposes of Moslem education be devised.

Language.—Nations and races are always proud and zealous of their languages and of the culture, traditions and genius which it enshrines. Even in Britain we find Miss L. George triumphing with her public speeches in Celtic and the Irish New State Dail Erivicum, laying stress on the employees to patronise the Irish tongue. In Europe we find Allies Policy crystallised in such clauses of the constitutions given by the League of Nations as "No restriction shall be imposed on the free use by any Polish national, of any language in private intercourse, in commerce, in religion, in the Press or in Publication of any kind or at any public meeting . . . in the Primary Schools the instruction shall be given to the children of such Polish nationals through the medium of their own language . . . every citizen possesses the right of safeguarding his nationality and of cultivating his national language and customs. . . . Similar clauses appear in the constitutions of all other New European States under the League. We have already given brief sketch of the constitution in Canada where the tenacity of the French specially since 1857 was at last rewarded in 1867 by full Statutory recognition of their language in schools, Legislatures and public offices. We have also proved similar recognition in modern and ancient European States of fundamental laws safeguarding the use of the language of even 5 per cent. populations in Courts, public laws and regulations, documents and official correspondence and in all Court proceedings, orders and petitions. For instance we read in 1919 "Adequate facilities shall be given to Austrian nationals of non-German speech for the use of their language, either orally or in writing before the courts," and in 1922 in the Protection of Minorities clauses of the League at Geneva, "adequate facilities shall be given to Polish nationals of non-Polish speech for the use of their language before the courts."

After this no true Nationalist can be honestly proud of the majority tyranny which is frantically trying to decree that Urdu which is even more our national Lingua Franca than Persian or Hindi or Sanskrit (and which had its origin in India's soil and its development through a succession of brilliant Hindu poets and prose writers as well as Muslim servants and religious and historical authors) should not be even permissively and optionally allowed to be used in the courts of Bihar proper where Hindu gentry talk as fine and flowing Urdu as Muslims and find it as great a difficulty to affect the modern Sanskritised Arya Hindi as an Englishman would do to talk or read or write Anglo-Saxon. All this simply because Urdu language happens not only to be the daily used mother tongue of Bihari Hindu and Muslim but also happens in the case of Muslims all over India to enshrine their common culture and thus unites the Muslims of Madras with those of Peshawar. The history of this problem is tragic. India had for seven centuries till 1837 Persian for its court and official language and Urd (whether in Dev-Nagri or Persian character) as its everyday Lingua Franca. In a vain attempt to establish English as the Lingua Franca and as a first step to displacement of the remnants of the previous Indian culture Persian was abolished in 1837 as the court language, and Urdu substituted in Persian character in its place in all courts of North-Western India and Bihar and Bengali and Oriya for Bengal and Orissa. Then in 1881 Hindi in Dev-Nagri or Kaythi character was substituted in Bihar courts and official proceedings. This roused a storm of protest and the famous Babu Guru Prasad Sen of Patna died fighting for the restoration of Urdu and leading deputations of Hindus and Muslims to Government for it. Hindus and Muslims, however, continued to use Urdu in daily and social life in spite of the official taboo so much so that the Acting Governor of Bihar and Orissa in Council in 1921 observed that "though this order (substituting Hindi) has now been enforced for over 40 years it is still extremely doubtful whether they have had any appreciable effect in simplifying and making intelligible the language of the Bihar and Orissa Courts, and it may be safely taken that the language now used is to all intents and purposes the same as was current before the promulgation of the orders of 1881." The protest against displacement of Urdu continued unabated and in 1925 the Council motion on its behalf was supported by 19 members of whom nine were Hindus, six other Hindus remaining neutral. In January, 1928, a resolution in favour of optional use of Urdu in all courts of Bihar proper was passed. But unfortunately in the storm of present communal tension this moderate and permissive resolution is being blindly opposed by the Hindu majority. Hindus who themselves in private write and converse in Urdu although in court and official precincts they are forced to painfully transcribe the same into Hindi character, the language, as the Governor said in 1921, remaining beautiful Urdu. This although in the years 1918–22, 50 per cent. of the University candidates (of whom very large majority are Hindus) have taken Urdu (in Persian character) as their optional language; and in one month alone out of the documents put up for registration in the 90 per cent. Hindu Bihar 25,000 were in Urdu, 14,000 in Hindi and 140 in English; and 60 per cent. of the Dakhil Kharij papers in courts and Title Suits are in Urdu; and all the previous judicial records and survey and settlement records and papers are in Urdu and are under constant reference by Urdu-knowing officers, clerks and lawyers. Under such circumstances it is pitiable to find Hindus bringing out bogies of administrative confusion and Government (while protesting neutrality) disappointing Muslims by snatching this chance of again pressing for establishing English as the "only court language and Lingua Franca" in a Province where out of 340 lacs no more than one lac is even elementarily literate in English.

MEMORANDUM BY SIR GANESH DUTTA SINGH, M.L.C.

We will not further labour out a controversy which is too transparently a matter of political negotiation rather than deliberate reason; but which has assumed a wholly undue importance owing to the present "accidents of place and personnel" and the cross currents of communal and official tendencies

Elsewhere we have dealt with the subtle attempt made in local bodies and educational authorities to drive our Urdu from the schools, establish no Urdu Primary Schools and Maktabs so far as possible, compel Muslim boys and even girls to learn only Hindi by not providing Urdu teachers in spite of strict departmental circulars; and even refuse library books, furniture and buildings, grants and grants-in-aid to Urdu Primary and Middle and Orthodox Schools.

Comment is superfluous and would only give another opening for constitution makers to "despair of a constitution where the communities insist even on talking in artificially 'separate' languages." The importance of this aspect of the question cannot be too highly emphasised in a country where the two main communities had only this one linguistic element of nationhood in common and differ so vastly in all other nation factors, e.g., racial extraction, religious profession, political and cultural traditions, and in their whole historical past beyond the last six centuries or so.

Bihar and Orissa Muslims, therefore, demand that like the 5 per cent. Italian minority of Switzerland and the French Canadians they should be constitutionally and by Act of Parliament guaranteed :—

(1) In the use of the Urdu in all Courts and official proceedings and the promulgation of all orders and announcements of the Government and all Local Bodies in Urdu also.

(2) In the free use of Urdu in the proceedings of the Councils and all Local Bodies.

(3) In the use of Urdu as the medium of instruction in all classes of Primary and Middle Schools where Muslims are in the majority and the appointment of a proportionate number of Urdu teachers where they are not.

(4) In a due share in all educational philanthropic expenditure from all public and local boards funds for Urdu schools and teachers.

(5) In state patronage of Urdu language, literature and learning and in the University and other higher educational bodies.

(6) In fullest liberty to use Urdu in all their complaints and written statements as well as all petitions to departments, offices and officers under the Government and local bodies.

A Memorandum on the Indian Constitution by SIR GANESH DUTTA SINGH, M.L.C., Bihar and Orissa.

I.—GOAL OF THE INDIAN CONSTITUTION.

The Goal of the Indian Constitution is a federation with full Dominion Status to be reached through an intermediate state, outlined below :—

It is more to the advantage of the country to remain linked with the British Empire than to sever the connection. If the country is left alone, she may develop into a state of chaos and may not be able to retain her independence. The position of British dominions beyond the seas such as Canada and Australia is much safer and more secure than that of several countries which, though independent, are suffering from internal troubles.

The country has not sufficiently developed to maintain her own navy, army and other means of self-protection without British assistance. Moreover, as a member of the British Commonwealth, she will have the advantage of assistance and support from the British Army, Navy and Air Force at much less cost than would be involved in the maintenance of independent military and naval forces. Canada, Australia and New Zealand cannot maintain their independence if left to themselves. Dominion Status will in fact give advantages to this country which are out of all proportion to the sentimental objections which may be raised against it.

The Montagu-Chelmsford Reform Scheme contemplates gradual constitutional development in this country; and in order to achieve it a new form of Government called Dyarchy was introduced for a period of 10 years. In the course of this gradual development there ought to be an intermediate stage between Dyarchy and Dominion Status. The scheme outlined below will fit in as a suitable training ground for the people in the management of their affairs on the road to complete Dominion Status as the final goal in the constitutional development of this country.

II.—SCHEME FOR A FEDERAL CONSTITUTION WITH LIMITED DOMINION STATUS.

I. The Secretary of State and Government of India—

(1) The Secretary of State (under the Crown) will retain control only over Central subjects 1–5 (vide Schedule I, Devolution Rules). (Note 1.)

(2) The Government of India will have complete autonomy in all the other Central subjects.

II. The Government of India—

(3) There will be a Governor-General who will appoint his own Cabinet. He will also appoint all Judges of the Indian High Courts. (Note 2.)

(4) The Governor-General's relation to his Cabinet will be on the same lines as at present. (Note 3.)

(5) The Governor-General and Cabinet will have complete control over Central finances and Central services (except those connected with subjects 1–5), subject only to the provision of safeguards for the rights and privileges of existing officers of All-India Services, and to the powers of the Indian legislature. There will be no fresh recruitment of the Imperial Services by the Secretary of State (except for Central subjects 1–5).

Notes—1. Items Nos. 1–5 of the Central Subjects deal with the relations between the Government of India and foreign powers and with the defence of the country; and it is therefore desirable that the powers of the Government of India shall continue to be subject to the control of the Secretary of State and of the British Parliament as at present.

2. As the Government of India will have, with the above exception, complete autonomy, the Governor-General will have power to appoint the members of his Cabinet and Judges for the Provincial High Courts. It is true that at present these officers are appointed on his recommendation; but such limited powers will not fit in with the autonomous character of the Government of India.

3. Without the power of the purse and control over the public services autonomy means nothing. At present the power of the Government of India in these matters is greatly restricted and they have to consult the Secretary of State at almost every step. But a Central Government of India autonomous, with the one exception specified above, is essential to the creation of real provincial autonomy.

III.—THE INDIAN LEGISLATURE WILL CONSIST OF TWO CHAMBERS.

(1) The Council of State will consist of—

(a) Members for life by right. (Note 1.)

(b) Members elected for a term of ten years, and (Note 2.)

(c) The Commander-in-Chief and the Governor-General's Cabinet, members by right for their term of office.

There will be a President of the Council of State appointed by the Governor-General sitting with his Cabinet. (Note 3.)

(2) The Legislative Assembly will consist of—

(a) Members elected for a term of five years by the provinces. (Note 5.)

(b) A few experts as temporary members, nominated by the Governor-General and Cabinet, for the discussion of particular subjects. (Note 6.)

(c) The Commander-in-Chief and the members of the Governor-General's Cabinet. (Note 7.)

There will be no nominated members, official or non-official. (Note 4.)

There will be a President of the Assembly, elected by it for a term of years.

(3) The Indian legislature will have power to legislate on certain specified subjects, viz., Central subjects, subject to the control of the Crown and Secretary of State regarding subjects 1–5 only. (Note 8.)

(4) The budget will be laid before both Chambers as at present; and the procedure for legislation and the powers of the Governor-General in relation to the budget and to legislation will be on the same lines as at present, except that the control of the Secretary of State and the Crown will have been removed. (Note 9.)

Notes.—1. The utility of official representation and nomination has passed away. Henceforward there should be representation either by right or by election. The constitution of chambers such as the British House of Lords and Senates in most other countries does not permit of nomination. There are no elected members of the British House of Lords, and in Italy the members of the Senate are appointed for life, while in most other countries they are elected for a term. It is desirable to combine both these systems in India. Election will provide an opening for deserving candidates who cannot gain admission otherwise to this august assembly.

2. The composition of the Council of State is described in more detail in section IX, and the method of election of the elected members in section X(D). These sections and the notes on them will indicate more clearly the nature of this body. The life of the elected members of the upper chamber is twice that of those of the lower chamber. In all countries there is a similar provision.

3. At present the President is appointed by the Governor-General. But it seems advisable that he should take the advice of his cabinet. The Assembly and Legislative Councils already elect their own Presidents, and have not abused their powers.

4. It is desirable to give more responsibility than is at present given to the representatives of the people in the Assembly. The official and the nominated blocks create a spirit of hostility to Government, while they stunt the growth of a spirit of responsibility and of a healthy party system in the elected members.

5. The way in which these members will be elected is described in section X(C); and details of the composition of the Assembly in section VIII. These sections and my notes thereon may be referred to. It will consist of 250 members, including 240 elected members, on the basis of roughly one member to a population of 10,00,000. This province will return 35 elected members.

6. Occasions on which experts will be required are, e.g., during the discussion of a bill regarding some special subject.

7. I have no objection if they are members of both chambers; but dual membership would be rather anomalous. The Commander-in-Chief and the members of the cabinet will be members of any one of the Chambers with right of entrance to the other.

8. I have deliberately confined legislation by the Central legislature to specified subjects, so that Provincial legislatures may have freedom for all other subjects, and not vice versa. Otherwise the Central Government is likely to be always claiming the right to interfere with the rights of the provincial legislatures. I wish to leave the latter as wide powers as possible. I have not attempted a new definition of the present central subjects, though these will probably have to be restricted, e.g., Audit need not perhaps necessarily be central; nor civil law. (Civil customary law is in danger of becoming too rigid owing to excessive centralisation and the application of case law). Items 17–20, 43, 46–7 of the present list will also require modification.

9. I have intentionally left the details of the relation between the two chambers of the Central legislature rather as it stands at present. I have suggested details regarding the relations of the two provincial chambers in section V. The reasons for difference of treatment in the two cases are that in the provincial legislature the Cabinet is responsible to the Council on strict Parliamentary lines. The Governor-General's Cabinet is not. Wider powers of control must therefore be left to the Governor-General than to the Governor; and his responsibilities and those of his Cabinet will differ from those of the Governors and their Cabinets.

IV.—PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS.

(1) The provincial Governments will have complete autonomy in all provincial subjects.

(2) There will be no " reserved " subjects. (Note 1.)

(3) There will be a Governor in each province appointed by the Crown. The Governor will appoint his Prime Minister from among the elected members of the Legislative Council. (Note 2.)

(4) The Prime Minister will select the other Cabinet Ministers from among the elected members of the Legislative Council.

(5) The Ministers will be jointly responsible for the administration of provincial subjects. (Note 3.)

(6) The Governor and Cabinet will have complete control over the provincial finances and provincial services, subject only to the powers of the provincial legislature. (Note 4.)

(7) There will be no further recruitment of the Imperial Services for serving in the provinces.

(8) The rights and privileges of existing members of the Imperial Services will be fully safeguarded.

Notes.—1. Dyarchy has been tried and found defective. In practice it is difficult to divide Government into two halves. It has created unnecessary jealousy among the officers in charge of different departments. The Transferred Subjects are generally administered and inspected by officers of the Imperial Services. A tendency is noticeable on the part of the officers of the Reserved Side to find fault with the Transferred Departments and to display bias, conscious or unconscious, against the administration of them. There is a scramble between the Members and Ministers for funds.

The distinction between Members and Ministers is another objectionable feature of dyarchy. The latter are considered inferior to the Members of the Executive Council. The Government of India Act has also made this undesirable distinction between the position of Ministers and Members.

This form of Government also stands in the way of the development of a party Government.

The recommendations of Ministers in certain matters (e.g., in the matter of conferring titles, etc.), are restricted by the suggestions of the local officials, who serve under the Reserved side of Government; and frequently Government is therefore hampered by consideration of the prestige of officers of these services.

Though the administration has been carried on with apparent success in this province, this has only been rendered possible by a degree of forbearance on the part of the Ministry which cannot be expected to continue much longer. Admittedly this form of Government was adopted as a preliminary step for further reforms; and the next step must logically lead to provincial autonomy, in which Government under a Cabinet system must have complete control over all the provincial subjects and provincial services

When the dyarchy is abolished, the distinction between the Transferred and Reserved subjects will automatically disappear.

2. The cabinet will be constituted on British parliamentary lines. The Governor will appoint a Chief or Prime Minister out of the elected members and he in turn will form his Cabinet from the elected members of the Council.

The members of the Cabinet may properly be called Ministers, as in England. They will all be nominated out of the elected members according to the British parliamentary system.

3. The Ministers will be jointly responsible to the Council as is the Cabinet in England to Parliament.

4. Complete power over the provincial purse is also very essential. The provincial finances cannot be improved under the existing restrictions. When the province will have provincial autonomy, it must have control over all its servants. Nor can any Government control servants whom they cannot appoint, remove or dismiss, and who will continue to be subject to the control of the Government of India and the Secretary of State. Of course, their existing rights and privileges should not be affected. But recruitment for all the Imperial services (except for the Army and Navy) must cease, and provincial Governments must henceforth recruit for provincial services only.

It is very essential to safeguard the interest of the existing members of the Imperial Services. As future recruitment will be made by the provincial Government, the number of Imperial Service men will go on decreasing every year; and the arrangement is temporary and it will not last beyond 20 or 25 years at the most. It will be very unfair not to safeguard their interest. This may be done amongst other ways by making, if necessary, their salaries non-voted as at present. Their terms of service should not in any way be disregarded. If it is done it will amount to a breach of faith. It is quite open to them to retire on proportionate pension as they are doing at present.

V.—THE PROVINCIAL LEGISLATURE WILL CONSIST OF TWO CHAMBERS.

(1) The Provincial Senate will consist of—

(a) Members for life by right.
(b) Members elected for a term of ten years.

There will be a President of the Senate appointed by the Governor and Cabinet.

(2) The Legislative Council will consist of—

(a) Members elected for a term of five years.
(b) A few experts as temporary members, nominated by the Governor and Cabinet, for the discussion of particular subjects.

There will be no nominated members, official or non-official. (Note 2.)

There will be a President of the Legislative Council elected by it for a term of years.

(3) The entire provincial budget will be submitted annually to the vote of the Council in the form of demands for grants.

(4) If the restoration of any demand to which the Council has refused assent or of any reduction in any demand which the Council has made is in the opinion of the Governor essential to the discharge of his responsibilities for the administration, the Governor may require that this demand shall be laid before the Senate. (Note 3.)

(5) The Senate will then consider the budget in relation to this demand, and may restore it, whereupon the Government will have power, in relation to such demand, to act as if it had been assented to.

(6) The Governor will have power in cases of emergency to authorise such expenditure as may be in his opinion necessary for the safety or tranquility of his province. (Note 4.)

(7) All laws imposing or authorising the imposition of any new tax will be laid first before the Council and then before the Senate. No such laws may be introduced except by Government. (Note 5.)

The Senate may refuse assent to any such law. (Note 6.)

(8) All laws other than the above will be laid first before the Council and then before the Senate.

The Senate may refuse assent to any such law or may modify it and send it back so modified for reconsideration by the Council.

(9) The Governor may call a joint meeting of both chambers in the circumstances provided for in section 67 (3), Government of India Act.

(10) All laws before they become valid must receive the assent of the Governor. (Note 7.)

(11) The provincial legislature will have power to legislate on all subjects, except those expressly reserved for legislation by the Government of India. (Note 8.)

Notes.—1. The provincial legislatures should consist of two chambers as in most other countries. The Lower Chamber will be more representative in character and the number of members will be larger. The Upper Chamber should as in other countries, consist of men of position holding sober views. The main function of the Upper Chamber should be to exercise a sobering influence on the administration. An irresponsible or hasty step on the part of the Lower Chamber may create trouble if there is no check provided by the Upper Chamber, and this check is more necessary in India than in most other countries, owing to the existence of an electorate not yet trained to political ideas. A two-chamber system which has been justified in France, the United States of America, and England will be essential to successful parliamentary Government in this province.

2. The disadvantages of the official block have already been mentioned. It prevents the growth of a party system. It encourages irresponsible criticism of Government. It is undemocratic and nominated members do not really help the communities whom they represent. The official view will be represented by the Ministers. There is no official block either in the British Parliament or in other countries. Its sole purpose was to safeguard the interests of Government under the Dyarchy.

3. This and the succeeding provision are required as a check on hasty action by the Council until the Council has acquired a parliamentary tradition. Dyarchy has provided no training in this respect. In fact it has inevitably led to irresponsibility on the part of the opposition, and has often converted all non-official members into an opposition. The retention of the Governor's power of restoration of budget demands would render cabinet Government impossible. So the check must be provided by the Senate. It may be found advisable to require a two-thirds majority of the senators. Such a provision is enforced in some countries.

4. This existing provision must be retained in the interests of the executive. It will only occasionally be used.

5. The power of initiating taxation bills should be in the Lower Chamber because that Chamber will be more representative than the Upper Chamber; and that is the case in other countries.

6. The English constitutional checks in the matter of finance bills would not work in the absence of a strong parliamentary tradition. I have not given the Senate power to modify a bill imposing new taxation, though it will have that power regarding other legislation, because modification of a bill imposing a tax would ordinarily stultify the bill.

7. It is necessary to retain the Governor's power to refuse assent. The Governor's position cannot be rigidly defined. He must have wide powers. But if any scheme involving a Governor is to succeed in a democratic constitution the Governor must act according to the spirit of the constitution. His position should be less, not more difficult than it is under the dyarchy.

8. See my note 8 on section III (3). At present the powers of the provincial legislature are confined to scheduled subjects. My proposal is to reverse the position and to confine the powers of the central legislature to scheduled subjects. This is, I believe, the position in America: and it is necessary, if provincial autonomy is to be real. At present central control involves endless unnecessary delays, and also cripples provincial administration and finance.

VI.—COMPOSITION OF THE COUNCIL OF BIHAR AND ORISSA.

The Council will be composed of 144 elected members (for details see Appendix B) representing Non-Muhammadan and Muhammadan constituencies and various special constituencies (see list in Appendix A), and one expert nominated ad hoc.

The essence of the Council will be that it will be entirely elected. The system of indirect election of M. L. C.'s by an electoral college of "headmen" for rural and of "urban electors" for urban areas should also result gradually in the election of real representatives of the people, and in the steady political education of the people. Without the safeguard of indirect elections the dangers of a parliamentary system would be multiplied. (Vide my notes on section X below.)

The reasons for increasing the number of seats are these:—

(1) Some of the interests are quite inadequately represented, such as landlords, depressed classes and so on.

(2) There is difficulty in forming suitable constituencies without increasing the number of members.

(3) The increase of the Muhammadan seats becomes necessary on account of increase of seats representing other interests.

All the general constituencies will be single-seated, and so far as possible, the special constituencies also.

VII.—COMPOSITION OF THE SENATE.

(1) The Senate will be composed of:—

(a) 25 elected members.

(b) Life members by right.

(2) Qualifications of life members.

The Upper Chamber will consist of 25 elected members, and as many life members as are eligible under the following rules. The life members should comprise all Rajas, Raja Bahadurs, Nawabs, and Nawab Bahadurs, ex-High Court Judges, ex-Ministers, and ex-Members of the provincial Government, ex-Vice-Chancellors of the University and ex-Presidents of both Chambers, all persons holding the title of Knighthood and C.I.E., and other English titleholders equal to the rank of Raja and men paying revenue or income-tax of, say, Rs. 20,000 or more. In fixing the qualification of members of the upper chamber, care should be taken that the strength of the Senate does not exceed a certain limit, say 60. In Bihar and Orissa there will be 25 elected members—five from each division—elected by the members (of the two Chambers, i.e.,)

5 Muhammadans;
2 Europeans; and
18 Non-Muhammadans.

A Senate composed as above will be a sober body but sufficiently representative not to check progress unduly.

VIII.—COMPOSITION OF THE ASSEMBLY.

(1) The Assembly will be composed of 240 elected members, three experts nominated ad hoc and the Governor-General's Cabinet and Commander-in-Chief as explained in III (2).

(2) This province will elect 35 members representing the constituencies listed in Appendix C.

The present system of mixed constituencies leaves certain interests unrepresented. Representation is also not proportionate to the population of the country. As a general principle there should be at least one member to a population of 10,00,000. For the method of election see section XC and notes thereon.

IX.—COMPOSITION OF THE COUNCIL OF STATE.

(1) Will be composed of :—

(a) 50 elected members.
(b) Life members by right.
(c) The Governor-General's cabinet and the Commander-in-Chief.

(2) This province will elect five members.
(3) Qualifications for life members.

The qualifications for life Members of the Council of State will be : Men holding the title of Maharaja and Maharajadhiraj or English titles of higher rank than Knighthood, Ex-Members of the Executive Council of the Viceroy, and Ex-Chief Justices of the Indian High Court, Ex-Presidents of the Legislative Assembly and of the Council of State, and men paying revenue or income-tax of say Rs. 50,000 or more, and 50 elected members, of whom ten members will be elected by a joint electorate of the Assembly, and of the life members of the Council of State, and 40 by a joint electorate of the provincial Chambers in each province. This province will be entitled to return five members out of 40, one of whom will be a Muhammadan. They will be elected by the members of both the Chambers jointly.

In fixing the qualification of life members of the Council of State care should be taken that its strength is kept within a certain limit, say 120.

X.—THE ELECTORATE AND ELECTIONS.

A.—Elections of Members of Councils.

(1) M. L. C.'s will be elected :—

(a) By indirect election, from Non-Muhammadan and Muhammadan constituencies (and from an Indian Christian constituency in Ranchi district) ;

(b) By direct election from various special constituencies (for list and qualification of voters, etc., see Appendix A).

(2) Indirect elections.—The primary constituencies will be :—(Note 1.)

(a) In rural areas, the chaukidari circle.
(b) In urban areas, the ward or mahalla.

(3) The qualifications for voting in primary constituencies will be the payment :—

(a) In rural areas, of chaukidari tax.
(b) In urban areas, of municipal tax.

(4) The method of voting will be by ballot under the supervision of an election officer assisted by two "punches" appointed by him.

(a) In rural areas, in each village.
(b) In municipal areas, in each ward or mahalla.

In the case of :—

(a) One "headman," or more if necessary, will be elected for each chaukidari circle, and in the case of—

(b) Urban "electors" will be elected in each mahalla to the number of 5 per cent. of the rate-payers of that mahalla.

(5) These elected rural "headmen" and urban "electors" of each sub-division of a district will directly elect the members of Council by ballot. (Note 2.)

(6) There will also be indirect elections of representatives of the special constituencies of Labour and of the Depressed Classes, as described below :—

(a) One representative of the Depressed Classes will be elected for each Commissioner's division by the elected M.L.C.'s of that division. (Note 4.)

(b) The representatives of Labour will be elected to each constituency by "labour electors" elected directly by the whole labour electorate of the constituency on the same lines as the elections of "urban electors"—the electors will be 10 per cent. of the electorate. (Note 3.)

B.—Elections of Elected Members of the Senate.

(1) Members of the Senate will be elected indirectly by a joint electorate consisting of the members of the Council and the life members of the Senate. (Note 5.)

(2) Five members will be elected from each of the five commissioner's divisions, composed of :—

18 non-Muhammadans,
5 Muhammadans,
2 Europeans.
25

(3) Qualifications of Candidates.—Any one qualified to vote in any constituency, including elected M. L. C.'s of 30 years of age and over.

(4) The elections will take place as soon after the Council elections as possible.

C.—Elections of Members of the Legislative Assembly.

(1) Members of Legislative Assembly will be elected :—

(a By indirect election } by the same primary constituencies as for (b) By direct election } Members of the Legislative Council.

(2) Indirect Election.—The rural "headmen" and urban "electors" of a whole district will be the secondary constituency which will elect M. L. A.'s. The election of M. L. A.'s and M. L. C.'s will be so far as possible simultaneous. (Note 6.)

(3) Direct Election.—The special constituencies will elect M. L. A.'s direct, simultaneously with the elections of M. L. C.'s (for list see Appexdix C).

D.—Elections of Elected Members of the Council of State.

(1) Members of the Council of State will be elected indirectly :—

(a) 10 members by a joint electorate consisting of the members of the Assembly and the life members of the Council of State.

(b) 40 members by a joint electorate consisting of the members of the two provincial chambers in each province.

(2) Qualifications of Candidates.—Any one qualified to vote in any constituency, including elected Members of the Legislative Council, elected Members of the Legislative Assembly and elected members of Senates of 30 years of age and over.

(3) The elections will take place as soon after the Assembly and Council elections as possible.

Notes.—1. The method of indirect election is the keynote of my system. The faults of the existing direct elective system for the two main groups of the electorate, viz., Muhammadans and non-Muhammadans, may be summarised as follows :—

(1) The franchise is confined to 2 per cent. of the male population. The rest of the population receives no training in democracy and the elective system.

(2) Constituencies are much too large. This is obvious in the case of the Council of State and the Assembly constituencies. But it is also the case with the ordinary Legislative Council constituencies. Candidates for election cannot canvass such large areas and populations. Successful candidates cannot keep in touch with them, nor consult them in matters of importance.

(3) The size of the present constituencies effectually prevents the poor man from standing for election. It also often prevents the right sort of middle class and professional man from doing so. In a country where communications are often bad, large constituencies are particularly objectionable.

(4) Their large size makes the attendance at the polling stations impracticable for the poor voters, unless encouraged by transport facilities. This also necessitates corrupt or undesirable practices, and often the expenditure of large sums of money by candidates. This again restricts the field of candidates.

(5) Again, the majority of the villagers never see the poll. This again renders the educative value of elections almost nil to the mass of the villagers.

(6) Under the present system of a comparatively high tax-payment qualification the franchise is unduly restricted. The poorer tenants are just as fit for the vote as the richer. Their educational facilities are practically the same.

(7) The large size of a constituency requires either a well-organised party or a big purse, both of which are beyond the reach of an ordinary candidate.

(8) With a direct elective system political propaganda, to be effective, must make an appeal to the pockets or the worst passions of the electorate. The voters can seldom know the merits of the different candidates. They have not the incentive to vote for a man whom they can trust.

(9) There is no uniformity in the number of voters in rural constituencies. One constituency, without rhyme or reason, has six times more voters than another (vide the Election Report of 1926).

(10) The people themselves have no hand in selecting their representatives. Those who pay a certain amount of taxes are automatically selected.

(11) Universal male suffrage has no chance of being realised under the present system.

(12) The rental basis is also not uniform.

(13) The huge number of voters may prevent a particular kind of corruption; but it gives an opening to other undesirable influences which most of the voters have no power to resist.

The above and many other anomalies already revealed by experience require an immediate change of the present system. The remedy is to be found in the introduction of an indirect method of voting both in the rural and urban general constituencies, and in others such as the Indian Christian in Ranchi district, in which the same system may be desirable. Had these facts been realised, the opinion expressed in paragraph 226 of the "Report of Indian Constitutional Reforms would have been different. It was based on conditions in England and other European countries, which differ entirely from conditions in this country. The system of indirect voting was not even then unknown in European countries and America. Since then it has been adopted in Russia, where rural conditions bear a much greater resemblance to those in India.

In Bihar and Orissa there are 84,889 villages, including towns, out of which there are 58 municipalities. They are comprised in 65,882 chaukidari circles. My scheme is that:—

Firstly.—One man is to be elected in each chaukidari circle by all adult males who pay chaukidari tax. This will give 65,882 voters; and the number will be very evenly distributed. (Vide Report on the Administration of Police, 1926, page 20, Statement 2.)

Secondly.—All these elected "headmen" of the villages of a sub-division will form a constituency to elect one member from each sub-division.

The election must be held in a village or mahalla itself. It must be on the simplest possible lines. The village punch or municipal officer should notify the time and place of election. At the fixed time and place of election an officer deputed by Government will go there and register the names of the candidates, and will register and appoint two punches to assist him and to safeguard the correctness of the procedure. He will have permanent metalled tickets bearing serial numbers. He will distribute the tickets among the voters. The slips bearing the names of the candidates will either be pasted or pinned on bags or boxes, coloured or otherwise distinguished. He will place those bags or boxes in a room to receive these tickets. He will explain to voters which is each candidate's box, and the voters will drop the ticket in the bags or boxes in his presence. Immediately after the voting is over, the tickets will be counted on the spot and the result announced, and the names of the successful candidates will be entered in the same register, which will be signed by the two punches. This process is to be followed in all villages, and in the case of urban elections in all the wards or mahallas. The advantages of the system will be:—

1. It will educate the people in the first lesson of democracy. Elections will be at their doors, and their representatives will be men whom they know.

2. It will practically give universal adult male suffrage.

3. Though the electorate will be increased, the dangers which attend a large and untrained electorate will be enormously decreased. For villagers will not have to choose their representative for parliament (an impossible task for the ordinary cultivator) but a man whom he can trust, who will do this for him.

4. Everyone will get an opportunity to exercise his power of voting with due secrecy.

5. There is every chance of a suitable man being elected, who will not in most cases have any desire to stand for Council. The villagers will ordinarily vote for the man they know and trust, not for the politician.

6. There will be much less incentive to corrupt practices. The tone of the elections will improve greatly.

7. The headman elected will be in a position to keep in touch with and to educate his constituency in political ideas.

8. It will create a personage in each group of villages who will have a certain status and who may be of considerable administrative utility to Government both in developing different forms of local self-government and otherwise.

9. The number of voters will be fairly uniform in each primary constituency.

10. The number will still be sufficiently large to make the bribery of voters difficult; nor is village opinion likely to tolerate it. The politician from outside will not find it easy to manipulate these village elections.

11. The local man of influence will be able to counter the efforts of a political organisation quite easily. At present he cannot.

12. It will not be expensive.

13. It will do something to popularise the chaukidari.

Notes.—(2). It is important that the elections of M. L. C.'s by these "headmen" and "electors" should be held with as little delay as possible after the primary elections above described. The less opportunity given to politicians and political parties to manipulate these constituencies the better.

(3). I have not elaborated details regarding the labour constituency and method of voting. The principle is clear, and details should present no great difficulties in the few industrial centres in this province. See also Appendix A.

(4). I have not defined the Depressed Classes. This should not, however, be difficult. They will have a vote in the general constituency, non-Muhammadan, and many of them in the labour constituency. The depressed classes should be able to make their influence felt in my system of indirect election for the general constituencies; and the present difficulties in the way of the election of members of these communities will be greatly decreased.

(5). The same principle as for the Council of State. There is no reason to differentiate. Direct election of members of either the central or provincial upper chambers is open to all the objections catalogued in my note on the subject of the present electoral system above. Members of Council may be elected as members of the Senate, their seats being filled by by-elections.

(6). The only difference between the manner of electing M. L. A.'s and M. L. C.'s is that the rural "headmen" and urban "electors" are grouped in a district for the former and in a sub-division for the latter. The elections should be as nearly as possible simultaneous.

APPENDIX A.

I. List of special constituencies for the Legislative Council.

(a) (1) landlords,
(2) commerce and trade, and
(3) labour;

(b) (1) depressed classes,
(2) native Christians,
(3) Europeans,
(4) domiciled Bengalis;

(c) the University.

Note.—The interests of tenants, town-dwellers (municipalities), and Muhammadans will be fully represented in the urban and rural Muhammadan and Non-Muhammadan constituencies.

II. Qualifications of Voters, etc.

(i) The electorate of the landlords' constituencies (16 members) will consist of every one who pays Rs. 100 or more cess.

(ii) The electorate for the Trade and Commerce constituencies (10 members) will include merchants, bankers and traders paying income-tax.

It will not include members of the professions.

(iii) The electorate of the constituencies of labour (five members) will consist of employees of certain large industrial concerns registered for the purpose, e.g., Tatas in Jamshedpur and the Dhanbad Collieries.

(iv) The electorate of the constituencies of Indian Christians (five members) will probably be confined to a few districts in this province in Chota Nagpur. In Ranchi district the indirect system of election will be followed. The qualification for voting will be the payment of any tax.

(v) The electorate for the European constituencies (10 members) will consist of all Europeans residing in the area of each constituency, official and non-official, temporarily or permanently. Probably a Commissioner's division will be a suitable constituency. The distribution of seats is a detail which need not be laid down now. The interests of Planters will be fully safeguarded.

(vi) The electorate of the constituencies of domiciled Bengalis (five members) will consist of the domiciled Bengalis settled in each of the five Commissioner's Divisions. The qualification for voting will be the payment of any tax.

Note.—Regarding the depressed classes, see also note 4 on page 18.

APPENDIX B.

Distribution of seats in the Legislative Council.

	Non-Muhammadan.	Muhammadan.
Urban	11	5
Rural	53	18
Landlords ...	12	4
European ...	10	—
Commerce ...	10	—
Labour	5	—
Depressed ...	5	—
Native Christians	5	—
Domiciled Bengalis	5	—
University ...	1	—
	117	27
Total		144

	Non-Muhammadan.	Muhammadan.
11. Urban—
Patna	1	Patna Division 1
Patna Division ...	2	Tirhut Division 1
Bhagalpur ...	2	Bhagalpur 1
Tirhut Division ...	2	Chota Nagpur Division. 1
Chota Nagpur ...	2	Orissa Division 1
Orissa Division ...	2	—
53. Rural—
Patna	4	2
Gaya	4	1
Shahabad ...	4	1
Muzaffarpur ...	3	1
Darbhanga ...	3	1
Saran	3	1
Champaran ...	2	1
Bhagalpur ...	4	1
Monghyr	3	1
Purnea	2	4
Santal Parganas ...	2	1
Hazaribagh ...	2
Ranchi	2
Palamau	2	2
Singhbhum ...	2
Manbhum ...	2
Cuttack	3	—
Puri	2
Balasore ...	2	1
Sambalpur ...	2
12. Landlords—
Patna Division ...	3	1
Tirhut Division ...	3	1
Bhagalpur Division	2	1
Cuttack	3	1
Chota Nagpur ...	1
10. Europeans—
Patna Division ...	3	—
Tirhut Division ...	2	—
Bhagalpur Division	1	—
Orissa Division ...	1	—
Chota Nagpur Division	3	—
Commerce and trade—
Patna Division	1
Tirhut Division	1
Bhagalpur Division	1
Orissa Division	1
Singhbhum and Ranchi	2
Manbhum	2
Hazaribagh and Palamau ...	2

N.B.—The seats in the urban area for Non-Muhammadan constituencies have been distributed on the basis of subdivisions except in Santal Parganas, Ranchi and Hazaribagh, in which two sub-divisions form a constituency.

	Non-Muhammadan.	Muhammadan
Labour—
Manbhum ...	—	2
Singhbhum ...	—	1
Hazaribagh and Palamau ...	—	1
Monghyr	—	1
Depressed classes—
Patna Division ...	—	1
Tirhut Division ...	—	1
Bhagalpur Division	—	1
Orissa Division ...	—	1
Chota Nagpur Division	—	1
Native Christians—
Ranchi	—	2
Hazaribagh Palamau Singhbhum Manbhum ...	—	1
Orissa and Bhagalpur Divisions		1

	Non-Muhammadan.	Muhammadan,
Patna and Tirhut Divisions	—	1
University ...	—	1
Domiciled Bengalis—
Patna Division ...	—	1
Tirhut Division ...	—	1
Bhagalpur Division	—	1
Chota Nagpur Division	—	1
Orissa Division ...	—	1

APPENDIX C.

List of constituencies in Bihar and Orissa for the Legislative Assembly and distribution of seats.

1. General constituencies—

(a) Non-Muhammadan—20 members—1 from each district.

(b) Muhammadan—6 members—1 landlord, and 1 from each of the five Commissioner's divisions.

2. Special constituencies—

(a) Landlords—3 members—1 from Patna, 1 from Tirhut and Bhagalpur, 1 from the Chota Nagpur and Orissa divisions.

(b) Domiciled Bengalis—1 member.

(c) Commerce and Trade— 1 member.

(d) European—1 member.

(e) Native Christian—1 member.

(f) Labour—1 member.

(g) Depressed classes—1 member.

Total members—35.

APPENDIX D.

Alternative schemes for the electorate, if indirect election is rejected.

(a) The qualifications for voting may be based, not on the rental paid but on the area held by—tenants, tenure-holders,

landlords.

By increase in the number of seats area will become almost uniform except in places like Chota Nagpur; but there will be no uniformity in the number of voters. This is mainly due to the adoption of the rental basis which widely differs in different parts of the province. The tenants in bhowli districts pay sometimes ten times more for the same area than the tenants holding lands under the old nagdi system. This is the main reason why there is so much difference in the numbers of electors in North Bihar and South Bihar. If an area basis is adopted, this difference will disappear. Uniformity in the number is very essential, for more than one reason, as the difficulty increases with the increase in number. Any area between 5 and 10 acres may be adopted as basis. The area can be very easily ascertained from the settlement records. There will then be no necessity of having a different rental standard for different districts.

For landlords and tenure-holders the same area basis may be adopted. There is no reason why in this respect there should be any difference between landlords and tenants; unless the object is to disfranchise a number of landlords and tenure-holders; or (b) If the above is rejected, and if the qualification of tenants remains on a rental basis, those of tenure-holders and of landlords may be identical with those of tenants, i.e., if tenant's qualification is Rs. 3 cess, the tenure-holder's and landlord's should also be Rs. 3 cess. If the present qualification is to be kept in the case of tenants, it is very desirable to have the same qualification for the landlords and tenure-holders. If the tenants who pay Rs. 3 cess are entitled to vote, landlords and tenure-holders should also be entitled to vote if they pay Rs. 3 as cess. The number of such landlords and tenure-holders will not be very large. But it is not fair to disfranchise them. There should be one qualification for all in rural areas as in the case of urban constituencies.

Similar changes should be made in the Assembly qualifications.

APPENDIX E.

List of Books consulted.

Indirect election—

"The Modern World: Russia," by Makeev and O'Hara, p. 243.

Indirect election of Senate—

"Modern Constitutions," by Dodd, Volume I, (France), p. 289.

"The Government of France," by Barthelemy, p. 62.

"Modern Constitutions," by Dodd, Volume II (The United States), p. 294.

Constitution of Senate (Upper Chamber)—

(1) "Modern Constitutions," by Dodd, Volume II (Italy), pp. 9 and 10.

(2) "Modern Constitutions," by Dodd, Volume II (Japan), pp. 33 and 34.

Term of Senate (Upper Chamber)—

(1) "Ireland" (The Modern World Series), by Gwynn, p. 203.

(2) "Government of France," by Barthelemy.

(3) "Modern Constitutions," by Dodd, Volume II (Japan), p. 34.

(4) "Modern Constitutions," by Dodd, Volume II (United States of America), p. 294.

Members of Senate appointed for life—

(1) "The Constitutions of Canada," by Kennedy, p. 384.

(2) "Modern Constitutions," by Dodd, Volume II (Italy), pp. 9 and 10.

Age of members of the Senate (Upper Chamber)—

(1) "Modern Constitutions," by Dodd, Volume I (France), p. 289

(2) "Modern Constitutions," by Dodd, Volume II (United States of America), p. 295.

(3) "The Constitutions of Canada," by Kennedy, p. 384.

Joint Meeting of the two Chambers—

(1) "The Government of France," by Barthelemy, p. 66.

(2) "Modern Constitutions," by Dodd, Volume II (United States of America), pp. 293 and 295.

Function of the Council of State and the Upper Chamber—

(1) "Modern Constitutions," by Dodd, Volume II (United States of America), pp. 296 and 297.

(2) "The Government of France," by Barthelemy, p. 72.

The appointment of President by the Government—

"The Constitution of Canada," by Kennedy, p. 385.

Bicameral legislature in Provinces—

"The Constitution of Canada," by Kennedy, p. 390.

NOTE ON THE PROVINCIAL FINANCES.

The creation of this province was announced by His Majesty at the Delhi Darbar in 1911 and the province was formed accordingly on the 1st April, 1912. Before then this province was a part of the very advanced and self-contained province of Bengal.

MEMORANDUM FROM THE BIHAR PROVINCIAL SANATAN DHARAM SABHA.

It was at once deprived of all the advantages which it had enjoyed as a partner with Bengal. It was left with no University, no Medical College, no Veterinary College, no Engineering College, no High Court, no Secretariat, no Government House and no Hill Station. Primary education and medical relief had been in a neglected condition. Besides this the province was liable to pay interest to the Government of India for the capital spent on the construction of the Orissa canals. The war, from its outbreak in 1914 till it stopped in the end of 1918, made its position worse. For the province has only a small and inelastic revenue. In spite of these drawbacks, it made an unprecedented effort, and in the course of a few years it created a University, Medical College, Engineering College and a Veterinary College; and made a big advance in primary education and in medical relief both in urban and rural areas. It has also done something for the improvement of Agriculture and Industry.

All these improvements were made possible by an unprecedented increase in the Excise revenue which must remain at this high level to provide support for future recurring charges. Now the position is "thus far and no further"; and in fact excise revenue has a tendency to go down. The other inelastic heads are almost in the same condition. Having regard to the population and area of the province, its needs are very great; and it is not fair that the people of the province should be thus handicapped in the race of provincial progress. There is a demand for opening new Colleges, for making primary education free and compulsory, for free vaccination, for district health organisations to improve the sanitary condition of the province, which is a permanent home for epidemics. There is a demand for water supply in rural areas, for water works for towns, and for the improvement of communications. To all these just demands Government express regret and their inability to supply funds. Government have even been unable to fulfil definite undertakings, made years ago, and to maintain certain grants-in-aid to local bodies. The financial outlook is therefore gloomy.

Any attempt on the part of this province to improve its finances is sure to end in disappointment. This province wanted to tax coal, but it was not allowed to do so by the Government of India. This province wants to put a tax on lac and mica, but there is little hope that the Government of India would permit it. Proposals for terminal and octroi taxes on goods and passengers are likely to share the same fate. There is no chance of remission of payment of interest in respect of the Orissa canals. The share of income-tax which this province is getting is also small. Income-tax is mostly paid outside the province either in Bombay or Calcutta on account of the Head Offices of the firms being situated there. Our big industrial areas bring in very little to the provincial revenues.

So this Royal province on account of its poverty will lag behind other provinces and seems likely to remain backward among the provinces. If this is to happen, certainly it was a mistake to create a province full of ambition and aspirations but with insufficient revenue. If this province had continued to be a part of Bengal, conditions would have been no worse, and at least the additional cost of a separate administration would have been available for the people. It is hoped that the Honourable Members of the Royal Commission will pay particular attention to the financial position of this province and will make the necessary recommendations for its improvement.

GANESH DUTTA SINGH.

Ranchi, 18th June, 1928.

Memorandum from the BIHAR PROVINCIAL SANATAN DHARAM SABHA.

To the Chairman and Members of the Indian Statutory Commission.

We the Members of the Bihar Provincial Sanatan Dharam Sabha on behalf of and as representing the orthodox Hindu Community of the Province beg to offer our sincere welcome to the Commission and pray God for their happy sojourn and safe return.

The vast majority of the Hindu population of the country are very orthodox and conservative in their religious faith and beliefs and yield to none in their loyalty and devotion to the sacred person and throne of His Majesty the King-Emperor and the benign British Government.

They look upon their rulers and administrators as their natural leaders and protectors in this mundane world.

The Sabha is grateful to the British Nation and the august Parliament for sending the Royal Commission to this land of Hindus as the very name Hindusthan signifies and hopes and trusts that the just rights and claims of the Orthodox Hindus will not only not be ignored in any scheme of administration that the Commission may be pleased to advocate but better and greater facilities would be afforded to them to have their grievances remedied and their position and importance duly recognised and strengthened. The majority of the seats allotted to the Hindus must go to the Orthodox people. It is a matter of deep regret that the Orthodox Hindus were not given their due share in the Reformed Councils and the central Legislatures. The consequence was that several un-Hindu Bills were allowed to be introduced into the Provincial and Central Legislatures thereby wounding the religious feelings and susceptibilities of the Hindu world against the Royal Proclamation and repeated pronouncements of their late and present Imperial Majesties that nothing would be said or done in any way to interfere with the established customs, cherished laws and usages of the Hindus.

In particular the Sabha is alarmed at the recent introduction of a bill in the Bihar and Orissa Legislative Council which threatens to intervene with the rights, privileges and established usages of Hindu temples, Maths and places of pilgrimage which are the life and backbone of the Hindu religion.

The Sabha hopes and prays that it will be recommended to Parliament that by the exercise of the veto of His Excellency the Governor-General or of His Excellency the Governor or by other convenient means the debating as well as the passing of such un-Hindu bills or resolutions be prevented.

In conclusion the Sabha once more offers its hearty welcome to the Commission and expresses its appreciations of being permitted to appear before this Conference and hopes its labours will not go in vain.

INVITATION TO SUBMIT MEMORANDA.

1. The Indian Statutory Commission invites the submission of written statements or memoranda, both from official and non-official sources, from representative associations, local bodies, and responsible individuals on any of the subjects which fall within the limits of the enquiry which it is about to undertake. Before the Commission returns to India in October a programme of its sittings in various centres will have to be drawn up. The written statements or memoranda now called for should be prepared and sent to the offices of the Commission as soon as possible in order that the Commission may appreciate the main issues to be raised and proposals to be urged before it hereafter, and in order that it may make arrangements beforehand for the orderly conduct of its subsequent enquiry.

2. Such written statements or memoranda as are ready before the Commission leaves India on March 31st should be sent by registered post addressed to "The Indian Statutory Commission, Camp, India." After this date the Commission will maintain its own Office in India, where further memoranda will be received on its behalf. They should be sent by registered post addressed to "The Indian Statutory Commission, New Delhi Office, New Delhi," from which office they will be transmitted to the Office of the Commission in England.

3. Twelve copies of each memorandum are required in the first instance. Further copies may be called for hereafter, if the proposed Indian Committees are set up in time.

4. It is most desirable that these memoranda should be delivered to the Offices of the Commission as soon as possible, and in any event not later than June 1st next. If for any special reason particular documents cannot be delivered till later, the Commission will be glad to be informed of the circumstances and will do its best to deal with them, but the organization of the Commission's enquiry makes it essential that the written material, much of which has doubtless already been prepared, should be promptly presented.

5. The terms of reference under which the Commission is acting are as follows:—

It is "to enquire into the working of the system "of government, the growth of education, and the "development of representative institutions, in "British India, and matters connected therewith," and it is "to report as to whether and to what "extent it is desirable to establish the principle of "responsible government, or to extend, modify, or "restrict the degree of responsible government then "existing therein, including the question whether "the establishment of second chambers of the local "legislatures is or is not desirable."

6. The Commission has already had the advantage of informal interviews with important and representative bodies and deputations both at Delhi and in several Provinces, and has been much assisted by these interviews in appreciating the nature of some of the main questions which it will shortly begin to investigate.

7. The Appendix to this notice contains a list of some of these topics (though the list does not profess to be exhaustive), and written statements or memoranda are also invited on any other subject within the Commission's terms of reference. It will be understood that those who submit memoranda are not expected or required to deal with all the subjects mentioned in the Appendix but only such of them, or with such other subjects, as specially concern the case they are putting forward.

8. The Commission attaches special importance to the written material which it is now inviting, for in many cases the memorandum will speak for itself, while in other cases the Commission after considering the memorandum (with the assistance of Indian Committees if these are appointed) will intimate whether it desires to hear oral evidence in support of the memorandum and will endeavour to make the most convenient arrangements as to when and where this oral evidence shall be taken.

9. Every memorandum should be dated and signed by or on behalf of those who present it, and should give the address to which any communication from the Commission regarding it should be sent. As already stated, there will be many cases in which the memoranda submitted will themselves sufficiently convey to the Commission the views of those submitting them, but in cases in which it is desired to tender to the Commission oral evidence in support of any memorandum, the document should end with a clear statement giving the name and address of the witness who will be ready to come forward, if required, for examination and cross-examination.

10. Memoranda submitted in a representative capacity should contain a clear statement of the nature, extent and membership of the organization submitting them. When a statement is put forward on behalf of a class of persons, the Commission wishes to have a sufficient indication of the number of individuals who actually authorize it.

OFFICE OF INDIAN STATUTORY COMMISSION, CAMP, INDIA,
6th March, 1928.

J. W. BHORE,
S. F. STEWART,
Secretaries.

APPENDIX.

Note (A.)—For the purpose of illustrating the meaning of the main heads below, some of the questions arising under each are given.

Note (B.)—Replies need not deal with the whole field covered by the heads, but should be limited to the particular matters to which it is desired to draw attention.

Note (C.)—Suggestions for the future are invited, as well as observations upon the structure and working of the existing constitution of British India. The Commission will be specially glad to receive any draft constitutional scheme which has been worked out beyond the stage of merely general propositions.

---

1. The representative system as applied to British India, e.g. :—

(a) The basis of the franchise.
(b) Methods of election.
(c) Methods whereby particular interests, communal, local, social, and economic, may obtain adequate representation on local self-governing, provincial and central representative bodies.
(d) The relationship between representatives and constituents.
(e) The growth of parties.
(f) The growth of informed public opinion.
(g) Nomination of officials and non-officials as additional members of elected bodies.

2. The suitability of existing areas for legislative and administrative purposes and for the growth of representative institutions, e.g. :—

(a) Local self-governing.
(b) Provincial, including the discussion of proposals for extension of self-governing institutions to other areas than the nine provinces, and of proposals for division of existing provinces.

3. The local self-governing bodies (Municipalities, District Boards, etc.) and their relationship with the Provincial Government, e.g. :—

(a) Constitution.
(b) Functions.
(c) Relationship with officials of Provincial Government.
(d) Control by Provincial Government.
(e) Finance.

4. The Provincial Governments, e.g. :—
(a) Constitution.
(b) Working of dyarchy.
(c) Position and powers of Governor.
(d) Position of Ministers in relation to Governor and Members of Executive Council.
(e) Relationship of Ministers to each other, and question of collective responsibility.
(f) Growth of party system in the Provincial Councils.
(g) Working of particular departments.
(h) Classification into reserved and transferred subjects.
(i) Desirability of Second Chambers.
(j) Question of provincial autonomy. [See also 6 (a) and (b).]
(k) Finances of Provincial Government and Financial Control. [See also 6 (c).]
(l) Financial relations between reserved and transferred sides of the Government, including the question of the joint or separate purse.

5. The Central Government, e.g. :—
(a) Constitution.
(b) Position and powers of the Governor-General.
(c) Relationship of Governor-General to his Executive Council.
(d) Relationship of Governor-General to the Legislative Assembly and the Council of State.
(e) Position of the Executive.
(f) Question of the responsibility of the Executive to the Legislature.
(g) Relationship between the two Houses.

6. Relations between Central Government and the Provincial Government, e.g., in regard to—
(a) The extent of the power of superintendence, direction, and control to be exercised by the Central Government.
(b) The classification of subjects as central and provincial.
(c) The financial relationship between the Central and Provincial Governments, including the Meston Settlement.

7. The Courts and Judiciary.

8. The Constitutional problem in relation to such vital matters as—
(a) Law and order in British India.
(b) Justice in British India.
(c) Defence of India.
(d) Social progress in British India.
(e) Federation in India.
(f) The status and position of India in the British Empire.

9. The relationship between the Central Government, the Secretary of State and the British Parliament.

10. The position of the Services, e.g. :—
(a) Indian Civil Service.
(b) Other All-India Services.
(c) Provincial Services.
(d) The question of recruitment and of Public Services Commissions.
(e) Indianization.

11. The Growth of Education.—The Commission will shortly be making a special announcement as to this branch of the enquiry, but it does not wish the preparation of memoranda on this important topic to be delayed. Documents dealing specifically with it should be marked "Growth of Education" in the top left-hand corner.

INDEX.

(1) ORAL EVIDENCE.

PAGE

A.

Advanced Muhammadan Party - - - 267
All-India Muslim League - - - - 121
All-India Yadava Mahasabha - - - - 458
All-Sind Hindu Association - - - - 237
Ambedkar B.R. - - - - - - - 52
Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Association - - - - - - - - - 307

B.

Backward Tracts, Bihar and Orissa - - - 441
Bole, S. K. - - - - - - - - 32
Bombay Central Association of Sardars and Inamdars - - - - - - - - 20
Bombay Chamber of Commerce (Mr. Cocke) - 6
Bombay Depressed Classes - - - - 52
Bombay Provincial Non-Brahmin Party - - 67

C.

Central Labour Board, Punjab - - - - 81
Chamber of Commerce, Bombay (Mr. Cocke) - 6
Chamber of Commerce, Karachi - - - 221
Chamber of Commerce, Upper India - - 375
Chief Khalsa Diwan - - - - - - 138
Chitamber, Mrs. - - - - - - - 334
Christians, Deputation of India - - - 327
Chota-Nagpur Improvement Society - - - 446
Cocke, H. G. - - - - - - - - 6
Commerce, Bombay Chamber of (Mr. Cocke) - 6
Commerce, Karachi Chamber of - - - 221
Commerce, Upper India Chamber of - - - 375

D.

Depressed Classes, Bombay - - - - - 52
Depressed Classes of United Provinces - - 357
Domiciled European and Anglo-Indian Association - - - - - - - - - 307

G.

Ghorpade, K. S. - - - - - - - 73
Gupte, K. S. - - - - - - - - 67

H.

Hindu Association, All Sind - - - - 237
Hindu Conference, N.W.F.P. Provincial - - 258

I.

Inamdars, Sardars, etc., Central Association, Bombay - - - - - - - - 20
Indian Christians Deputation - - - - 327

K.

Kalbhor, G. M. - - - - - - - 73
Karachi Chamber of Commerce - - - 221
Khalsa Diwan, Chief - - - - - 138
Khans Deputation - - - - - - 249

PAGE

L.

Labour Board, Punjab Central - - - - - 81
Lal, Harkishen - - - - - - - - 160

M.

Mandi, Maharani of - - - - - - - 334
Muhammadan Association, Sind - - - 206
Muhammadan Party, Advanced - - - 267
Muslim League, All India - - - - 121
Muslims of United Provinces - - - - 340

N.

National Reform Party, Punjab - - - 98
National Unionists Party, Punjab - - - 153
Nawale, N. E. - - - - - - - - 67
Non-Brahmin Party, Bombay Provincial - - 67
North-West Frontier Province, Provincial Hindu Conference - - - - - - - - 258

O.

Oriya Deputation - - - - - - - 428

P.

Police Association, Subordinate - - - 462
Provincial Hindu Conference, N.W.F.P. - - 258
Punjab Central Labour Board - - - - 81
Punjab National Reform Party - - - 98
Punjab National Unionists Party - - - 153

R.

Reform Party, Punjab National - - - 98

S.

Sahaya, A. K. - - - - - - - - 462
Sardars and Inamdars, Central Association, Bombay - - - - - - - - 20
Shah, Mrs. Ahmad - - - - - - - 334
Sikh Deputation - - - - - - - 265
Sind Hindu Association - - - - - 237
Sind Muhammadan Association - - - 206
Solanki, P. G. - - - - - - - - 52
Subordinate Police Association - - - - 462
Surve, A. N. - - - - - - - - 32

U.

Unionists Party, Punjab National - - - 153
United Provinces Depressed Classes - - - 357
United Provinces Muslims - - - - 340
Upper India Chamber of Commerce - - - 375

Y.

Yadava (Gopa) Mahasabha - - - - 458
Yadava Mahasabha—All India - - - - 458

(2) MEMORANDA.

PAGE

A.

Agra Zamindars Association - - - - 388
Ahir-Ram Prasad - - - - - - - 354
Ahmadiyya Community - - - - - 112
All-India Conference of Indian Christians - - 318
All-India Mahratta League - - - - 65
All-India Muslim League - - - - - 108
All-India Shri Jatav Mahasabha - - - 352
All-India Yadava Mahasabha - - - - 456
All-Sind Hindu Association - - - - 228
Ambedkar B. R. - - - - - - - 37
Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Community - - - - - - - - - 273

B.

Bihar Landholders Association - - - - 467
Bihar and Orissa Muslim Association - - 474
Bihar Provincial Sanatan Dharam Sabha - - 495
Bishop of Calcutta - - - - - - - 435
Bole, S. K. - - - - - - - - 31
Bombay Central Association of Sardars and Inamdars - - - - - - - 9
Bombay Chamber of Commerce - - - 1
Bombay Depressed Classes (B. R. Ambedkar) - 37
Bombay Depressed India Association - - 48
Bombay Provincial Conference of Sardars and Inamdars - - - - - - - - 15
Bombay Provincial Non-Brahmin Party - - 62
Bombay Servants of Somavamshi - - - 48
British Indian Association of Talukdars of Oudh 386

C.

Calcutta—Bishop of - - - - - - - 435
Catholic Bishop of Ranchi - - - - 432
Central Labour Board, Punjab - - - - 79
Chamber of Commerce, Bombay - - - 1
Chamber of Commerce, Karachi - - - 218
Chamber of Commerce, Lahore Indian - - 197
Chambers of Commerce, Punjab and Northern India - - - - - - - - - 201
Chamber of Commerce—Upper India - - 364
Chand, Nanak - - - - - - - 86
Charana, Mr. Rama - - - - - - - 347
Chief Khalsa Diwan - - - - - - - 135
Chiefs of the Frontier - - - - - - 248
Chota Nagpur, Bishop of - - - - - 435
Chota Nagpur Improvement Society - - - 435
Christians. All India Conference of Indian - - 318
Commerce, Bombay Chamber of - - - 1
Commerce, Karachi Chamber of - - - 218
Commerce, Lahore Indian Chamber of - - 197
Commerce, Punjab and N. India Chambers of - 201 Commerce, Upper India Chamber of - - - 364

D.

Dehlvi, A. M. K. - - - - - - - 76
Depressed Classes Bombay (B. R. Ambedkar) - 37
Depressed India Association Bombay - - 48
Domiciled European and Anglo Indian Community - - - - - - - - - 273
Dutta Singh—Sir Ganesh - - - - 487

F.

Frontier, Chiefs of the - - - - - 248

G.

Ganjam—see Orissa memoranda

H.

Hindu Association, All-Sind - - - - 228
Hindu Minority in N.W. India (Raja Narendra Nath) - - - - - - - - - 163
Hindu Party, N.W.F.P. - - - - - 256

I.

Improvement Society, Chota Nagpur - - 435
Inamdars, Sardars and—Central Association, Bombay - - - - - - - - 9
Inamdars, Sardars and—Provincial Conference, Bombay - - - - - - - - 15
Indian Chamber of Commerce, Lahore - - 197
Indian Christians. All-India Conference of - 318

K.

Kahar Sudhark Maha Sabha - - - - 355
Karachi Chamber of Commerce - - - 218
Kennedy, K. - - - - - - - - 435
Khalsa Diwan, Chief - - - - - 135
Khans of N.W.F.P. - - - - - - 248

L.

Labour Board, Punjab Central - - - - 79
Lahore Indian Chamber of Commerce - - 197
Landholders Association, Bihar - - - 467
Lenman T. - - - - - - - - 439

M.

Mahratta League, All-India - - - - 65
Mandi, Rani Sahiba of - - - - - 334
Misra, B. N. - - - - - - - - 424
Muhammadan Association, Sind - - - 202
Muslim Association, Bihar and Orissa - - 474
Muslim League, All-India - - - - 108
Muslims of United Provinces - - - - 338

N.

Nath Raja Narendra - - - - - - 163
National Unionists Party, Punjab - - - 148
Non-Brahmin Party, Bombay Provincial - 62
N.W.F.P. Hindu Party - - - - - 256
N.W.F.P. Khans - - - - - - - 248
N.W.F.P. Sikhs - - - - - - - 265
North West India—Hindu Minority in (Raja Narendra Nath) - - - - - - - 163
Northern India and Punjab Chambers of Commerce - - - - - - - - 201

O.

Orissa. Memoranda regarding Oriya Province - 389
Oudh, Talukdars of - - - - - - - 386

P.

People of Orissa - - - - - - - 389
Punjab Central Labour Board - - - - 79
Punjab National Unionists Party - - - 148
Punjab and Northern India Chambers of Commerce - - - - - - - - 201
Punjab Zemindars Association - - - - 191

R.

Ranchi. Catholic Bishop of - - - - 432

	PAGE
S.
Sanatan Dharam Sabha, Bihar	495
Sardars and Inamdars Central Association, Bombay	9
Sardars and Inamdars Provincial Conference, Bombay	15
Servants of Somavamshi, Bombay	48
Shri Jatav Mahasabha, All-India	352
Sikhs of N.W.F.P.	265
Sind, All-Hindu Association	228
Sind Muhammaden Association	202
Singh, Sir Ganesh Dutta	487
Somavamshi, Servants of	48
Sudhark Maha Sabha, Kahar	355
Surve, A. N.	29
T.
Talukdars of Oudh	386
Tamta, Munshi Hari	352
U.
Unionists Party. Punjab National	148
United Provinces Muslims	338
Upper India Chamber of Commerce	364
Utkal—see Orissa.
Y.
Yadava (Gopa) Mahasabha	455
Yadava Mahasabha—All India	456
Z.
Zamindars Association, Agra	388
Zemindars Association, Punjab	191

Printed under the authority of His Majesty's Stationery Office
By Eyre and Spottiswoode, Ltd., East Harding Street, E.C.4, Printers to the King's most Excellent Majesty.

INDIAN STATUTORY COMMISSION

VOLUME XVII

SELECTIONS FROM MEMORANDA AND ORAL EVIDENCE BY NON-OFFICIALS

(PART II)

[Crown Copyright Reserved]

LIBRARY OF THE BOMBAY BRANCH OF THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

LONDON:
PUBLISHED BY HIS MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE.
To be purchased directly from H.M. STATIONERY OFFICE at the following addresses:
Adastral House, Kingsway, London, W.C.2.; 120, George Street, Edinburgh;
York Street, Manchester; 1, St. Andrew's Crescent, Cardiff;
15, Donegall Square West, Belfast; or through any Bookseller.

1930

Price 16*s.* 0*d.* Net

70—240—17

PREFATORY NOTE

VOLUME XVII.

The extracts from oral evidence contained in this volume cover the more important portions of the evidence given, in the presence of the press, by non-officials* in the following Provinces: Assam, Bengal, Burma, Madras, and Central Provinces. Volume XVI contains that given in the Provinces of Bombay, Punjab, North-West Frontier Province, Delhi, United Provinces, Bihar and Orissa.

In nearly every case the witnesses had previously submitted written memoranda; these documents formed the basis of their examination, and are printed at the beginning of their oral evidence.

A few of the written memoranda, on which oral evidence was not taken, are also included in this volume.

As explained in the preface to Volume I of the Commission's Report, all evidence was taken by a Joint Conference consisting of the Statutory Commission, the Indian Central Committee and, in all the Governors' Provinces except the Central Provinces, a Provincial Committee. A list of the members of these Committees is given on page iv.

References in the evidence to pages of the various written memoranda have been altered to correspond with the paging in the present volume.

The Commission have suggested that the full text of the evidence given in the presence of the press, including portions omitted from the present volume as being of less importance, and also copies of non-official memoranda not printed in these volumes, should be made available for inspection in London and India, and it is understood that this will be done.

*Including officials speaking for Service Associations in their personal capacity, and not representing views of Government.

PERSONNEL OF JOINT CONFERENCE

INDIAN STATUTORY COMMISSION.

The Rt. Hon. Sir John Simon, K.C.V.O., M.P. (Chairman).
The Viscount Burnham, G.C.M.G., C.H.
The Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal.
The Hon. E. C. G. Cadogan, C.B., M.P.
The Rt. Hon. V. Hartshorn, M.P.
Col. the Rt. Hon. G. R. Lane Fox, M.P.
Major C. R. Attlee, M.P.

THE INDIAN CENTRAL COMMITTEE.

Hon. Sir Sankaran Nair, Kt., C.I.E. (Chairman).
Hon. Sir Arthur Froom.
Hon. Raja Nawab Ali Khan.
Hon. Sardar Bahadur Shivdev Singh Uberoi.
Mr. Kikabhai Premchand, M.L.A.
Sir Hari Singh Gour, Kt., M.L.A.
Nawab Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan, Kt., M.L.A.
Dr. Abdulla Suhrawardy, M.L.A.
Rao Bahadur M. C. Rajah, M.L.A.

BOMBAY PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE.

Khan Bahadur Shah Nawaz Khan Bhutto, C.I.E. (Chairman).
Khan Saheb Abdul L. H. Hajrat Khan.
Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.
Mr. E. Miller.
Sardar G. N. Mujumdar.
Syed Miran Muhammad Shah, B.A., LL.B.
Rao Saheb Dongarsingh Ramji Patil.

PUNJAB PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE.

Khan Bahadur Captain Sirdar Sikandar Hayat Khan, M.B.E. (Chairman).
Dewan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath.
Rai Sahib Chaudhri Chhotu Ram.
Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, M.A., Ph.D.
Mr. Owen Roberts.
Sardar Ujjal Singh, M.A.
Chaudhri Zafrullah Khan.

UNITED PROVINCES PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE.

Mr. J. P. Srivastava (Chairman).
Raja Khushalpal Singh Bahadur, M.A., LL.B.
Rai Bahadur Kunwar Bisheswar Dayal Seth, B.Sc.
Khan Bahadur Hafiz H. Husain, B.A.
Dr. Shafa'at Ahmad Khan, M.A., Litt.D.
Babu Rama Charana, B.A., LL.B.
Mr. H. C. Desanges.

BIHAR AND ORISSA PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE.

Raja Bahadur H. P. Narayan Singh of Amawan (Chairman).
Raja Rajendra Narayan Bhanja Deo, O.B.E.
Babu Chandreshvar P. Narayan Sinha.
Rai Bahadur Sarat Chandra Roy.
Maulvi Saiyid Mubarak Ali Sahib.
Mr. Saiyid Muhammad Athar Hussain.
Babu Lakshmidhar Mahanti.

ASSAM PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE.

Lt.-Colonel W. D. Smiles. (Chairman)
Maulvi Arzan Ali Mazumdar.
Srijut Mukunda Narayan Borooah.
Maulavi Keremat Ali.
Rai Bahadur Sadananda Dowerah.
Maulavi Munawwar Ali.
Rai Bahadur Amarnath Ray.

BENGAL PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE.

Alhadj Sir Abdelkerim Ghuznavi, Kt. (Chairman).
Mr. W. L. Travers, C.I.E., O.B.E.
Mr. A. K. Fazl-ul-Huq.
Maulvi Abul Kasem.
Maharaja Sashi Kanta Acharjya Chaudhuri of Muktagacha.
Khan Bahadur K. G. M. Faroqui.

BURMA PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE.

U Aung Thin, M.A., B.L. (Chairman).
U Ba U.
U Ba Shin, M.B.E.
Mr. C. H. Campagnac, M.B.E.
Sra Shwe Ba, T.P.S.
Mr. M. M. Rafi.
Mr. M. Eusoof.

MADRAS PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE.

Rao Bahadur Sir A. P. Patro, Kt. (Chairman).
Diwan Bahadur S. K. Reddiyar.
Kumara Raja of Venkatagiri.
Khan Bahadur P. Khalif-ul-lah Sahib Bahadur.
Mr. Daniel Thomas.
Mr. P. Siva Rao.
Mr. N. Siva Raj.

NOTE.—The composition of the Joint Conference is given at the beginning of each day's evidence, and is the same during the afternoon as during the morning session unless otherwise stated.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Memorandum by Assam and Surma Valley Branches Indian Tea Association	1–4
Deputation from Assam and Surma Valley Branches Indian Tea Association	4–7
Memorandum by Rai Bahadur P. C. Datta, Ex-Minister, Assam	8–19
RAI BAHADUR P. C. DATTA	19–23
Memorandum by Goalpara Zemindars' Association	24–26
Memorandum by Honourable Moulvi Abdul Hamid, President, Assam Legislative Council	27–29
Memorandum by Syed M. Saadulla, M.L.C.	30–34
Memorandum by British Indian Association, Calcutta	35–38
Deputation from British Indian Association, Calcutta	39–47
Memorandum by Central National Muhammadan Association	48–55
Deputation from Central National Muhammadan Association and Moffussil Anjuman Islamia of Eastern Bengal	55–56B
Memorandum by All-India Association of European Government Servants (including Provincial Associations' Memoranda)	57–75
Deputation from All-India Association of European Government Servants	76–80
Statement of incomes from rent of tenure-holders in Mymensingh District	81–83
Memorandum by Indian Officers' Association, Calcutta	84–86
Deputation from Indian Officers' Association, Calcutta	87–89
Memorandum by All-Bengal Namasudra Association	90–95
Memorandum by Bengal Depressed Classes Association	96–97
Deputation from Bengal Depressed Classes Association and All-Bengal Namasudra Association	98–103
Memorandum by Darjeeling Planters' Association	104–105
Deputation from Darjeeling Planters' Association	106–107
Memorandum by Associated Chambers of Commerce of India and Ceylon	108–117
Deputation from Associated Chambers of Commerce of India and Ceylon	118–135
Memorandum by European Association	136–148
Deputation from European Association	148–158
Memorandum by Kanchrapara Railway Workmen's Union	159–162
Deputation from Kanchrapara Railway Workmen's Union	162–166
Memorandum by Country League	167–169
Memorandum by Marwari Association	170–174
Memorandum by Mr. W. L. Travers, C.I.E., C.B.E., M.L.C.	175–180
Memorandum by Alhadj Sir Abdelkerim Ghuznavi, Kt., M.L.C.	181–201
Memorandum by Hillmen's Association, Darjeeling	202
Memorandum by Constitutionalists (Southern India Liberal Federation, Madras)	203–218
Deputation from Constitutionalists (Southern India Liberal Federation, Madras)	218–230
Memorandum by United Planters' Association of Southern India	231–233
Deputation from United Planters' Association of Southern India	234–235
Memorandum by Madras Presidency, Oriya Association	236–247
Deputation from Madras Presidency, Oriya Association	247–250
Memorandum by Rao Sahib N. Ramamurti, President, Ganjam Defence League	251–255
Deputation from Ganjam Defence League	255–257

	PAGE
Memorandum by Madras Presidency Moslem League	258–261
Deputation from Madras Presidency Moslem League	262–271
Memorandum by Depressed Classes of Madras Presidency	272–280
Deputation from Depressed Classes of Madras Presidency	281–283
Memorandum by All-India Adi-Dravida Maha Jana Sabha and Madras Arundhathi Maha Jana Sabha	284–285
Deputation from All-India Adi-Dravida Maha Jana Sabha and Madras Arundhathi Maha Jana Sabha	285–292
Memorandum by Kodava Sabha, Mercara	293–295
Deputation from Kodava Sabha, Mercara	295–299
Memorandum by Ganjam District Peoples' Association	300–306
Memorandum by South India Liberal Federation, Madras	306–311
Deputation from Ganjam District Peoples' Association, and South India Liberal Federation, Madras	311–320
Memorandum by Indian Christian Association, Madras	321–325
Deputation from Indian Christian Association, Madras	325–328
Memorandum by Catholic Indian Association of Southern India	329–331
Deputation from Catholic Indian Association of Southern India	331–334
Deputation from Christian Depressed Classes	334–337
Memorandum by Christian Depressed Classes of Southern India	337–340
RIGHT REV. BISHOP AZARIAH, of Dornakal	340–342
Memorandum by Mr. N. Srinivasa Acharya on behalf of Orthodox Brahmins	343–345
Deputation of Orthodox Brahmins	345–350
Memorandum by Dewan Bahadur C. V. Ranga Reddi Garu, B.A., B.L.	351–353
Memorandum by Mr. Mahmud Schamnad, M.L.C., on behalf of Moplahs of Malabar Coast	354–355
Memorandum by Diwan Bahadur Sir T. N. Sivagnanam Pillai, Kt., Ex-Minister, Madras	356–357
Memorandum by Madras Landholders Association	357–358
Memorandum by Burma Chamber of Commerce	359–361
Memorandum by Association of Professional and Business Men in Burma	362–367
Deputation from Burma Chamber of Commerce and Association of Professional and Business Men	367–383
*MR. R. K. HARPER, I.C.S..	383–384
Memorandum by Burma for Burmans League	385–407
Memorandum by Separation League, Rangoon	407–413
Deputation from Burma for Burmans League and Separation League	413–417
Memorandum by Karen Elders of Burma	418–422
Memorandum by Karen National Association	422–427
Deputation from Karen Elders of Burma	427–434
Memorandum by Burma Moslem Community	434–436
Memorandum by Burma Moslem League	436–438
Memorandum by Burma Provincial Tanzim Committee	438–440
Deputation from Burma Moslem Society, Moslem League, and Provincial Tanzim Committee	441–442
Memorandum on behalf of Indian Interests in Burma	443–448
Deputation of Representatives of Indian Interests in Burma	448–454
Deputation of Ladies	454–456
Memorandum by Burma Landowners Association	457
SIR PO THA, C.I.E., O.B.E. representing Burma Landowners Association	457–458

* NOTE.—Mr. Harper gave evidence as an official witness, but his evidence is included in this volume in view of its bearing on the Burma Chamber of Commerce evidence.

	PAGE
Memorandum by the Shan Sawbwas	459–460
Deputation of the Shan Sawbwas	460–461
Memorandum by Anglo-Indian, Anglo-Burman, and Domiciled European Community of Burma	462–465
Memorandum by Indian Police Association, Burma Branch	465–466
Memorandum by Mr. Taj-ud-Din on behalf of Mussulmans of C.P. and Berar	467–501
Deputation from Moslems of C.P. and Berar	501–504
Memorandum by All-India Depressed Classes Association	504–506
Memorandum by C.P. Depressed Classes Association	506–507
Deputation from All-India Depressed Classes Association and C.P. and Berar Depressed Classes Association	507–508
Memorandum by C.P. and Berar Non-Brahmin Political Association	508–510
Memorandum by Non-Brahmin Party, C.P. and Berar	510–512
Deputation from C.P. and Berar Non-Brahmin Political Association	512–518
Memorandum by Indian Civil Service Central Association	519–520
Memorandum by Indian Civil Service (Retired) Association	520–523
Memorandum by Anglo-Indian Association, London	523–536
Memorandum by All-India Kurmi-Kshatriya Association	536–539
Invitation to submit Memoranda	540–541
INDEX	542–544

DOCUMENTS TO WHICH FREQUENT REFERENCE IS MADE.

Full Title.	Usual Description.
Committee on Financial Relations between the Central and Provincial Governments in India	Meston Committee Report.	Cmd. 7240/1920.
Report of Taxation Enquiry Committee, 1925	Todhunter Committee Report.	Government of India publication.
Report of North West Frontier Enquiry Committee, 1922	Bray Committee Report.	Government of India publication.
Report on Indian Constitutional Reforms	Montagu-Chelmsford Report.	Cmd. 9109 of 1918.
Report of the Committee appointed by the Secretary of State for India to enquire into questions connected with the Franchise and other matters relating to Constitutional Reforms. (Chairman: LORD SOUTHBOROUGH.)	Franchise Committee Report.	Cmd. 141 of 1919.
Report of the Royal Commission on the Superior Civil Services in India	Lee Commission Report.	Cmd. 2128 of 1924.
Report of Reforms Enquiry Committee	Muddiman Committee Report.	Cmd. 2360 of 1925.

Memorandum submitted by the Assam and Surma Valley Branches, Indian Tea Association.

On behalf of the Committees of the Assam and Surma Valley Branches of the Indian Tea Association we have the honour to submit the following Memorandum :—

INTRODUCTORY.

1. The Assam Branch, Indian Tea Association. This Association was formed on the 29th October, 1889, with a membership representing 76,692 acres of tea. Its objects are (1) to take up all matters connected with the Tea Industry needing attention, (2) to keep as much as possible in touch with the Government and other Associations and bodies having the same or like objects in view and (3) to maintain a united feeling in the province. All companies, proprietors or persons having or owning tea estates in the Assam Valley are eligible as ordinary members.

For administrative purposes the Assam Valley is split up in 15 centres, namely (1) Doom-Dooma, (2) Dibrugarh, (3) Panitola, (4) Tingri, (5) Moran, (6) North Lakhimpur, (7) Sonari, (8) Nazira, (9) Jorhat, (10) Golaghat, (11) Nowgong, (12) Bishnath, (13) Tezpur, (14) Borsola and (15) Mangaldai. Each of these centres containing members of the Association, elects a District or Sub-Committee annually from their number and each of these District or Sub-Committees is entitled to one representative on the General Committee for every complete membership area of 9,000 acres within its jurisdiction, but no District or Sub-Committee may be represented on the General Committee by less than two members. These representatives form the General Committee who manage the affairs and funds of the Association and select their own Chairman and Vice-Chairman whose duties, like those of the other members of the General Committees and Sub-Committees, are honorary. The present membership of the Association represents 250,823 acres of tea.

2. The Surma Valley Branch, Indian Tea Association. In 1881 District Committees were formed to protect the interests of the various gardens in the Surma Valley. Subsequently these Committees were converted into Branch Associations which ultimately were merged into one Branch for all districts. The objects of the Association are generally to watch over, and as far as possible protect the interests of the Tea Industry of the Surma Valley, and also to keep in touch with Government, the Indian Tea Association, Calcutta and other kindred Associations on matters connected with the Tea Industry. The membership of the Association consists of companies, proprietors and concerns occupied in the production of tea in the Surma Valley.

For the purposes of administration the Surma Valley is divided into nine districts, namely (1) Lakhipur, (2) Happy Valley, (3) Chutla Bheel, (4) Hailakandi, (5) North Cachar, (6) Chargola Longai, (7) Mid-Sylhet, (8) Balisera and (9) Luskerpore. Each of these districts has a District Committee who elect a certain allotted number of representatives totalling 16 to the General Committee of the Branch and these elected representatives select their own Chairman and Vice-Chairman whose duties like those of the other members of the General Committee and Sub-Committees are honorary. The membership of the Association now represents 135,227 acres under tea.

3. A list of the members of the various Committees is attached as an Appendix (I).*

4. This memorandum has been fully considered by all Branch and Sub-Branch Committees and has their unanimous approval.

PART I.

THE REALITIES OF THE PROBLEM.

HISTORICAL, GEOGRAPHICAL, ETHNOLOGICAL, ECONOMIC, AND OTHER FACTORS.

1. The History of the Province. The Kacharis (whose descendants may still be found in Kamrup and Cachar) may perhaps be described as the aborigines or earliest known inhabitants of the Brahmaputra Valley. In the eleventh century the Koch Kings (of which the present Cooch Behar family are descendants) invaded and captured the Valley. In the thirteenth century invaders from the Shan States of Burma came in from the north-east and during the next three or four centuries continued to invade in successive waves, eventually setting up the Ahom Kingdom with its capital at Sibsagor. The relics of their civilization would point to the fact that their rule was beneficial, but the ravages of malaria and kala-azar and the enervating climate of the plains so weakened them that they became an easy prey to further invasions from the north-east until in the eighteenth century it had been annexed by Burma. The actual descendants of the Ahoms now in the province according to the census of 1921 only number some 216,000 souls.

In 1820 representations to the East India Company as to mal-treatment by the Burmans, led to an expedition and to the annexation of the Brahmaputra Valley. These constant and successive invasions led to the depopulation of the valley which reverted to jungle.

In 1823, one Robert Bruce discovered tea growing wild in the Singpho's Hills near Sibsagor, and this led in 1839 to the development of the tea industry primarily by the Government, and these experimental plots being handed over to the Assam Company (a chartered Company) in 1840. From this period started the re-population of the valley and the reclamation of its fertile tracts from jungle. The next step was the taking over of the responsibilities of the Assam Company by the Crown in 1858. Thereafter the valley was governed under a Chief Commissionership, until in 1909 it formed a portion of the new province of Eastern-Bengal and Assam under Lord Curzon's partition Act. In 1912 with the rescinding of that measure, Assam reverted to its former status of Chief Commissionership.

In 1921, under the new Reforms Act of 1919, it was constituted a Governor's Province with an Executive Council and Ministers, the latter being responsible to a Legislative Council with an elected majority.

2. Geographical. We have attached to this memorandum a map* of the Province as it is to-day. It is doubtful if Assam can be correctly included in the general term India. Its climate is entirely different from that of the peninsula and is much more akin to Burma than to India. It is a Frontier Province and whilst up-to-date it has only been faced with minor expeditions, developments in the Far East are likely to increase the military importance of this frontier. Apart from the cultivable area of the big rivers some 47% of the province is composed of hills covered by thick jungle and inhabited by uncivilized tribes, Mongolian in character. (The Nagas, Mikirs, Khasias, Garos, Bhutias, Arkhas, Daphalas, Miris, Abors, Mishims, Khamptis and Singphoos.) Its truly indigenous population is Mongolian. The re-population of the province largely by the Tea Industry has introduced Dravidian types which have been latterly further increased by immigration.

3. Ethnological. We consider it essential that the nature of the peoples of the Province whose interests have to be protected under reformed political Government should be thoroughly understood.

According to the census of 1921 the population of the province is 7,606,230, which excludes Manipur and its population of 384,016.

This is sub-divided as follows :—

(A). Division by Races. The indigenous population of the Upper Assam Valley is 1,640,000, of these 181,754 are tribes living in the administered tracts and of the remainder the larger sections are :—

* Not printed.

* Not reproduced.

The Ahoms ..	216,000
Brahmins ..	87,539	May generally be taken as the intelligentsia of Assam.
Kyastha ..	21,716
Chutiya ..	94,642
Kachari ..	192,752
Kewat ..	98,001
Koch.. ..	220,817
Kolita ..	222,942

In the Surma Valley the prominent section is the Sylheti, mainly Muhammadan and their numbers amount to approximately 2,000,000.

The balance of the population is mainly immigrant, and the Tea Industry has been responsible for the immigration of approximately one and a half million persons.

(B). Division by Occupation. We consider it equally important to our purpose to examine the position from the point of view of occupations :—

Professional Classes and Liberal Arts ..	98,506
Agriculture and Pasture	7,078,000
Tea plantation	916,496
Industries (Minerals)	10,552
Other Industries	194,674
Transportation	79,484
Trade	268,371

4. Economic. Further, we feel it very necessary to emphasize the economic aspect of our problem. The prosperity of our province and its peoples is dependent upon its economic development. Our major difficulties are the paucity of our population and the limited revenues available for development purposes, and we are strongly of opinion that economics must be, as elsewhere, the dominant factor in the political organization of the province.

PART II.

THE TEA INDUSTRY.

1. The important part played by the Tea Industry in the development of our province is, we believe, indisputable.

2. Of the total cultivable area within the province of 5,724,000 acres, 1,538,960 acres (1/5 of the total cultivable area) are included in Tea Grants, and for the direct development of which we have been responsible. Of this, 420,564 acres are under tea, the remainder being under rice, grazing grounds, thatch, firewood and timber reserves, coolie lines and vegetable gardens.

3. Similarly of a total population (excluding administered tracts) of 5,750,000, 1,010,000 (1/5 of the total) make up the tea garden population.

4. Apart from this the Industry has assisted in the colonisation of the province to the extent of half a million, ex-tea-garden coolies who have settled in the province.

The colonization of the province is a predominant factor in its development and, putting the cost of our imported labour at the conservative estimate of £20 per head, the Industry has made a contribution of 30 million pounds to this development.

5. It will be of interest to your Commission and an answer to irresponsible charges made against the Tea Industry, to examine in some detail the manner in which we have fulfilled our responsibilities to the population and area, amounting to 1/5th of the province, in our care.

6. Within the sphere of nation building activities which are the duty of Provincial Governments, the Industry can show a record which it believes your Commission will consider more than creditable.

	£
Medical—Expenditure by the Industry in medical charges, excluding Capital Charges per annum (for 1/5th of the province)	420,000
Estimated Expenditure by Provincial Government for 1928–29 (for 4/5ths)	70,000
Education—(Primary). The actual figures are not obtainable	—
Agriculture—By Tea Industry on its Experimental Station annually (for 1/5th)	16,000
By Provincial Government (for 4/5ths)	49,000

Roads and Buildings—The Industry, besides maintaining thousands of miles of roads within its gardens, pays an increased voluntary tax up to 8 annas per acre for the maintenance of roads outside its area. In addition it subsidizes many of Local Board roads.

7. It also pays rates to the Local Boards at the rate of one anna per rupee for leasehold and 2 annas for fee simple grant. The Industry subscribes to the research work at the Tropical School of Medicine at Calcutta, and several companies have carried out extensive anti-malaria schemes.

8. Further, the European employees of the Tea Industry make a considerable contribution to the security forces of the province.

9. It is, perhaps, of importance that those who so frequently criticise labour conditions in the Tea Industry should realize that the labour is in a position to set itself up on its own lands within an average of 6 years ; a position unique in the history of labour in any country.

PART III.

RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT IN ASSAM.

1. Scope of this Memorandum. This memorandum is confined to matters relating to the Province of Assam which come within the scope of the enquiry now being undertaken by the Indian Statutory Commission acting under the following terms of reference :—

> It is " to enquire into the working of the system of Government, the growth of education, and the development of representative institutions in British India and matters connected therewith " and it is " to report as to whether and to what extent it is desirable to establish the principle of responsible government then existing therein, including the question whether the establishment of Second Chambers of the local legislatures is or is not desirable."

Any of the statements made or views expressed herein will be verified and amplified, if required, by the representatives of the Branch Associations in the course of their oral evidence during the period of the sitting of the Commission in the province.

2. Our opinions on responsible Government. If dyarchy be reviewed in the light of the experience of its working in the province during the past eight years it must be admitted that the evidence as to the suitability of responsible Government to the needs of our province or to the political capacity of its peoples is inconclusive. Owing largely to financial stringency and to the determined efforts of a well organized party, whose members are anxious for increased powers before they have duly essayed those given to them, and whose activities in Assam, as elsewhere, have been mainly directed towards making any form of Government ineffective, it cannot be said that Responsible Government in Assam in its dyarchial form has had a fair chance of success. It would be unfortunate, however, if the wrecking tendencies of the insatiable section were to thwart the natural ambitions of those who have proved themselves worthy of a larger measure of responsibility in the management of the province. If the Industry were to give its candid opinion solely on the realities of the problem and the good Government of the province, it would, having regard to the fact that the hill tracts, some 47% of the province, are and can only for the present be administered, strongly recommend that the whole province should be administered.

It is forced, however, to recognize, and is not antagonistic to, the declared intention of the British Parliament, to assist and encourage the political development of our province, and with this in view, considers that a system of responsible Government in the province should be given the fullest trial subject to certain safeguards specified later, and subject to a recognition of the realities of the problem and the capacity of our various people and interests to self defence under modern political conditions.

3. The Realities of the Problem. (a) We have previously in paras. 3 and 4, Part I, analyzed the population of the province and the interests requiring representation.

The existing electorate for the Provincial Legislative Council amounts to 250,751, or 4.3% of the population, and in our opinion it is not at present possible to extend the franchise. The result is, from an examination of the status of elected representatives, that an altogether undue proportion of representation has been secured to minority interests which are in the main Urban.

(b) Of the elected representatives, 12 are Assamese, 12 are Muhammadans, 8 represent other non-Muhammadans, including Europeans, 5 represent Planting interests, 1 represents Commerce and Industry, and 1 the urban constituency of Shillong, with a preponderating lawyer influence.

Agricultural interests are, excluding the 5 planting seats, inadequately represented, and such representation as there is has been secured by individuals who are not practical agriculturists.

The masses of the people are devoid of education and their political capacity to defend themselves under modern political conditions is negligible.

(c) Owing to the lack of communications, the scattered population and limited revenues, the growth of education without which political capacity cannot be developed, must be slow.

(d) Approximately 47% of the province consists of Hill tracts inhabited by semi-civilized tribes to whom the Act of 1919 has not been made applicable. There is in our opinion no hope of bringing these tracts within any reasonable limit of time within the scope of any Reformed Council and they must continue to be administered as heretofore by special officers or the Deputy Commissioner under the direct control of the Governor.

These tracts are at present a charge to the extent of 8 lakhs per annum on our revenues, and we are of opinion that any additional Expenditure arising from extraordinary circumstances such as expeditions, should be met by the Central Government. The British element required for the administration of these tracts should not be included in the proportion retained under the Lee Commission for the administration of the rest of Assam.

4. Safeguards. We have previously stated our opinion that in view of the declared intention of Parliament, responsible Government should be given the fullest possible trial subject to certain safeguards which are set out below :—

(1) Law and Order and the departments intimately connected therewith, the Police, Courts of Justice, and Political appointments should be placed under the direct control of the Governor, and the Legislature should have no powers of criticism or of voting on the budgets of these departments.

(2) A second chamber should be established.

(3) All bills passed by the Provincial Legislature shall require the assent of the Governor General.

(4) The Governor must retain his right of veto over all legislation, and this power should be extended to cover resolutions and questions.

(5) Statutory safeguards must be provided against legislation which discriminates against any particular section or community in matters of Taxation, Trade or Commerce, and the existing instructions to Governors in this respect should be continued.

(6) The recommendations of the Lee Commission should be adhered to.

(7) The Governor General should be given powers to take over and administer the province when in his opinion the administration breaks down.

(8) A Public Service Commission should be appointed. We are of opinion that the Public Service Commission, if appointed for Bengal, could at present undertake such work as this province may require.

(9) The troops maintained in the province for security purposes should be increased by one battalion.

12. Local Self-Government. We are convinced that the training ground for the electorate and also for the individual in public service lies in the sphere of local Self-Government. In our province these bodies have but comparatively recently reached the full status of Self-Government. Whilst there is much that may be criticised there has been in our opinion some growth, and there is plenty of room for hope. Many of the managers of Tea Gardens are taking an active part in the work of Local Boards and it is believed that their participation in the activities of these bodies is valued by their Indian colleagues.

We would strongly recommend the development of the village panchayat system, and that panchayats should be given limited powers of taxation to meet their administrative requirements. We consider that tanks, wells, village roads and primary schools might be transferred to their control and Government grants allowed to them proportionately. We would recommend adult suffrage for such bodies.

We would also recommend an extension of franchise for Local Boards, on the basis of a vote for each tenant lessee or proprietor of one poorah of land, and we would suggest that those who could be shown as literate in the vernacular be included.

We have noticed and it is natural that members of local boards pay more attention to those areas where the vote lies.

We consider, however, in view of the criticism made in Local Government reports, that adequate powers must be retained by the Provincial Government to check maladministration. We would welcome some measure, such as the surcharge in England tending to increase the sense of financial responsibility of the members of these bodies.

7. The Provincial Legislative Council. (a) We have already criticised the composition of the Council and in particular the fact that the existing franchise and other factors have led to power being concentrated in the hands of a small section which in practice represents but a minority of the population and, possibly of more importance, only the smallest interests in the province. We are strongly of opinion that if responsible Government is to be given a fuller trial, steps must be taken to secure adequate representation for all interests in proportion to their importance in the province. We have emphasized previously the fact that economic factors must dominate political organization.

(b) In so far as representation for the Tea Industry is concerned we have pointed out that it is already responsible for 1/5th of the cultivable area of the province and 1/5th of its population and consider that its representation in the Council should be in the equal proportion. We believe an examination of our activities as outlined in Part II will show that we have exercised such powers as we have been afforded in a responsible manner and that a claim for increased representation is not only just but will be of value to the province.

(c) We would recommend that the Commission in considering the representation of interests in the Provincial Council should bear in mind the fact that Agricultural interests are the predominant interest in the province, and the representation should be provided, in so far as is possible, through practical working agriculturists.

We would particularly recommend :—

(i) That Agricultural Research should be given one seat.

(ii) That the monetary qualification for the Commerce and Industry constituency should be raised to one lakh.

(iii) That the immigrant classes be given representation.

(iv) That provision be made for the representation of the tribes.

8. The Ministry. We consider the Governor should appoint Ministers from the elected representatives, and that they should hold office for the life of the Council, subject only to dismissal by the Governor.

In conclusion the Committees of the Assam and Surma Valley Branches of the Indian Tea Association are aware of the fact that the Commission during its first visit to India made extensive tours in the provinces visited for the purpose of seeing how real India lives. They are very strongly of opinion that this procedure is essential to a true understanding of the conditions in Assam, and trust that the Commission will during its visit to Assam take special steps to visit the districts.

SHILLONG.

Dated 3rd January, 1929.

PRESENT :

ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION (EXCEPT LORD STRATHCONA), OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE (EXCEPT MR. KIKABHAI PREMCHAND, SIR ZULFIQAR ALI KHAN, RAJA NAWAB ALI KHAN AND SARDAR SHIVDEV SINGH UBEROI), AND OF THE ASSAM PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE (EXCEPT MAULVI MUNAWWAR ALI).

Deputation from the Assam and Surma Valley Branches of the Indian Tea Association.

The deputation consisted of the following :—

Mr. W. G. McKERCHER, spokesman on behalf of the Assam Branch, Indian Tea Association.

Mr. W. E. D. COOPER, spokesman on behalf of the Surma Valley Branch, Indian Tea Association.

Mr. E. S. ROFFEY.

Mr. G. E. RAYNER.

* * * * * * * *

11. Lt.-Col. Smiles : Is it not the fact that the tea industry contributes much more to the central than to the provincial revenues ?—Yes ; they have done, and they do still, I think.

12. What is the total amount the industry has paid as land revenue during the year 1927–28, and what were the total land revenue receipts during the year ? What is your proportion ?—The tea industry paid over one-fifth of the revenues, and I think the land revenue was Rs. 10,672,000.

13. The Chairman : That, you say, is one-fifth of the total land revenue ?—No ; that is the total land revenue, sir, and we pay over one-fifth of that.

14. That is to say, something over 21 lakhs ? —Yes.

15. Lt.-Col. Smiles : I now come to question No. 3. You say that the tea garden population is a little over a million and you claim for the industry representation to the council on the population basis ?—Also on the basis of land revenue and other payments to Central and local Governments. In this connection I may say that no public amounts are expended on tea garden areas, for example, on roads, hospitals and water-supply. Although we pay local rates, we do not get anything back. This one-fifth of the province within the tea garden areas is supported by the tea industry as regards the maintenance of roads, hospitals, etc.

16. The Chairman : Then what you claim is that you should have one-fifth of the members of the council. Is that so ?—Yes, sir.

17. Lt.-Col. Smiles : Then I come to question No. 4. You propose the exclusion of the hills from the scope of the coming reforms, and at the same time suggest that the tribes should be represented on the council. Are not the two propositions inconsistent ?—Possibly, but we have no knowledge of what the future Government is going to be.

18. The Chairman : Let us put it in a different way. Let us suppose that in the reformed constitution for the province of Assam the area of the province is so changed as to exclude the hill tribes. You know of course that that is a suggestion which is put forward. In that event you would not suggest that the hill tribes outside that area should contribute representatives to the legislature ?—No ; I would not.

19. Lt.-Col. Smiles : Considering the hitherto untapped forest and mineral resources of the hills, will it not be a shortsighted policy to exclude the hills ?—No.

20. Then question No. 5. You propose that Law and Order should be Central subjects. Do you realise that this exclusion will convert the local Government into a glorified local board ?—We do not. I think we have proposed that Law and Order should be under the Governor as reserved subjects.

21. You do not propose them to be Central subjects. You propose that Law and Order should be subjects reserved under the Governor ?—" Law and Order " and the departments intimately connected there- " with, the police, courts of justice, and political " appointments should be placed under the direct " control of the Governor, and the legislature should " have no powers of criticism or of voting on the " budgets of these departments." (Page 3 of the memorandum). That is our statement.

22. With the other things that are still left entirely in the power of the council, do you consider that the Assam Government will degenerate into a sort of glorified local board ?—No.

23. Is it then your idea that diarchy should continue so far as Law and Order are concerned ? —That does not arise, does it ?

24. Forest being transferred and Law and Order being reserved that might be called diarchy ?—Yes.

25. Will you agree to the transfer of Law and Order if an administrative court is set up in the province which will be in a position to give adequate protection to the policemen and the magistrate ?—No.

* * * * * * * *

28. Lt.-Col. Smiles : Is it not a fact that the whole Government will be paralysed if these departments are slackly or unsympathetically administered ?—Yes, but that is absolutely unlikely under the Governor's administration.

29. What constitution do you suggest for a Second Chamber and what powers do you propose for this Chamber ?—It should consist of ten to twelve members of whom one-fifth should be members of the planting community. The qualification, we suggest, is the payment of income-tax on Rs.10,000 and possession of not less than 500 acres.

30. The Chairman : Is it your idea that a Second Chamber so composed should be free to exercise its veto on any legislation passed by the legislative council ?—Yes, sir.

31. Lt.-Col. Smiles: Why do you propose to raise the franchise for the Commerce and Industry constituency ?—To get more responsible representation.

32. Is it because under the existing franchise the Indian electors of this constituency may return one of themselves to the council ?—No, certainly not.

33. Is the present member for this constituency an Indian ?—Yes.

34. The Chairman : What is the present franchise for the Commerce and Industry constituency ?—Rs. 25,000.

35. And what is it you want to raise it to ?—We suggest Rs. 1 lakh.

36. Lt.-Col. Smiles : I think Mr. Cooper can answer this question better than you, Mr. McKercher. I put it to you, Mr. Cooper, that any minister that the Governor may nominate, the planting members would support ?—(Mr. Cooper) Certainly.

37. The question whether the minister was efficient or not would not enter the minds of the planters so long as he is nominated by the Governor ?—Yes. It would certainly give him a trial to see what he was like.

38. With your experience of the council I would like to know from you if the minister were elected by the council instead of being nominated by the Governor, would this not remove one of the principal reasons for the existence of the present Swaraj party ?—It would remove one of the reasons, but I do not know how many more there are.

39. What objection do you see to the system under which ministers are elected by the council for the duration of the council ?—In principle I think they certainly should be, and in practice I am rather doubtful about it.

40. Mr. McKercher, you have heard of the proposal for making separate electorates for tea garden coolies and to elect members out of them. Do you think this is practical or possible ?—(Mr. McKercher) I suggest nomination and not election.

41. You do not think it would be a practical proposition if they were to be elected ?—No.

42. Who would you suggest should be nominated to represent them ?—I should say the tea planter, who is the best friend of these coolies, or somebody who knows them. The tea planters know their ways and the coolies come to the planters when they are in trouble.

43. The Chairman: I just want to face what is involved in that. Of course, one is glad to hear that the tea planter is the best friend of the tea coolies. If the tea planter is to represent the coolies and if a situation arose in the legislature in which the tea planters' interest was one way and the coolies' interest was the other way, which way do you think the coolies' representative would vote ?—That is, no doubt, a difficulty which is to be faced. I also suggested that any man who had experience, with service on the garden, could be nominated.

44. The Chairman: You see, it is a point one has to consider, because, really, when you say that the tea planter is the best representative that is really because you feel quite satisfied that his view on what is best and right for the coolies is also the coolies' view on what is best and right for them. That is a most satisfactory state of affairs, but it will not be the case always. I think you will agree, when that happens, it would not be right that the labourers should be told that the only representative for them is the tea planter.

The Witness: (Mr. McKercher) I agree with you, sir, and I therefore say that any from the establishment who understands the coolies could be nominated.

45. Rai Bahadur Sadananda Dowerah: You have got now five members to represent tea in this council. If more representation is given to you, would you earmark one of the seats for the Indian planters ?—With pleasure.

46. Mr. Withers represents labour in this council. Would you tell the Conference what interest he takes for the coolies ?—I think he is an ideal labour representative. I have never heard any complaints against him.

47. Do you think that these coolies could be better represented by a tea garden clerk than by Mr. Withers ?—No.

48. Supposing there are missionaries or other people who take interest in the welfare of the coolies, have you any objection to the representation of the coolies by these men ?—No.

49. Do you admit that if the coolies are to elect their own representatives they cannot be effectively represented either by a Mohurrir or a Sardar, who have not sufficient education to understand the proceedings of the council ?—We do not suggest that these representatives should be elected.

50. Supposing they are to be elected, would you put any restrictions that they must be represented by their own men or that they may be represented by any one whom they elect ?—We say that the time has not come when they should be elected.

51. Supposing the Commission were to recommend and the Parliament were to accept that they will have to elect their own representative, would you insist that they should elect only that man whose name is on the electoral roll, or would you give them the choice of electing any one ?—I would not put any restrictions, but I do not think they have really yet reached a stage when they could exercise their franchise themselves.

52. We are told that adult franchise is impracticable, but if the coolies who are able to write their names are allowed to vote by ballot and the rest are simply divided, do you think it is an impracticable proposition to have adult franchise ?—I do.

53. Maulvi Keramat Ali: You want to reduce the number of voters for the Commerce and Industry constituency ?—I do not wish to reduce the number; I only wish to get the best representative for the industry; the larger the capital the better will be the brains—I mean they will have a large stake in the country.

54. What are your objections to Law and Order being made a transferred subject ?—Law and Order in Assam, owing to the fact that we are a frontier province and of the presence of the administered tracts, is a different problem to any other province, except the North West Frontier Province, to which it approximates in general conditions. One battalion of regular military troops is stationed in a hill district. Road communications in the plains are nil, and none of the rivers are bridged. The Assam legislative council proceedings show the opposition to police grants and the disorderly condition of the province between 1918 and 1922. The existing police control is one to 12.2 square miles. Pressure brought to bear on the minister through the legislature or the Press may lead to dilatory handling of the situation with serious effects.

55. Your fears are that as the minister will be always in the hands of the council, it may be that he will be led by the council sometimes to act irresponsibly in running the Police department ?—I think the minister will be in a very unfortunate position. As I have already said, pressure brought to bear on the minister through the legislature or the Press may lead to dilatory handling of the situation with serious effects.

56. If the fixity of tenure is secured for ministers as proposed by the Government in their memorandum, I think you will have no fears ?

The Chairman : Let us put it in a different way. I am interested to know what the witness thinks. I have gathered that the anxiety which many people feel about transferring Law and Order and putting it in the hands of the minister is really due to their fear that if that happened the present practice and temper of the legislative councils might leave the minister to find himself constantly exposed to the risk of defeat, refusal of salary, or censure. But if you were to suppose that the minister was in some way secured against the risk of constant defeat, constantly being assailed by a vote of censure, would not that rather remove some of that difficulty ? —No, because you cannot get away from the communal issue. The minister may not take action because he will know that he will be criticised.

* * * * * * * *

58. Maulvi Keramat Ali : Do you mean to say that as long as communal tension continues Law and Order should not be placed in the hands of an Indian ?—I do.

59. Is there any communal tension in this province ?—Yes.

60. Can you cite any instance of a quarrel between the two communities in the Assam Valley ?—There was on one occasion, two years ago. I think trouble was expected. It was reported that goondas were being imported by the Hindus and the Muhammadans would not be allowed to perform their ceremonies.

61. They were not Assamese ?—Preparations were being made.

62. Rai Bahadur Amarnath Ray : You claim representation on the combined basis of population and payment of taxes ?—Yes.

63. You would have both these factors taken into consideration in the matter of the distribution of seats between the Hindus and the Muhammadans ?—Certainly, yes.

64. Is it not a fact that the poor man of the poor community is in a greater need of the Government protection than the rich man of the rich community ?—I agree with you. When I say the poor man, I mean the ryot and the coolie. I go further than you do.

65. Would you similarly give the man who pays Rs.5 as land revenue one vote and two votes to the man who pays Rs.10 ?—No, I certainly should not give two votes.

66. Sir Hari Singh Gour : You say, on page 3 of your memorandum, that in view of the fact that you are responsible for one-fifth of the culturable area of the province and one-fifth of its population, you want one-fifth representation ? Is not that so ? —Yes.

67. Would you, therefore, on the same basis give four-fifths representation to the other cultivators and landlords ? You say you pay 20 lakhs as land revenue out of 108 lakhs. On that basis, assuming that you contribute one-fifth of the land revenue and are responsible for one-fifth of the cultivable area you want one-fifth of the seats. Now, on the same basis would you give four-fifths of the seats to the rest of the cultivators and payers of land revenue ?—You mean to the balance of the land revenue payers ?

68. Yes ?—It may not be cultivators only, would it ?

69. They are land revenue payers, and you give them four-fifths of the seats ?—Yes.

70. Then what will be left to the other interests ? —That is your business.

71. On page 3 under "Safeguards," you say that you will place Law and Order under the direct control of the Governor "and the legislature should have "no powers of criticism or of voting on the budgets "of these departments." Now, who is to prepare the budget ?—The Governor and his executive.

72. Consequently out of the revenues you give the Governor as much as he wants ; is not that so, and the legislative council would have no right either to criticise his action or to refuse his budget ?—Yes, that is quite right.

73. Having given the Governor what he wants, supposing there is an outbreak of a riot in which the amount he has taken is not sufficient and he wants three times as much the amount, where is he to get it from ?—He must get it.

74. Where from ? He has cut himself away from the council ?—From the Central Government.

75. Would you, therefore, give the power to the Central Government to pass your budget and criticise the action of your Governor ?—Certainly.

76. You place this part of the budget before the Central Government ?—The Governor is responsible for it ; but it must be passed by the Central Government.

77. That is to say, you are placing this part of the budget under the Legislative Assembly, making it a votable item ?—No.

78. Then under whom ?—Under the Central Government, the Governor General.

79. Supposing it is the Governor General, how is he going to give you the money unless he goes to the Legislative Assembly ?—He will have to find it. That is up to you again.

* * * * * * * *

82. Sir Hari Singh Gour : Yours is a purely European Association ?—No.

83. Have you got any Indians ?—Yes.

84. How many Indians have you got ?—Fourteen Indian concerns in the Assam Valley branch, out of 356 total, and 7 in the Surma Valley out of 160 total.

85. How is it that there is not a single Indian member of your Association on this deputation ? —Because they are very small and they are not on the general committee, except one, and he will not come into politics.

* * * * * * * *

90. Mr. Hartshorn : On page 2 you say that the industry has assisted in the colonisation of the province to the extent of half a million. Then you say, "The colonisation of the province is a pre-"dominant factor in its development and, putting the "cost of our imported labour at the conservative "estimate of £20 per head, the industry has made a "contribution of 30 million pounds to this develop-"ment." Taking those statements together, half a million at 20 pounds will come to 10 millions, and not 30 millions as stated here. What makes the difference ?—We have got 600,000 ex-tea garden labourers settled. It costs you Rs.200 to import them to the province plus concession rates.

91. Are you including all that in your £20 ?—No.

92. You say that you have colonised to the extent of one and a half million ?—No, we have got our present labour force in that.

93. The Chairman : The confusion is simply due to the fact that there is a comma after 'million.' It must be "half a million ex-tea garden coolies." It means that out of the million and a half, half a million or 600,000 have passed out and become settlers on the land, and no longer coolies ?—Yes.

94. Mr. Hartshorn : On page 2 you say, "It is "perhaps of importance that those who so frequently "criticise labour conditions in the tea industry should "realise that the labour is in a position to set itself "up on its own lands within an average of six years, "a position unique in the history of labour in any "country." Can you tell us how many labourers have actually accomplished this feat ?—Those 600,000 ; and many more retire to their country every year.

95. On page 3 you say that you regard local self-government as a training ground for the electorate and you would strongly recommend the development of the village panchayat system, and then you mention the functions you would give them. Then you say, " We would recommend adult suffrage for such bodies." You mean by that that you set up a machinery for getting a ballot vote ?—This is the village panchayat.

96. You get a register of the voters and they conduct the voting ?—Yes; just as the village councils at Home.

97. Have you gone into the question of the amount of labour involved in setting up that machinery ? We have been told this morning that adult suffrage is impracticable from this point of view; that it is not possible to secure the necessary staff to adopt the adult suffrage ?—I see what you mean. That might be so in a large electorate, but with your local boards it is not difficult. Many of them have the village panchayats and they are working very well. It is the best form of settling any quarrel in the villages.

98. Mr. Hartshorn: But have they got the machinery for conducting a private poll ?—They just elect their own man from among themselves and he is put forward.

99. Have you considered the amount of labour that would be involved in setting up this machinery ? —I have not considered it.

100. Colonel Lane-Fox: Have you considered whether this system of machinery will be necessary ? —I have not.

101. Mr. Hartshorn: When you speak of adult suffrage, do you not mean the ordinary ballot vote ?—We mean the ordinary vote of the village panchayat.

102. But you have not considered the possibility of setting up that machinery for this purpose ?— No, I have not. I may tell you this. I have been many years a member of the local board and I know these panchayats very well indeed. I know the villagers, and I know that the panchayat is the best way of getting down to the bottom of things. We suggest the panchayats should entirely run their own village. Raise their own taxes and pay for their own primary schools and other local requirements, and those who cannot afford to pay more, could work in their own little village instead.

103. The only point I was putting you is this. If you once set up a political machinery which will enable these people to exercise their franchise, you will have got your own register and your own electoral machinery that can be used for any purpose afterwards. It would be possible to use it for provincial councils as well. If it could be set up for one purpose, it could be used for any other purpose as well. But you say you have not considered it ?— I have not considered it.

104. The Chairman: Have these panchayats got a list of voters in their own villages ?—No.

Rao Bahadur Rajah: By beat of tom-tom they ask all the adults to assemble in a particular place, and then by show of hands they decide.

105. The Chairman: It is not the case, then, that village panchayats are constituted by the process of a list of voters and the use of a ballot and all that kind of thing. It is done by the beat of the drum, asking the adults to assemble in the evening and be present at an ordinary meeting place, and then there is a show of hands and general confabulation, and then the thing is done ?

Rao Bahadur Rajah: Yes, sir; that is it. The meeting is called by a Government official—a tahsildar for instance—and he conducts the proceedings.

106. Mr. Hartshorn: When I find in a memorandum of this kind a recommendation about adult suffrage, I assume that by that it is meant the bringing into existence of a proper register and the holding of a ballot for votes ?—No, sir. That was not meant at all.

107. The Chairman: You meant that by beat of the drum the villagers assemble and then the election is done there ?—Yes, sir.

108. Lord Burnham: I notice on page 2 of your memorandum you give us the figures, which have already been dealt with, in regard to the number of acres under tea. You say there are 420,564 acres out of the 1,538,960 which are included in the tea gardens. Could you tell me approximately what proportion of that area and what proportion of the tea production is due to small producers as against the tea companies; that is to say, small against the big business men ?—I think we represent about 92.39 per cent of the acreage in the Surma Valley and about 91.47 per cent. in the Assam Valley.

109. Then does it mean that the rest is occupied by Indians ?—No, sir. There may be some Indians, and some Europeans also who are not members of our Association.

Lt.-Col. Smiles: There are very few tea estates in Assam below 100 acres.

* * * * * * * *

113. * * * Lt.-Col. Smiles: I think I am correct in saying that the average area of a tea garden concern, European or Indian, works out between 400 and 500 acres over the whole of the province.

114. Then the only other question is there are constant complaints about your getting the privilege in regard to the premium for land to be developed. I notice that such complaints are made in the proceedings of the legislative council. Have you got anything to say about that; that is to say, about the terms on which you acquire land for the production of tea ?—They are exactly the same for every one, sir, and we deny any privilege.

115. I read the allegation in the council proceedings. Have there been absolute equality between Europeans and Indians in regard to the land taken up for tea ?—Absolute, sir. There is no question of privilege.

116. And between the big man and small ?— Nothing.

117. I see, at any rate, that a charge has been made, and your Association is opposed to any such differentiation, I suppose ?—Very much so, sir.

118. Major Attlee: Could you tell me, have you any organisation at all by which you meet representatives of workers; anything like a welfare association, or anything of that sort ?—(Mr. McKercher): Nothing whatever.

119. There is one other question. You propose a Second Chamber. That is entirely composed, I gather, of the wealthy classes ?—I presume they must have a stake in the country, otherwise they will have no responsibility.

120. And that they will have a veto on legislation ? —Yes.

121. Do you not think that when you put people there who are in a wealthy position, they are liable to attack ?—The more responsibility you have in the province, the less likely you are to abuse law and order; like the representation on the Council of State.

Mr. Cooper: The representation on the Council of State should be by men who have a stake in the country.

Mr. McKercher: That is the case in the House of Lords in England, I believe.

Lord Burnham: That is represented by all sections.

Major Attlee: It is not primarily composed of wealthy people.

Memorandum submitted by RAI BAHADUR PRAMODE CHANDRA DATTA, Ex-Minister Local Self-Government, Assam.

NOTES ON THE REFORMS

India's constitution has been in the main derived from Parliament. Government of India Act, 1858, declared that henceforth " India shall be governed by and in the name of the Queen," and vested in the Queen all the territories and powers of the Company. The dual control that in England used to be exercised by the Company's Directors and the Board of Control was done away with and a Secretary of State with a Council was appointed to conduct the business transacted in the United Kingdom in relation to the Government of India and correspondence with India. The affairs in India continued to be conducted by the Governor-General-in-Council (henceforth to be appointed by Her Majesty by warrant under the Royal Sign Manual) with the help of the subordinate Presidency and Provincial Governments except as regards territories under his direct control. Between 1858 and 1919 a steady process of devolution of powers had been going on but the scheme of Government introduced in 1858 remained in essence the same until the Government of India Act 1919 was passed. That Act which amended the Government of India (Amendment) Act 1915, declared realisation of responsible Government as an integral part of the British Empire to be the goal of British rule in India. With that object in view while certain very important changes were made with regard to the Secretary of State in Council and the Government of India, a dual Government which has come to be known as dyarchy was introduced in the Provinces. The principles underlying those changes were thus foreshadowed in the Montagu-Chelmsford Report :—

(1) There should be, as far as possible, complete popular control in local bodies and the largest possible independence for them of outside control.

(2) The provinces are the domain in which the earlier steps towards the progressive realisation of responsible Government should be taken. Some measure of responsibility should be given at once, and our aim is to give complete responsibility as soon as conditions permit. This involves at once giving the Provinces the largest measure of independence, legislative, administrative and financial, of the Government of India which is compatible with the due discharge by the latter of its own responsibilities.

(3) The Government of India must remain wholly responsible to Parliament, and saving such responsibility, its authority in essential matters must remain indisputable, pending experience of the effect of the changes now to be introduced in the provinces. In the meantime the Indian Legislative Council should be enlarged and made more representative and its opportunities of influencing Government increased.

(4) In proportion as the foregoing changes take effect, the control of Parliament and the Secretary of State over the Government of India and Provincial Governments must be relaxed.

The Statutory Commission is to examine the new constitution in the light of the experiences gained during the last 8 years. The terms of reference under which the Commission is acting are as follows :—

It is " to enquire into the system of Government, the growth of education, and the development of representative institutions in British India, and matters connected therewith, and it is to report as to whether and to what extent it is desirable to establish the principle of responsible Government, or to extend, modify or restrict the degree of responsible government existing therein, including the question whether the establishment of second chambers of the local Legislatures is or is not desirable."

The italics are mine and are intended to emphasise that it will be open to the Commission to say, if their conclusions warrant it, that it is not desirable to establish the principle of responsible government in India. Is this consistent with the declaration made in the Preamble to the Government of India Act that responsible government is the ultimate goal of British Rule in India ? You can modify or restrict the degree of responsible government introduced but can you consistently with your declaration take away the element of responsibility altogether ? I have no fear, however, that in the experiences of the past 8 years, the Commission will find anything to justify a reversal of the policy initiated in 1919.

Provincial Governments. Prior to the passing of the Government of India Act, 1919, the Provincial Governments were mere agents of the Government of India. " They were never sovereign and independent. From 1833 up to the time of the Strachey decentralisation, the Government of India had everything in their hands and no Local Government could make the smallest appointment without sanction. Since then the Government of India had surrendered many functions but each surrender required a separate order, since the residuary authority rested with the Government of India and not with the Local Governments as is the case in most federations." The Government of India Act, 1919, has for the first time given them a constitution under which in provincial matters they enjoy a large measure of independence —the policy initiated being one of continuous devolution of powers on them until in provincial matters they become independent of the Government of India. In financial matters the independence of the Provincial Governments has been secured by definitely allocating to them certain sources of revenue. Devolution Act of 1920 has since been passed with a view " to relax the control in certain respects of the Governor-General-in-Council over Local Governments and to transfer to such Governments certain powers exercisable by the Governor-General-in-Council."

Dyarchy. The entire field of administration has been marked off into Provincial and Central ; those subjects which intimately concern the Provinces have been made over to the administration of the Provincial Governments while the rest continue in the heads of the Central Government. The Provincial executives have been split into two halves, the first half consisting of the Governor and Executive Councillors nominated by the Crown, and the other half consisting of the Governor and his Minister or Ministers selected by him from among the elected members of the Council. To correspond with this division in the Executive, the subjects of Provincial administration have been similarly divided into two parts named for convenience " reserved " and " transferred." The reserved subjects are administered by Governor and his Council who are responsible to the Government of India and ultimately to the British Parliament. The transferred subjects are administered by the Governor and his Ministers who are intended to be amenable to the electorate. The Provincial revenues are distributed between the two halves for their respective purposes. In respect of the transferred subjects powers of control both of the Secretary of State in Council and the Governor-General-in-Council have been limited to certain specific purposes.

In justification of the dual government recommended in the Montagu-Chelmsford Report Lord Chelmsford said, " What we want is a scheme which will transfer some responsibility at once which will provide machinery by which more responsibility can be transferred at later stages and by which ultimately full responsibility can be attained in the provincial sphere." "Under our scheme it will be possible, I believe, to say, so far as transferred subjects are concerned, that the Minister and through him the Local Council has said 'yes' or 'no' on a particular question. Under our scheme it is possible to gradually enlarge the sphere in which the Minister and the Local Council will say 'yes' or 'no.' And under our scheme responsibility in the whole sphere of Government can ultimately be attained."

Dyarchy has been severely criticised. It is a novel experiment and its very novelty provokes criticism. In essence, it is a compromise between irresponsibility and responsibility and like every other compromise involves surrender of something or other on each side. No wonder that it has satisfied so few. That it has its defects nobody would care to deny. Its authors themselves have repeatedly pointed them out. But they claimed that the task set to them left them no choice but to suggest some such scheme and the fact that no alternative scheme was suggested which would better accord with the policy laid down by Parliament would seem to justify their claim. Dyarchy marks the beginning of a transition from autocracy to self-rule.

Dyarchy has been condemned as unworkable. I do not entirely agree. Without good will and willing co-operation no constitution however excellent can be worked. Given these, dyarchy is capable of doing much good. And, having worked it for over 4 years in Assam, I claim that it has not been barren of results.

Dyarchy has not had a fair trial. The hope of co-operation on which its successful working depended was not realised. The Indian National Congress in its session at Amritsar had indeed resolved that it should be tried however "inadequate" and "unsatisfactory" but the non-co-operation movement was started soon after and in 1921 when the Reformed constitution began to function, the Legislative Council was partially boycotted. If non-co-operation kept away some of the best minds of the country from the first council the second council was signalised by the advent of the Swarajists who came in with the avowed object of non-co-operating from within. In the present council also the Swarajists are the strongest single group and profess to be animated by the same spirit of non-co-operation. For reasons into which it is not necessary to enter here, there is great discontent in the country and this discontent the Swarajists have successfully exploited to capture the political lead. Non-co-operation as a political campaign is indeed dead, but as an attitude of mind—a spirit of aloofness from all association with a Government to which are attributed all the ills India suffers from—still survives. Their shibboleth is that this Government is bad and that, therefore, those who associate with it must be bad. Destroy the new constitution and as the Ministers are its main props, pull them down first. In two provinces ministries were wrecked for a time. In one of these the attempt is being repeated time after time. In Assam no serious attempt has yet been made to that end. In such an atmosphere of mistrust and suspicion and in the face of active and not over-scrupulous opposition no constitution could give the best it was capable of. The situation was rendered worse by the financial stringency which unfortunately coincided with the inauguration of the Reforms. The Ministers had nothing spectacular to show, and themselves complained of paucity of funds. I speak from experience when I say that with more funds and better support from the Council, dyarchy could do a lot more.

Defects of Dyarchy. Dyarchy has obvious defects. "From the standpoint of constitutional theory, the scheme has been much criticised, first on the ground of the inherent difficulty of rending asunder the seamless fabric of administration; secondly, since all the provincial legislatures were to include a substantial majority of elected non-officials, it seemed probable that a virtually irremovable executive might be confronted by an irresponsible legislature. It is true that to obviate the risk of deadlock, the Governors were given a reserve of authority which enabled them to carry on the essential work of the administration irrespective of the policy of the Legislature. In the sphere of the transferred subjects, this reserve of authority was naturally more restricted than in the sphere of the reserved subjects, upon the maintenance of which the whole structure of orderly Government really depended. But the existence of this discretionary power, however inevitable it may have been naturally tended to weaken the responsibility of the legislatures."

The fact is you cannot successfully combine representative and irresponsible Government. A clash is inevitable between the Executive and the Legislature. There must be constant warfare with the executive for the purpose of obtaining the powers inherent in a representative body by the very nature of representative Government. This has been the experience of the past few years.

The position of Ministers. The position of Ministers under dyarchy is hardly capable of definition. They are responsible to the Council in the sense that by a vote of want of confidence in them they can be removed from office. But at the same time, they are appointed by the Governor, hold office at his pleasure, and may be dismissed by him. If the Council can bring them to account, so also can the Governor, and responsibility consists of amenability to authority. They are very much in the position of a man who has to serve two masters whose viewpoints not unoften clash. Their loyalty to the Council often puts a severe strain on their loyalty to the Governor and vice versa. Position such as this is fundamentally bad.

The position of Governor. No less delicate is the position of the Governor. For reserved subjects his responsibility to Parliament is complete. As regards the transferred subjects the Parliament has in theory transferred its responsibility to the Indian electorate, but has not in fact divested itself of all control, for the Governor whom it appoints has been armed with special authority and an Instrument of Instructions issued to him enjoining how that authority is to be exercised. Upon him has been laid a general responsibility for seeing that the administration of the transferred subjects by Ministers is properly conducted. "You shall do all that lies in your power to maintain standards of good administration * * * and to ensure probity of public finance and the solvency of the Province." So runs a clause in the Instrument of Instructions and although ordinarily he shall be guided by the advice of his Ministers power has been reserved to him to require action to be taken otherwise than in accordance with that advice. At the same time he is enjoined to "further the purposes of the said Act (Reforms Act), to the end that the institutions and methods of Government therein provided shall be laid upon the best and surest foundations, that the people of the said Province shall acquire such habits of political action and respect such conventions as will best and soonest fit them for Self-Government and that Our authority and the authority of Our Governor-General-in-Council shall be duly maintained."

Such a position is one of extreme difficulty and in which it is hardly fair to place any man. He must encourage and foster the growth of responsibility in the Legislature yet is enjoined to intervene should he think it necessary in the interests of good administration. Occasions must arise when a deadlock can only be avoided by forbearance on the one side or the other. Very much depends upon the personal equation of the Governor and that is one of the weakest points in the new constitution. I have worked with three Governors in succession and had ample opportunities of judging how much personal equation counted for.

The constitutional relation between Governor and his Ministers. In public eyes, the Governor is the top dog, and totally eclipses the Ministers. The general impression is that the latter can do nothing except with the approval of the Governor. There is nothing in the Government of India Act to justify this impression. My reading of Section 52 (3) is that the Governor is bound to accept the advice of the Ministers; he can overrule them only when he sees sufficient cause to differ from their opinion and in deciding what is a sufficient cause he is enjoined by his Instrument of Instructions "to have due regard to the relations of the Ministers with the Legislative Council and to the wishes of the people of the Province as expressed by their representatives therein." The Joint Parliamentary Committee have recommended that the Governor should not overrule his Ministers except under circumstances which would justify his overruling his executive council—viz, where by any measures proposed by Ministers "the safety, tranquillity or interests of his province or any part thereof are or may be in his judgment essentially affected." I have consistently acted on this view of the respective positions of the Governor and his Ministers. I have always held that except in regard to matters as to which the Governor's concurrence is by the Act or rules made thereunder necessary, the Minister is the only authority; the Governor's approval is not a condition precedent to his orders taking effect. That the Governor can veto the Minister's orders is another matter. Of course, if you feel that there is somebody who is always watching you with a critical eye and can intervene if he likes, you cannot avoid a stunting effect on your mental outlook. But that is very different from saying that the Ministers are powerless.

The terms of Sec. 52 (3) are, however, so wide that they are liable to be misunderstood. It is no wonder, therefore, that different people—whether Governors or Ministers—should take different views of their rights and duties.

The position of Ministers in relation to the Members of the Executive Council. The Ministers and Members are equal in status and my official relations with them were cordial. I know the members have their view-points just as Ministers have theirs, and these often do not coincide. But we had mutual appreciation of our respective positions. I do not think that they were ever wilfully obstructive or assumed superior airs.

Secretaries. I had successively three I.C.S. men as my Secretaries. I cannot speak too highly of them. They were absolutely loyal, faithful and respectful, and I had never occasion to feel that because I was an Indian or inexperienced, they tried to take any undue advantage of me. On the contrary, they did their best to understand me and help forward my policy. I often discussed my difficulties with them, and their advice was always helpful. For my secretaries I have nothing but praise.

Opponents of the Reforms have often tried to make capital out of the fact that secretaries have a right of access to the Governor and can take any file to him without consulting the wishes of the Ministers. If the Governor has any responsibility for the administration of his Province, he should be kept acquainted with the actual course of administration. And, besides, the rule applies equally to both sides of the Government, there is no discrimination against the Ministers. My secretaries had their usual interviews with the Governor, but gave me no reasons to suspect that they were in any way unfair to me.

Heads of Departments. The position of Heads of Departments is one of peculiar difficulty. They are experienced administrators and in a sense responsible for the efficient administration of their departments. Until the Ministers came in they had practically a free hand. They have now to take orders from the ministers. The details, indeed, are left to them, but the policy is shaped by the Ministers. Differences with the Ministers are inevitable. During the first few months of my Ministry I had serious differences with some of them (at one time I had as many as five departmental heads to work with). But I felt that their opposition sprang from a genuine conviction that my proposals would impair efficiency. Brought up in bureaucratic traditions their angle of vision must be somewhat different from that from which a Minister would look at things. But, once my mind was made up, I had no hesitation in overruling them, and I saw that my orders were carried out.

Under rules framed by the Governor of Assam under Sec. 49 (2) of the Government of India Act for the transaction of business in his executive council and with his Ministers, all cases in which the ministers negative a recommendation or overrule a decision of a Head of Department must be submitted to the Governor before orders are issued. Many such references had to be made in my time and I think in all important cases the Governor let me have my own way. I do not say that the Departmental Heads felt particularly happy under these altered conditions. But Sir John Kerr with whom I worked most of my time made it clear to them that they were in every way subordinate to the Ministers and must carry out their orders. As the Heads of Departments, however, came to know me more and more and as I saw more and more of actual administration, differences between them and me in essential matters became very few and we got on smoothly enough. During my time the policy of the Departments in my charge was in the main my policy.

A question has often been asked me if I have ever been overruled by any Governor. My answer is "no." If I had been overruled in any important matter I would not have been there for a minute longer. What actually happens is this. All important matters, especially the ones involving questions of principle are, under standing orders, submitted to the Governor. He expresses his views. They may or may not coincide with those of the Ministers. In the latter event it is for the Minister to decide whether he would accept the Governor's views or stick to his own. The question of veto would only arise if after considering the Governor's view, he sees no reason to change his mind and the difference is on a matter of essential principle. We often personally discussed matters and discovered a via media. There was no surrender of any essential principle on my part. There were cases in which I could not accept the Governor's advice and the Governor let me have my own way—there were others in which out of deference to his administrative experience I thought it prudent to follow his advice and subsequent events showed that in doing so I was wise. In one instance in particular the Governor saved me from making a mistake. I proposed a change of a rather radical character. He did not overrule me—for that was not Sir John Kerr's way—but put forward certain considerations and advised me to wait until something had happened when the matter would be taken up again. I agreed. At the same time he realised the gravity of the evils I was anxious to root out and suggested an interim solution for my consideration. The suggestion exemplified the difference between an experienced administrator and an inexperienced enthusiast. His plan has been working admirably well and I got credit for what was not my work at all. It was not long before I discovered my mistake. I am grateful that the Governor intervened with such good effect. Once you feel that the Governor is genuinely anxious to help you, you feel the more readily inclined to listen to his advice and once the Governor knows that his Minister is honestly trying to do his duty he helps him in his endeavours to the best of his ability. Personal factors count for so much in the working of a constitution so peculiar as Dyarchy. My relations with the Governors with whom I worked were on the whole cordial. They were all anxious to support my authority and dignity.

The fact that we the Ministers got on so well with the Governors was in some quarters regarded as an indication that we were subservient. Nothing is further from the truth. Our task was some times uphill but we fought without flinching and almost always succeeded in carrying our points. Referring to this unfounded accusation Sir John Kerr once remarked that he wished he could show some of my files to my critics.

Joint Responsibility of Ministers. The Governor has to choose as Ministers persons who have the confidence of the House. When the party system is well developed and there is a majority party in council there is no difficulty. During the life of the first council there was hardly any party. In choosing his Ministers the Governor was mainly guided by the intrinsic worth of the members, the position they held in public life and the supposed necessity of representation of the majority communities in the Ministry. The attempt was to find out men whom the council could be expected to listen to. The second council saw the birth of the Swarajists. They were a strong party but in a minority and pledged not to accept office. There was no other party worth the name. The conditions in the present council are much the same. Almost the same considerations therefore have all along guided the Governors in the choice of their Ministers. Under such circumstances it is difficult for Ministers to accept joint responsibility.

During the period that I was a Minister, I had for a few months a Hindu and for full three years a Muhammadan as my colleague. Each of us did his work without reference to the other and except for matters, which under Governor's orders were brought up before a joint meeting of the Members and the Ministers, we knew very little of each other's work. There were things done by my colleague which I did not certainly approve and I dare say there were things which I did but which were not approved by him. But in council we supported each other with our votes. He had the sympathy of some members of the council, I had the sympathy of some others and we rallied to each other's support with our friends whenever necessary.

Finance Department. The provision that the Finance Department is to be in charge of a member of the Executive Council has been strongly criticised. The justification for this provision is stated to be economy, convenience and the fact that the bulk of the revenue will fall to be spent by the reserved side.

Much may be said on the other side but in view of the suggestions which I propose to make later on, this point need not be laboured. Suffice it to say that this rule has given rise to much misunderstanding and suspicion and the charge has been freely levelled that the transferred subjects are starved for the benefit of those reserved. If I remember aright, we had notices of resolutions in council recommending that the Devolution Rule No. 36 might be altered so as to place the Finance Department in charge of a Minister. In Assam, until lately, the Ministers had charge of spending departments only and so great is the need for money in those departments that I cannot think of a time yet when they will have had enough. But I do not think that even if a Minister had been in charge of finance, the complaints could have been less frequent or less loud. The earning departments must be kept in a state of efficiency—so also the departments concerned with law and order, and they together with the P.W.D. consume the bulk of the revenues. These have to be provided for first. A Finance Minister might perhaps make a cut here and a cut there but I do not suppose he could take away enough from the Members to satisfy the need of the transferred departments. It is the system rather than the man that is at fault. The Auditor General suggested before the Muddiman Committee that the Finance Member should have no other functions. The committee mainly out of pecuniary considerations modified the suggestion so far as to recommend that he should not be in charge of any of the main spending departments. This recommendation of the committee has not been given effect to in Assam because the province is considered too poor to indulge in this luxury.

If under the present constitution a Minister had been placed in charge of Finance, his position would have been extremely unenviable. I would certainly have refused that portfolio under the present circumstances.

The relation between the Finance Member and the Ministers. Under Devolution rule 37 (f) the Finance Department is responsible for watching the state of the Local Government's balances. This has been held to justify the Finance member in calling upon the administrative departments not to incur new expenditure even though sanctioned by the council, should he find in the course of the year that the revenue is not coming in as expected. The Finance Department often declines to examine and advise on schemes involving new expenditure on the ground that no money is likely to be available for it. The consequence is that when money is available no scheme is ready for examination and the Finance Member declines to provide for it. Besides, the Finance Department does not always confine itself to an examination of the financial aspect of a proposal but often goes into the policy underlying it. The mischief is obvious. The Minister is responsible to the Legislature while the Finance Member is not; for the latter, therefore, to examine the policy of the former is open to grave objection. If a Minister thinks his staff is under-manned or underpaid, he has got to satisfy the Finance Department that this is so. Even that is not sufficient. The Finance Department considers itself free to object that if the minister's proposals were accepted other Departments could with justice put forward similar proposals, for all of which it could not find money. I have also experienced on occasions difficulty in getting the Finance Department to sanction reappropriations. In matters like these a Finance Minister would have been more sympathetic and would if necessary be disposed to stretch a point in favour of the Ministers.

Financial relations between Reserved and Transferred Subjects. In the distribution of the surplus revenue I do not think that the transferred departments were unfairly treated. And I am not in favour of a separate purse. A separate purse must either arise from separate sources of revenue or a definite share of the Provincial revenues. Neither of these arrangements can be satisfactory. Again, if the purse were separate, the Ministers could have no say in respect of the reserved subjects. With a joint purse, each side will have a say in respect of the other, and, assuming that all are interested in seeing the Reforms succeed, the advantage will on the whole be on the popular side.

The attitude of the services towards the Reforms and the Ministers. In discussing the attitude of the services it should be recognised at the outset that the I.C.S. overshadows all the other services, whether All-India or Provincial. Mr. Lloyd George spoke the truth when he said that I.C.S. is the "steel frame" of the administration. In fact, it would not be far from the truth if one were to say that on any question of administrative policy the attitude of the I.C.S. generally determines the attitude of the other services. This is only to be expected, for, apart from their great abilities, they occupy all the key positions in the field of administration. As to their attitude towards the Reforms, it should be remembered that they were brought up in the older traditions which made them protectors and governors of the people. They were suddenly called upon to play a very different rôle. Some of them entertained genuine doubts as to the wisdom of the changes introduced. Some even considered them as revolutionary. The new order of things could not be altogether agreeable to them. Yet, having had a duty cast on them, they put their shoulders to the wheel and I gladly acknowledge the help I received from them. From some of them I received the most loyal co-operation. Some others, though not equally enthusiastic, yet did their part. Yet others appeared to be indifferent and yet carried out orders. There were of course a few whom I suspected to be secretly hostile, but that does not alter my opinion that the service as a whole was anxious to help.

What is true of the I.C.S. is generally true of the other All-India services. The Provincial services, manned practically as they are by Indians, of course, wholeheartedly welcomed the change.

Joint Deliberations. The usual procedure was to have weekly meetings of the members of the Government. At such meetings important questions arising in both sides of the Government used to be brought up generally at the suggestion of the Governor and occasionally at the request of the Member or the Minister concerned. There used to be a general discussion and the opinion of the Government as a whole ascertained. When differences arose, search was often made for a via media and generally with success. These discussions had the important effect of enabling each side of the Government to know the minds of the other side as regard the policy of the departments in its charge, and, to a certain extent, the general policy of the Government as a whole was influenced thereby.

Division of subjects into Reserved and Transferred. I think more subjects could easily be transferred to the control of the Ministers. "Excise" and "Public Works" which were transferred in the other Provinces and "Forest" which was a transferred subject in Bombay and Burma were reserved in Assam. According to the Functions Committee this was the natural consequence of excluding the Hill and Frontier tracts which constitute nearly two-thirds of the whole province from the jurisdiction of the reformed provincial government. "The question of transfer of Forests hardly arises in a province where the greater part of the work in the department lies in excluded areas." "It is much the same with Public Works. Among the most important duties of this department are the construction and maintenance of hill and frontier roads" while the roads in the valleys had been suggested by the P.W.D. Re-organisation Committee to be entrusted to Local bodies. "In the case of Excise too the existence of these excluded areas is a determining factor." "Apart from this the liquor problem in the tea gardens presents special difficulties."

The only answer I can give to the committee is that Excise has since been transferred but that none of the difficulties they anticipated has arisen. And I venture to predict that none of the difficulties will arise if Forests and Public Works are transferred. Nor is there any reason why these subjects, so far as the reformed areas are concerned, could not be transferred. Education is partly reserved and partly transferred, but this has given rise to no practical difficulties.

The presence of the backward tracts has adversely affected us in other ways. We have no hand in the administration of these areas but have had to contribute about seven lakhs of rupees annually for their upkeep. The Stamp and the Court Fees Acts were amended in the teeth of strong opposition from the public. But they fetched only 8 lakhs of rupees a year. If we had not these 7 lakhs to find, we could avoid taxing ourselves at that time. To this subject I shall revert later on.

The Council and the Ministers. I think the council as a whole appreciated the difficulties of the Ministers and showed itself willing to help them. Personal attacks were very few, criticisms being confined to what were considered their sins of omission and commission. There was of course the militant section which pretended to wonder how any self-respecting and patriotic Indian could accept the office of the Minister under the Dyarchical constitution. But I know they knew the answer and if they kept on continuously harping on the same string it was out of no ill-will towards those who had accepted the office but only as a protest against the present constitution. In all measures conducive to public good, the Ministers generally had the support of the members irrespective of their political creed. The council of course often made recommendations which the Ministers did not approve or could not carry out for want of funds or other reasons. There was naturally a sense of irritation. But the Ministers were always anxious to give effect to their wishes. If they always could not do so it was because as practical administrators they often saw disadvantages or difficulties which were not clear to the ordinary members. To criticise is one thing, to act is another and this is nowhere more forcibly exemplified than in the fact that an ordinary member when he becomes a Minister undergoes a sort of metamorphosis in his mental outlook. Attempts have been made from time to time to reduce the salary of the Ministers, but they were the outcome of a desire to effect economy and not to spite them. Complaints have been made that Ministers have often voted with the Government in support of measures of which they did not at heart approve and that even when they openly disapproved of any Government measure, they have refused to cast their vote against it. The first is an assumption altogether unfounded. When we have differed from Government, we have withheld our vote. Sometimes the Government have modified their proposals to secure our support. The other allegation is of course true, but this was because the exigencies of the constitution required, as recommended by the Joint Parliamentary Committee, that, in open council, neither side of the Government should oppose the other by speech or vote. It must not be forgotten that the Ministers cannot afford to neglect the voting strength at the disposal of the Government. There is no majority party in council and the temper of the council is uncertain. A good many members vote just as their fancy dictates. Many members have their eyes to the gallery and the prevailing temper of the Press. Having no party affiliation they have been found on occasions to ally themselves with avowed wreckers. On occasions such as these, it is the Government support that enabled the Ministers to do their duty.

The Council and the Governor. We must distinguish between the council as a body and the individual members comprising it. Barring the Swarajists who act to order from outside, the members interview the Governor and attend his parties; and having had all honour and patronage in his gift he naturally exercises great influence. He, rather than the Minister, is approached for redress of grievances even when they relate to a transferred department. I know that complaints have been made to him even against me.

As for the council as a body it regards him as a bureaucrat who has been armed with exceptional powers over the council and the Ministers. The power of certification is the one to which the greatest objection has been taken and which was in my time often exercised. These cases arise on the reserved side and I remember having been once consulted. Opinion may differ as to the propriety of certification in all cases, but in some cases the Governor was almost compelled to certify. There is no justification for the impression that the Governor wantonly disregards council decisions.

The influence of the Council. The council influences the policy of the Government as a whole to an extent not generally recognised. Every decision of the council is carefully considered. It may not always be possible to give effect to it, but it is not without its effect. In making proposals the wishes of the council are always borne in mind and an attempt is made to meet them as far as practicable. Especially is this so in the case of the transferred departments. As regards the reserved subjects, although the Governor-in-Council remains formally responsible to Parliament the Provincial Legislative Councils are directly concerned in them. They are to legislate with regard to them, they are to discuss and deal with the Budget which contains provisions for them. Some of the members come into intimate touch with the administration through various committees. The Governor-in-Council can indeed secure legislation and obtain funds in spite of opposition from his Legislative Council, but in shaping his course with regard to such subjects he has to take into account the important factor of his relations with the Legislative Council and and its Ministers. The Legislative Council's sphere of influence therefore extends beyond the actual area of transferred departments.

The fact that the council resolutions are mere recommendations as also the fact that the Governor possesses powers of certification have tended perceptibly to weaken the sense of responsibility of the councillors. Sometimes proposals have been made without regard to their logical consequences because the members knew that the Government had the power to prevent the mischief and would certainly step in. Ordinarily, however, the Assam Legislative Council has acted with a due sense of its responsibility and the Province owes a lot to it.

The future constitution of India.. The Central Government consists of the Governor-General and his Executive Council. They are responsible to Parliament and not to the Indian electorate. The latter have no voice in their appointment nor can they turn them out of office by their vote. At the same time, the Legislative Assembly contains an elected majority and can even discuss military and political expenditure. The result has been as could well be anticipated. The Assembly has no constitutional responsibility for carrying on the business of Government and need not be reasonable. The Governor-General has emergency powers to overcome deadlocks. While, therefore, the Government accuses the Assembly of want of a sense of responsibility, the people accuse the Government of unmitigated autocracy. An irresponsible executive and an elected legislature can ill assort together. No wonder that there has been a persistent demand for reform of the Central Government.

The authors of the Montagu-Chelmsford Report have given a picture of the future constitution of India which in its main outlines has received public approval in India :—" Our conception of the eventual future of India is a sisterhood of States self governing in all matters of purely local and provincial interest, in some cases corresponding to existing provinces, in others perhaps modified in area according to the character and economic interests of their people. Over this congeries of States would preside a Central Government, increasingly representative of and responsible to the people of all of them ; dealing with matters, both internal and external, of common interest to the whole of India ; acting as arbiter in inter-State relations, and representing the interests of all India on equal terms with the self governing units of the British Empire. In this picture there is a place also for the Native States. It is possible that they too will wish to be associated for certain purposes with the organization of British India in such a way as to dedicate their peculiar qualities to the common service without loss of individuality."

The same ideal was foreshadowed as early as 1911 in the Coronation Durbar Despatch to the Secretary of State for India from Lord Hardinge's Government. " The only possible solution of the difficulty would appear to be gradually to give the provinces a larger measure of self-government until at last India would consist of a number of administrations autonomous in all provincial affairs with the Government of India above them all and possessing power to interfere in cases of misgovernment, but ordinarily restricting their functions to matters of Imperial concern." The Indian National Congress has declared itself in favour of full responsible government of a federal type. Dr. Besant's Commonwealth of India Bill is an attempt to evolve a federal constitution suited to the peculiar conditions of India and has influential backing. The question therefore is—Should we be justified in pressing for introduction of responsibility in the Central Government at the present state of our political development ? Opinions are sharply divided. To many it would be a leap in the darkness. Others foresee no evil consequences. Personally, I incline to the view that we should wait until we have had experience of the working of responsible government in the provinces.

The Central Government has to deal with problems which in their range and complexity far exceed any that may fall to any provincial Government. Responsibilities which may without undue risks be entrusted to the people in the provincial sphere, it may be positively unsafe to entrust to them in the sphere of the Central Government until we have an electorate adequately numerous and capable of understanding the issues and controlling the executive. I am aware that it has been suggested that a system of Dyarchy should be introduced in the Central Government, defence and foreign relations being reserved, and the rest being transferred to the control of the elected representatives of the people. Constitution-making is not perhaps difficult on paper and the above proposal has its attractions. But the evils of Dyarchy will be there apart from the novelty of the suggested change.

No constitution based on academic considerations will be a safe one. I am, however, clear that the Central Government should be so constituted as to make it more representative of Indian opinion and more amenable to the influence of the Assembly. Having had no experience of the actual working of the Central Government, I am not in a position to suggest what changes would best conduce to that result. It will be something if in the Governor-General's Executive Council there is a majority of Indians and selections are made from people who more or less enjoy the confidence of the public.

I am also clear that the Secretary of State's control over the Government of India should be considerably relaxed, especially when the Government of India and the Indian Legislature are in agreement. I concede that so long as the Parliament remains responsible for the good government of India—and that responsibility will continue until there is a properly trained electorate to take its place—the Parliament cannot divest itself of all control. But the Government of India is in more intimate touch with Indian conditions than the Secretary of State and the control of the latter should be reduced to the minimum possible.

I have suggested complete autonomy for the Provinces. But, however desirable it may be, we must take care that as the result of it the Provinces do not fall apart. The Central Government should be armed with powers to intervene when necessary. In India the forces of disruption are many and they can only be controlled by a strong Central Government. Provincial autonomy cannot mean absolute independence, for there can be no federation if the constituent parts are absolutely above the Federal Government.

Representation of Assam in the Legislative Assembly and the Council of State. Assam is very inadequately represented in the Legislative Assembly and the Council of State. According to population basis she is entitled to more seats. At present she sends two Hindus, one Muhammadan, and one European to the Legislative Assembly ; and one Hindu every term and one Muhammadan every other term to the Council of State. The representation is practically nominal. I also think that the number of members of the Legislative Assembly should be increased. British India is too big to be adequately represented by 144 members. And further, the members of the Assembly should all be elected except of course the official members.

Provincial Governments. As for the Provincial Governments, I think there is practical unanimity in the country that Dyarchy should be scrapped not only because of its inherent defects but also because the politically-minded Indians are thoroughly against it and few will be found willing to work it for another term. No constitution can have any chance which has not behind it the good will of those who will be called upon to work it.

The last eight years have demonstrated the capacity of Indians for self-government and I have no hesitation in suggesting that all the subjects should be transferred to the control of the Ministers. The Governor would of course retain his veto and his power of dissolving the Council, and as a further safeguard I would invest the Indian Legislature with powers to withdraw any subject from provincial control should public interests so require.

It might be argued that when you provide so many checks, you imply, indirectly at least, that your people are not yet fit for responsible government. My answer is that responsibility can only be taught by giving opportunities for its exercise. You provide checks in order to minimise risks and prevent and undo mischief.

I would also have a Second Chamber of the Provincial Legislature. Even in more advanced countries its necessity has been felt and recognised "as a valuable check on the possibly too radical proclivities of a lower House." There is of course the other side of the picture, but I believe its advantages far outweigh the disadvantages likely to result from it. There is no real democracy in any country. Party or "interests" govern with some fiction of the consent of the governed, and a lower Chamber is not really democratic. It is an oligarchy in the garb of democracy and the existence of the Second Chamber, while performing a useful function, will not make the constitution any the less democratic.

Electorate. I would give a vote to every man who is literate. This will not only encourage literacy but also enfranchise a very large number of educated people who, under the existing franchise, have no votes, but who influence political thought in no small degree. I would also give a vote to every man who pays any direct tax. The fact that one is a tax payer ought to be enough. What will be the percentage of the voters to the total population I am not in a position to say, but we must remember that, at the time of the Reform Act of 1832, only 3 p.c. were enfranchised in England.

Indians are sober and intelligent, and inheritors of an ancient civilisation to which representative institutions were not unknown, and, in spite of their illiteracy, can understand things. It is possible to exaggerate the drawbacks of illiteracy, but I have found, in the course of my electioneering campaigns, that if things are explained to him even an ordinary cultivator can take an intelligent view of them. I do not say that an ordinary elector has any conception of his function in the State or that he has learnt the potency or the use of his vote or that any degree of organic connection has yet been established between the electorate and the legislature—things which are considered essential to the proper functioning of a democratic constitution. But, if we are to wait until every voter has become as capable as a voter in England or America, we should have to wait for perhaps a century yet. After all, it is the educated people who create opinions. Given responsibility, they will educate the mass and, in the process, themselves learn to appreciate the significance of democracy better. It is often said that it is after long and laborious stages that democracy has been established in other countries and we cannot avoid the same process, but we have the advantage of the experience of other countries and can move faster.

Electoral Divisions. At present, for the general constituencies in Assam, a subdivision is generally the unit, irrespective of its size or population. It is too big and having regard to the difficulties of communication the constituencies ought to be smaller. I think one member for each lakh of population will not only secure adequate representation but also considerably reduce the size of the constituencies.

Elections. We have got the ballot system of voting, but little secrecy is observed and the polling officers cannot often keep control. This is, in most cases, due to defective arrangements of the polling booths which are generally school buildings. The poor voter has often to vote under the very gaze of the candidates or their supporters and at close quarters from them. The number of polling stations is again too small. Each of them is intended to serve a radius of about 5 miles—but some voters are required to travel longer distances. This not only affects the number of votes recorded but also adds to the election expenses. Absence of a sufficient number of reliable polling officers is the excuse put forward. This is probably true, but, you cannot withhold proper facilities from electors for this reason. Corruptions prevail to an appreciable extent not only in the shape of pecuniary bribes, but also in other shapes such as undue influence, coercion, promises of advancement and so forth. But, perhaps, these are unavoidable, at any rate in early stages. In his book on Modern Democracies (1921) Bryce referring to elections in Canada remarks :—" Bribery, however, is not rare. The laws enacted on lines found effective in England failed to restrain these malpractices, usually managed by underlings and apparently by both parties alike. Happening to hear a politician complain bitterly of the heavy expenditure by the opposite party which had caused the defeat of his own, I enquired why petitions had not been more largely presented by the losing side and was answered that things might have come out which were better left in darkness. Each side had bribed because it believed the other to be bribing and the wealthier party got the best of it ; for money counts here as in most countries and campaign funds are thought indispensable." Election expenses have gone up very much and if things continue as at present, it is but the rich who alone will contest. The really deserving but poor folks will have little chance. The present council does not contain the best men of Assam. There are some people who ought not to have been there, and would not have been there but for their wealth.

Joint and Separate Electorate. I am for joint electorates, with seats reserved for communities which are in a minority in any province should the latter so desire. At present the minor communities claim not only reservation of seats but also communal electorates. The Mahomedans claim the same even where they are in a majority. The disadvantages of communal electorates are obvious, but joint electorates will not of themselves breed and foster a sense of national life unless and until the communities concerned realise the identity of their interests. Where this realisation is absent, joint electorates will only create a sense of grievance and further embitter feelings already overstrained. Where, therefore, the desire for a separate electorate is strong, I think it would be wiser to recognise it until the constituencies concerned realise its undoubted evils.

But on what basis are the seats to be allotted ? Mahomedans claim on the basis of population where they are in a majority, and special representation where they happen to be in a minority. Europeans and Anglo-Indians claim on the basis of their "interests at stake." To me, none of these bases seems to be fair. European and Anglo-Indian can never be numerous enough to do without the help of the Indians and should learn to rely more and more on Indians. Only, they should be allowed opportunities of representing their views and needs.

The population basis would not always be fair. If a community pays 60 p.c. of the taxes, but forms only 40 p.c. of the population and is given representation to the extent of 40 p.c. only, the consequence would be that other people will, by virtue of their numerical superiority, spend the money it pays into the Exchequer. In reserving seats, considerations such as the taxes paid by a community, its progress in education and the number of voters it supplies ought also to be given weight along with the numerical strength.

I wish our Muhammadan brethren did not claim special representation. This only serves to estrange feelings. If population is to be the basis of representation, I do not see why it should not be applicable to minor communities as well.

The composition of the Legislative Council and the Second Chamber. The Legislative Council should only consist of elected members while the Second Chamber should contain a nominated element as well. The mutual relations between the two Houses as also the constitution of the Second Chamber are matters on which I do not wish to express any opinion at this stage.

Ministry. In appointing Ministers the Governor should follow the English practice. He should appoint the Prime Minister from the majority party and leave to the latter the appointment of the other Ministers. In the absence of a majority party the right course for him would be to ask the Council to elect its own Ministers. Such a Ministry may be expected to command a working majority. Hitherto, Ministers have been appointed in Assam so as to give one Minister to each Valley, one of whom, again, has to be a Muhammadan. It was possible, until the last council, to get outstanding men who would satisfy these tests. But the composition of the present Ministry has given rise to widespread dissatisfaction and if communal considerations had not been given undue weight a better personnel could certainly be secured.

The responsibility of the Ministers should be joint as in the British Constitution. The absence of joint responsibility affects the solidarity of the Government and tends to encourage disunion and intrigue.

The Public Services Commission. Experience of the working of democracy in other countries has shown that in order to secure an efficient Civil Service it is essential that the services should be protected from political and personal influences and given stability and security. In Canada, Australia and South Africa they have got Public Services Acts regulating the position and control of the Public Services and the duty of administering these Acts has been entrusted to a Public Service Commission. The Government of India Act provides for the appointment of a Public Service Commission to discharge " in regard to recruitment and control of the Public Services in India such functions as may be assigned thereto by rules made by the Secretary of State in Council." We have got a Public Service Commission appointed by the Secretary of State in Council, but no Public Service Acts. I am strongly of opinion that, in the interests of purity and efficiency of administration, legislation should be undertaken to deal with the matter. I think, further, that it is the Central Legislature that should legislate; for, among other things, this will help in setting a uniform standard of administration throughout British India. The Act or Acts would make provisions regulating standards of qualifications, methods of recruitment, conditions of service, pay, allowances, discipline and conduct.

Recruitment may be made outside India by the Public Services Commission through such agency as it may deem suitable.

All appointments will be made by the Government of India in which the ultimate control will be vested.

I am aware of the strong objections that the British element in the All-India Services will take to this transference of control to the Indian Government, but it should not be difficult to provide by legislation suitable safeguards for the protection of their interests. We gratefully appreciate the good work that the British element in the different Civil Services of India have done, and I personally think that British Officers will be very much in requisition by the Ministers for years yet. But the position of the All-India Services has an important bearing on the constitutional development of India, and if India is to continue as part of the British Empire we have a right to expect the Britishers to be reasonable. We only wish to assimilate their position in India to that of the permanent Civil Services in their own country.

The Indian Civil Service and the Indian Police Service are recruited for Assam, as for the other Provinces, by the Secretary of State. The Provincial and some of the subordinate services are recruited by Selection Boards which consist of members nominated by the Government. The proceedings of the Board do not inspire public confidence. People fail to discover in them any uniform principle. Outstanding candidates have often been rejected in favour of candidates with but poor qualifications. What are called communal considerations are really political. There are territorial considerations too—so many appointments for this valley, so many for the other. The result has been unfortunate. Our services compare very unfavourably with the corresponding ones in the neighbouring Province. There has been a deterioration of the standard of administration and I regret to have to observe that the honesty of the services is also being gradually affected.

I have already suggested that the methods of recruitment, qualifications of candidates, etc., should be laid down by the Indian Legislature. I would only remark that the competitive test has been found to be the best test everywhere. It may not be the ideal test, but undoubtedly comes nearest to it. I am no believer in communal representations in services. The so-called advantages are far outweighed by the deterioration of efficiency. The best public servant is he who can serve the public best. I have heard it said that a mere educational test is not a sure test. Neither is any other. But as a general proposition it may be stated that the possession of high educational qualifications implies the possession of the other requisite qualities.

The Assam Government has consistently opposed a competitive test. Apart from the supposed necessity of communal representation in the services, the presence of the backward tracts is urged as a ground for its opposition. Unless it is contended that the intellectuals of the plains districts are ill-fitted for service in those areas, there is hardly any sense in this attitude.

Territorial Redistribution. My own view is that the whole of Assam should be transferred to Bengal, or, rather, that the plain districts should be transferred and the hill districts made over to the Government of India to be administered by the Government of Bengal as an agency area. There are officials who entertain a similar view. The ninth despatch on the Reforms refers to this opinion, but the Government of India declined to go into the question on the ground that the demand should come from the people themselves.

There are mainly two objections taken to the proposal. The first is that the amalgamated province will be too large for a single administration; and, the second is that the people of the Assam Valley are opposed to it. The first ground is hardly tenable. Bengal, as it is, is too small for a Governorship. Not very many years ago Bengal, Bihar and Orissa constituted one Lieutenant Governorship. It is true that the Reforms have increased the pressure and strain on the Government, but there are now 4 members of the Executive Council and 2 Ministers (whose number may also be increased) and they may be expected to be able to cope with the work. The Assam districts are now easily accessible. The second objection is based mainly on selfish considerations. The people of the Assam Valley occupy a privileged position and nobody would part with his privileges so long as he could help. They fear, they say, that in case of transfer, their individuality will be merged into that of the Bengalis. But there is so much common between the Assamese and the Bengalis that this argument is almost pointless. Place a Bengalee lad and an Assamese lad side by side, you will hardly know the one from the other.

If we are to be a nation, we should try to get rid of artificial differences instead of magnifying small ones or creating them where there are none.

Assam, as it is, is but an appanage of Bengal. There are so many things for which it has to depend on its neighbour that, if asked to stand by itself, it would find itself at sea. Assam has no High Court, no University, no Engineering or Medical College, or other high educational institutions, for all of which it has to rely on its neighbour's generosity. Again, the development of the resources of Assam requires capital and enterprise which is not available in the province itself. In the extent of its territory it is not much behind Bengal, but it is far richer in its natural resources, which are however lying untapped. The reclamation of the Assam jungles is going on through the labours of the Bengal peasants who have migrated by lakhs and are still migrating. Assam cannot find enough people for the purpose. Where the connection is so intimate and many-sided, amalgamation is but a natural process.

In the redistribution of provinces, sentiment alone cannot be the governing factor. Other considerations arise and must be given due weight. There is little against amalgamation except sentimental objections on the part of a section of the people. The reason in favour of it are far weightier and should, in the interest of all concerned, prevail.

There has been a demand for transfer of Sylhet to Bengal which was reinforced by resolutions in the local Legislative Council. Cachar wishes to remain in Assam, but if Sylhet goes out it is not prepared to be left behind. There is also a demand in Goalpara for its transfer.

If there is a case for the transfer of Sylhet, there is an equally strong case for the transfer of Goalpara and the plains portion at least of the district of Cachar which are Bengali-speaking; for the chief reason urged as justifying the demand is that all the Bengali-speaking districts have a right to ask to be amalgamated with Bengal. It should be added that in Goalpara there is a good proportion of Assamese-speaking people as well.

The demand for the transfer of Sylhet is not so strong now as before. The Mahomedans almost as a community now seem opposed to it and there has been a revulsion of feeling on the part of not a few Hindus. I voted in favour of the resolution moved in council for its transfer, some time ago, because, I had given the pledge to my constituency to support it and the vast majority of educated Hindus and Mahomedans were then in favour. But, in my note as a member of the Government, I pointed out the difficulties and disadvantages of the step. I enclose a copy of that note for reference.

NOTE.

My views on this question have been well known to His Excellency the Acting Governor for years. I wish to be in Bengal and that for reasons which His Excellency is well aware of.

Since I became a member of the Council I began to take interest in all parts of the province and in my Budget speech of the second year of the first Reform Council advocated that the whole of Assam should go to Bengal, and the more I think of the matter the more convinced do I feel that that is the proper course. I shall state my reasons briefly.

The total population of Assam is 7,606,230 according to the Census report of 1921, of this 3,524,318 are Bengali-speaking and 1,718,712 are Assamese-speaking, the rest, 2,363,200 being primitive tribes in different stages of civilisation and speaking a number of languages.

The province is therefore essentially a Bengali-speaking province and if Sylhet is to go why not the rest?

Again, if Sylhet goes, can the claim of Cachar and Goalpara be resisted? If the wishes of the people and racial affinity are any criteria, these two districts have the same claim as Sylhet. His Excellency Sir John Kerr, in his prorogation speech indicated as much (so far as regards Goalpara); the population of Cachar is 527,228, of whom 313,797 are Bengali-speaking. The population of Goalpara is 762,523, of whom 405,710 are Bengali-speaking.

If the wishes of the majority are to prevail these districts must go. Even Sylhet is not unanimous. Apart from the masses who cannot be expected to understand the issues, there is some difference of opinion even among the educated classes. I do not see on what ground Cachar and Goalpara can be resisted. The question is not whether Cachar and Goalpara ever formed part of Bengal; that is immaterial. The question is, are the inhabitants—the majority—Bengali-speaking? Even the Ahoms are not the original inhabitants of this province.

If Sylhet, Cachar and Goalpara go to Bengal what remains of Assam? Only the 5 districts of the Assam proper and the Hill districts. Can they form an administration?

Again, if Sylhet alone goes, over 25 lakhs of the Bengali-speaking people go away. What about the remaining 12 lakhs? The Bengalis, who were the predominant people in the province, will at once sink down to a very secondary position. As a Bengali, I feel for them and would naturally like to take them with us.

Then again, if the Muhammadans of the Surma Valley, or even of Sylhet, go away, the Muhammadans of the Assam Valley will be in a minority and lose the strong position they now hold. I have spoken to some Muhammadan gentlemen of the Assam Valley and they fully realise the danger.

Then again, if competition brings out the mettle in men, then the Assamese will suffer for want of people to compete with.

Lakhs of Bengal people are migrating to Assam; the influx will continue as Assam is the natural field for expansion of the surplus population of Bengal. If checked, Bengal may retaliate, as it will certainly be justified when it becomes autonomous. Where will Assam then be?

To me, it seems, the solution lies in transferring all the plains districts to Bengal. The Hill districts should be administered by the Central Government through the Government of Bengal as an Agency area. This will also relieve the plains districts of the burden of maintaining the Hill districts at their own cost (some 7 lakhs).

I know it is said that Bengal with Assam will be too heavy a charge. That is hardly correct. By transferring the plains districts we merely add a division. Sylhet and Cachar will go with the Chittagong Division which is admittedly too small, the six Assam Valley districts will form a Commissionership. As it is, Bengal is too small a charge for a Governor and a Council of 4 Executive Members.

And we must not forget that Bengal, Behar and Orissa for years formed a Lieutenant Governorship.

If Cachar has spoken out its mind—viz., that, if Sylhet goes, it must also go—Goalpara is not inactive. It is moving in the matter and is just waiting to see what becomes of Sylhet.

Minus Sylhet, Goalpara will be the only permanently settled district in the province in the midst of a number of temporarily-settled districts—the danger is not fanciful and Goalpara knows it.

17th July, 1925. P. C. DATTA.

I have only to add that two leading public men of a neighbouring district warned me that we were far from wise in agitating for the transfer; they pointed out how little attention they got from the Government of Bengal and how privileged was the position we were occupying in Assam. It is curious that while thousands of people from Bengal are continually migrating to the Assam Valley, we are trying to clear out of Assam.

In this connection, I should like to mention that the policy of the Parliament in regard to backward tracts is open to grave objections. They have been placed outside the Reforms and are supposed to be the special care of the Governor-in-Council. But why should this be so ? By isolating them you are blocking the way to all contact with the plains people. They are our neighbours and we are most vitally interested in them. The Legislative Council should have the same powers over these tracts as over the plains portions. Contact with the plains people is a far more potent agency for civilising the hills people than anything that the Government can do. The Khasis would not have been what they are, but for contact with the Bengalees and the Assamese. In saying so, I am not unmindful of the great services that the missionaries have done and are doing in this connection.

Then again, if we are not to have any part or lot in the administration of the backward tracts, why should we be made to pay for them ? As it is, we are contributing annually something like 7 lakhs for their maintenance and at one time we had to raise additional revenue to meet this deficit. I have protested against this, both as an ordinary member of the Council and as a Minister, and I know that the Government of Assam did go up to the Government of India for a subsidy to cover this deficit, but, of course, to no effect.

If the backward tracts are to continue as parts of Assam, they should be brought within the pale of the Reforms and, considering that Assam is a poor province, the Government of India should give it a subsidy to cover the charges for their administration.

Local Self-Government. We have the Assam Municipal Act for the urban areas, the Assam Local Self-government Act and the Assam Rural Self-government Act for the non-urban areas. The first and the last Act were passed by the Reformed Council which has also amended the third Act passed in 1915.

Assam Rural Self-Govt. Act. The Rural Self-government Act has been enacted to give the people of the village an opportunity to manage the affairs of the village.

It is an attempt to revive, in a form possible under modern conditions, the old village communities. In each village there is to be a body called the Village Authority which will be elected by male adult suffrage and will have charge of such matters as water supply, roads, drainage, jungle clearing, medical needs and so forth. Provision has been made for the creation of a Village Development Fund to which contributions will mainly come from the provincial revenues. The Village Authority will have no general power of taxation, but can raise funds for any specific work of public utility. There are also provisions for its taking charge of primary education and of dispensation of justice in petty matters.

There was indeed a provision for the creation of Village Authorities in the Assam Local Self-government Act of 1915 and a number of Village Authorities had actually come into being, but they suffered from the disability that they were subordinate to the Local Boards and could only perform such functions as the latter might choose to entrust to them. The position was not calculated to develop the spirit of self-government in villagers. Under the Assam Rural Self-government Act, the Village Authorities have been taken away from the control of the Local Boards and placed upon an independent footing. The Act is full of possibilities and should be properly worked. I am afraid it has not received the attention it deserves either from the Government or from the Council.

The Assam Local Self-Government Act. Unlike Bengal, we have no District Boards in Assam. Our Local Boards are independent bodies with separate revenues of their own while the Local Boards in Bengal are mere agents of District Boards. While there is something to be said in favour of the District Board system, it suffers from the evil of centralisation and those who have had experience of the working of both the systems consider the Assam system as more efficacious.

The territorial jurisdiction of a Local Board is co-extensive with the subdivision of a district and each looks after the needs of the subdivision as a whole. The Local Government fixes the number of members of each Board, not less than four-fifths of whom must be elected. The rest are to be nominated by the Government. The qualifications of the voter are also prescribed by rules made by Government. An amendment of the Act to do away with nomination altogether was rejected by the Council. I was the sponsor of that amendment and still adhere to my view. The recent nominations to the various Local Boards have shown that they are made on no consistent and intelligible principle and often serve to defeat the wishes of the elected majority.

In addition to the evils of nomination, there are the greater evils of the communal electorate. Seats are distributed between Hindus and Mahomedans and Tea-planters with special electorates for each community. To have special representation on the Legislative Councils is bad enough, to insist on having it on Local Bodies is almost suicidal. If we cannot trust each other in the sphere of local self-government, we shall never come to trust each other in higher spheres where larger and more important interests are negotiated. If we wish to see India self-governing we must cure ourselves of our communal proclivities. I hope communal representation on the Local Boards will be abolished.

Franchise. The franchise for membership for the Local Boards is the same as that for the members of the Legislative Council. I suggest that there should be established a Village Authority under the Rural Self-government Act in every village, and that it is the members of the Village Authorities who should elect to the Local Boards. My reasons are, first, that owing to the size of the constituency and the numerical strength of the voters, the election expenses have been going up by leaps and bounds. If this tendency is not checked, it will be well nigh impossible for poor but qualified candidates to succeed. Secondly, there are people who would like to serve on the Board as well as on the Legislative Council. Unless they are very wealthy, they must choose between the two. But this will keep out many deserving persons. Lastly, the members of the Village Authorities will be persons of some consequence in their village and better able to exercise their votes.

The chairmen of Local Boards are to be non-officials, elected by the members themselves, unless any Board, by a two-thirds majority, ask the Government to appoint an official chairman. Recently, the Silchar Local Board has asked for an official chairman. The vice-chairman is always a non-official and elected. Appointments of chairmen and vice-chairmen do not require Government approval.

Municipalities. For the urban areas we have the Municipalities and for areas which are more urban than rural, and which, in the Local Government's opinion, require special arrangements, we have the small towns. The number of members is fixed by the Local Government but, in the case of Municipalities, it must not be less than ten or more than thirty. Not less than four-fifths of the members of the Municipality must be elected, the rest being nominated by the Local Government which may, however, direct that all the members shall be elected. I don't think this power has been exercised in favour of any municipality. The members of the small towns are either appointed or partly elected and partly appointed by the Local Government. The Chairman and Vice-chairman of all municipalities, except that of Shillong, are to be elected, the election of the chairman being subject to the approval of the Local Government. The small towns shall exercise such powers of the municipality as the Local Government shall direct. The Chairman and Vice-chairman of a small town are appointed by the Local Government and, if it so directs, may be appointed by the Town Committee. There is no communal representation on Municipal Boards although, in the last council, there was notice of a resolution to introduce it. It was not moved however.

Franchise. The franchise is prescribed by rules made by the Local Governments, but is not confined to ratepayers. It is pretty wide but ought to be further widened by giving a vote to every tax-payer.

Funds of Local Boards and Municipalities. Local authorities receive no assignment of provincial revenues, nor are they allowed to levy surcharges on provincial and imperial revenues.

The municipalities levy their own taxes while the Local Boards are given the local rates (the land cess levied in Assam is so called). Both the Local Boards and Municipalities are allowed to appropriate the ferry tolls and pound receipts within their areas. Two kinds of subsidy are given to them, first, those recurring and non-recurring given for specific purposes; secondly, fixed recurring ones given for general purposes. They also get the free services of certain Government officers for purposes of inspection, advice, &c. Contributions to the local bodies from the provincial revenues are substantial. In the case of the Municipality, they would come up to nearly 15 p.c. of their total expenditure and in the case of Local Boards, to nearly 60 p.c. of the same. People are taking more and more interest in the affairs of the local bodies, and, what is more encouraging, is the fact that the landholders and other persons of importance in the villages are coming forward to take their rightful place. The predominance of the professional classes living in the towns, where the headquarters of Local Boards and Municipalities are located, is gradually diminishing.

The local bodies are doing good work. The members exhibit commendable public spirit and I am not prepared to admit that their efficiency has been deteriorated by the disappearance of the official connection with the Boards. But supervision is necessary. Functions given to them are varied and important, but want of adequate funds is a great handicap. They have indeed the power to increase their revenue, but, as containing an elected majority, they naturally hesitate to impose any fresh tax. Until the public conscience has been educated up to the need of meeting local needs by local efforts, much further progress cannot be expected. The demand will continue for more and more help from the provincial revenue.

Relations between Central Government and Provincial Government. The powers of superintendence, direction, and control, now exercised by the Central Government in relation to transferred subjects over the Provincial Governments are limited to the purposes specified in Devolution Rule No. 49. No change seems to be necessary in this regard.

I would not, at the present moment, add to the list of provincial subjects. The financial relations between the Central and Provincial Governments, raise questions which, I confess, I am not in a position to deal with satisfactorily. I would however invite the attention of the Commission to two matters. The first relates to the export duty on tea from Assam which amounts to many lakhs a year. The whole of it is appropriated by the Government of India. The second is that the plains districts of Assam have to contribute for the administration of the backward tracts, which ought to be the charge of the Central Government, more than 7 lakhs a year. I have referred to this matter at page 17 of this note. Assam is a poor province, but her needs are great. It should be considered whether a percentage of the export duty on tea could not be assigned to her and it is but bare justice that the Government of India should grant her a subsidy to cover the deficit in the cost of administering the backward tracts.

Conclusion. I do not think any opinion will support the continuance of Dyarchy in the Provincial Government and it has been truly remarked that there is no half-way house between Dyarchy and responsible government. The Indian opinion, I believe, will generally support the introduction of responsible government in the Provinces subject to suitable safeguards. That the reforms have been successfully worked in Assam has been admitted by successive Governors and her claim to responsible Government cannot be resisted with justice. Government by a cabinet composed of Europeans and Indians appointed by the Crown on the recommendation of the Governor has been suggested as a possible alternative. This in fact is the scheme which the heads of certain provinces suggested when the reforms were under discussion, but which was rejected on the ground that it provided for no element of responsibility in the Government. To substitute it in place of Dyarchy would be a retrograde step. I do not anticipate anything but good from the transfer of the provincial subjects to the control of the Ministers. I know there is an opinion that it may be risky to transfer Land Revenue and Law and Order, but if any extra-precaution is considered necessary, these subjects may be made subject to central legislation. I have already suggested that power should be given to the Central Legislature to withdraw any subject from provincial control, which would be an additional safeguard. I saw it suggested somewhere that these subjects might be re-transferred to the control of the Central Government. I am afraid this would not be right and would arouse strong opposition. But I would see Dyarchy abolished even at the risk of losing control of these subjects for a time.

I feel the need for a strong Central Government and have not, therefore, restricted its existing powers of legislation in regard to the provincial subjects and its existing control over provincial legislation. These, combined with the safeguards provided elsewhere, ought to be potent enough to prevent abuse of powers on the part of the Ministers.

Of late, a class of politicians has arisen among us who consider it an essential preliminary to the political progress of India that the British Government should be banished from the land. They pretend to believe that, once that is accomplished, everything else will come out all right. They need not be taken seriously. Their attitude is the result of impatience born of desperation. Their impatience is not unnatural. I confess I am also impatient, but to invite anarchy is one thing, to face it when it comes along is quite another.

The Indian National Congress in its last session has declared national independence as the goal of the Indian people and lest anybody should misunderstand its meaning, Mr. Srinivasa Ayenger took care to make it clear that national independence is not dominion status, but total severance of the British connection. Mahatma Gandhi has condemned these heroics in his characteristic way. They need not trouble anybody.

I think the best minds of India are yet in favour of a dominion status for India. In an article which I contributed to a local weekly on the Madras Congress I developed the idea. I make an extract from it as representing the average Indian views on the subject.

"Pandit Jawharlal confronted by an interviewer explained that the resolution did not declare India independent now but merely laid down what ought to be her ultimate goal. But we are far from independence yet. Why then this anxiety to tie India down to such an extreme ideal so far in advance? Pandit Motilal is prepared to accept the dominion status if only because it gives India a right to sever her connection with the British Empire. Why not follow him and wait till the dominion status is reached? There will be time enough then to make your choice. For aught we may think now, India might then find it to her advantage to continue her connection with the British Empire which before our very eyes is drifting towards an Imperial Federation. You have no right to anticipate her verdict any more than you can bind the future generations. A Canadian, an Australian or a New Zealander is as independent as a Britisher. Standing alone they are helpless against hostile attacks. As citizens of the British Empire, they need not fear the frown of even a First Class Power. Australia—a bigger continent than India—is seeking settlers, Japan is seeking outlets for her surplus population, who will find Australia very handy and convenient. Yet Japan dare not touch her. Imperial connection has some undoubted advantages and if placed on a federal basis—the Empire idea has not yet reached its highest evolution—no nation will like to revel in glorious isolation. Naoraji, Gokhale, Surendranath are honoured names in the history of constitutional struggles for the regeneration of India. It was not for nothing that they adopted a dominion ideal for their mother country. They would not shrink from any sacrifice their country might demand of them. But they had the gift of true statesmanship and saw clearly enough that India could achieve her destiny through British connection. The relations of the Dominions to the mother country are undergoing daily transformations and the British Empire may in its ultimate evolution grow into a federation of the Dominions and the mother country. No position could be stronger than that which such a federation would ensure to its component parts."

I have not found it possible to recommend introduction of dominion status all at once. The Reforms have brought to the surface serious conflicts of interests among the various races. We should watch the effect of introducing responsible Government in the provinces before handing over the Central Government to popular control. I would expect the Commission to declare that Responsible Government of a federal type is best suited to the peculiar needs of India and suggest steps which will lead to the realisation of that ideal in the shortest possible time. I would respectfully impress upon the Commission that things are moving very fast in India, that a spirit of restlessness is spreading over the face of the country, that the people's faith in British connection is being gradually shaken and that the younger folks are getting restive and thirsting for braver methods. It is not statesmanship to ignore the warning voice of the educated. They create opinions which filter down to the masses. Unless a substantial advance is made towards the realisation of responsible Government, educated India will not be satisfied.

SHILLONG.

Dated 4th January, 1929.

PRESENT :

ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION, OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE (EXCEPT MR. KIKABHAI PREMCHAND, RAJA NAWAB ALI KHAN, SIR ZULFIQAR ALI KHAN AND SARDAR SHIVDEV SINGH UBEROI), AND OF THE ASSAM PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE.

RAI BAHADUR PRAMODE CHANDRA DATTA

1. The Chairman: Rai Bahadur, I think you were a minister in Assam for some four years ?—Yes.

2. From September, 1922, to December, 1926, is my note ?—That is so.

3. What was the department of which you were minister ?—For some time I was in charge of all the departments, and then in charge of local Self-Government.

* * * * * * * *

31. You mean, whatever be the amount of forests in the area which in the future is called the province of Assam, whether it be more or less, you would like to see the subject of Forests transferred ?—Yes.

32. Then what is your view about the hill tracts on the whole ? What would your own advice be—that they should remain inside the province of Assam or that they should be put outside ?—They should remain inside the province of Assam, and be given Reforms.

33. What do you mean by given Reforms ?—They should be given votes, just as we have votes here, and should be allowed to nominate their representatives as we do.

34. I have not quite followed that. You see, there is a view presented to the Conference, one view, that the hill tracts should be excluded from the area of the province of Assam ?—I am not in favour of that.

35. Another view which might be taken is that the present arrangement is the right one; that is to say, that the hill tracts should be included within the province of Assam, but that they should be specially administered under the sections of the Government of India Act, which you are aware of ?—I am against that.

36. Then what is it which you think would be right ?—I would say that we should have a voice in the administration of the hill districts, as we have in the administration of the plains districts.

37. You mean that there should be no difference, you think, in the constitutional arrangements for the hill districts from those from the plains ?—Yes.

38. You think that each district should return a member to the Assembly here ?—That does not necessarily follow. It might be that these people would not understand the value of a vote very much now, but if they are given votes they will understand these things by and by. They will be trained. Probably for the present they will have to be represented by outsiders, but I would welcome even that; I would give them votes, which would give them a training. If you isolate them from us, the result will be that they will never become one of us.

39. I think I follow your view, but tell me if I am wrong. Your view is opposed to taking the hill tracts away from the province of Assam ?—Yes.

40. But you recognise that if they were retained within the province of Assam, for some time to come there might have to be special arrangements made for their administration ?—Yes, that happens to a certain extent.

41. But you would do it, in the hope that they would gain political education, and later on be able to exercise the full rights of franchise just like other people in the plains ?—Yes.

42. The view which is presented to us by some very considerable authorities, Dr. Hutton for example, and the Government of Assam, is that there really is no common interest between the hill tracts and the plains, such as would justify bringing them into a common province—that they differ not only ethnologically and in language and custom and religion, but that they really are not tied together by any bond of sympathy ?—Yes, but if you keep them apart, I dare say there will never be any tie between us, and the result will be that they will be another race altogether.

* * * * * * * *

48. You would have a Second Chamber in the province ?—Yes.

49. You think the advantages of that would outweigh its disadvantages ?—Yes.

50. Have you any suggestion to make to us as to how the Second Chamber should be composed ?—I think representatives of special interests—for instance, the tea industry, commerce, trade, Europeans, Marwaris, landholders, members of the Bar, of the medical profession, and such communities as claim and are considered deserving of special electorates except Muhammadans might all be included in the Second Chamber.

51. You mean represented by a method of election ?—Yes, by a method of election and by nomination, too. I would give Muhammadans seats in the Lower House, although they may insist on separate electorates, and that as a matter of necessity.

52. I see from what you say lower down on page 14 that you would give the vote to every man who is literate. I want to ask you two questions about that. First of all, do you mean by that that you would exclude women ?—No.

53. "Man" there means adult ?—Yes.

54. How do you propose, as a practical matter, to secure that the vote is enjoyed by every adult human being in Assam who is literate ? How are you going to find out ?—I think that can be found out. Where is the difficulty ? If you can find out those who pay a certain amount of chaukidari tax, why should not you be able to find out those who are literate ?

55. I will tell you. When a man pays chaukidari tax he pays a certain sum of money, and I suppose is given a receipt, and his name is known ; but if I walk out now into the streets of this place I could not tell you, and I do not think anyone could, by inspection of any document whether a particular man is literate or not ?—A man can be asked, and if there is any doubt he can be asked to write something or read a few lines from a book.

56. In any language ?—In any language.

57. Then the examiner will have to be rather an accomplished person ?—For the receiving of the chaukidari tax accomplished persons are always employed. He will not have to submit himself to a very serious test.

58. What do you mean by being literate ? It does not mean that in childhood a man has received a certificate showing he has got to a certain class in school ?—I do not mean that. I mean it in the same sense as that in which the census officers take people to be literate. A man who can read and write a letter in his own vernacular, that would be one of the tests.

59. Anyhow, that is your suggestion. I gather you take the view that that would encourage literacy ?—Yes.

60. You think if people were told they would get a vote only if they were able to read they would set to work to learn to read ?—Certainly. People are mad after getting votes nowadays.

61. On page 14, you give some interesting information about the working of elections. You say, "We have got the ballot system of voting, but "little secrecy is observed and the polling officers "cannot often keep control." What do you mean by keeping control—securing secrecy ?—Secrecy cannot be secured.

62. What do you mean by keeping control ?—Some people come into the polling booth in spite of the polling officers' injunctions to the contrary.

63. People who ought not to come into the polling booth come in ?—Yes, in spite of protests from the polling officers. I have seen it myself.

64. You go on to say, "The poor voter has often "to vote under the very gaze of the candidates or "their supporters and at close quarters from them" ?—Yes. Sometimes you will find names are suggested to these voters ("Vote for so-and-so") during the voting itself.

* * * * * * * *

66. The Chairman : Then there is a slightly ambiguous passage at page 14. There you say, "I am for joint electorates, with seats reserved "for communities which are in a minority," but later in the same paragraph you say, "Where, "therefore, the desire for a separate electorate is "strong, I think it would be wiser to recognise it "until the constituencies concerned realise its un-"doubted evils." Speaking from your long experience as a minister and a public man in Assam, what is the actual recommendation you would make to us now ?—My own view is this. I think there should be no reservation of seats or communal electorates. But when I find certain people, for instance the Muhammadans, insist on separate electorates, that makes a difference. I take it, the problem all over India is the problem between Hindus and Muhammadans ; certainly it is in this province. If this can once be decided, everything else will be comparatively easy. My view is that if the Muhammadans insist on having separate electorates, they should be given that ; but I suggest to them they should be satisfied for the time being with reservation of seats, to be contested with mixed electorates.

67. I follow that your preference, speaking in the abstract and as a constitutional student, would be for joint electorates ?—Yes.

68. But you consider, do you, that in this province the communal strain is such that if the Muhammadans press for separate electorates it would be difficult to refuse their request ? Is that your view ?—Yes. They are very strong here and influential, and they can make the working of any Constitution difficult.

* * * * * * * *

78. Lord Burnham : I want to pursue for a moment the subject which I think is the over-riding suggestion of your memorandum, the question of the transfer of Assam to Bengal. Would you recommend that it should be done even though there is no agreement in the province at the present time as to its expediency ? That is to say, the Muhammadans are against it more or less, and the Hindus more or less in its favour ?—I do not think the matter stands like that. There are certain gentlemen who would oppose it, whether Hindus or Muhammadans, and there are certain others who would like to see these districts transferred to Bengal. Opinion is divided, of course. I have given my opinion ; I have not given the opinion of the province.

79. Do you think the majority of the people here are in favour of it ?—I cannot say the majority, but there is a substantial body of opinion which would support it ; there is no doubt about that.

80. I understand. You would not make it dependent on the concurrence of the majority of the electors ?—If you go on asking for the concurrence of people in all things there are many things which you will never do.

81. I am not clear even now as to what you say as to the transfer of the districts of Sylhet and Cachar, even if the other districts are not transferred. Would you be in favour of transferring those two districts to the province of Bengal?—No. I am for the transfer of all the plains districts. I have said that.

82. It is all or none?—All or none, yes.

83. On the ground that the transfer of these two districts would leave Assam too weak for administrative purposes?—Yes. I have given my reasons at length in the memorandum.

84. If Assam is transferred to Bengal, you are quite prepared to see the hill districts (as is recommended by certain officials here) made into a separate province on the lines of the North West Frontier Province: Is that so?—It will be an agency. I do not know what lines it ought to take. I have no very clear idea as to how the North West Frontier Province is run, but it will be a separate unit, to be administered by the Government of Bengal as an agency area on behalf of the Government of India.

85. On the other hand, supposing no change is made, I gather from your answer to the Chairman that you are not in favour of the separation of the hill districts?—No.

86. Major Attlee: Do you think there is any likelihood of a party system evolving in this province?—It is more than I can say now. The party system must come sooner or later, but I do not think it is coming very soon.

87. You say it must come. Can you indicate the sort of basis on which you can conceive definite stable parties being formed?—As soon as this communal tension is overcome, a party system will develop.

88. If the communal tension is done away with, what is going to be the dividing line between parties in this province?—Questions of policy, e.g. land revenue and so on. People may divide on questions of land revenue; some will want a permanent settlement and others temporary settlements and revision of assessments, and so on.

89. That is an item. Do you see any general line of cleavage in this province which will make for permanent, stable parties?—That is more than I can say now.

90. You see, the system which is being adopted rather depends on the growth of parties for stable government?—Yes.

91. You do not see anything very clear at present?—No, not yet.

* * * * * * * *

117. Mr. Cadogan: On page 14, where you suggest that all subjects should be transferred to the control of ministers, there is a sentence which I do not quite follow: "The Governor "would of course retain his veto and his power "of dissolving the council, and as a further "safeguard I would invest the Indian Legislature "with powers to withdraw any subject from "provincial control should public interests so "require." I do not quite follow what the process would be. What do you actually mean by "Indian Legislature?" Do you mean supposing there was a crisis, it would be discussed in the Assembly, or what?—If, for instance, Law and Order was not well administered in any province, then some member of the Government of India would propose to the Legislature that the subject should be withdrawn.

118. Supposing there was a crisis he would do that? Is that what you mean? You say, "should the public interest so require."—Yes.

119. It would be put to the vote of the Assembly as to whether it should be withdrawn or not?—Yes.

120. Would not that be rather disorganising? Would it not be very difficult?—That is only when one subject is concerned. If the provinces are administered badly as a whole, then the Government of India would take back the powers. I have suggested that the Government of India should be armed with powers to intervene when necessary, but when only one subject has been badly administered, the power to take it away ought to be given to the Central Legislature.

121. There is one other question I should like to put. I know that the question of the transference of Sylhet to Bengal has been discussed in the council, and indeed has been voted for; but your suggestion on page 15 is: "My own view is that the whole "of Assam should be transferred to Bengal." Has that ever in any way been discussed in the council?—No.

122. You have no means of knowing what the general opinion is on this point?—Through the council? No.

* * * * * * * *

127. Lt. Col. Smiles: Do you prefer to give representation on a population basis rather than on the amount of taxes that are paid?—Population of different communities, do you mean?

128. No, the question is a population basis. The question of different communities does not arise.—You mean adult franchise?

129. Yes.—I am not in favour of that yet. That may be an ideal, of course, but it cannot be reached now.

130. With regard to the hill districts, you have given it as your definite opinion that the legislative council should have the same powers in respect of the hill districts as of the plain districts. Do you think that the Indians of the plains are quite capable of administering the hill districts efficiently and fairly?—Yes, I think so.

131. I might ask you a supplementary question. Have you ever been in the Naga Hills?—No.

132. Have you ever been in the Abor Hills?—No.

133. Have you ever been in the Dafla Hills?—No. But I tell you it is not necessary for one to go there to be able to give the opinion that those areas can be administered by Indians.

* * * * * * * *

137. When you were a minister you toured all over the province?—Yes.

138. I would like you to tell us what are the conditions of the water supplies in the rural areas?—As bad as possible. The existing supplies are impure, and there are places where there is practically no water supply.

139. Is it true that only five municipalities out of nineteen have a pipe water supply?—That is so.

140. What is the condition generally of the roads in the plains of Assam? I am not talking about the hill roads up here.—Do you mean the roads in the villages, or——?

141. Generally in the plains districts of Assam.—Well, of course they are not very good.

142. Can you travel on them at all in a wheeled vehicle between the 1st of July and the 1st of October?—Almost, no.

* * * * * * * *

147. I would now like to take you to the Council of State. What do you think of the proposal that in the Council of State all the provinces in India, large or small, should have the same number of representatives, so that the smaller provinces may be safeguarded?—That is my opinion. It would prevent exploitation by the stronger provinces of the weaker ones. All the Governments should have the same representation.

148. You think if that happened Assam would not be placed in the future as it has been in the past?—Yes.

149. The Chairman: Is your view this, that supposing Assam was joined to Bengal, the number of representatives for the two put together in the Council of State would be the same as if Assam stood by itself?—Yes.

150. It would have nothing to do with the size of the area at all ?—No.

151. Lt. Col. Smiles: With regard to Assam going to Bengal, do you think that the Assam valley proper has any hope at all of ever developing properly under Bengal ?—I do not see why not.

152. You are an inhabitant of Sylhet, the other valley, I take it ?—Yes.

153. With the exception of a little corner of Goalpara, do you think there is any district in the whole of the Assam valley which wishes to go to Bengal ?—I do not know much about that myself. I know that there are people, some Assamese gentlemen, who want to go to Bengal.

* * * * * * * *

188. On page 14 you say that, on account of the constituencies being unwieldy, you propose there should be one member for each lakh of population ? —Yes.

189. You know the Muhammadan population is 22 lakhs ?—Yes.

190. On this basis you suggest the Muhammadans should get 22 members in a council of 76, because the total population is about 76 lakhs ?—You cannot work it out like that; the division of seats is a different matter altogether. I say the size of the constituency should be such that the population contained in it ought to amount to one lakh. That is what I mean.

* * * * * * * *

198. Rai Bahadur Amarnath Ray: Are there any depressed classes among the Hindus of Assam similar to those in Madras and Bombay ?—No.

199. Has not the process of social uplift been at work among the Hindus of this province for a long time past, by which the lower classes are gradually acquiring a higher status in society ?—That is so.

200. Is not it a fact that the Kayastha caste of your district has been absorbing many inferior castes, such as Baruis, Tillis, Karmakars and so on ?—Yes.

201. Have not the Yogis of Sylhet during your lifetime attained a higher status than they used to have before ?—Yes.

202. Have not the Mahishyas of your district become a very influential and progressive class ? —Very.

203. Are not all important organisations like the Indian National Congress and the Liberal Federation, the Social Service Leagues and the Rama Krishna Mission putting forth strenuous efforts for the uplift of the masses ?—Yes.

204. Have you not found the Hindu members of the council very keen about the expansion of primary education ?—Yes.

205. And the development of local self-government ?—Yes.

206. And about the improvement of water-supply and medical relief in rural areas ?—Yes.

207. And the suppression of the opium evil ? —Not only the Hindus, but the Muhammadans as well—all the members.

208. Were not these measures mainly for the benefit of the masses ?—Yes, undoubtedly.

209. If some of the Hindu castes or sub-castes, such as Kacharis, Kochis, Mikirs, Miris, Ahoms, Yogis, Mahishyas and Namasudras, are excluded from the general non-Muhammadan constituencies and allowed to return members through separate constituencies, one for each valley, will not that retard this process of social uplift ?—Certainly.

210. Are you a Vaidya by caste ?—Yes.

211. Are you the only Vaidya who has been returned to the council in this province ?—No, there is one other.

212. Is not it a fact that the Brahmins of Sylhet, who are the highest Hindu caste in the district and a numerous and cultured caste, have hitherto returned only one member to the council, and that through a by-election, the member sitting in the council only for a short September session ?—Yes.

213. So caste among the Hindus has not played a prominent part in the political life of the province, especially in your district ?—Not at all.

* * * * * * * *

230. * * * Sir Hari Singh Gour: You were a minister here during the time of the first and second councils ?—Yes.

231. How far have you received the support of your council in the carrying out of the general policy which you had to lay down ?—Generally I have received support.

232. You did get support ?—Yes.

233. So far as your association with the council is concerned, you think the council has supported you ?—Yes.

234. Has it helped you in the carrying out of of your general policy ?—Yes.

235. Therefore, so far as your experience is concerned, the working of the Reforms during your tenure of office has been entirely satisfactory ?—Yes.

236. And it augurs well for the future of your province ?—Yes.

237. There is one note you have struck from time to time at various places in your memorandum, and that is with regard to communal representation ? —Yes.

238. You say at page 15 "But the composition "of the present ministry has given rise to wide- "spread dissatisfaction and if communal considera- "tions had not been given undue weight a better "personnel could certainly be secured." ?—Yes.

239. You think communal representation has therefore reduced the efficiency and the usefulness of the working of your province, because the best men have not been appointed ?—That can be said only about the present ministry. I have made that clear.

* * * * * * * *

245. As regards the services, you say on page 15 : "All appointments will be made by the Government "of India in which the ultimate control will be "vested." You are in favour of the transfer of all subjects ?—Yes.

246. I shall deal with the question of Law and Order later on, but you are in favour of the transfer of all subjects, including Law and Order ?—Yes.

247. If these appointments are to be made by the Government of India, how would the exercise of the power by the Government of India be consistent with the creation of provisional autonomy ? Do you think the ministers would be content to have servants whose appointments, and necessarily promotion and dismissal, depended on an outside agency such as the Government of India ?—What I mean is this. If a province requires certain people for certain purposes, it will communicate its requirements to the Public Services Commission, and the Public Services Commission will make the selection. I have suggested there ought to be a Public Services Act for each province. According to the principles laid down in the Public Services Act, selections will be made by the Public Service Commission and the appointments will be made by the Government of India.

248. But who will exercise the disciplinary control over these services ?—That would be done by the Government of India in consultation with the Public Service Commission.

249. Would you postulate that with reference to the All-India Services, or for all services ?—All services,

250. Including provincial services ?—Yes, but in future—there will not be any All-India Services, I think, except with the Central Government. All these services will be provincial services.

251. No; you have recognised the necessity for having British officers ?—Yes, but they will be recruited on a provincial basis.

252. You say "We gratefully appreciate the "good work that the British element in the different " Civil Services of India have done and I personally " think that British Officers will be very much in " requisition by the ministers for years yet " ?—Yes, but they will be recruited on a provincial basis.

253. But supposing they are not prepared to come on a provincial basis ? They want guarantees; they want security ?—The security is to be given by the Government of India. That ought to be enough.

254. But if they are not satisfied with that security ?—Then we shall probably have to do without them.

255. You would rather dispense with the British officers, necessary though they are for the further and future development of this country, if they cannot be secured on the conditions you have laid down ?—Yes. That is what I have said. We have a right to expect the Britishers to be reasonable.

256. They are reasonable, but they want to make sure that their tenure of office is certain and does not depend on the vote of the legislative council or upon the individual will of a particular minister ? —Yes, but I have said about that; I have said that the necessary guarantee can be provided for by legislation. There can be an Act of the Legislature for the purpose.

257. Do you regard that as an essential part of your scheme, that you would rather not have British officers if they are not prepared to come on your own terms ? You would rather not have them than give them such reasonable terms and such reasonable security as would satisfy them ?—It is a question of what is reasonable and what is not reasonable. If their point of view is that unless their tenure of office is guaranteed by the Secretary of State——

258. Never mind the Secretary of State; the tenure of office has to be adequately safeguarded ? —That can be done by legislation.

259. We will not discuss how it can be done, but assume it is done by an agency outside the province and outside India ?—I would not go outside India.

* * * * * * * *

272. What is your experience of the working of the local boards and of municipalities ?—I think they are working very well.

273. I find a passage in the Government of Assam's book which I will read to you : at page 68* I find this passage, which has a somewhat disquieting effect upon my mind, and I want your view upon the subject ? " The towns, generally riverine, are " straggling and resemble overgrown villages. " Drainage has almost always been superficial, and " therefore liable to silting; roads, though the " principal streets in towns are generally metalled, " if only roughly, are never provided with paved " side-walks; conservancy is everywhere of the " primitive superficial nature; and building regula- " tions having only been spasmodically and partially " enforced, much of the housing is also of an entirely " rural character." Do you support that ?—No; that is entirely too gloomy a picture.

274. The primary object of these local bodies is to provide social amenities, good roads, lighting, water, health and sanitation, town planning, so that there is plenty of fresh air through the village, and so on ?—Yes.

275. You think all these local boards and municipalities, or the generality of them, have fulfilled those expectations ?—Well, they are trying to, according to the means at their disposal.

276. But have they been successful ?—To a certain extent, of course.

* * * * * * * *

310. The Chairman : Do you think that in your time there has been in this province an improvement as regards the untouchability of any untouchable caste ?—Yes, slowly but surely we are progressing. There is no doubt about that.

311. You have been in public life, and you have been observing things for some years ?—Certainly.

312. Can you give me any concrete case, any instance which will show that the thing has improved ?—It is taking place, as a matter of fact; inter-dining between castes and sub-castes of Hindus, and things of that sort.

313. Rao Bahadur Rajah : Do you know that in the hostels attached to the high schools and colleges in this province the boys belonging to the depressed classes find it difficult to get admission ?—Where ?

314. Here in Assam ?—There are no depressed classes here at all.

315. Do you know that certain classes are not admitted into the Cotton Hostel ? You have been a minister for four years ?—In my time there was no difficulty of that sort, at least.

316. May I remind you that there is a great difficulty to that extent, and reference has been made to Sir Saiyid Saadulla, who is taking action in the matter ?—What was it about, may I know ?

317. It was about the admission of certain boys belonging to depressed classes into the high schools and college hostels here.—In Gauhati, you mean ?

318. In Cotton Hostel. Is not there a Cotton Hostel here ? Do you not know Cotton Hostel here ?—Yes, at Gauhati.

319. That is where the Congress held its session once ?—Yes.

320. And do you know that on the 10th November, 1928, the Hindu Mahasabha had a meeting, and resolved that the social rights of the Hindus were being deprived, and apart from enjoying them so long as till the 11th November, 1928, should be restored to them now, and that this Sabha calls upon the Hindu Society to throw open the prayer houses, temples, and hostels attached to high schools and colleges ?—Yes.

321. Does not it show that the Indian National Congress and Liberal Federation have done much towards the uplift of the depressed classes ?—Well, it has not been possible to do everything all at once, but we are making general efforts, and we are succeeding.

322. Here is a resolution passed by the Hindu Mahasabha itself ?—Yes, calling upon the people to do all these things.

323. It was because these people have been deprived of these rights till 1928 ?—Well, I do not know whether that refers to Assam alone, or to other places.

* * * * * * * *

* Vol XIV.

Memorandum submitted by the GOALPARA ZEMINDARS' ASSOCIATION, Assam.

1. We venture to place before the Royal Commission the circumstances hereinafter appearing in the hope that wrongs arising from the inclusion of the permanently settled portion of the district of Goalpara in the Assam administration may be redressed. The map hereto annexed and marked "(1)" will show the position of Goalpara in relation to eastern portions of Bengal and Assam.*

2. The history of the various administrative changes affecting the district of Goalpara within historical times is shortly this:—

3. Long before the advent of the British, the district of Goalpara formed a part of the Kingdom of Coch-Behar: and the present Raja of Bijni, one of the Zemindars of the Goalpara district, claims to be descended from a younger son of a Coch-Behar King. After the disruption of the Coch-Behar Kingdom the Moghuls pushed forward the limits of the Delhi Empire, and after some vicissitudes during the reign of the Emperor Aurenzeb, the Muhammadan frontier was permanently fixed at Goalpara, and the district was finally and definitely assimilated to Eastern Bengal (now commonly known as North Bengal and included in the Rajshahi Commissioner's Division) in administration and ethnical characteristics. One of the features in the Moghul administration of Goalpara was that the land was left in the hands of the border chieftains who merely paid a tribute to the Moghul Emperors.

4. This was the position of affairs when the British obtained possession of the Dewani of Bengal in 1765 A.D. The Moghul system was, so to say, merely stereotyped in the permanent settlement of 1793 A.D. by which the land revenue of the district was fixed in perpetuity. The present Zamindar families of Goalpara are the descendants of these ancient families.

5. During the early years of the British administration, Goalpara was administered as an integral portion of the Rungpore district in Bengal.

6. In 1822, it was formed into an independent jurisdiction under a Commissioner.

7. After the conquest of Assam by the British in 1825, although Goalpara district was annexed to the new province, the administration for revenue purposes continued to be conducted in accordance with the Bengal Regulations.

8. After the Bhutan War of 1864, portions of the Duars ceded by the Bhutan Government, were attached to Goalpara, and the whole tract was erected into the Cooch-Behar Commissionership under the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal.

9. In 1868, the Civil and Criminal jurisdiction only of Goalpara was transferred to the Judicial Commissioner of Assam.

10. It was in 1874 that Assam was constituted a province independent of Bengal, and the entire administration of Goalpara was included within the new province under a Chief Commissioner, and remained so till 1905.

11. The condition of things arising from this complete severance of the district of Goalpara from the long association with the administration of Bengal during these early years was, so far as the Zemindars were concerned, made endurable from the benign nature of the Assam Government, and the non-interference by the Government with their rights and privileges. The Zemindars could rely on a sympathetic Government to deal with the questions affecting their rights and privileges without any partisan spirit and without undue bias. The position of things was, however, greatly improved in 1905, when the new province of Eastern Bengal and Assam was constituted and Goalpara resumed its old associations with Bengal.

12. Under the Morley-Minto Reform scheme, in spite of the united protest of the Goalpara Zemindars, their unique position under the permanent settlement was completely ignored, and they were placed in the same category as Khash Mehal land holders as an electorate body. In the legislature created under this Reform scheme the ancient Zemindar families of Goalpara had practically no representation, and this ushered in a state of things under which the powers of the Government were weakened and their power to deal with questions affecting these Zemindaries passed more and more into the hands of non-Zemindars, who were incapable of dealing without a bias with the problems affecting the relation of these Zemindars with their tenants. In 1912, however, the annulment of the partition of Bengal led to Goalpara being again placed under the Chief-Commissioner of Assam. All suggestions to allow Goalpara to continue its old associations with Bengal were negatived, and for administrative expedience this district, which on the ground of associations—racial, linguistic, cultural and administrative—naturally finds its place in Bengal, has been retained in Assam.

13. The district of Goalpara, as at present constituted, comprises an area of 3,954 square miles, of which 2,571 square miles represent the old permanently settled portion and the rest was added, after the Bhutan War, from the Duars ceded by the Bhutan Government. The district adjoins on the west the Bengal districts of Jalpaiguri and Rungpore, and the Cooch-Behar State.

14. The subject matter of this memorial is mainly in regard to the permanently settled portion of the district of Goalpara, and it may be noted that the portion of Goalpara is unique in one respect, viz. that it is only in Goalpara and Sylhet in the whole province of Assam that permanently settled estates are to be found. They are unknown in the rest of the province. As a natural consequence of this, the landlords in these two districts are placed in a somewhat invidious position. The legal incidents following on the permanent settlement are unfamiliar to those people who, under the Reform Scheme, are entrusted with the legislative authority of the province, and the Government, however sympathetic its attitude may be, is powerless to remedy any mischief that might arise from their activities.

15. Under the present Reform Scheme, the Zemindars, with a very large stake in the country, have not got, as of right, any special representation in the Legislative Council, and are in quite helpless position to protect their rights. In denying them this privilege, a pious hope was expressed that many of them might secure representation by popular votes. In practice, however, this is next to an impossibility. As a class the Zemindars have always been on the side of law and order, and have done their best to discountenance claptrap agitation, which, for the time being, is indispensable to secure popular favour, and thus for all practical purposes the doors of the local Legislative Council are closed to them, except through nomination. The net result of the Reforms, so far as the Zemindars of the permanently settled portion are concerned, is that their material interests are to be decided and disposed of by unsympathetic members of Council, quite unfamiliar with the system under which these Zemindars hold their Estates. The Zemindars had reasons to hope that in view of the recommendations made by the Montagu-Chelmsford Report, they might constitute a special Electorate and thus obtain a special representation in the Legislative Council. This privilege was, however, denied to them—the reason put forward being that they are too few in number. The extent of their Estates and the position they have held, even from before the time that the district came under the control of the British, their steadfast loyalty and the services rendered by them, were completely ignored. It has been considered quite sufficient for the Government to nominate one member from among them to the Council when important Bills affecting Goalpara are under consideration. The Zemindars, however, apprehend that such nomination of one solitary member to a democratic assembly would be practically useless to protect their interests. The contrast between the position of the Zemindars in Bengal or in Bihar and Orissa, who hold their Estates under the self-same permanent settlement, and the Zemindars of Goalpara under the new Reforms ought to be too obvious to need any comment, and arises from the unnatural inclusion, on the mere ground of administrative expedience, of the permanently settled portion of Goalpara in Assam, in total disregard of history, ethnical, linguistic, social and cultural affinities of the majority of the population.

* Map not reproduced.

16. That the large majority of the population of the Goalpara district speak Bengali and not Assamese is a fact too well-known to be seriously disputed. This is specially the case with the old permanently settled portion of the district. That the spoken language is a Bengali dialect and not Assamese in any respect is fully supported by official records, e.g. Census Report. Historically, Goalpara is an integral portion of North Bengal and the large majority of the population are and must necessarily be Bengalis in the same way as the population of the neighbouring districts of Rungpore, Jalpaiguri, Bogra and of the Cooch-Behar State. So the spoken language is a dialect of Bengali in the same way as the spoken languages in those neighbouring districts are dialects of Bengali. This was so patent that until only a few years ago before the Government of Assam in 1914 made Assamese an alternative language, the Court language in the Goalpara district was Bengali only, and Bengali was the only medium through which education was imparted in all the schools. The actual population of the district, according to the census of 1921, is over seven lacs and a half, out of which the natural population that speak a dialect of Bengali is over four lacs. Over and above this Bengali-speaking population there are immigrants who are not included in the natural population. The latest Census figures of 1921 shows 405,710 as Bengali-speaking out of a total population of 762,523. But my Association submits that these figures, if anything, are an underestimate of the Bengali-speaking population in the district. Even if the figures as they stand be taken when the Khash Mehal area of the district inhabited mostly by the Mech-speaking population is excluded then, the approximate percentage of Bengali-speaking population in the permanently settled portion of the district would be about 63, and Assamese 22. For details of figures see Appendix II.*

17. Bengali is also the chief written language of the district. Except temporary settlers who speak Hindi and other languages the preponderating majority use Bengali as their written language.

18. The prevailing literature is the Bengali literature. The music and the musical instruments are quite distinct from those of Assam and are similar to those of Bengal.

19. The people dress differently from the Assamese. As regards manners, usages, social customs and religious practices and traditions, the similarity with those of the people of Bengal and the dissimilarity with those of the Assamese people is quite pronounced.

20. At the Goalpara District Conference held at Gauripur on the 23rd and the 25th October, 1927, and attended by over six thousand persons, a resolution was unanimously passed which reads as follows :—

" That Bengali has been the current language of this district from time immemorial, and Bengali is their own language, and that the inhabitants of this district have been exchanging their thoughts and feelings in this language, and have been educated from the time of their forefathers in this language, and that Assamese is not the language of this district." (Appendix III).*

21. The same fact was emphasised in a memorial in April, 1920, to the Viceroy over the signatures of nearly seven thousand people of the district, protesting against the gradual introduction of Assamese into the district. (Appendix IV, page 67).*

22. It will be clear that all affinities traditional, cultural, ethnical, linguistic and social of the very large majority of the population of this district, and more particularly of the permanently settled portion of the district, are those of Bengal, and not of Assam.

23. Hitherto all attempts made to induce the Government to reconsider the question of retaining Goalpara in the Assam Administration have failed. The Legislative Council has passed a resolution with regard to the desirability of excluding the permanently settled district of Sylhet from the Assam Administration and its inclusion in Bengal. But it is rather difficult to realise why a similar treatment should be denied to Goalpara. The stereotyped answer has been that there is no unquestioned general demand for such separation. Yet it is from a public declaration by His Excellency Sir John Kerr, Governor of Assam, that we gather that "in case Sylhet is transferred to Bengal, it would be difficult to resist the claims of Goalpara." Whenever the authorities have been approached with a view to the inclusion of Goalpara in Bengal, some sort of counter-memorial is got up by Assamese politicians which presents an unreal appearance of want of a general desire on the part of the people to continue their natural associations with Bengal. The Zemindars could not take any effective steps in the matter, as two of the largest Zemindaries in the district, viz. Bijni and Mechpara, have been under the Court of Wards, and the Court of Wards refrained from taking any part in the controversy. (Appendix V).*

24. We venture to hope that the Royal Commission will, in view of the real facts of the case, not allow a wrong done to a very large body of people to be perpetuated merely because it is expedient. We recognise that the exclusion of Sylhet and Goalpara from Assam may make it difficult to continue the present form of Administration in Assam. We feel, however, that a possible modification in the form of administration should not be regarded as an all sufficient reason, and that the people of this district should not be made to lose the higher culture of Bengal, which is their birthright, and assimilate the Assamese culture, simply because a top-heavy administration cannot afford to part with these two districts.

25. So far as the Zemindars of the permanently settled portion of Goalpara are concerned, the matter is a very important one. Starting on a footing of quality by reason of the permanent settlement with the Zemindars of Bengal, they find that it is becoming more and more difficult to maintain their rights. In 1874, when Goalpara and Sylhet were severed from Bengal, the Zemindars were repeatedly assured that, notwithstanding such transfer there would be no change in their status and privileges. It has, nevertheless, happened that while in Bengal the people have the Road Cess Act, here we have in its place the Local Rates Regulation of Assam—the principle of assessment under the two being dissimilar and the Assam Regulation being less favourable to the Zemindars.

26. But the position of the Zemindars of the permanently settled portion of Goalpara, even if Goalpara formed a part of Assam, would not have been so deplorable as it is if legislation with regard to their relation with the Government on the one hand, and their relation with their tenants on the other, were under the control of the Government. Under the new Reform Scheme, the ultimate legislative authority is the Assam Legislative Council.

* Not printed.

Out of the 39 elected members of the Assam Legislative Council, an overwhelming majority comes from the non-permanently settled areas. Even these who come from Goalpara belong to the educated middle-class, and their outlook on the tenancy problems naturally represents the interests of middlemen, and it is idle to expect them to appreciate sympathetically the problems of the tenants or of the Zemindars. The Permanent Settlement itself has not yet been attacked, but the Legislative Council is now dealing with the Tenancy Law of Goalpara, and we feel that the Council, as at present constituted, is not competent to deal satisfactorily with intricacies of such legislation. In answer to the proposition that where there is a Legislative Council consisting of a majority of elected members, all legislation ought to be through such Council, we say that the sine qua non in such a case is that the elected represent all interests for whom they profess to legislate. As a matter of fact, the elected members of the Assam Legislative Council, from want of experience of the problems affecting the Zemindars and tenants of the permanently settled portion of Goalpara, are not in a position to represent either such tenants or Zemindars. The Government of Assam is now passing the Goalpara Tenancy Bill through the Council, notwithstanding the protests of the Zemindars. (Appendix VI).* Under these circumstances they feel that in the matter of such legislation affecting permanently settled portion of Goalpara, a Regulation under the Scheduled Districts Acts is a much better alternative than legislation by the Assam Legislative Council as at present constituted.

The transfer of the permanently settled portion of Goalpara to the Bengal Administration will not entail any loss of Revenue, and the two premier Zemindars' Association of Bengal, viz. the British Indian Association and the Bengal Landholders' Association, advocate the transfer of Goalpara to Bengal.

27. We respectfully urge that the Royal Commission may, after due consideration, recommend that the permanently settled portion of Goalpara may be re-transferred to the Bengal administration. Any possible objection as to loss of area may be easily obviated by adding to Assam the Khash Mehal areas in the adjoining Bengal districts. Failing this most satisfactorily solution, we submit that means may be found to place the enactment of laws regulating the relation between the Government, the Zemindars and the tenants of the permanently settled portion of Goalpara in the hands of the Government independently of the Legislative Council, and by the application of the Scheduled Districts Act. We apprehend that no increase of representation of the Zemindars in the Legislative Council can, from the nature of its constitution, adequately protect the interests of the Zemindars.

Pending the decision of the Commission, with regard to these questions the Zemindars' Association of Goalpara respectfully urge that the final enactment of the Goalpara Tenancy Law now before the Assam Legislative Council may be kept in abeyance.

* Not printed.

Memorandum submitted by the Honourable MOULVI ABDUL HAMID, President, Assam Legislative Council, Shillong.

In discussing the question of constitutional advance greatest possible care should be taken to deeply enter into the manifold intricate problems and special circumstances of the country. It would not do to proceed on the analogy of the democratic countries of the world. Such a course might be fraught with danger to success of the experiment. India is more a continent than a country. In diversity of people and problems it has no equal. Out of the total population of 300 millions in round figures there are 70 million Mussulmans, 12 million Buddhists, 10 million aboriginals, 4 million Sikhs, 5 million Indian Christians, 60 million depressed classes and rest caste-Hindus. Hindus are sub-divided into, it is said, 2,000 sub-groups.

Separate Electorate. The problems attending the variegated groups in and outside Hindu community are so numerous and so complicated that greatest care should be taken for providing safeguards for every one of the minority groups, in any constitutional arrangement. The sub-groups, even of Hinduism, though not unwilling to welcome constitutional advance, entertain a lurking suspicion that their position would become worse if they are thrown into the mercy of the high-caste people and denied a voice in the new constitutional machinery. From this it would be clear how great must be the apprehension of other minority groups that their interests would be jeopardised unless adequate safeguards are provided for them. This brings us to the question of separate electorate. I think separate electorate should be provided, not only for the Moslems, but also for the other minority groups. If there were grounds which induced British Government to concede this much-valued principle of separate representation in the past, not only to the Moslem, but also to other interests, I think there are stronger reasons for making better arrangements in the future constitution. The existence of a large element of official and non-official nominated members in the present arrangement served as a protection to the minority in the matter of safeguarding their interests against the attempt of the majority to have their own way. In my Council resolutions were tabled for barring cow slaughter, except for religious purposes, and, I daresay, the matter would have been pressed if the chances of success had not appeared to have been neutralised by the existence of nominated blocks and other interests. So the attitude of different groups in communal matters in the reformed councils cannot form a true index of the necessity of special safeguards.

The depressed classes, also, are showing a marked tendency to assert themselves and to demand back their legitimate rights, such as using a public path, well, or offering worship in a temple, from which the caste Hindus have kept them away. Some good-intentioned souls are trying to rescue them from the virtual serfdom, but they are merely touching the fringe of the problem, and their activities do not find favour with an overwhelmingly large section of the Hindus, who, it appears, have become so used to that that the inequitable nature of their dealings towards these people do not appear to strike them. Modern culture is producing a group of men who see the injustice of the whole position, but their feeling is rarely translated into action. I have elaborated on the position of the depressed classes under the social rules of the caste-Hindus just to show that such circumstances and traditions are not appropriate for training of the mind for doing justice to all irrespective of caste, position and creed. I think the educated classes of the Hindus are trying to shake off that attitude, but the general body who retain the mentality will be commanding votes. It is sometimes urged that communal electorates are responsible for the present state of inter-communal feeling. But nothing can be further from the truth. The genesis of the trouble should be sought in the census reports, which show that the increase in the Muhammadan population had been larger than the Hindus. Reforms only pointed to the future disadvantage of allowing that to proceed undisturbed. In the present state of inter-communal feeling I am deliberately of opinion that joint electorate will mean a huge communal battle, extending over wide area, during each election. Reservation of seat would hardly mend matters. Weaker economic position of the Mussulmans certainly emphasises their apprehension and makes them all the more wedded to the principle of separate electorate. The experience of the past years has only served to confirm their suspicion. Mr. Asafali, Barrister-at-Law, sustained a defeat in Delhi, in spite of the support of Mr. Nehru on the issue of strengthening the case for removing separate electorate, in the hand of a Hindu gentleman of inferior qualifications and less public services; Mr. Fazlur Rahman met with the same fate in the Dacca University constituency of the Bengal Council in the hand of a Hindu candidate, who hardly had anything to do with any university. Elections in the senate in the Calcutta University will also support my contention that Muhammadans fare badly in joint constituencies.

In our province joint electorate has been provided for in the Municipal Act. Let us examine how Muhammadans have fared in them. In Sylhet Municipality more than half the inhabitants are Muhammadans, but out of 16 elected seats they have been able to secure only 5, and the Hindus have secured 11 seats. In Gauhati, Muhammadans form one-fifth of the municipal population, and secured only one elected seat out of 16. There are typical instances of Muhammadan success in other Municipal Boards of Assam, in the last election. I am convinced that separate electorate in municipalities, as in local boards, should be introduced, to afford opportunity of better representation to all elements.

I do not see the reason why the electorate should be named Moslem and non-Moslem, including in the latter category, not only the Christians, animist and sundry people who have little in common with them. In Assam this nomenclature includes 10 lakhs of tea garden coolies recruited from aboriginal tribes outside the province, and 6 lakhs of ex-tea garden coolies of same denomination settled in the outskirts of the gardens. They should not be included in the Hindu constituency. I think they deserve to be separately represented as a labour group. 12 lakhs of animist, of whom no less than 7 lakhs are in the plains districts, as well as one lakh Christians, should also have representation on a separate basis. It would amount to denying them representation if they are allowed to be drowned into the non-Moslem electorate. I, therefore, suggest that special electorate should be provided for these people and each group should be separately named.

In the province of Assam the Moslem population is increasing very fast, both by natural process and immigration. If the allotment of seats are to be provided for them on the basis of figures of the last census, it would hit them hard. I, therefore, suggest that note should be taken of the probable increase during the last ten years, as well as some allowance should be made for the probable increase in the next ten years, otherwise the advantage of increase of next twenty years would be lost to them, for the period of next constitutional advance. Taking the province as a whole, while the Hindu population has gone up since 1872, from 2,679,497 to 4,068,288, the Moslem population has increased from 1,104,551 to 2,190,017. It will thus be seen that the percentage of increase in case of Muhammadans is much larger than in the other case.

I would, therefore, suggest that particular interests and minority community should be granted separate representation, by creating separate electorate, as much for safeguarding their interests as for maintaining their cultural autonomy. Tea industry, commercial interests, labourers, animists, Christians and Moslems should have separate representation on the basis of number and importance, in order to prevent creating an oligarchy under the garb of democracy. The minority elements should always be given representation in excess of their number.

Basis of franchise. Universal franchise is the ideal which every democratic institution should strive for; but under the present circumstances, particularly having regard to the ignorance and illiteracy, no one would seriously urge that we should go to that extent all at once.

I, therefore, suggest that the franchise qualifications be lowered to bring in merely a larger percentage within voting qualifications.

Method of Election. It would not be well to alter the present system of election. Ignorant people initiated to method of election would be thrown into confusion if any change is made. Though I realise that the present method of voting by secret ballot amounts practically to open voting so far as a very large percentage of illiterate voters are concerned.

Parties. I do not think any serious endeavour has been made so far as the formation of parties are concerned. Elections are generally fought on personal lines. The Swaraj party alone works on party line. But it appears to me that a negative factor alone provides the necessary cement, namely, obstruction. I am not sure how far its solidarity would stand the test when they transfer their activities on the positive side. But the formation of parties is sure to engage attention when full responsibility is given to the local councils.

The Reforms have given an impetus to the growth of public opinion. It might not have developed as one would have desired, yet there has been encouraging progress, and we can look forward with sanguine hope.

Complete responsibility connotes absolutely elected bodies. The principle of nomination does not fit in it. I think through special constituencies special interests would be better represented. I, therefore, would not approve the retention of the power to nominate for the Provincial Councils.

Units of Local Bodies. In the province of Assam, I would not like to disturb the existing areas so far as the administration of local self-government is concerned. There has been no demand for any change in any locality.

Extension of Reforms in other areas. I would strongly urge the extension of reforms in the remaining portions of British India, e.g., North West Frontier Province, Baluchistan, and Ajmer-Merwara. There can hardly be any logical justification for denying the people of those places the advantage of having a popular government. There is no reason to believe that the majority in those parts would not behave as the majority elsewhere are expected to do. Of course, special arrangement will have to be made for safeguarding minority interests, as in other provinces. It would be a wrong policy to wait in the matter of granting reforms till bitter political agitation has developed in those areas. To me it does not appear that any special difficulty can be pointed out against the extension of reforms in the areas mentioned; they have, rather, the advantages of being more homogeneous.

Division of Provinces. The present arrangement of the provinces, though not quite satisfactory, yet reorganising the provinces on more scientific line is not easy of solution. This will certainly lead to the dismemberment of some of the present political units. The Madras Presidency shall have to be subdivided into Tamil and Telegu provinces. The Ganjam district, perhaps, will have to be transferred to Orissa and there are other groups in the south that might desire to have separate political existence. The Central Provinces, similarly, shall have to be divided into Hindi, Mahrastra and Oriya, which would mean virtual dismemberment of the province.

In the Presidency of Bombay, Gujrat shall demand to have a separate existence and Sindh is already very loosely tied to the Presidency, and has been most insistent in claiming separation. Mahrastra element would also prefer to have a distinct political existence.

In Bihar and Orissa the latter would prefer to be treated as a separate province. Every other province would demand boundary readjustment, and no solution would give complete satisfaction.

In my province the districts of Sylhet, Cachar and Goalpara claim to go back to Bengal. Sylhet and Goalpara had been in Bengal and their land system and language are similar. Their claim along with Cachar, which is a mere colony of Sylhet people, cannot be brushed aside easily, and this would lead to the virtual dismemberment of the province of Assam; because the rest of the Assam valley would prove to be too small for a suitable political unit; the Hill portions are yet outside the pale of reforms and no one would seriously urge their inclusion within reformed area, nor their inclusion would very much alter the position. So the effect would be to deny the remaining plains districts of Assam the advantage of reforms which they rightly deserve.

I would, therefore, like to leave the matter for future settlement by popular representatives, rather than allow the scheme of territorial redistribution to delay the operation of the constitution. As I have already pointed out that the matter is extremely complicated and might take years to come to a workable settlement. In case, however, the question of redistribution is taken in hand I would suggest the transfer of the whole of the plains districts of Assam to Bengal, the remaining Hill areas to be constituted into an Eastern Frontier Province. Under all circumstances I would urge the separation of Sindh from Bombay, as her case stands on a different footing and has not the slightest difficulty about it.

Provincial Autonomy. So far as the provinces are concerned, provision of complete Provincial Autonomy would alone give universal satisfaction and kindle that enthusiasm which would ensure its successful working. The satisfactory working of the reforms, under very trying circumstances, has certainly strengthened the claim for such an advance. In granting political concession to countries and people, halting attitude deprives the gift of much of its grace, and leaves an antagonistic group to do mischief. Dyarchical system of government has very few unqualified supporters. In this hybrid system the responsibility is neither here nor there. Acts have been committed under its shadow which have accentuated popular antagonism to the system.

I, therefore, suggest the transference of all the portfolios to the Minister responsible to the Council. I would, however, like to see safeguards provided for representation of important minority elements in the Cabinet. I would prefer to raise the strength of the Assam Council to 80 in order to make it thoroughly representative, and would devise the seats as follows:—

Muhammadans	27
Hindus	29
Indian Christians	2
Primitive People	7
Tea Industry and Labour	12
Commerce and other Industries	3
Total	80

SECOND CHAMBER.

I would prefer to have bicameral system introduced in the Provinces. The Second Chamber does not appear to have outgrown its utility. After centuries of training under democratic institutions in the West and elsewhere, people of those countries have not yet come to the conclusion that they should cease to exist.

In our country the civic consciousness has yet to develop ; it is desirable to have a second chamber to provide against hasty acts. In deciding the question of a second chamber for Indian provinces, temperamental difference of the people of the tropics from those living in the temperate zone should be taken note of. The former, in my opinion, are more emotional and sentimental than the latter. Hardly any country in the West would present so many complicated problems and conflicting interest that needs safeguards, as a single province in India would do. The need for a second chamber, therefore, to provide against any hasty action of the majority, or of a combination, under the momentary spell of sentiment and emotion can hardly be questioned ; particularly when just a start is being given in complete responsibility under very difficult, intricate and novel circumstances. The main opposition can appropriately be credited to the constitution rather than to the utility of the institution of the second chamber. A properly constituted second chamber on well-represented elective basis will greatly help the smooth working of the constitution and would prove to be a useful instrument for rounding off the angularities of hasty acts of legislation. My experience of the Council has confirmed my opinion that we need a second chamber. I do not think in all cases every member cast his vote fully realising its consequences. Sometimes momentary heat generated by an incident influences voting, not only on that particular matter under discussion, but on other questions as well. The present power of certification left with the Governor is a fruitful source of undesirable conflict between the Head of the Province and the Legislature.

I am, therefore, strongly of opinion that introduction of bicameral system in the provinces is a necessity. When the civic consciousness is fully developed, when the electorate is thoroughly educated and when the spirit of conciliation and compromise is strengthened, there will be time to reconsider the question of its retention or abolition. It would amount to taking very great risk if in the nascent state of our constitution this important adjunct is not provided for the province as well.

For the province of Assam I would suggest a Chamber of 30 to be divided as follows :—

Muhammadans	9
Hindus	11
Planting Community and Labour ..	6
Christians	1
Primitive People	2
Commerce and Industry	1
	30

I would prefer to put higher age-limit for the qualifications of membership, say 40 minimum, and a higher franchise qualifications, than that obtaining for the councils ; yet I would not put the qualifications too high to seriously injure the representative character of the members. I do not feel any insurmountable difficulty would present itself in the formation of constituency. I may, however, concede a small percentage of nominated members, if thought desirable at the outset.

Finance. So far as the Provincial Finance is concerned, I desire only to point out the inequity of forcing Assam to bear the entire deficit in the administration of the Hill districts. The administration of Hills has reference to frontier defence, and I do not see any reason why the Central Government should not undertake to bear the burden of deficit. The entire cost of the Assam Rifles, which is maintained more for the purpose of frontier defence than for Provincial necessity, used to be borne by the Assam administration. The Council strongly protested against it, and the Central Government now partially contributes to its maintenance. I think Central Government ought to take up the entire responsibility for the maintenance of Assam Rifles. I am also of opinion that entire cost of the upkeep of the Manipur Road, which may be called a political road, be borne by the Central Government. Having regard to the meagre resources of the Province these financial adjustments should be made without further delay.

Constitution of Central Government. I would suggest transference of some departments under the same conditions as obtain in the provinces under present reforms to responsible Ministers. Though that system is not ideal in the absence of a better arrangement that shall have to be accepted for the transitional period. Indians will not be satisfied unless some form of responsibility is introduced in the Central Government.

Courts and Judiciary. People have been crying hoarse over the question of separation of Judicial from Executive. The present arrangement can hardly be justified. I am of opinion that no further delay should be made in carrying out the much delayed reform. The separation would certainly improve administration and create confidence in popular mind.

Federation and Status. The ideal of India is to have a federal system of Government of which the provinces would form the unit. There is hardly any opposition to that generally accepted ideal. So far as the status is concerned, I do not think anything short of full Dominion status would satisfy Indians. Indian National Congress has passed a complete independence resolution, but that perhaps owes its origin to the delay in fulfilling the demand for granting the Dominion status. I, therefore, suggest that India be placed on a footing of equality to the Dominions, as any differential treatment is bound to be resented.

Presidents. Rulings of the chair are sometimes bitterly criticised outside the House ; particularly in the Press, occasionally on false and foolish grounds. Not infrequently the motive behind had been mere propaganda. Yet the Presidents cannot take the field to counteract its effects. I, therefore, suggest that he should be armed with powers, on the analogy of the Speaker of the House of Commons, to deal with such situation.

The convention of leaving the Presidents uncontested has not been yet established. I would suggest that provision be made to secure their re-election without contest till the arrival of the time when parties have come into existence and their decisions have acquired weight with the bulk of the electors, to leave the Presidents uncontested.

These provisions would very much help impartial conduct of the Presidents and certainly would put him in a stronger position.

Memorandum submitted by SYED M. SAADULLA, Member, Assam Legislative Council.

Preliminary. All political parties—and their number is legion—are agreed that their ideal of an Indian Constitution is Swaraj, or Home Rule. The British Parliament also have declared that Responsible Government within the British Empire is the goal of its policy towards India. Although the Indian National Congress in their last session at Madras declared "Independence" as their goal, yet it is perfectly safe to say that the majority of Hindu India and almost cent. per cent. of Moslem India will be satisfied with a constitution giving dominion status to India for the present, which will ensure for them a position of equality with the other dominions in the Commonwealth of the British Empire. In view of the unfortunate internecine feuds between the two major communities of India, and in view of the extreme illiteracy of the masses and the want of any notion of Self-Government in them, and the disparity between the various communities in population, education and in the administration and other economic positions, I do not think that the ideal Self-Government can be realised at one step. I am of opinion that we should start with full responsible Government in the provinces, and have a sort of dyarchy in the Central Government who should be relieved of a fair measure of supervision by the Secretary of State for India in England.

The representative system as applied to British India. India is a vast country equal in extent to the whole of Europe minus Russia, containing a wealth of population divided into races and faiths in various stages of development educationally and economically and with a welter of languages and cultures perplexing to the most enthusiastic of ethnologists. One, therefore, in thinking of the future constitution for India, cannot go by generalisations and ideals merely, but must face the actual realities and the divergent and distrusting interests which need protection. The framers of the constitution should so adjust the provisions of safeguard of minorities as to receive the practical unanimity of the minorities concerned.

The main communities that inhabit India can roughly be divided into the Hindus and the Muhammadans; but the term Hindus is an extremely elastic one, and has been used in the census reports to include a medley of people whose faiths may be described as polytheism, pantheism, animism and fetishism. Properly speaking, the term Hindus should be defined as the caste-Hindus and the rest into either Animists or Primitive people. There are smaller communities, viz. Buddhists, Sikhs, Parsees, generally located in particular provinces, while the Indian Christian community is increasing on account of the proselytisation by the various Missions. The proportion of these latter communities to the total population of India is almost negligible. The percentage of Mussulmans in the total population of British India, according to the last census, is 21·74 per cent. The balance may roughly be divided in the proportion of 1 to 2 between caste-Hindus and the rest of the people, who are described by various names such as Adi-Hindus in Northern India, Adi-Dravidas in Southern India, the Depressed Classes in Eastern India.

All students of political evolution who press for political autonomy must concede the legitimate claim of the minorities for their cultural autonomy and safeguarding of their political rights. A democratic institution will be converted into an oligarchic one if people representing only one particular interest overwhelm its constitution. Therefore to ensure democracy in its real significance, attempt should be made to see that the various communities and different interests living within its jurisdiction are represented on the local self-governing institutions. This can only be effected by the principle of separate representation to particular interests and different communities. In my opinion it is essential to retain the system of communal electorates which has been worked since the Minto-Morley Reforms without any friction and which system has minimised enormously the political wrangling between the communities at the time of election. In Assam, since the introduction of the Reforms in 1921, this principle is in operation for the Muhammadan community, the Tea Industry and the mercantile and the commercial interests. I advocate the extension of this principle to all communities both in the local as well as in the Central Government. But in order that such minority representation may be effective, the representation should be far in excess of its numerical proportion when the numerical strength of the minority is less than one-fourth of the total population. But in no case, the majority of a community in a provincial legislature should be converted into a minority by such over-representation to different groups of minorities in that province.

The present basis of the franchise is, strictly speaking, the property qualification, and therefore a very small proportion—it is about five per cent. of the population—has been enfranchised. In Assam the proportion is about 3·5 if the labour force of tea gardens are excluded from calculations. In order that the members of the Council may truly represent their constituency, I would advocate an adult franchise for all people of 25 and 30 years of age respectively, for the local and central legislature. The present age limit is 21, but I want to raise it so that people who have experience of the world and most probably of managing their own household, will be in a better position to cast a discerning vote than one who has hardly entered the threshold of life or is just fresh from an educational institution. Should, however, adult suffrage at this stage of the political growth of the people be held unwieldy, I am for enfranchising everyone who now possess a vote in a Municipality or a Local Board election for the purpose of the provincial Legislative Council. Similarly, everyone who is now on the electoral roll of the provincial Council should be put on the electoral roll for the Central Legislature.

The present method of election is voting by the ballot. Though, in effect, on account of the illiteracy of about 80 per cent. of the voters, voting by ballot resolves into an open voting, I am for continuing the present system of voting by ballot in the next constitution. There has been considerable growth of public opinion in the country since the introduction of the Montagu Reforms, and people have learnt the value of the vote. The emergence of parties, however, in the legislatures, has been slow excepting the well organised Swaraj or Congress Party, whose main creed is obstruction and bringing the administrative machinery to a deadlock. There is no other well organised party on defined political principles. However, with the growth of democratic institutions. the party system is bound to come into existence.

In purely democratic institutions, all members should be elected, and it is a moot point whether in our future constitution, our legislatures should be entirely elected or the Government should retain some power of nomination. Experience of the working of the Reforms of 1921 in Assam, points to the conclusion that nomination of a small element has worked for the betterment of the country. At present in Assam, in a Council of 53, Government nominate five officials and five non-officials. Or, in other words, about one-fifth of the members of the Local Legislature get their admission into it on the principle of nomination. The proportion is rather high, and the number of nominations may be admitted in the future constitution to the extent of one-tenth of the total strength of the legislature, so that the presence of a few experienced officers of the administration and the representation of such minority communities whose members could not secure election but whose representation is deemed essential for the better governance of the country, may be secured.

SYED M. SAADULLA. [Continued.

2. The suitability of existing areas for legislative and administrative purposes, etc. In Assam, barring the provincial Legislative Council, the local self-governing institutions function for urban areas as Municipalities, and for rural areas as Local Boards. The constitution of these are regulated by the Assam Municipal Act of 1923, and the Assam Local Self-Government Act of 1915. In the earlier enactment, the principle of communal representation has been accepted for the Muhammadan community and the Tea Industry. But in the Municipalities, this principle has not been conceded with distressing results for the Muhammadan community. I will illustrate this by quoting figures for the Municipal elections of only three towns in Assam which have been held last month. In the town of Sylhet, with a total population of 16,912, 8,401 of which are Muhammadans, and 8,279 are Hindus, out of a total of 16 elected seats, only 5 Mussulmans were returned as against 11 Hindus. While in Gauhati, with a total population of 16,480, of whom 3,582 are Muhammadans, only 1 Muhammadan was regularly elected to the Municipal Board out of a total of 16 seats. And in the town of Habiganj, where the Moslem population is 1,658 out of a total population of 5,918, not a single Muhammadan was elected to the Municipality with 12 elected members, although in the sub-division of Habiganj, the Muhammadans form over 60 per cent. of the total population.

In 1926, an Act called the Assam Rural Self-Government Act has been passed by the local legislature for creating village self-governing institutions with entirely elected members. This Act has not up to now been in operation. I do not know how the minorities would fare under this Act. In my opinion, the principle of communal representation ought to be introduced both in the Municipal as well as in all Self-Governing institutions, in order to safeguard the representation of Muhammadans who are to a certain extent more backward both educationally and economically than their neighbours, the Hindus. Excepting in one instance, the local boards in Assam comprise subdivisions of districts as their area of jurisdiction. In my opinion the existing areas are suitable for these local self-governing bodies.

Although in the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms, the principle of communal representation was accepted, yet by the division of the electorate into Moslem and non-Moslem, a great injustice was done to the Muhammadan minorities to safeguard whom this principle was embodied in the constitution. As I have already stated earlier, the non-Moslems include everybody, the primitive people or the Animists, the Christians, etc., with the result that caste-Hindus who are organised, educated and who are also economically better situated than the rest, have monopolised, at least in Assam, all the seats reserved for non-Moslems. I will illustrate what I mean by the figures for the province of Assam. Out of a total population of over 79 lakhs, the Muhammadans form 22 lakhs and odd (reference is to 1921 census figures). The division of the electorate into Moslem and non-Moslem have put these 22 lakhs Moslems in one group, and the caste-Hindus, the non-caste Hindus, the Primitive people, the Christian people and the coolie population of the tea gardens into a polyglot electorate of all creeds. Roughly speaking, there are 10 lakhs of labour forces working in the different tea gardens in the province and about 6 lakhs of ex-tea garden coolies have settled as ordinary raiyats or cultivators. These 16 lakhs of people have got no representation in the local legislature. All these people are drawn from the aboriginal tribes of Bombay, Madras and the Central Provinces, and can, by no stretch of language or imagination, be called Hindus. Then there are 12 lakhs of primitive people, of whom only over 5 lakhs are in the hills. These have got no point of contact with the Hindus. These people also have no representation. Then there are over a lakh of Christian people without any representation in the legislature. The weight of the numbers of all these people is being taken advantage of by the caste-Hindus and their representation in the Council is far in excess of what their actual numbers demand. I therefore press upon the Commission the strong desirability of finding means by which the democratic institution may not be turned into an oligarchy. I suggest that the electorate may be divided into Moslem, caste-Hindu and Primitive people, in other words a miscellaneous electorate be formed for proper representation of backward communities.

Another factor which greatly affected the Moslem community is the distribution of seats in the local legislatures on a calculation of population on the previous census figures. For obvious reasons, the Government of India Act, 1919, had to base the constitution on the census figures of the year 1911. But a comparison of past census figures reveals the fact that the proportion of increase of Moslem population in a decade is far greater than those of the other major community and the advantage of increased population—which is a very real advantage for a minority community—is lost to them, if the census figures of the previous decade are drawn upon, to distribute seats in the legislatures between the various communities. I will again illustrate my point by actual figures.

The population of the province of Assam in 1874 distributed amongst the Hindus and Moslems and their number in 1921 is shown below.

	Census figures of 1872	Census of 1921	Percentage of increase approximately
Surma Valley	987,453 (Hindus)	1,438,153	45·8
Brahmaputra Valley	1,692,044 (Hindus)	2,630,135	55·4
Surma Valley	928,492 (Moslems)	1,604,420	72·8
Brahmaputra Valley	176,059 (Moslems)	585,593	232·8

Similarly the Christian community, too, has a phenomenal rise from 35,969 souls in 1901 to 132,106 in 1921, but the majority of these are in the Hills, which is beyond the pale of Reforms.

How injuriously this has worked, I will illustrate by an example from my own constituency. I represent the the Muhammadan constituency of Kamrup, Darrang-cum-Nowgong, comprising three districts with an area of 11,119 square miles. The total Moslem population of this area was 102,666 in 1911, and was given only one seat by the 1919 Act to that community, while five non-Muhammadan or Hindu seats were given for the same area. But when the Reforms were actually set into operation in 1921, this area revealed a Moslem population of 218,663 of whom some 8,000 were voters. In other words, the Moslem community lost the advantage of over a lakh of population in this electorate alone, by the process of basing the distribution of seats on 1911 census figures.

Again, I do not know how the electorates were divided. As mentioned above, a Moslem seat was created from an area of over 11,000 square miles, with over 8,000 voters, while a non-Muhammadan seat was given for an area of 287 square miles, with 2,086 voters for the Hailakandi sub-division of the Cachar district, total population being only 76,000.

I submit for these reasons that in calculating the seats for the new constitution, due regard be had to the average increase in the population of different communities according to the past three or four censuses, and also the creation of unequal and unwieldy constituencies be avoided.

The division of India into different provinces both for legislative and administrative purposes, though not ideal, has by now received the sanctity of ages, and is also fairly satisfactory. But there is a great difference in the status of provinces and the powers of the legislatures and administrations. Some provinces have not been brought within the operation of the Government of India Act, e.g. the North-West Frontier, Baluchistan, and Ajmer-Merwara. In Assam, the maximum instalment of Reforms have not been granted, e.g. Excise, the Public Works Department excepting the Irrigation Branch and Fisheries, which are transferred subjects in all other provinces, were not so in Assam until 1926, when Excise and Fisheries have been transferred to the control of the Ministers on account of the persistent demands of the Council, but even now the Public Works Department remains a reserved subject in this province. Bombay and Burma have got the Department of Forest, in addition, transferred to popular control, though the other provinces have been denied this privilege. All these anomalies ought to be done away with in the next constitution, and every province should be granted a Unitary system of Government. I see no reason why the North-West Frontier Province and Baluchistan and Ajmer-Merwara (if the population can sustain it), should not be granted Reforms. The majority of the people, at least in the first two, have been demanding it, but an opposition from certain interested quarters has made the Central Government sit tight. There is no reason to apprehend that 91 per cent. and 81 per cent. of Muhammadans in these two provinces cannot look after the interests of the small Hindu minority when the four per cent. and the six per cent. small Muhammadan minority in the Central Provinces and Madras have submitted themselves to the preponderating Hindu majority in these provinces.

The province of Sind, which is now an appendage to the Bombay Presidency, has been seeking a separation from the present arrangement. When the majority of the Sind population want to have a Government of its own, and when her present connection with Bombay Presidency has not been beneficial to her interest, it will be but an act of justice to create Sind into a separate province when it has a growing revenue, and its population about that of Assam when it was constituted into a separate province in 1874. Moreover, the important project of the Sukkur Barrage is bound, on completion, to add greatly to the population and prosperity of Sind.

This brings me to the separatist agitation on the part of certain people of the Sylhet district in Assam, for its union with Bengal. I am one of those who strongly protest against this movement. Sylhet, at present, forms the premier district of the province of Assam, with nearly one-third its population. The district is a deficit one, and with the provincial revenues collected from elsewhere, the administration has sunk a large amount of capital for the betterment of the district, and it would be a sad blow to Assam if Sylhet is allowed to go back to Bengal. Moreover, the main planks in the platform of this agitation, is linguistic affinity with Bengal and a separate system of revenue administration than the rest of Assam. I challenge any one to say that the spoken vernacular of the district of Sylhet is Bengali proper. On the same grounds, the district of Goalpara may urge their claim to be incorporated with Bengal, and already a movement has set afoot amongst the Zemindars of Goalpara in this behalf in spite of the fact that there is a counter-movement by the people at large. The district of Cachar is more or less a sort of colony of the Sylhet people. They also want to go to Bengal if Sylhet goes. I am of opinion that on account of the geographical position of Cachar and Lushai Hills, these two districts, for administrative purposes alone, must be transferred to Bengal along with Sylhet. It is extremely doubtful if the majority of the Sylhet people want to go to Bengal. The Muhammadans who form the majority of that district do not favour the idea, and the mass of Hindu people are indifferent. The agitation is confined to a small but vocal coterie of the intelligentia. Authoritative statement has not been wanting that the rest of Assam cannot be given the status of a major province after the defection of Sylhet. And Assam, who has worked dyarchy very satisfactorily, ought not to be rewarded with a loss of its status in the next constitutional advance.

Any attempt to redistribute the provinces of India on a linguistic basis will raise a veritable hornets' nest. What province is there in India with a homogeneous population and a common language? In Madras Presidency, four distinct languages are in vogue, each counting millions who use them. Tamil, Telugu, Malayalam and Kanarese are the principal languages spoken there. In Bombay, there are Marathi, Guzerati and Sindhi. In Punjab, there are Pushto, Punjabi or Gurmukhi and Urdu.

Bengal politicians, in their last Provincial Conference held at Basirhat, passed a resolution to the effect that the Eastern districts of Bihar, viz. Singbhum, Manbhum and Purnea and the Western districts of Assam, viz. Sylhet and Goalpara, should be brought under the Bengal administration. On the same ground, the United provinces may like to absorb the Western districts of Bihar, as they speak the same language current in United Provinces.

Central Provinces is sharply divided into the Marathi-speaking, Urdu-speaking and Oriya-speaking areas.

In short, once the principle of linguistic affinity is conceded for the purposes of transferring Sylhet to Bengal, it will raise such an awkward precedent that India shall perforce have to be redistributed into smaller provinces in the south, while in the north a few existing provinces will cease to exist, bringing in a change in the administration which will be simply bewildering in its complexity and difficulty.

A point of great importance for the province of Assam is whether the Hill districts, which form about half the area of the province, i.e., the districts of Garo, Naga, Lushai, Khasi and Jaintia Hills, and the frontier tracts, should be brought within the reforms. Excepting the Khasi Hills, wherein is situated the provincial headquarters of Shillong, the people of the other Hill districts are semi-civilised, and rather aborigines, and have nothing in common with the people of the plains districts, and in the present Reforms, except the urban constituency of Shillong, the rest of the Hills were relegated to the pre-reform administration, and are called "Backward Tracts." All these Hill districts are run on a deficit, the total deficit for all the Hills being about ten lakhs. They have got different laws and regulations, and do not desire, excepting the Khasi Hills, to come within the Reforms. In my opinion, the Hills, excepting the Municipality of Shillong, should not be brought within the next constitutional advance, but they should be administered by the Governor acting as Agent to the Governor General in Council, and the cost of this administration should be entirely borne by the Central Government.

3. The local self-governing bodies. I have touched very briefly on some of the points arising from the Acts of our local self-governing bodies. As I have not got very much experience of the district and local boards, I refrain from saying anything on their functions, finance, control and relationship of Provincial Governments, etc.

4. The Provincial Governments. As I have indicated already, the constitutional development of the country must be towards the evolution of a federal constitution for India within the British Empire, each provincial unit forming a state in itself, and all being governed in matters of concern by a Central

SYED M. SAADULLA. [Continued.

Federal State. I, therefore, advocate that Provincial Governments in future should obtain political autonomy. That is, Responsible Government should be conceded to the provinces by placing all provincial subjects in charge of Ministers responsible for the administration to the provincial legislature, the Governor being the constitutional head of the Provincial Government. This presupposes the principle of joint responsibility of Ministers and Cabinet system of Government will be the result.

The institution of dyarchy which has been worked for the last eight years has revealed many defects and should be done away with. This system may have been good for the transition period. In effect, its harmonious working was dependent on a very slender personal equation, viz., the personality of the Governor and his strict observance of constitutional procedure. Paradoxical though it may seem, this system has worked more satisfactorily where it has not been worked as a dyarchy. The division of Departments into Reserved and Transferred: their administration by the Governor respectively with the help of the Members of the Executive Council who are not responsible to the Legislative Council and the Ministers who are fully responsible; the power of the legislature's vote over the transferred budget and the responsibility of the Ministers to and the regulation of their pay by the Legislature compared with the irresponsibility of the Executive Council Members; the power of certification by the Governor of the budget of the Reserved side—all these create a most anomalous, difficult and delicate situation for the Ministers. The Ministers, in spite of a very difficult situation, administered the subjects under their portfolios as efficiently as those under the charge of the Governor with his Executive Council. The whole politics of the Legislative Council, so far as my experience of the last two Councils goes, centred round the Ministers. The Council took a particular delight in making the position of the Ministers most insecure, and sessional recurrence of the bogey of no-confidence motions and the hardy annual motions of reduction of Ministers' salaries made it extremely difficult for the evolution of any broad policy. Moreover, the ordinary period of three years of office for a Minister as compared with that of an Executive Council Member, whose term of office is five years generally, leaves little room for a continuity of policy in the subjects transferred to the Ministers' control. Experience has also shown that pseudo or semi-responsibility stimulates agitation and prevents smooth working of the political and administrative machinery. For all these reasons, I advocate that dyarchy be done away with, and a system of Unitary Government be introduced in the constitution for the Provincial Governments. For Assam, I advocate a Provincial Legislature of eighty members, which gives, roughly speaking, one member for each one lakh of population, and one-tenth of whom may be nominated by the Governor. There ought to be four Ministers to advise the Governor, all responsible to the Legislature, but appointed by the Governor, with fixed salaries. To ensure collective responsibility, it will be better if the Governor invites one particular individual to form a Cabinet, and instructs him to choose his own colleagues, with safeguards for representation of different interests and communities. Unless this is done, in a province like Assam, where various considerations of race, creed and territories are at play, it is impossible to expect joint responsibility of the Ministry. Speaking from personal experience, I found that my late colleague held diametrically opposite views on broad questions of principle, like communal representation, territorial redistribution of the province, etc., and any collective responsibility was out of the question under the circumstances.

The lifetime of a Council of three years is too short, and before the Councillors and the Ministers have settled to work, they are thrown again into the throes of a general election. In my opinion the lifetime of a Council should be of a five years' duration.

In order to safeguard the interests of minorities, I have already stated that I advocate the principle of communal representation for the Moslems, the Animists and the Tea and Commercial interests. On a basis of population and the importance of the interests concerned, I will like to distribute the seats in the Provincial Council as follows:—

Caste—Hindus	25
Mussulmans	25
Indian Christians	2
Primitive people	7
Tea Industry (including labour force)	10
Commerce and other Industries ..	3
Nominated by Governor	8
Total ..	80

If possible, on the analogy of the post-war constitutions of Southern Europe, the cultural autonomy of the minorities may also be safeguarded by the constitution.

I do not advocate the institution of Second Chambers for the Provincial Governments. I think for a small province like Assam, the electoral roll for a Second Chamber will be very meagre, and incompatible with a democratic institution. I would very much like to safeguard the interests of the different communities by providing in the constitution a clause to the effect that no Bill be introduced or passed in a local legislature to the detriment of any community or communities unless that Bill or Act has received the assent of three-fourths of the members of that particular community or communities.

As regards the finances of Provincial Governments, I am for keeping all present provincial resources of revenue, and also for including in it certain heads of revenue which at present are enjoyed by the Central Government. I strongly advocate that the proceeds of any export duty or of any income-tax on a commodity, and the proceeds thereof, respectively, raised by a particular industry of any province should be made available for that province. Speaking for Assam, the main industry in Assam is tea, and tea export duty was levied so long, but Assam never enjoyed any portion of that revenue. These tea companies have made huge profits lately, and paid considerable amounts of income-tax, but Assam was given only a very small share of the revenue from that income-tax. The question of the audit of the provincial finances may be left with the Central Government.

I would also advocate a special financial treatment from the Central Government so far as Assam is concerned. The geographical position and its topography make the administration of Assam very costly. Assam is the North-East Frontier of India, and is surrounded by warlike, uncivilised or semi-civilised tribes. This necessitates maintaining an armed force which otherwise Assam would not have maintained. On pressure from the Legislature, the Government of India is now bearing only a share of the cost of maintenance of this force. The entire share of the cost of maintenance of the Assam Rifles, in my opinion, should be borne by the Central Government. I have also spoken at an earlier stage that the Hill districts should be maintained by the Central Government. Barring the fact that the Hill Districts Budget is not a separate one, but is placed before the Council in the same Provincial Budget, there is no manner of connection between the administration of the Hills and the Plains Districts. Assam is divided into two valleys by the Bramaputra and the Surma rivers, which are again separated by the ridge of inaccessible hills. Up till now there is no direct communication between the two valleys. This has caused increased cost of administration. And also, the fact that the hills, both for political and social reasons, require to be administered by Europeans, the presence of European planting community scattered all over the province, requires a larger number of British recruits than would have been the case in the services. This also has raised the cost of administration. Then each of the two valleys being divided by mighty rivers, like the Brahmaputra and the Surma, requires public works on either bank, and this is another drain on the meagre revenues of the province. It may not be out of place to mention here that the total revenues of the province is below that of the Corporation of Calcutta or Bombay City.

5. The Central Government. For the present, I would suggest a sort of dyarchy for the Central Government. Or, in other words, the constitution of the Central Government should follow, in its main outline, the constitution of any of the bigger provinces under the Montagu Reforms. I advocate 250 members for the Central Legislature for the 247,000,000 and odd population of British India. In view of the political importance and the past history of the Muhammadan minority, I advocate that one-third of the total number of members should be drawn from the Muhammadan community through separate electorates. There should be a Viceroy's Cabinet of eight members, at least four being Indians drawn from the different communities in the Central Legislature. Those subjects in the Central Government which are now in the portfolios of Ministers in Provincial Councils should be administered with the same degree of responsibility to the Central Legislature by the members of the Cabinet. I have spoken already earlier as to franchise. If my main proposal is not accepted, I would lower the franchise for the Central Legislature, and would admit everyone who is a voter in the Provincial Legislative Council in the electoral roll of the Central Legislature. For the Central Government, I advocate a Second Chamber on the lines of the present Council of State, but would make it far more democratic. The relationship between the two Houses should remain as at present. The budget of those subjects which are now votable in the Provincial Councils should be made votable in the Central Legislature also.

6. Relations between Central and Provincial Governments. I have already indicated that the Central Government should have the minimum of control over the Provincial Government. In other words, I advocate full responsible Government for the provinces. This should do away with the general power of superintendence and direction in all provincial subjects. The Central Government should further have the supreme power as regards the defence of India. In other words, the Army, the Navy, the Air forces, and the political affairs should be left with the Central Government. Financial relations between the Central and the Provincial Governments I have already advocated, and from the current year the Meston Settlement has become a dead-letter as the provincial contributions have been remitted in toto.

7. The Courts and Judiciary. Almost every local Legislative Council has expressed a desire that the existing system of the combination of judicial and Executive functions should be done away with. I am of opinion that this much-needed reform ought to be brought into existence in the next constitution.

8. The Constitutional Problem, etc. I have already indicated that our constitution should aim at the evolution of a United States of India, and that in my opinion a Federation of Provincial Governments is the only form of Government suitable to the conditions prevailing in India to-day. I am strongly of opinion that a sort of equilibrium may be attained by creating the three provinces I have advocated earlier, i.e., the North-West Frontier Province, Baluchistan and Sind, which should also enjoy the same amount of privileges as are granted to the other provinces of India. For a contented India would largely depend upon the relations of the two main communities. With the extension of reforms to these new provinces, the Moslems will be in a majority in five, while the Hindus will be in a majority in six. It is expected that a Federal constitution for India on those lines will bring about the much-needed harmony between the two communities, and will set at rest the communal strife which has been a disgrace to the country during the last four years. Confidence in each other has been rudely shaken amongst the various communities, and minorities will be reconciled to constitutional changes by experience rather than by persuasion and force. Such a federated India should be given the same status and position as Canada and Australia in the British Empire.

9. Relationship between Central Government and Secretary of State. The Government of India Act of 1919 grants huge powers of initiative, superintendence and control to the Secretary of State. These powers are inconsistent with the grant of Self-Government to India which has been the declared policy of the British Parliament. I do not think that the Secretary of State should be given such powers of vast control even in affairs relating to the internal administration of the country. The control of the Secretary of State may be kept in the administration of the Foreign and Political affairs and the defence of India. The Secretary of State may also be given the power of regulating the relationship of India with the international world. In spite of the fact that I advocate for the present a dyarchic system for the Central Government—I am of opinion that the relationship between the Central Government and the Secretary of State and the British Parliament should be at a par with the relationship of the Dominion Governments and the Secretary of State for the Colonies and the British Parliament, except in those three departments over which I had advocated full control of the Secretary of State.

10. The position of the Services. The position of the Indian Civil Service and other All-India Services will be anomalous in the constitution advocated by me. That is, after provincial autonomy, responsible Government will be a sham if the administration can have no control over the services. This was recognised by the Lee Commission, who advocated the discontinuance of the All-India Services in future, for the services operating in the Transferred Departments. In my opinion, the same argument holds good for the Civil Services. The All-India character of a Civil Service should be stopped henceforward, and each province should recruit its own services. All services should henceforth be provincial, and recruitment be made through either the Central or the Provincial Public Services Commission. The recruitment of officers of non-Indian domicile has made the administration very costly, and therefore the rate of Indianisation ought to be accelerated and the money thus saved may be utilised for the growth of the provinces.

As I have indicated already, I want that the prospects of the minorities for a proportionate share in the administration of the country should be provided for in the constitution itself. This will save a lot of bickering and unpleasantness in the local legislature.

Memorandum submitted by the BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION, Calcutta.

The British Indian Association, founded in the year 1851, is the first Political Association in India. During the last three quarters of a century it has taken initiative in the introduction of many valuable measures. It has been the policy of this Association to approach all important public questions with due sense of responsibility and with proper regard to the views of the Government and the people.

The majority of our members are conservatives in politics, but they realise that under the altered circumstances brought about by the Government of India Act of 1919, it is their duty to proceed on progressive lines and it is their privilege to help in the political advancement of the country and to initiate measures for the amelioration of the condition of their countrymen, belonging to other sections of the society, with due regard to their own claims as can justly and properly be put forward before the Government and the awakening democracy of the present age. The members of the Association represent landed and other vested interests.

In view of its politics and the important interests that it represents, the British Indian Association naturally welcomes the opportunity of submitting its opinion to the Indian Statutory Commission in the hope that the recommendations of the Commission will lead to a large measure of advance towards responsible form of Government, and it trusts that such advance, while being generous and marked, would be suitable to the conditions of Bengal and of India. The Committee of the Association after careful consideration has decided to limit its submissions mainly to matters which predominantly affect interests represented by the Association. The Committee has, therefore, decided not to touch some of the important subjects referred to in the memorandum of the Commission circulated to public Associations inviting opinions. The principal reason for coming to this decision was that a suitable answer to some of these important points would depend largely on the decision of the Commission about abolition or retention of communal representation. As it is not possible for my Committee to anticipate the decision of the Commission on this vital point, it has decided to refrain from expressing its opinion on a number of important questions. The Committee would, therefore, content itself by urging some of the broad points of the future provincial constitution, such as the electorates and the franchise with special reference to interests in which our Association are vitally concerned. My Committee would also venture to point out the need for stability and ordered progress in the new constitution. In view of its opinion stated above about communal representation, the Committee has refrained from expressing its views on the constitution of the Central Government. For the same reason it has also decided to reserve its opinion on a number of points affecting the provincial Government. We would, however, desire to emphasise at the outset that full provincial autonomy subject to the safeguard of an Upper House is essential for ordered progress and for development of responsible Government.

I. The Representative System as Applied to British India.

(a) Basis of Franchise. The Committee of the Association would in this connection venture to place before the Commission some preliminary observations. In order to achieve success in administration through a Responsible form of Government, the realities of the situation and the interests vitally affected should not be ignored. The progress and advance in a Responsible form of Government should also depend on the progress and advance of the classes, interests and communities concerned. In this connection, my Committee would like to draw the attention of the members of the Commission to some well-known facts about the progress of Responsible Government in the United Kingdom, where in each step of advance in Responsible Government adjustments were made in the basis of franchise and formation of electorates from time to time to suit the variations in social and economic changes amongst the people. Before 1832, Responsible Government there meant responsibility of the Government for the time being to a comparatively limited number of voters. As the commercial, trading and manufacturing cities gained in importance, franchise was extended to them by the great Reforms Act of 1832. Consequently, changes in the number and class of voters were made in the sixties, eighties and nineties of the last century, and under the People's Act of 1918 the qualifying franchise of a British male voter was fixed at an annual value of £10 and of a woman voter at an annual value of £5 in her own right or in the right of her husband. Responsible Government in England therefore, had a steady progress with a steady increase in number and change in the class of voters. In such advance due note was taken of the changing conditions of different classes and interests of citizens who were enfranchised, proper attention being always paid to the capacity of these voters to exercise intelligently their right of franchise. It is true that the conditions in Bengal and in India are very different from those of the United Kingdom, but there is one point which should be borne in mind, that Responsible Government in a country for the time being should be responsible to and represent those interests which from the social and economic points of view are important at that particular period of its national advance. Approaching the question from this broad aspect my Committee would like to point out that over 90 per cent. of the people of Bengal are agriculturists, and the interest of Bengal is therefore predominantly rural. On the welfare of the 90 per cent. of its agricultural population also depends to a large extent the welfare of the urban population. The agriculturists who cultivate lands in rural areas hold those lands under zemindars who are proprietors of the soil; but the bulk of these agriculturists have protection from ejectment. The interests of Bengal, therefore, require that those who are proprietors of lands as also those who cultivate the land should be adequately represented in the Legislature.

There are at present only five representatives of the landholders in the Bengal Legislative Council and only one in the Legislative Assembly. The zemindars of Bengal directly contribute one third of the total provincial revenue. Besides this direct contribution they also pay a large portion of their taxes from which the expenditure of the Government of Bengal is met. The social, political and economic importance of this class can hardly be overstated. They have only five representatives in the Local Legislature consisting of 140 members and only one in the Legislative Assembly—these representations are very inadequate. It may be pointed out that under the Minto-Morley Reforms the landholders were granted the privilege of electing five representatives in the Local Council consisting of only 27 elected members and of sending two members to the Imperial Legislative Council. In the Reforms of 1919, their number of seats remained stationary, though the number of representatives both in the Council and the Legislative Assembly was largely increased. In consideration of their large contribution to the provincial exchequer, their importance as a class and the fact that they own the proprietary interest of practically the whole of Bengal, the zemindars should be given at least one third of the elected seats in the Local Council. It has been suggested that as the zemindars can come to the Legislative Council through the General Electorates there is not adequate justification for earmarking a larger number of seats for them through the Special Constituencies; those who make this suggestion overlook the obvious fact that in order to successfully contest a seat in the General Constituency there is little chance for a zemindar candidate unless he be willing to foreswear his class interest and accept a proletariat and anti-British programme and popular slogans in support of such demands. Experience in Bengal Election confirms this contention. But apart from experience, here we may be permitted to point out that this phenomenon is not unknown in other countries; a capitalist who gets returned from a labour seat in the United Kingdom must undoubtedly voice labour opinion and cannot be looked upon as a representative of his class. In the present state of our political evolution the peculiar condition of our country, and the existence of a ruling power, belonging to another race, unless the Representative form of Government be based on the actual class interests difficulties are likely to be encountered.

The Committee of my Association submits that if the zemindars be not precluded from contesting the seats in the general constituencies, the number of their seats in the special constituencies should be increased at least to 15. But if they be so precluded then the number of seats reserved for them should be at least 30 per cent. of the elected seats.

In this connection my Committee begs to point out that the number of the electors in the Landholders' Constituencies should be considerably increased by reducing the revenue, cess and rent qualifications and by including permanent tenure holders who pay a definite amount of rent or cesses. But in order to retain the distinctive feature of these constituencies the existing franchise qualifications should not be reduced by more than one third.

(b) Number of seats in rural areas should be increased and their present size should be reduced.

Municipal franchise in muffusil Bengal should be separated from rural constituencies.

At present, we have one seat for about 11,500 voters, both in the Muhammadan and non-Muhammadan constituencies. The number of voters is too large and the areas too big for one candidate to properly canvass when he is expected to visit almost every village personally and, if possible, every hamlet, in spite of the defective means of conveyance and communication. To effect some improvement in this matter without making the legislature an unwieldy body, my Committee ventures to suggest that one seat may be allotted to every seven thousand voters and the administrative unit of a district may accordingly be divided into electoral districts or constituencies. We propose a complete separation of the rural and urban areas for the purpose of election. At present only Calcutta, Dacca, 24 Parganas and the riparian municipalities of Hooghly and Howrah have separate urban representations; all the other municipalities form part of the rural constituencies. In the Reforms of 1919, these municipalities have been denied the right of separate representation because they were supposed to have no distinct interest from the rural areas of the districts in which they are situated. But this theory is open to question; people residing and carrying on their business and profession in the muffusil municipalities, though some of them still retain lands in the villages, become a class by themselves. They, on account of their better economic condition, higher status due to their learned profession, trade and commerce and superior education, enjoy greater advantage in life, and have little affinity of interest with people living in the villages. In the elections, they make a distinction between a candidate hailing from their own town and those belonging to the moffusil areas and there is a strong tendency to support the former in preference to the latter. A rivalry is thus noticeable between the urban and the rural areas of a constituency. Larger number of voters, inhabiting in a small and compact area, greater facility of canvassing and of recording votes, superior intelligence of the town people, and a strong tendency to support a candidate belonging to the town generally decide the result of election in favour of the urban candidate. So, we beg humbly to point out that the inclusion of municipal areas within the rural constituencies is hardly fair to the moffusil voters distributed over not less than 1,000 villages, extending over an area of 800 to 1,200 square miles. Voters, in the villages, have got to cover sometimes ten miles on foot to record their votes at a polling station which is absolutely unconnected by any road. With these disadvantages of a rural voter one would like to contrast the facilities enjoyed by an elector living in a moffusil town, where we have generally three or four polling centres. So that each station records the votes of electors living within a radius of one mile. All sorts of conveyances, including motor buses are available to them; they can have their tiffin at every street corner. On these grounds, we suggest a separation of the rural from the urban areas for the purpose of election. The municipalities of each district should be given a separate seat in the Council.

(c) Communal Representation. We are against the introduction of the system of communal representation in the local bodies or its continuance in the legislatures except in the case of Europeans, who do not form part of the Indian nationhood, but stay in India for a few years on business and retire after a certain time. They always maintain their separate identity as a community in India even in matters political. But this cannot be said with regard to any other community in India, not even in the case of Anglo-Indians who have adopted India as their permanent home, far less can it be said in the case of Muhammadans. We beg to suggest the abolition of communal representation, but to safeguard the interest of minority communities seats may be earmarked. We do not propose to repeat the arguments against the system of communal representation. This is a suggestion which has been almost universally advocated by the leaders of Indian public opinion both Hindu and Muhammadan, a very influential section of the latter community also has accepted it as a part of political expediency. So, we do not propose to deal with it at length.

(d) The relationship between representatives and constituents. Admittedly, at present there is not much touch between a representative and his constituents. The number of electors, the unwieldy area, absence of facility of communication, lack of real political education and interest on the part of the voters and want of party fund and party organisation, render it difficult to maintain the touch which a candidate is obliged to form at the time of election. Matters may improve with the reduction in area of constituencies and in number of electors as suggested by us.

IV. PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS.

(a) Constitution. As regards the constitution of the provincial legislature, the Committee of my Association would like to suggest that it should consist of two Chambers. The powers and constitution of an Upper Chamber should be similar to those of the Council of State: the qualification for its membership should also be similar to that of the Council of State with slight reduction in case of property qualification. The life of the Upper Chamber should be five years and that of the Lower four. The Upper House in the provinces should be a revising Chamber with power to restore a demand refused by the Lower House. But bills, except the Finance Bills, may be first introduced in either of the two Houses. The Finance Bills should be first introduced in the Lower House. The Upper Chamber will have the power to criticise it and, if necessary, to restore any demand refused by the Lower House; but will have no authority otherwise to vote on budget demands. The total strength of the Upper House should not exceed more than fifty. The number of seats in the Lower House should be increased as already mentioned in this memorandum.

(b) Working of Dyarchy. There is a concensus of opinion in favour of the abolition of dyarchy. The system has failed to work smoothly, and instead of maintaining the unity of the Government, on many occasions, their disunion became quite apparent. We do not propose to recount all such instances where the two halves of the Government failed to come to an agreement and measures introduced by the reserved side did not receive the active support of the ministers in the council, or when many important and useful schemes framed by the popular ministers did not materialise because they were condemned by the members of the Executive Council either on financial or political grounds. In all provinces, there were numerous instances of such disagreement. The greatest weakness of dyarchy lies in disagreement between the two halves of the Government in questions relating to the Department of Law and Order. If they remain neutral in the council, the disunion in the Government is exposed and the ministers lose sympathy of the Civil Service and of the non-official European community, on whose support they have to depend considerably, at least in Bengal. If the ministers support the Government in maintaining Law and Order, they will at once forfeit the confidence of the Indian members of the Legislative Council, and the Swarajists, who are against dyarchy on principle, taking full advantage of their unpopularity, will move a vote of no-confidence on them. Thus the ministers suffer for an action of the Government over which they have little control. We are, therefore, in favour of full provincial autonomy in all the departments, including that of Law and Order. Unless this department is transferred to the Ministers, provincial autonomy will fail to secure full popular support and co-operation, and exclusion of popular control from this department will amount to another experiment in a limited form of diarchy, with all its defects and risks. Transference of control over this department from the Provincial to the Central Government as has been suggested by some political thinkers may tell upon the efficiency and prestige of the Provincial Government and will fail to secure popular satisfaction. The popular mind will not make any distinction between an action of the Central Government and their agents in the provinces. The people will naturally resent any measure of the Government which they do not approve by retaliating on the Ministers over whom they will have constitutional control. Moreover, in order to foster a sense of administrative responsibility, which cannot be separated from constitutional concessions, it is highly desirable that the department of Law and Order should be placed under a minister responsible to an elected legislature. Introduction of an Upper Chamber, consisting of the representatives of the people with large stake in the country, will strengthen and improve the position of the ministers, who will thus be able to act in the best interest of good administration, and will not have to shirk their responsibility only to avoid unpleasant situations and for the security of their office. Ministers should be selected from both Houses, and they should have the right to address both the Chambers.

(c) Position and powers of Governor. The Governor, in the existing constitution, is the head of the Executive; with the introduction and development of real self-government, it should be the aim to make him the constitutional head, free as far as possible from all executive responsibilities. With the grant of provincial autonomy his right of interference with the action of the ministers should be reduced to a minimum. Without freedom of action the position of a minister cannot be made sufficiently attractive or his powers effective. The Instrument of Instructions should be amended subject only to the power of interference by the Governor to prevent unfair discrimination between classes and interests and to protect minorities. The Governor should not otherwise dissent from the opinion of his ministers. The practice of direct audience of Secretaries with the Governor should be discontinued.

(d) Relationship of Ministers to each other. Apart from all other salutary effects of developing the principle of joint responsibility in order to avoid a division amongst the supporters of the ministers in the Council, purely on communal grounds, the system of joint responsibility should be introduced. This would act as a check on tendency on the part of the Hindu and the Muhammadan members of the Council to support or oppose a Minister on communal basis.

(e) Working of Departments. The present division of departments into Reserved and Transferred are arbitrary and unscientific. For example, the Minister of Development is not in charge of Forests, which is a reserved subject; so also we have the Minister of Agriculture without the charge of the Department of Irrigation, which is a Reserved one. The Minister in charge of the Department of Industries has no control over Factories. This difficulty will disappear with the introduction of full provincial autonomy. The division of portfolios amongst ministers themselves also should be made in such a manner as to avoid any unscientific distribution.

(f) Classification of Reserved and Transferred Subjects. This artificial and temporary distinction between Transferred and Reserved subjects as obtained at present cannot exist in a responsible Government. All the departments will be managed by Ministers whose number will not exceed four.

(g) Desirability of Second Chamber. As in all other countries, during the period of transition when the administrative control of a country is being gradually shifted from monarchy, oligarchy or bureaucracy to the people, they generally lose their political balance and there come into existence extreme parties, which are often anti-Government or are definitely against those who undertake the responsibilities of office. They become the most popular of parties and sweep the poll. They are for levelling down all existing arrangements and by their unreasonable opposition attempt to bring about a constitutional deadlock. This, too, has been our experience in Bengal since the election of 1923, when the Swarajists entered the Council with the express object of wrecking the working machine. They did succeed partly, if not wholly, in creating a constitutional chaos, and ministry after ministry was overthrown. Those which survived for a period the onslaught of the Opposition had a precarious existence, and the ministers who had thus to be always on the defensive could not seriously set their heart to any useful work. The failure of the ministers to achieve anything substantial since 1923 may be largely, if not wholly, attributed to the unreasonable opposition of the extremist party which was naturally very popular and powerful against a foreign bureaucracy. In order to counteract the activities of such extreme parties, which are bound to come into existence at least for a long time yet with the growth of political consciousness of the people, who have been under a foreign domination for the last several centuries, it is desirable that there should be a Second Chamber, composed of persons of sober views, men with large stake in the country and of proved political experience and sagacity. The legislature which will be thus bicameral will not be absolutely controlled by men of extreme views. The Government, with the introduction of provincial autonomy, will be a Government by the people and will be able to rely upon the support of the Upper House, both for salutary legislations, and also for opposing measures which will be brought forward with the object of putting obstacles in their path. The qualification for membership and composition of the provincial Upper House should be like those of the Council of State, and there should be no communal representation, but seats may be reserved for the minority communities and special representation should be granted to special interests, like those of landholders and merchants.

(h) Question of provincial autonomy and control by the Central Government. We have made it perfectly clear that full provincial autonomy is our immediate goal. All the subjects should be transferred to the charge of ministers responsible to the Provincial Legislature. The Central Government, whose control over the Local Government is mainly threefold, viz., Legislative, Administrative and Financial, should fully transfer these powers to the Local Government, except in matters affecting inter-provincial interests, or interests of the Central Government, and in preventing unfair discrimination between class interests. In all inter-provincial matters, the Central Government must continue to be final arbiter. However much we may try to mould our constitution on the lines of the Federal Governments of Canada and Australia the analogy cannot be and should not be pushed too far. There are many questions which are peculiar to the Indian Empire, including those about the Native States. They are integral parts of the Indian Empire, whose interests cannot be ignored or whose importance as part and parcel of our country cannot be minimised. The Central Government or the Viceroy, as representative of the British Crown, must come in to adjust all questions affecting the whole of India. Thus it will be a mistake to suppose that our provinces can be modelled after the States of Canada or Australia, or our Central Government after their Federal Governments. In all the three branches, viz., Legislative, Administrative and Financial, the control of the Government of India should be relaxed as much as possible to make the provinces really autonomous subject only to a general control and supervision of the Central Government to avoid inter-provincial, inter-communal clashes, to safeguard the interests of the Native States, and to maintain the position and power of the Government of India with due regard to national and imperial defence. The control of the Central Government over the Local Legislature may be minimised by certain modifications of Section 80 A of the Government of India Act, but we do not consider that complete freedom is a practical proposition.

As regards the classification of Central and Provincial subjects we are inclined to accept the existing arrangement. The grant of full provincial autonomy may require some minor and technical changes and readjustments, but we do not propose to go into these intricate details in this memorandum.

4 (k) and 6 (c). The financial relationship between the Central and Provincial Government, including the Meston Settlement. The Financial Settlement known as the Meston Award, which was ushered in with the Reforms of 1919, has practically dissatisfied all the provinces. The two Presidencies of Bengal and Bombay considered themselves very badly treated and attributed the failure of Reforms partially to financial stringency. Without entering into the long, and for the present unnecessary, discussion of the relative effect of the settlement of Lord Meston on the different provincial governments, we can say that Bengal was very hard hit; she considered the allocation of revenue unfair and absolutely inequitable. Repeated attempts of the Government of Bengal to get this defect remedied were in vain. Neither the Indian Legislative Assembly nor the Government of India are very sympathetic towards Bengal in this matter. The exaggerated idea of Bengal's economic prosperity due to the Permanent Settlement, the imperfect knowledge of the average member of the Indian Legislative Assembly about the taxable capacity of her people, her past political preponderance and the unyielding and unsympathetic attitude of the Government of India have rendered the position of Bengal extremely unenviable in this financial crisis. Bengal, it may be pointed out, started with a deficit of two crores and twelve lakhs of rupees. To meet the deficit, the Government had to introduce three new taxation bills, viz.:

(1) Bill to increase Judicial Stamp by 50 per cent.
(2) Bill to increase non-Judicial Stamp by 50 per cent.
(3) Bill to raise Tax from Amusements.

It was expected that a revenue of 1 crore and 40 lakhs of rupees could be raised, but the total receipt from these three sources was not more than 95 lakhs of rupees. In September, 1921, the Government retrenched the Budget expenditure to the extent of 90 lakhs. There was a further retrenchment in 1925, and the total amount of expenditure thus curtailed was about 1½ crores of rupees. The Provincial contribution of 63 lakhs has now been permanently remitted, but still there is no surplus revenue to enable the Government to undertake even the most urgent works of improvement. We beg to suggest that in order to give Bengal a real surplus, without which provincial autonomy will be of no practical value, a percentage of the Income Tax, or Jute Duty or Customs Duty, should be given to her.

(i) Financial Relations between the reserved and Transferred Subjects. It has been pointed out above that the allocation of revenue of a proportion of 70 per cent. and 30 per cent. or 66 per cent. and 34 per cent. between the Reserved and Transferred Departments of Bengal is highly arbitrary and unreasonable. In responsible government such question as financial relation or joint and separate purse will not be wise. The Cabinet will look to the proper distribution of funds for each department.

In conclusion, the Committee of my Association begs most humbly and respectfully to urge that sufficient consideration may be shown to the special claims of the Zemindars of Bengal to a larger number of representations in the future constitution of the country, to which they are justly entitled on account of their vast interest in land, high status in the social system of the province, and large contribution to Government revenues. We hope and trust that in future constitution we shall be given proper facilities to undertake the duties which fall on us as natural and hereditary leaders of society who, though less assertive, are by no means less alive to the responsibilities which devolve on them on account of their position as landholders, and we sincerely hope that the British Government will stand by the pledge given to us by the Government of Lord Cornwallis, and help us to maintain our rights and privileges.

CALCUTTA.
15th January, 1929.

PRESENT :

ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION, OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE (EXCEPT RAJA NAWAB ALI KHAN AND SIR ZULFIQAR ALI KHAN), AND OF THE BENGAL PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE.

Deputation from the British Indian Association, Calcutta.

The deputation consisted of :—
The Hon. SIR RAMESWARA SINGH, G.C.I.E., K.B.E., Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Darbhanga (ex-President, British Indian Association).
Mr. BIJOY PROSAD SINGHROY, M.L.C.
Maharaja Bahadur SIR PRODYAT COOMAR TAGORE (President).
Mr. SATYA CHARAN MUKHERJEE, M.L.A.
MAHARAJ KUMAR OF DARBHANGA.
RAJKUMAR OF GAURIPUR.
Mr. P. N. TAGORE (Secretary).

* * * * * * * *

11. The Chairman : * * * At the bottom of page 35 I see you say : " There are at present only " five representatives of the landholders in the " Bengal Legislative Council and only one in the " Legislative Assembly. The zamindars of Bengal " directly contribute one-third of the total provin- " cial revenue." I should like to ask one or two questions about that. The zamindars in this province benefit, of course, and I should imagine benefit enormously, by what is called the permanent settlement, do not they ?—Yes.

12. Which was in 1793 ?—Yes.

13. Do I understand that the land revenue which they pay is land revenue which was fixed having regard to the assets of the land in 1793 ?—Yes.

14. Has the value of the land greatly increased since 1793 ?—In some cases.

15. With the result, of course, that it can be let out to tenure holders at a rent which is above the rent it could have commanded in 1793 ?—I think so.

16. For example, in 1793, was the production of jute on a commercial scale known ? Was jute in 1793 a material source of commercial profit ?—I do not think so.

17. At present jute is an enormously important article of production, and I imagine it greatly increases the value of the land of Bengal, does not it ?—Yes.

18. I have made an inquiry, because it is interesting to know. Let us take, for instance, the district of Mymensingh. I think the land revenue collected in that enormous district is about Rs.8 lakhs, is not it ?—Yes.

19. Is that about right ?—(Sir P. C. Tagore) Yes.

20. I am told (I may be wrong) that the jute production coming from that district brings into the district Rs. 8 millions or thereabouts ?—(Maharaja of Darbhanga) Yes.

21. Is that right ? Anyhow, without inserting a figure, it is evident there has been an enormous increase in the value of land since the days of the permanent settlement ?—(Mr. Singhroy) Yes, but the whole profit is not intercepted by the zamindars.

22. I am sure it is not, but is it correct to say the zamindars bear the burden of the land revenue ? —Yes.

23. Is not it the people to whom they let their land who bear the burden ?—The zamindars partly, and the tenants also.

24. Do they ? Do you think on the whole to-day the rent received by the zamindars of Bengal is not sufficient to cover the land revenue which they have to pay, as well as the profit which they used to make ?—Yes. They make a certain amount of profit, but the major portion of the profit is intercepted by the middlemen and does not come to the zamindar, who is the actual proprietor.

25. I quite see that. By " middlemen " you mean the intermediate interests before you get to the cultivator ?—Yes.

26. Take a specimen district. How many intermediate interests would there be ?—Generally three or four, but in some cases as many as twenty. In the districts of Bakarganj and Faridpur the intermediate holders are sometimes twelve to fifteen in number.

27. Let us take the instance you gave, because it is very instructive. You will have the zamindar, who is liable to pay and no doubt is the hand that pays the land revenue fixed in 1793. He lets his land to the tenure-holder ?—(Sir P. C. Tagore) The cultivator.

28. Does he ?—The zamindar lets out his land to the actual cultivator and the tenure-holders. Under the tenure-holders are the actual cultivators.

29. I was taking the instance given by the other gentleman, who told me it was very common to have four or five intermediaries ?—(Mr. Singhroy) Yes.

30. Let us take the instance where there are four or five. There will be the zamindar, who is the landholder and whose hand pays the land revenue fixed in 1793, and he lets to the tenure-holder ? —Yes, he lets it to the tenure-holder.

31. Presumably at a rental which is satisfactory to both sides. That tenure-holder we will call A. Does he sublet sometimes to a subordinate tenure-holder, a sub-lessee ?—Yes.

32. We will call him B. B sublets to a third man, whom we will call C, and C, we will say, lets to the cultivator ?—Yes.

33. In the ordinary way there will be at each stage, will not there, an advance of rental ?—Yes.

34. Each man gets his own return ?—His own profit, yes.

35. I follow the zamindar, under the permanent settlement, is responsible for paying the land revenue then fixed. The zamindar does not pay any income-tax, does he ?—No.

36. Then tenure-holder A—does he pay anything ? —No.

37. Nothing at all ?—No. No income-tax is assessed on agricultural income.

38. So that if A holds from the zamindar at (let us say, for the sake of argument) 100, and lets at 120, and therefore makes a profit of 20, he makes no contribution in taxation on that 20 at all ?—As income-tax he pays nothing.

39. I am talking about provincial revenue. A, who holds the land at 100, and lets it at 120, and who therefore makes a profit of 20, makes no contribution in respect of that 20 to provincial revenues at all ?—Except by way of cess.

40. Is that to provincial revenues ? I thought it was to local ?—To local, yes.

41. I am not talking about that, I am talking about provincial revenues ?—He makes no contribution.

42. The same with B and the same with C, is that so ?—Yes.

43. Have the British Indian Association any suggestion to make as to how that situation ought to be dealt with, or do they think it should go on like that for the rest of time ?—I do not think we can suggest any improvement on that situation, because any change in that arrangement would mean an economic revolution in the whole country. It would disturb the whole arrangement altogether, and will affect almost every man in Bengal.

44. We have correctly described the situation, have not we ? I do not want to state it wrongly. That is a description of what in fact happens, is not it ?—Yes.

45. The intermediate people pay no taxes to the provincial funds at all ?—No, they do not pay any taxes.

46. And you think that should remain. That being so, what is the proposal of the British Indian Association and the zamindars of the province as regards their representation ?—The representation of the zamindars ?

47. Yes ?—On revenue qualification as at present ?

48. What is the proposal which your deputation wishes to put before the Conference as to how the landowners of Bengal should be represented in the Bengal provincial council ?—When you talk of the representation of landowners, we mainly confine our proposal to the case of the zamindars, the men holding the superior interest.

49. About how many of them are there ? You say there are 130 members of the British Indian Association. How many are there in Bengal altogether ?—At least 100 of the 130 members are zamindars.

50. You misunderstand me. There may be zamindars in Bengal who are not members of your Association ?—Yes, there are.

51. About how many zamindars are there in the same position as members of your Association ?—A very large number.

52. Let us confine ourselves to the larger zamindars. At what sort of point do you describe a man as a big zamindar ?—A man who pays Rs.4,000 revenue I should call a big zamindar.

53. How many such persons are there ?—About 600.

54. Then do I understand the representations made by the British Indian Association are in respect of those 600 people ?—600 directly, and for the rest indirectly.

55. What is the representation in the provincial council of the future which you think these 600 people should have ?—We want at least 15 per cent. of the elected seats.

56. 15 per cent. ?—That we have said in our memorandum.

57. I was not quite clear about it. On page 35 you say "In consideration of their large contribution "to the provincial exchequer, their importance as "a class and the fact that they own the proprietary "interest of practically the whole of Bengal, the "zamindars should be given at least one-third of "the elected seats in the local council" ?—Yes. What we mean is that one-third is due to them.

58. Will you make it clear to me whether these 600 people should have one-third of the seats, or whether you think they should have at least 15 per cent ? One-third is 33 per cent. ?—One-third is 33 per cent., but——

59. I think perhaps the explanation is this. I do not want to confuse you. I see the reference on page 36. You say that if zamindars are free to contest general constituencies, then, in that event, the number of the zamindars' seats in the special constituencies should be increased from 5 to 15. That is not 15 per cent., but it is 15 seats. But if the zamindars are precluded from contesting general constituencies, the number of seats reserved for them should be at least 30 per cent. Is that the proposal ?—Yes.

60. Lord Burnham refers me to a statement in the Government book at the top of page 139.* "There "are five landholders' constituencies, all of which "usually return Hindu members to council. These "constituencies were created in the belief that the "greater landholders would find it difficult to enter "the council through the general constituencies, but "in the present council there are actually"—the figures have been revised for us—"sixteen Hindu "and eight Muhammadan elected members whose "names are on the electoral rolls of the landholders' "constituencies." That seems to show, does it not, that in fact the larger zamindars do get elected by the general constituencies ?—Yes, up till now they have succeeded in coming to the council through the general constituencies, but we apprehend that it will not be possible for them to come so in future.

61. Why do you think that ?—Because there is a feeling against the landholders generally in the country, that the agriculturists should have their own representatives in the council, and not through the zamindars.

62. Then I am not quite clear—you will make it entirely clear—whether, in the view of the deputation, the part that would be played by the zamindars returned by the special constituencies would be to protect the class interests of the zamindars, or to act on behalf of the citizens as a whole ?—The zamindars' representatives will protect their own interests as well as those of the citizens as a whole, because you may be aware of the amendments of the Bengal Tenancy Act which was passed just a few months ago. The zamindars while they tried to protect their own interests were not unjust to the interests of the tenants as well.

* * * * * * * *

64. Would you tell me this. Is the membership of the British Indian Association principally Hindu, or does it include Muhammadans as well as Hindus ?—There is no bar, but at the present moment they are almost all Hindus. I may inform you that just a few years ago there were many Muhammadans who were members of the British Indian Association, big Muhammadan zamindars were members of that Association, but unfortunately the Muhammadan membership is now practically nil.

65. That means that some Muhammadan members have resigned ?—Yes, they have ceased to be members now.

* * * * * * * *

67. * * * I notice on page 36 a statement about communal representation. You say, I see: "We are against the introduction of the system of "communal representation in the local bodies or "its continuance in the legislatures except in the "case of Europeans," and then a little lower down you say: "We do not propose to repeat the argu-"ments against the system of communal representa-"tion." I am very glad, because we have heard a great deal about the arguments both against it and in its favour, and we are familiar, I think, with both sets of arguments, but you go on to say: "This "is a suggestion"—that is to say, the suggestion that you should not have communal representation—"which has been almost universally advocated by "the leaders of Indian public opinion, both Hindu "and Muhammadan." Do you think, on reflection, it would be quite right to say that the view that you should abolish communal representation is almost universally advocated by leaders of Muhammadan opinion ?—No; I have also added a clause there, "both Hindu and Muhammadan, a very influential "section of the latter community also has accepted "it as a part of political expediency." I do not say that a very influential section of the Muhammadans have accepted it universally.

68. I see; I did not quite understand the sentence.

* Vol. VIII.

There is, as a matter of fact, a good deal of difference of view, I quite agree. However, do not let us go into that now. I have asked all I want to understand about your franchise proposals. I follow what the 600 major zamindars, you think, ought to have in the legislative council. Then I understand you also propose a Second Chamber?—Yes, sir, I do.

69. And what would be the contribution which the larger zamindars would make to the Second Chamber?—What would be the number of seats we require?

70. Yes?—Our proposal is that the Second Chamber should consist of fifty members, of whom five seats ought to be given to the landholders.

71. Which page is that?—We have not mentioned that in the memorandum.

72. Are the fifty members of the Second Chamber, according to your suggestion, to be all elected or any of them to be nominated?—No; 20 nominated and 30 elected.

73. Then you are speaking of the 30 who are elected?—Yes.

74. And you think that 5 of them should be elected by the greater zamindars?—Yes. My suggestion is, if I may be permitted to explain it——

75. Certainly.—Five should go to the landholders, 5 to the district boards of Bengal of the five divisions, 5 to the municipalities of the five divisions, 2 to the Corporation of Calcutta, 2 to the University of Calcutta, 1 to the University of Dacca, 5 to a commercial interest, both Indian and European, 2 to the income-tax payers of Eastern and Western Bengal, one from each, and 2 gentlemen to be elected by voters, such as ex-members of the legislative council, Fellows of the Senate of Calcutta, and by others who will be electors on personal grounds, e.g. holders of distinctions.

76. That is adding to our knowledge, because I do not think those details are in your memorandum?—No. We avoided that.

77. Now, is there anything further which you or the Maharaja of Darbhanga or the Maharaja Tagore would like to say before the others put questions?—We want to speak very generally about the Meston award. We have mentioned that in our memorandum. Bengal has been very hard hit on account of this financial settlement, and we plead that at least a portion of the jute duty, or the customs duty, or of the income-tax should come to Bengal to give us relief, because we are of opinion, and it has been admitted, I think, by all political parties that the Reforms in Bengal have failed largely on account of financial difficulties, and Bengal's contribution to the Imperial exchequer is about 24 crores, 37 lakhs.

78. Are you referring now to income-tax?—No, the total contribution of Bengal to the Imperial exchequer.

79. The main contribution would be income-tax?—Yes.

80. But the zamindars do not pay any of it?—Not the zamindars. But the financial situation affects the zamindars as well as others. (Maharaja of Darbhanga) The zamindars pay cess. (Mr. Singhroy) And that contribution to the exchequer includes, of course, jute duty.

81. The cess is a local thing, of course?—Yes.

82. We quite recognise, of course, that they pay that.—And jute is, of course, Bengal's monopoly, and it is a direct contribution of the agriculturists whom we hope we represent indirectly.

83. I suppose really there is no doubt about it, that the cultivation of jute has greatly increased the value of a great deal of the land of the zamindars?—It has.

84. I mentioned some figures about Mymensingh just now. I will just put them as I understand them to be. I understand that the total revenue paid by the zamindars in Mymensingh district, for example, is 7·6 lakhs of rupees, say £60,000 sterling; that the sum that is received by the Mymensingh district in payment for jute varies between £7,000,000 and £5,000,000, no doubt according to the differences of the prices of jute. Now, a very large part of the money recovered for the jute thus sold goes in repaying the labour or intermediate expenses or the middlemen, and all the rest of it, and only the residue, no doubt, of that profit reaches the zamindars; but still, it must be the case, I think, that there is an enormous increase in the value of land held by zamindars since 1793?—No, unfortunately practically no portion of this income goes to the zamindars, because the zamindars have not been able to increase the rent much. Of course, the rent roll of Bengal has increased largely, but the increased rent is intercepted by a large number of tenure-holders, who come in between the zamindar and the cultivator.

85. And it is agreed that none of that large class of tenure-holders pays any provincial tax to the Government at all?—No. The number of tenure-holders at the present moment, I think, in Bengal is about 40 lakhs.

86. The Chairman: That explains a good deal the difficulties of Bengal, does not it?

The Maharaja of Darbhanga: I should like to say this. I am in favour of a Second Chamber in Bengal * * * (The Maharaja then read a statement which was largely inaudible, and which it was said would be sent to the secretaries. He was, however, unable to supply a copy).

87. Your suggestion is, is it, that a Second Chamber, acting, I suppose one might say, as a revising Chamber, would in some cases take the place of the Governor in rejecting legislation which had been passed by the Lower House, the council?—Yes.

88. That is your idea?—Yes.

89. Lord Burnham: I wish to put a question on the financial side of this interesting memorandum. We have heard a good deal, of course, of the necessity for revising what is known as the Meston Settlement, but a revision which is only a re-distribution of existing revenue would not add to the resources of any of the provinces or of the Central Government for any of the purposes of administration. If it be true that more money is required for what are called nation-building services—and I am thinking especially of education—then either fresh sources of revenue must be found or there must be an augmentation of existing sources. The question I want to put to this delegation is how they would view the inclusion of revenue from agricultural land and its assessment to income-tax—whether they would consider that a fair and equitable thing if more money is to be spent on the services which are meant for the improvement and welfare of the people. May I ask how you would view that?—(Mr. Singhroy) We do not approve of that idea, because we feel that agriculture is paying a very large amount as land revenue and the people who are assessed to income-tax do not pay land revenue or anything like that. Land revenue is not a very light burden on us, and we do not approve of the idea of the imposition of income-tax on agriculture.

Lord Burnham: I am far from saying there are exact parallels between England and India, but of course the landowner at Home, as I know to my cost, not only pays land-tax but is assessed at an unduly high rate both for income-tax and super-tax, and therefore at Home the landowner does pay and pays through the nose.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: Landholders in India pay super-tax, but not income-tax. If their income exceeds Rs.50,000 they pay super-tax.

Lord Burnham: That is roughly £3,750 a year.

Mr. Fazl-ul-Huq: But they do not pay super-tax.

90. The Chairman: I understand very well, of course, that a gentleman who is a large landowner but who has investments and other sources of income may pay super-tax in respect of his non-agricultural income, but is the position this (it may be so, but I had not quite understood it), that if a man gets the whole of his income owing to the fact he is a zamindar owning land, if he gets over a certain amount he pays super-tax on it?

Sir Hari Singh Gour: So I understand.

Mr. Fazl-ul-Huq: No.

Maharaja Shashi Kanta: A landlord pays income-tax and super-tax for fisheries, forests, and so on which are situated on his land.

The Chairman: Of course he does. We were not talking about that; we were talking about whether or not a landowner, in respect of the ownership of land, pays super-tax if he receives beyond a certain amount.

Lord Burnham: I used the word "agricultural." I merely wanted an opinion from the deputation, because it is obvious new sources of revenue will have to be found or old sources augmented; I imagine it is no good talking of the revision of the Meston Settlement unless those new sources can be captured. That is my difficulty.

91. Mr. Hartshorn: I should like to ask a question in regard to what you say on page 37. I notice you say there: "We are, therefore, in favour "of full provincial autonomy in all the departments "including that of Law and Order. Unless this "department is transferred to the ministers, pro-"vincial autonomy will fail to secure full popular "support and co-operation and exclusion of popular "control from this department will amount to "another experiment in a limited form of dyarchy, "with all its defects and risks. Transference of "control over this department from the provincial "to the Central Government as has been suggested "by some political thinkers may tell upon the "efficiency and prestige of the provincial Govern-"ment and will fail to secure popular satisfaction. "The popular mind will not make any distinction "between an action of the Central Government and "their agents in the provinces. The people will "naturally resent any measure of the Government "which they do not approve by retaliating on the "ministers over whom they will have constitutional "control. Moreover in order to foster a sense of "administrative responsibility which cannot be "separated from constitutional concessions, it is "highly desirable that the department of Law and "Order should be placed under a minister responsible "to an elected legislature." That is a definite and emphatic statement coming from your Association as to the views you hold on that subject. I should like to know whether the views expressed in the paragraph I have read out have been submitted to the membership of your Association and whether you have ascertained from your members that they are all in agreement with them?—(Mr. Singhroy) The whole thing was approved by the executive committee of the Association, and they went through it very carefully, and then it was submitted to you.

92. Then we are entitled to take it that the big landholders of Bengal are all out for having Law and Order transferred to a responsible minister?—Yes, for complete provincial autonomy.

93. Do you think it at all necessary that any safeguards should be introduced if provincial autonomy is made complete and this subject is transferred?—(Sir P. C. Tagore) Yes. (Mr. Singhroy) Our suggestion pre-supposes a joint electorate. Communal representation would be abolished, and there would be a joint electorate with reservation of seats. If that is done, we do not think there will be any difficulty if the department of Law and Order is transferred, because in that case the minister, whether a Hindu or a Muhammadan, will enjoy the equal confidence of the whole body of the electorate and of the country, indirectly.

94. You think it is necessary, in order to carry this into effect, to have joint electorates?—Yes.

95. And reservation of seats?—Reservation of seats only in the interests of the minority communities. It may be necessary.

96. Have you considered to what extent you would reserve seats for Muhammadans?—We have stated that.

97. Maulvi Abul Kasem: They are not a minority—We have accepted property as the basis of the franchise, as it is at present, and according to the voting strength of each community there should be reservation of seats.

98. Mr. Hartshorn: Are we to understand that if communal electorates are still retained you would not then advocate the transference of Law and Order?—In case of communal riots and other things the minister in charge of the department of Law and Order might not enjoy the same confidence of both communities. If he is a Hindu, elected by a purely Hindu electorate, he might not enjoy the confidence of the Muhammadan community to the extent he would do if he had been elected also by Muhammadans and vice versa.

99. Yes, but I want to know this. Would you change your recommendation in relation to provincial autonomy if communal electorates are still continued?—I would not change it, but there may be some practical difficulty. I would rather take the risk.

100. You would take the risk, even with communal representation?—Yes.

101. Colonel Lane-Fox: You said it was not possible for the original zamindar, the zamindar at the top, to raise his rents?—It is not exactly impossible. There is a provision in the Bengal Tenancy Act, which is the land law of the province, but, as a matter of fact, in very few cases have the zamindars increased the rents.

102. What is the security of the first tenure-holder? Can he be turned out at will, or has he a tenancy for life, or what?—He becomes an occupancy ryot and cannot be turned out from his land so long as he pays his rent regularly.

103. He has absolute security so long as he pays his rent?—Yes.

104. Is what has happened this, that the land has paid better owing to the growth of the jute trade, and as the land has become more valuable so there has been more sub-letting, because the land would fetch more rent, and the profit has gone to the ultimate cultivator and not affected the zamindar at the top?—Yes.

105. The Chairman: But is that quite right? You spoke of the Tenancy Act. I thought the Bengal Tenancy Act was an Act which permitted the raising of the rent charge by the zamindar by 2 annas in the rupee in fifteen years?—Yes, there is such a provision.

106. And it is a provision which has been applied, has it not?—There is such a provision, but in very few cases can the zamindars avail themselves of that opportunity in actual practice, enhancement of rent means endless litigation, which renders the enhancement uneconomic and practically impossible.

107. Colonel Lane-Fox: Then actually what is happening is that the profits of the jute trade go to the sub-lessee, and the people between him and the zamindar are the people who get the profits, because they have been able to sub-let more as the land has increased in value?—Yes.

108. And therefore the increase in the value of land has been the cause of the increase in the number of sub-lettings?—Yes, that is my submission. The profit goes not to the zamindar, but to the middleman.

109. Major Attlee: I notice you support the general position taken up by most people in Bengal, that you have been very hard hit by the Meston Settlement?—Yes.

110. And what you demand is practically that the rest of India should pay more and you should pay rather less to the Central Government?—No, not exactly that.

111. It is much to that effect, is it not?—I think Bengal's contribution to the Central Government is the highest. We pay 45 per cent. of the total income, whereas the United Provinces pays only

1·6 ; Madras, 9·6 ; Bihar only 0·7 ; the Punjab, 1·5 ; Bombay, 4 ; C.P., 1 ; Assam only 0·6.

112. Sir Hari Singh Gour: Bombay what ?—Bombay 4 per cent.

113. Major Atlee: Percentage of what ?—I beg your pardon ; Bombay 40 per cent.

114. But in effect your financial position is largely caused by the fact that your land revenue is very low under the permanent settlement ?—No, we do not admit that, because though our land revenue is low, our contribution by way of income-tax and customs duty is the highest.

115. Yes, but if you were in the same land revenue position as other provinces, you would not be in such a bad condition, would you ?—But the income-tax and the customs duty also come from the people of this province, and when we consider the question of the provincial revenue we do not consider the case of the zamindar separately, because the zamindars are as much affected by the insufficient income of the provincial Government as the income-tax payers and those who contribute to the customs duty.

116. Yes ; but apart from customs duty altogether, if you had not had this permanent settlement your land revenue would be much higher than it is to-day, would it not ?—That is certainly so ; we cannot deny that. That I have got to admit.

117. But what it means in effect, does it not, is that you ask the rest of India to contribute in order that you may keep up this body of 40 lakhs of tenure-holders ?—No, what we suggest is this, that a proportion of our revenue, which is admittedly the highest, and much higher than is paid by any other province, ought to be transferred to us, because jute duty is a monopoly of Bengal, and so is tea. A portion of this may be given to us ; that is what we ask for.

118. Yes, but of course each province might put up its own speciality ; but the real condition of Bengal is that you are keeping an enormous body of people who are neither landlords nor workers on the land, but mere tenure-holders drawing money for doing nothing ?—Yes, if you think so, I cannot say anything against that.

119. Is it reasonable to ask the rest of India to continue to keep these people at their expense ? —These tenure-holders have come into existence because of the Permanent Settlement. The British Government made this settlement for their own benefit. So the situation is not of our choice.

The Chairman : You must not suppose, when we put these questions, we are not alive to that. We are not in the least suggesting that what happened in 1793 is not very important ; it may even be a governing factor, but still, one has to investigate the thing quite fearlessly, and I am sure you will be the first to agree that we should.

Lord Burnham : It was not fair then.

120. Major Attlee : But is it not reasonable that the landholders who have profited by this for all these years should make their contribution ? Would you suggest that the tenure-holders should pay some taxation ?—The individual income of tenure-holders is not very high, because, as I pointed out, the 14 crores of rent-roll of Bengal is divided between 40 lakhs of tenure-holders, so each person has not a very large profit left to him.

121. Nor has the ryot, but he pays land revenue ? —The total of the rent-roll may look very high, but you have to take into account the fact that it is intercepted by a very large number of people, as much as 40 lakhs. (Mr. Mukherjee). For your information, may I say that there is one kind of tenure-holder who makes no contribution to revenue. They are free tenure-holders. There are certain lands given free of revenue or rents. Those are the holders who only pay cess, that is a local contribution. They cannot be taxed by way of income-tax.

122. Sir Hari Singh Gour : What is the percentage of the lakhraj tenure-holders in Bengal ?—It is very difficult to say, but there are a large number.

123. The Chairman : The tenure-holders you speak of, who admittedly do not pay any tax to the provincial revenue, but bear a proportion of the local cess—bear it, I understand, in accordance with an elaborate arrangement which we had described to us yesterday, by which the cess, as it were, is passed up or halved as it passes up the string. They bear a proportion of the cess economically by arrangements which were described to us yesterday, but it is perfectly clear, is it not, that the intermediate tenure-holder, the man who is neither the zamindar at the top nor the cultivator at the bottom, makes no contribution at all to provincial revenues, in respect of his profit as intermediate holder ? That is correct, is it not ?—Yes.

124. Mr. Cadogan : One question on the institution of the Second Chamber, which is dealt with, I think, at page 37 of your Memorandum, in its relation to the position and powers of the Governor. You say on page 37 that " with the introduction and " development of real self-government it should be " the aim to make him the constitutional head, free " as far as possible from all executive responsi- " bilities." What I want to make quite clear is, do you intend to sweep away all of what are known as the safeguards which reside in the Governor, such, for instance, as his power under section 72E, to pass any Act when the legislative council refuses or fails to pass ? Do you wish to make him entirely a figure-head, and to rely entirely on your Second Chamber ?—(Mr. Singhroy) No, I do not want to make him entirely a figure-head ; it may be necessary still to continue some of the safeguards, but they may be minimised ; they may be reduced to a minimum. (Mr. Mukerjee) My submission on that point is that the position of the Governor must be strengthened. If Law and Order is to be completely transferred, Law and Order must be under his personal charge.

Mr. Cadogan : That is a very big reservation. You do not say it here, but of course it is a very big reservation.

125. The Chairman : Let us follow Mr. Mukherjee's view, because I am interested in it.——* * * My Association has one view, but my personal view is different, if I may be permitted to express it here.

126. Yes, I understand it is personal.—Yes. May I state it, with the permission of the Chair ?

127. I shall be very glad if you will ?—In the Memorandum we have submitted some form of constitution which we have developed as an organic growth ; that is, the joint electorate, Second Chamber, and transfer of Law and Order. If one part of the body is to be disturbed in any way, then certain provisions have to be made in some other way. I may differ, even if the joint electorate is being established and full provincial autonomy is being given, I beg most respectfully to differ from the Memorandum submitted by my Association in this respect. Except Law and Order, the whole of the subjects under the provincial Government may be transferred, and the Governor, under his personal supervision or under the supervision of a member of the council appointed by him, should administer this department for five years, so that the local council, both Chambers or single Chamber, will be in a position to see, and the Government of the province will be in a position to recommend then how this system works. I think that this particular subject of Law and Order should be at present a reserved one. This is my personal submission.

The Chairman : Very well, that is a personal view. Thank you very much.

* * * * * * * *

131. Lord Strathcona : What do you mean precisely when you say in the paragraph on communal representation, " But to safeguard the interest of " minority communities seats may be earmarked " ? —(Mr. Singhroy) : Reservation of seats ; that is what we mean.

* * * * * * * *

142. Mr. Fazl-ul-Huq : Since when have Muhammadans ceased to be members of the British Indian Association ? Can you give us an approximate date ?—Yes, since 1925-26.

143. April, 1926, is practically the time since very when the communal question in Bengal became acute with the Calcutta communal riots ?—Yes.

* * * * * * *

156. Mr. Fazl-ul-Huq : Very well, sir. I have only one more question to ask. * * * You have said that the zamindars have not profited by the increase in the value of lands since 1793 ?—I have never said that. They have profited, but the profit is almost negligible.

157. What I am suggesting is this : Increase in the rental has not gone to increase the profits of the zamindars. That is what you said ?—Yes.

158. Is it not a fact that the zamindars of Bengal in almost every case have got tenants directly under them ? Do not the holders of the zamindari themselves let out their lands to intermediary tenants ?—They do, but they do not get any increased return because the rate of rent is practically unchanged.

159. Are you prepared to say that the zamindars have not increased the rental of their tenants or tenure-holders ?—As a matter of fact they cannot increase the rental of the permanent tenure-holders.

160. As regards the tenants ?—As regards the tenants the increase is almost negligible.

161. The Chairman : I think it is very much to the point. I do not quite follow what "almost negligible" means. If the man is a poor tenant, he may not regard it as negligible as a rich landholder may ?—I shall give a specific case. If the rent of a particular holding in Bengal immediately after the permanent settlement was Rs 2. per bigha, or Rs. 6. per acre, it is not more that Rs. 6/8/- to-day. If the zamindar has increased his rent, he has increased it by 8 annas since 1793.

162. I would like to know this : What was the situation as a mere matter of history in this regard ? —In 1793 I rather think that though a good deal of Western Bengal was cultivated, many portions of Eastern Bengal were not so cultivated, but they are being cultivated to-day ?—Yes.

163. Let us take the case of a landowner who held lands in Eastern Bengal in 1793 which had not been settled, and now they have been settled and are growing productive crops. Is the tax now paid by the landowner for the land in which he is now growing productive crops the same as it was before the land was settled ?—Yes, under the permanent settlement he pays the same.

164. Do you tell me that notwithstanding the fact that in 1793 the land was not settled and now it is settled and producing productive crops, the rent that the landowner receives is the same to-day as it was in 1793 in respect of that piece of land ?—The answer to that question is this. In East Bengal though there were large tracts of unreclaimed lands and the zamindars got the settlement of those lands at a cheaper rate of revenue, they had to spend a very large amount in reclaiming those lands ; in most cases they had to lease out the lands to the tenants rent free, and they are now reaping the benefit, but the profit is not so enormous as it is supposed to be.

* * * * * * * *

174. Maharaja Shashi Kanta : Could you tell us how much the income of the zamindars has increased per rupee since the permanent settlement from lands settled to tenants at the time of the permanent settlement ?—(Mr. Singhroy) : There is no uniform increase. The increase in Eastern Bengal is certainly larger, but in West Bengal . . .

175. Taking Bengal as a whole ?—Taking Bengal as a whole I do not think it is more than 10 per cent.

176. Having regard to the feelings that were roused in connection with the recent amendment of the Bengal Tenancy Act amongst all members of the legislative council here as well as outside, do you think it possible for the landholders in future to be able to be returned through the general constituency ?—They will have a very difficult task through general constituencies.

177. Maulvi Abul Kasem : You said that the zamindars pay a substantial portion of the land revenue taxes. Is it not a fact that you realise the rent from your subordinate tenants and pay a portion of it as land revenue and keep the balance as your profit ?—Certainly.

178. Then you do not pay anything out of your profits. Every piece of the land revenue paid to the treasury is realised from your tenants ?—It is realised from the tenants, but whether the zamindars could realise it from their tenants or not, they have got to pay the land revenue because there is the law. The tenants indirectly pay through their zamindars.

179. You have said that the tenure-holder makes no contribution to the provincial revenue. Is it not a fact that the tenure-holder as your agent realises the rent and hands it over to you for the payment of land revenue after deducting your own profits and keeps only his portion of the benefit ?—When I say that the tenure-holders do not make any contribution I meant that they did not make any direct contribution. Certainly the indirect contribution comes even from the tenure-holders.

180. According to your statement the actual cultivator also does not contribute to the provincial revenues ?—He does contribute.*

181. Tenure-holders ?—They also contribute.

182. Are not tenure-holders—they may be four or they may be twenty—your own creation ?—Not exactly the creation of the zamindar always, because under the Bengal Tenancy Act the zamindar's first tenant can sub-let.

183. Anyway you create the first tenure-holder ? —Yes.

184. You have said that the zamindars have not made much profit. I think your remark applies more to the case of Burdwan division than to the Eastern Bengal ?—Not only to Eastern Bengal but to the whole of Western Bengal.

185. You have just told us that the actual revenue paid by the district of Mymensingh is little over 7 lakhs with an area three times as big as Burdwan, while Burdwan pays 33 lakhs as revenue though its area is only one-third of Mymensingh ?—Yes.

186. The Chairman has put to you a question that in 1793 there were tracts of land which were not cultivated and for which no revenue was fixed at the time of the permanent settlement, and since then the zamindars have settled these lands, with new tenants, on a fair rental. Has not that increased the income of the zamindars in Eastern Bengal ?—It has increased their income, but the fact that the revenue demand was fixed as high as possible at the time of the permanent settlement, which rendered most of the estates, especially North and West Bengal, into uneconomic properties has got to be taken into account in calculating this increased profit from unreclaimed lands to-day. The revenue was increased by 200 per cent. between 1764 and 1793.

187. You said the increase was 10 per cent. on the rental of the tenant ?—The increase is 10 per cent. taking Bengal as a whole.

188. Do you mean to say that the income of the zamindars in Mymensingh, paying land revenue of 7 lakhs, has increased only 10 per cent from what it was in the beginning of the 18th century ?—As I said, it is 10 per cent. taking Bengal as a whole it might be 20 per cent. in Mymensingh, but it is not even one per cent, in Burdwan.

189. What do you think the increase in the net profits of the zamindars has been in the Dacca division ?—As I said, my experience is mainly confined to Western Bengal, and so I would not hazard an opinion.

190. Mr. Travers : Supposing in any district in this province there was a serious communal disorder or riot and there was a Hindu or a Moslem minister in charge of the department of Law and Order, do you think under those circumstances that the community to which the minister does not belong would have complete confidence in the police to deal with the situation ?—The whole scheme that has been put forward by us pre-supposes the abolition of the communal electorate. If a minister is elected by a joint electorate, I think he will enjoy full confidence of both communities.

* Vide Appendix on pp. 81-3.

191. In regard to my suppositional case, if in addition to a Hindu or a Moslem minister being in charge of the department, the local officer (he may be a magistrate or a police officer) were to be either a Hindu or a Mussulman, do you not think that his responsibility, already very serious, would be further added to ?—Unfortunately since 1925 or 1926—not before that—there has been the general impression that a Hindu or a Moslem if he is in charge of a district or if he is a police officer will not be fair to the people professing a religion other than that professed by the officer himself, but that is a feeling which is of very recent growth and origin.

192. One other question with regard to the Meston Settlement. I want to be quite clear. I take it from what you said in reply to Major Attlee that your case is that Bengal pays a larger share of the total revenue, both Provincial and Imperial, than any other province, and on the other hand its provincial revenue is smaller per head than that of any other province. That is your case ?—Yes.

193. Sir Abdelkerim Ghuznavi : You were telling us just now that the zamindars, in addition to the payment of land revenue, have to pay local rates. Is it not a fact that within the last 25 years the local rates which they pay have almost quadrupled, and that in some cases the local rates amount to even more than the revenue they pay ?—That is a fact. I shall give you the figures. The income of the district boards from the cess comes to about 95 lakhs of which 75 lakhs are paid by the zamindars.

194. Furthermore, is it not a fact that in some parts of Bengal the zamindar has to pay sometimes even more than 50 per cent. of his income as revenue ?—Yes, in Burdwan district.

195. Also in North Bengal and Rajshahi division ?—Yes.

196. Sir Arthur Froom : Whatever your rules may be for membership of your Association, should I be correct in understanding that it is in effect an Association of Hindu zamindars in Bengal ?—As I said in reply to a question put to me previously, there is no bar to the Muhammadan zamindars becoming members of this Association. In fact the late Nawab Sir Salimulla of Dacca, who was the leader of the Muhammadans in Eastern Bengal, was up to his last day a member of this Association.

197. That is not my question. I am not questioning your rules for membership of the Association. Setting aside your rules for membership, is it not a fact that your Association might now be considered as an Association of Hindu zamindars in Bengal ?—Yes, it may be considered so ; we have got no Muhammadan member at the present moment on our roll.

198. And therefore your executive committee consists of Hindu zamindars only ?—Yes.

199. And therefore their opinion on the future constitution is an opinion of Hindu zamindars ?—I do not think that the zamindars have got any religion or caste, because the Hindu zamindars as well as the Muhammadan zamindars hold almost the same view with regard to the permanent settlement and other important questions.

200. That is besides the point. The executive committee consists of Hindu zamindars ?—It does.

201. And therefore the views expressed in this document are those of the Hindu zamindars ?—I do not admit that.

* * * * * * * *

210. Mr. Kikabhai Premchand : You are asking for joint electorates. It is generally admitted that the system of joint electorate seems desirable. The Commission, you will agree, will undoubtedly be more favourably impressed if India's demand for further reforms is a unified one. If unity between Hindus and Muhammadans could be brought about by the creation of communal electorates, would you favour doing so at least for a certain number of years, until the Muhammadans are politically educated ?—My reply would be that communal electorates have now had their full term of experiment. Since 1909 communal electorates are in existence and the result is that instead of developing friendly feelings between the two communities, unfortunately the feelings are going from bad to worse.

211. Should the Commission recommend joint electorate to Parliament, do you think it likely that the Muhammadans after their vehement denouncement will co-operate in making further Reforms successful ?—I think so, because the decision arrived at on facts and figures and after taking evidence by a quasi-judicial body like this Commission ought to satisfy people who have got any faith in the utility of this Commission.

212. Sir Hari Singh Gour : Referring to the last question, I understand the view of your Association for opposing communal electorates is that if you permit it for a term of years, 5 or 10 years, it would strengthen the vested right already asserted in respect of communal electorates and it would be more difficult thereafter to go back to joint electorates ?—Yes ; it is already difficult, it will be more difficult.

213. As regards permanent settlement, I hope your Association realises that the purchasing power of the rupee in 1793 was infinitely greater than the purchasing power of the rupee in 1929 ?—Yes.

214. The rupee in 1793 could purchase 10 times as many commodities as it could purchase now ?—Yes.

215. Consequently, speaking in terms of the value of the rupee, the land revenue which you paid in 1793 has gone down one-tenth in 1929 ?—Yes.

216. To that extent you have profited ? Your land revenue of 1793 was fixed in the terms of a rupee which meant something quite different in that year to what it is now ?—Theoretically we have profited, but not practically.

217. That is a logical deduction ?—That may be a logical deduction ; but that does not bring money to our pockets.

218. That brings money to the State. The effect will be realised and there will be no injustice to anybody ?—That is a very difficult question and I am not prepared to answer it offhand.

219. You have been saying that so far as the zamindars are concerned their rent values have gone up very much. Now you have got your patnidars, sepatnidars and so on ad infinitum. You treat them all as landlords, and the last man is the tiller of the soil, the cultivator. Now is it not a fact that the cumulative wealth of all the landlord community has multiplied and in some cases has increased hundredfold since 1793 ? What you have done is to distribute your assets amongst a very large number of patnidars, sepatnidars and so on. But if you lump that all together it would work to 200 per cent. of your income in 1793 ?—That is a theoretical question which is of no practical help to us. It might have been multiplied, but unfortunately it has not brought more money to the pockets of the individual holder.*

220. You have stated that going back upon the permanent settlement would be disastrous to the whole of Bengal and there will be a feeling against it throughout Bengal. The feeling may be sentimental ; there may not be any substratum for that feeling ?—It is not sentimental. There is a practical difficulty. Permanent settlement has benefited not only the zamindars, but also the tiller of the soil and all the intermediate people, the whole society.

221. I entered into a contract with you in 1793 and I asked you to give me an amount of money, the purchasing power of which was X. Now I want you to give me the same amount of money, the purchasing power of which will be X to-day ?—But the difficulty is it was a contract—an irrevocable contract. You gave me to understand that it will be a contract and I invested my money and so did the holders of subordinate interests. If you now come forward and say that it is a revocable contract, it will be hard on us.

* Vide Appendix on pp. 81–3.

222. Lord Burnham : May I know, for my own information, whether rent is always paid in currency or it is sometimes paid in produce ?—It is paid in currency in most cases, but in a few cases it is paid in kind as well.

223. Sir Hari Singh Gour : With regard to transfer of Law and Order you have stated that in case there are no joint electorates and separate electorates are to continue, Law and Order should not be transferred. But do you agree with the memorandum which says on page 36 " There is a " consensus of opinion in favour of the abolition of " diarchy " ?—(Mr. Mukherjee) Considering the manner in which it is worked we want that it should be abolished.

224. Do you agree with the view expressed here ? —I do not agree fully with that view.

225. You agree in a large measure ?—Yes.

226. Having agreed in a large measure with the view that diarchy must be abolished, are you not perpetuating diarchy by asking that Law and Order should not be transferred ?—From my experience of this province I am in favour of that.

227. I know you speak only for this province and this is your considered opinion, what is written on pages 36 and 37. The statement here is that you are in favour of the abolition of diarchy. But again you say that Law and Order should not be transferred. Is it not a contradiction ?—I have already stated that that is my personal view on the matter.

228. Your personal view is, Mr. Mukherjee, that diarchy should go ?—To a certain extent and not wholly. That is with the exception of Law and Order.

229. That is diarchy ?—If that is the meaning, then I am in favour of it.

230. As regards separate electorates have you got any alternative to offer to the separate electorate scheme on the one side and joint electorate scheme ? —If I may be permitted to state my personal view, I may say that I have read the scheme published in the papers under the name, Sir Hari Singh Gour, and I agree with one of them.

231. Dr. Suhrawardy : Mr. Singhroy, in reply to Sir Hari Singh Gour, I think you stated that if communal representation is continued for a few years more, it will be difficult to get rid of it later on ?—(Mr. Singhroy) Yes. As conservative people we are anxious to cling to one thing when once it is given to us.

232. You apprehend that it will be as difficult as the abolition of the permanent settlement ?— Certainly not. The permanent settlement is a promise based upon law. The law is with the zamindars.

233. We hold that communal representation also is based on a promise given first by Lord Minto, later on by Lord Morley and also repeated subsequently ?—It is not a irrevocable covenant.

234. Mr. Fazl-ul-Huq had put it to you whether you know some ancient history with reference to communal electorates ; in reply you said that you might have been a school boy and therefore you are not aware of that ?—I might not be aware of the details, but I am aware of the general history.

235. May I put to you a few facts which took place after the attainment of your political majority, namely since 1921, after the Montagu-Chelmsford reforms ? Is it not a fact that a very influential section of the Hindu community accepted the principle of communal electorate as a political expediency ? May I refresh your memory by saying—both of us were members of the Bengal Legislative Council then—that in 1923 Sir Surendranath Banerjea for the first time in the history of Bengal introduced the principle of communal electorate so far as the Calcutta Corporation was concerned ? Is that not a fact ?—Yes, he did so in the teeth of the opposition and simply because he wanted to get through the Calcutta Municipal Bill.

236. As I said, as a political expediency ?—Yes.

237. And he was supported by you and other Hindu representatives of the landholders and the only Muhammadan who opposed it was myself ? —No. I never supported him. In fact I opposed and spoke against the proposal.

238. In the division list ?—You and I went into the same lobby, and I am still of the same opinion.

239. May I remind you of the fact that the late Mr. C. R. Das, one of the most powerful political leaders of Bengal, also entered into a pact called the Bengal pact, in which he proposed to extend the system of separate electorate to all the municipalities in Bengal which are 116 in number ?—He did so.

240. So you agree with him, as a matter of political expediency ?—If I may be permitted to explain, he wanted to combine the country against the Government and that was the expediency he adopted.

241. You seem to be or your Association seems to be in favour of the transfer of Law and Order to popular control. Is it not a fact that during the Calcutta riot a very able and experienced Hindu deputy commissioner of police in charge of the North Division of the city was superseded by your Government and a European junior police officer was appointed in his place ?—Yes, that is a fact ; but we are told that he was transferred or rather superseded most unjustly.

242. May be ; but I am simply bringing that fact to your notice and pointing out to you the danger of transfer ?—He was sacrificed, if I can give my opinion, to the whims and influence of communal leaders.

243. Moslem communal leaders ?—Yes and to the caprice of the Government.

244. Do you not think that when Law and Order is transferred to popular control and there is a big majority in the legislature, it will be difficult for the minister to resist the pressure brought to bear to sacrifice men of the type whose name I do not wish to mention now ?—As I said, my whole scheme proceeds on the basis that the communal electorates are abolished. A Hindu minister elected by joint electorates of Hindus and Muhammadans or a Muhammadan minister elected by the joint electorates will have nothing to fear from the influence of communal leaders.

245. Is it not a fact that in the Calcutta Corporation the Hindu members form a majority with only a handful of Muhammadans ?—Yes.

246. I may just refresh your memory to what is called the Pir burial question regarding the burial of a Muhammadan fakir in the heart of the Calcutta municipal market ?—I vehemently opposed it.

247. Is it not a fact that at that time Mr. C. R. Das was the Mayor of Calcutta and Mr. S. C. Bose the executive officer ?—Yes, but Mr. Bose was then ill and he was not actually looking into the affairs then.

248. But he got well very quickly just as he got well after his release. As I said the Pir now rests in peace there ; and all your efforts combined have not resulted in removing that Pir from there ?—I do not understand the implication of the question.

249. The implication is that powerful Hindu leaders like Mr. C. R. Das or powerful Hindu leaders like Subash Chandra Bose, because they were subject to popular control, yielded to the minority, namely 15 Muhammadans in a House of 80 or 90 members. They dared not prevent the burial of that Pir and after that they dared not remove it from there in spite of all your resolutions. I am only simply bringing to your mind the danger of the transfer of Law and Order to popular control ?—I do not think that the Corporation of Calcutta was incapable of giving effect to that resolution ; but it was shelved most willingly.

250. Later on Mr. Subash Chandra Bose was the executive officer, and there was a Swarajist majority with Mr. Sen Gupta as the Mayor ?—The Swarajist majority wanted to have control over the Corporation and there was a vigilant opposition of which I was a humble member, and of course Mr. C. R. Das wanted to have the Muhammadans with him.

251. That is exactly my point, that political reasons and considerations influence the decision of the minister in charge Law and Order ?—My answer to that is that if the Muhammadan members of the Calcutta Corporation had been elected by joint electorate that would not have been the case.

252. It would not have changed their general opinion ?—In that case the opinion of the Hindu electors also would have been taken into consideration.

253. On page 36 you say, " We beg to suggest the " abolition of communal representation, but to safe- " guard the interest of minority communities seats " may be earmarked." Among the minority communities do you include the Muhammadan community ?—Muhammadan as well as Hindu.

254. From the point of view of population we may form a majority. But under your scheme of enfranchising the people, with certain property qualifications and other qualifications you have suggested, the Muhammadans will really be in a minority ?—If they are in a minority it will apply.

255. You have suggested the transfer of Goalpara to Bengal. Has your Association considered the alternative suggestion of the transfer of Chittagong division to Assam or of the transfer of the whole of Eastern Bengal to Assam ? Have you got any view on the subject ?—I cannot give any opinion on that question because we never thought of the transfer of the whole of Eastern Bengal to Assam, neither of Chittagong. You know the feeling of the Hindu population at least. It will be another partition of Bengal.

The Chairman : Gentlemen, let me thank you on behalf of the Conference for attending here to-day, and helping us so kindly and fairly with the answers which you have given. I would like to assure you before we break up that every member of the Conference appreciates the great importance and the great influence which is exercised in Bengal by the large zamindars whom your Association represents. I would like further to say that we all appreciate that one of the complications about the situation which affects the finances of Bengal is really an inheritance from the past, the permanent settlement, and we are not holding anybody to blame in this generation because of some of the complications that thereby have arisen, but we must understand the position, and you may be quite sure that we shall consider very carefully what you have said to us. We are very much obliged to you.

Memorandum submitted by the National Central Muhammadan Association.

The Central National Muhammedan Association, the oldest Moslem Political organisation in India, founded over half a century ago by the Right Honourable Syed Ameer Ali, P.C., for the furtherance of all legitimate and constitutional means of the well-being of the Moslems in India and of Indians generally, welcomes this opportunity of placing its views before the Royal Statutory Commission in respect of the Questions relating to the Reforms in India.

We desire to make a preliminary observation in order to clear up our position. Moslem confidence in the fairness and firmness of British administrators was greatly shaken by the annulment of the Partition of Bengal for which Moslems in Eastern Bengal, headed by the late Nawab Bahadur of Dacca, Sir Salimullah, made great sacrifices, and has been recently further shaken by the sad tragedy enacted at Kulkati in the Barisal District, where Moslem rustics gathered together in and about the mosque court yard were mercilessly shot down, for the offence of brandishing their lathis and spears, under the direction of a British officer. The Moslems have not failed to take note of the contrast in the conduct of British authorities who took no similar drastic action when educated Hindu rowdies in College Square assaulted the Commissioner of Police and the Principal of the Presidency College. It was probably owing to accumulation of these causes and similar incidents that Moslems in some places have joined the Swarajist Hindus in boycotting the Commission. The Central National Muhammadan Association, however, has extended to it its welcome in accordance with its traditional policy, in the hope and trust that the Commission will deal fairly and equitably with Moslem claims and rights. Whether their hope and trust is justified or not, the outcome of the labours of the Commission can alone show.

India is not a country but a Continent, peopled by diverse communities and races who differ from each other in religion, race, language, social usages, cultural influence, historic traditions and heritages, in ideals and outlook on life. The contrast between the Hindu and Moslem communities is painted thus by Lord Dufferin: "But perhaps the most patent characteristic of the Indian cosmos is its division into two mighty political communities as distant from each other as the poles asunder in their religious faith, their historical antecedents, their social organisation, and their natural aptitudes; on the one hand, the Hindus numbering 190 millions, with their polytheistic beliefs, their temples adorned with images and idols, their veneration for the sacred cow, their elaborate caste-distinctions, and their habits of submission to successive conquerors . . .; on the other hand, Muhammadans, a nation of fifty millions, with their monotheism, their iconoclastic fanaticism, their animal sacrifices, their social equality and their remembrance of the days when, enthroned in Delhi, they reigned supreme from the Himalayas to Cape Comorine, &c., &c." Subsequently in 1916, the Royal Public Services Commission endorsed the above view in the following pregnant words: "Even amongst the educated, the conflicting traditions of Hindus and Muhammadans are still constantly reflected in their respective attitude towards social and political questions of the first order . . . Nor does religion constitute the only line of cleavage" (p. 70). Religion in the East means a great deal more than in the West, it is still an active force in the everyday life of an Indian, be he a Hindu or a Moslem. Social cleavages between followers of the different religious systems are therefore more marked in India and in the East generally than in the West, with the result that not only in the domains of religion but also of education, politics and civil life differences and conflicts of interests arise, and often lead to collisions and riots. The presence of the British element in India is the only safeguard against such conflicts and collisions under the existing condition of things. When these conditions will cease, it would be rash for us to prophesy. We cannot pretend to be optimistic in view of the recent communal explosions and riots, disfigured in some cases by unprecedented brutalities, and also in view of the historic fact that the great Moghul Emperor Akbar's dream of unifying the Hindu and Moslem races in the sixteenth century by inter-marriages, by the pursuit of a common culture and even by the adoption of one uniform State religion in substitution for Hindu and Moslem conflicting faiths turned out in the end a dismal failure. However, we are to deal with the conditions of Indian life as they stand now, and he who runs can read and realise them. The blood-stained riots in Calcutta and Dacca, Bhagalpur, Lucknow, Delhi, Lahore, Jabbalpur, Nagpur, Indore, Kohat, Karachi, etc., between Hindus and Moslems since the inauguration of the Reforms, arising some times, from trifling causes, tell their own tale and need no development at our hands. It is unfortunate, but there it is. Again, since the inauguration of the Reforms the zeal shown by Hindu militant politicians in propagating the Sudhi and Sangathan movements, and the retaliatory measures adopted by some Moslem leaders in propagating the Tanzeem movement, would convince every honest searcher for truth that Indian Nationalism means in its essence camouflaged communalism, with the latent ambition to the political hegemony of India. Both talk of united India and Indianisation in order to wrest some common privileges and rights from the British, and after having achieved their object each tries to appropriate the bulk of the booty, with the result that there are bloody intercommunal feuds. So long as the British controlled the political show in India, it did not matter either to the Hindus or Moslems if a few places more or less went to the one or to the other. But since the Reforms the feeling has grown in both the communities that the British are vacating the field, and therefore each community considers it a question of political life and death to occupy a bigger plot of the vacated field.

The Moslem position was well put before Lord Morley in 1909 by the Right Honourable Syed Ameer Ali, founder of this Association and President of the London Moslem League, in language which we endorse and quote here: "My Lord, whilst we welcome the reforms we welcome them in the conviction that in their practical application our status and interests will be kept in view. We do not wish and cannot consent to be placed in a disadvantageous position. We are anxious that whatever boons are conferred on, whatever political concessions are made to, the people of India, we should have our legitimate share in those concessions. We ask for nothing in derogation of the just rights of any other people. We seek no special privileges; we want only our legitimate share in political rights and political privileges, and nothing more. If, in the language of the Royal Message to the princes and peoples of India, new avenues are opened out for the participation of educated Indians in the government of the country, our people wish that their share should be kept in view. If new elements are to be introduced into any of the great departments of the State, we expect in fairness and justice that they should be equally balanced; and if any important departure is made in administrative policy, we want that the interests of the two great communities in India should be so co-ordinated that neither the one nor the other should be in a position to say its interests were sacrificed or subordinated to the interests of the other. The foundation of the British rule in India rests upon the conviction among the people that equal justice is the chief policy of the British Government in its dealings with the varied races of that continent. My Lord, I say it would be an evil day for India if any class or any community comes to think that the interests of one community are in any way subordinated to the interests of the other."

We wish to stress a few more points relating to the Moslem position in India. It is said that the Muhammadans form a minority among the population of India. It is true that they do not equal in number the other great community which inhabits India, but they are seventy million homogenous souls, with common ideals, and by traditions of race and religion form a solid nationality quite apart from all other people in India, with a separate historic heritage and with a different culture. Whilst on the other hand, the other large community is divided and sub-divided into caste and sub-caste, and includes many millions of the depressed classes, whose shadow is pollution to the caste Hindu. Again, there is no analogy in numbers or political importance between the Muhammadan minority and other minorities in India, such as the Sikhs or the Parsees, or the Marwaris. The Sikhs and the Marwaris are counted more or less as Hindus, whilst the Parsees are a handful of refugees from Persia.

As political issues often rest on a historic background, we venture to give a sketchy outline of the chequered political history of Indian Mussulmans under the British rule, in order to enable you to understand our aims and aspirations, and provide for our unimpeded self-development under any scheme of constitutional and administrative reforms that may be in contemplation. For this purpose we quote the language of this Association's Memorial to the Secretary of State in India, in 1917: "That your Memorialists beg to state that when the British East India Company acquired from the Moghul Sovereign, Emperor Shah Alam, the Dewani of the Eastern provinces of India, in spite of many vicissitudes of fortune, the Mussulmans throughout India held predominant position, and enjoyed wealth and political influence for many years; and under the treaty of 12th August, 1765, Muhammadans were entitled to some special consideration. The Nizamat, Civil, Criminal and Executive administration was still their monopoly. Accordingly, for a series of years, the administration of the country was carried on on the lines of Moslem Sovereigns of India. Moslem judiciary was strictly maintained; Moslem functionaries civil, criminal, and in some cases revenue, were left undisturbed; Moslem court language—Persian, was kept up as before; Moslem laws were administered, and Moslem Omaras (feudal lords) and Mansabdars (high officials), Aimadars and Lakhirajdars, who held rent-free grants from chiefs and sovereigns, enjoyed their former opulence and dignity, and contributed to the general welfare of the community. Even so far late as 1793, when Lord Cornwallis was sent out to India to correct the abuses which had crept in amongst the servants of the East India Company, and while in consequence he made the Permanent Settlement of Land Revenue of the Eastern Provinces, resulting in the creation of Hindu collectors of land revenue, Moslem political influence in India was slightly affected, but not materially injured, as would appear from the fact that the Civil Lists of Lord Cornwallis' time show 75% of Muhammadans in the service of the State. It was not until Lord William Bentinck's administration that the Muhammadan political and material decadence in India really commenced. In 1828, the Resumption proceedings were initiated, and conducted for eighteen years with a degree of harshness which has left behind a legacy of bitterness. Many ancient Moslem land-holding families were ruined, and the educational system of Moslems, which was entirely maintained on rent-free grants, received its death-blow. The scholastic classes of the Muhammadans emerged from the eighteen years of harrying absolutely ruined." The Resumption proceedings terminated in 1846, and since then the decline of the Muhammadans has proceeded with accelerated pace. Again, from the first establishment of Muhammadan power in India up to 1837, Persian was the official language of those Governments including the British, which had acquired power from the last Muhammadan sovereigns of Delhi. In 1837, however, order was promulgated that office business would be conducted either in English or the provincial dialects. This order resulted in throwing out of employ a considerable body of the Mussulman officers. From this epoch the gradual impoverishment of the middle class amongst Muhammadans dates. The English-educated Hindus, trained for the most part in Missionary institutions, from which Muhammadans, naturally, stood aloof, then poured forth into every office, and completely edged the Mussulmans out year by year, until, what Sir William Hunter in his "Indian Mussulmans" pathetically describes came to pass, in 1872: "There is now scarcely a Government office in which a Muhammadan can hope for any post above the rank of porter, messenger, filler of inkpots, and mender of pens." It should be added that while these radical and drastic changes were introduced in the administrative policy of the country, rendering it virtually necessary for all aspirants of service to know the language of the British Government, no order was passed making English language compulsory. On the contrary, up to 1864, the Muhammadans were fed with the hope that their own classics were the sine qua non for Government employment, and for entering the profession of law. A year or two later, however, sudden changes were introduced upsetting the previous orders, and declaring that English alone should be the language in which examinations for Munsiffships and Pleaderships would be held. With measures so introduced from time to time, the Moslems were put to complete disadvantage. Before they had quite awakened to the necessity of learning English, they were shut out from Government employment. Thenceforth their political influence dwindled, as would appear from the following. In 1871, the proportion of Muhammadan officials to Hindus was less than one-seventh; and, in 1880, the proportion fell below one-tenth. In view of the deplorable decadence that had set in amongst Indian Moslems and was proceeding with accelerated force, partly owing to operation of the measures set forth above, and partly owing to other causes which are historically incidental to the displacement of one ruling race by another, the Central National Mumammadan Association, in 1882, submitted a Memorial to His Excellency the Marquis of Ripon, the then Viceroy of India, setting forth Moslem grievances and claims, and urging the Government to adopt a more fair and liberal policy in its treatment of its loyal Indian Muhammadan subjects, in order to enable the latter to recover their proper and legitimate place amongst the Indian nationalities, as regards political influence, share in the State patronage, and share in educational facilities. It was reserved for his successor, Lord Dufferin, to deal with that Memorial, and accordingly the Government of India issued the Resolution of 5th July, 1885. Your Memorialists would invite your attention to paras. 16 and 22 of the above Resolution, which is regarded by Indian Moslems as a landmark in the history of their political struggles under British rule. Since the date of the publication of the Government of India's Resolution of 1885, the Mussulmans of India have been afforded increased facilities for acquiring English education, with the result that the number of Muhammadan graduates and undergraduates has been steadily increasing during the last forty years. They are, however, still handicapped by having been outstripped in the race of life by their Hindu compatriots, by many years. Moslem society in India is still in a period of transition, and needs fostering care by firm, sympathetic and impartial hands. Therefore, any violent or radical constitutional or administrative changes which do not provide ample safeguards for the effective protection of their political and religious rights, educational progress, legitimate share in State patronage, and for adequate representation on Universities and local self-governing bodies, and on provincial and Imperial Legislative and Executive Councils, will assuredly lead to their absolute effacement as a distinct community. It may be that under the strong and welding influence of British rule, Muhammadans of India have several interests in common with their Hindu fellow-subjects, living as they do, under the same alien Government, and in the same country, and subject to the same laws. At the same time, it is beyond question that Indian Muhammadans historically, religiously, and in many cases ethically, and in their social structure, constitute a distinct nationality, with distinct and sometimes conflicting additional interests of their own, in educational, social, and religious matters which are not shared by other Indian communities, and which are likely to get more and more accentuated as the pressure of alien domination is lessened or weakened. These have already suffered from the fact that they have not adequately been represented. Even in the provinces, such as the Punjab, Sindh, and Bengal, where Moslems constitute a distinct numerical majority, these special Moslem interests have been often treated as negligible factors, to the detriment of the Muhammadan community. Bearing in mind how Muhammadans are placed in the country, and how necessarily voting must take place by nationalities and creeds, your Memorialists apprehend that, without proper and definite safeguards for the protection of Moslem special interests, the introduction of representative institutions in this country in their entirety will imperil Moslem interests, and lead to the political extinction of Indian Mussulmans. In this connection, and as bearing on the point of Moslem distinct communal identity, your Memorialists would invite your attention to what His Excellency Lord Minto, in 1908, in reply to a deputation of Moslems of India, headed by His Highness the Aga Khan, said on that occasion: "The pith of your address, as I understand it, is a claim, that in any system of representation, whether it affects a Municipality, District Board, or a Legislative Council, in which it is proposed to introduce or to increase an electoral organisation, the Muhammadan community should be represented as a community. You point out that in many cases electoral bodies as now constituted cannot be expected to return a Muhammadan candidate, and that if by chance they did so, it could only be at the sacrifice of such a candidate's views to those of a majority, opposed to his own community, whom he would in no way represent; and you justly claim that your position should be estimated not merely on your numerical strength, but in respect to the political importance of the community and the service it has rendered to the Empire. I am entirely in accord with you. . . . I am as firmly convinced, as I believe you to be, that any electoral representation in India would be doomed to mischievous failure which aimed at granting a personal enfranchisement, regardless of the beliefs and traditions of the communities composing the population of this continent. The great mass of the people of India has no knowledge of representative institutions, and I agree with you, gentlemen, that the initial rungs in the ladder of self-government are to be found in the Municipal and District Boards, and that it is in that direction we must look for the gradual political education of the people. In the meantime, I can only say to you that the Muhammadan community may rest assured that their political rights and interests as a community will be safeguarded in any administrative reorganisation with which I am concerned, and that you and the people of India may rely upon the British Raj to respect, as it has been its pride to do, the religious beliefs and national traditions of the myriads composing the population of His Majesty's Indian Empire." Your Memorialists thankfully acknowledge that the above principle of communal identity of Moslems as a distinct community in India, with special additional interests of its own, has been embodied in the separate electorate granted to Moslems under the Minto-Morley Reform Scheme, in matter of Moslem representation on the provincial and Imperial Legislative Councils. They regret, however, that the same principle has not yet been extended, as your Memorialists had reason to expect from Lord Minto's assurance to the Moslem deputation, to District Boards, Local Boards, Municipalities, Universities, Circle Union and Village Panchayets. These are the initial rungs in the electoral ladder of self-governing institutions; it is there that the people are trained in the rudiments of representative institutions and of political education; and it is there that the people have to deal with the everyday work of parochial, local, district and urban administration, in matters of citizenship, sanitation, education, and of roads, communication, and water supply, etc., etc. It is, therefore, absolutely necessary that the principle of separate representation which has been conceded to Moslems in respect of Provincial and Imperial Legislative Councils, should also be extended to the above self-governing urban and rural bodies, including the Universities. Your Memorialists would specially insist on the early extension of the principle of separate representation to the Universities, for on the spread of higher English education amongst Moslems, depends in a large measure, their future political and material salvation. Your Memorialists apprehend that even the extension of the principle of separate Moslem representation to each and all of the above self-governing bodies would not be enough, and would not by itself solve the difficulties of Moslems, unless the Moslems are adequately represented on these bodies, not only according to their numerical strength, but also according to their historical position, political importance, and contribution to the service and the defence of the Empire, and also unless for years to come an independent element (such as the British) is associated in the governance of these bodies, to hold the scales, even between the two great nationalities in India, and to assist them with trained advice and impartial co-operation.

To every word of our Memorial of 1917 as quoted above we emphatically adhere, as every word of it has been proved true by the actual working of the Reforms during the last seven or eight years. The Reforms have exhibited in their actual working not only absence of goodwill and co-operation between the two communities, wherever any question relating to the particular interest of one or the other community has come up before the Legislative Council (vide the debate, for instance, on the Calcutta Municipal Bill, in 1922–23) but have in many instances led to inter-communal strifes and bitterness. And but for the safeguard afforded to Moslems through their separate electorates and but for the support of the Non-partisan British, Moslem interests, rights and status would have more grievously suffered. Therefore, by actual bitter experience, we are justified in insisting upon the continuance of the safeguards for the protection of Moslem interests that we demanded in this Association's Memorial of 1917, and which we have re-demanded now. Without these safeguards, we are not only opposed to the extension of the Reforms, but to their continuance, for in such eventuality the net result would be the extinction of Moslem political existence and influence in India. In conformity with the facts and principles set forth in the foregoing paragraphs, we beg to submit the following suggestions for safeguarding Moslem interests in India, in any scheme of political reforms and administrative reconstruction that may be adumbrated by British statesmen, and finally adopted by the British Parliament for the future better governance of the Indian Empire.

(a) Legislative Councils.

1. Separate electorate for Moslems in all Councils on the population basis, subject to the limitation that the minority should have 40 per cent. of representation on all legislative bodies.

2. That no resolution or bill affecting the religious, social or educational interests of any community, which is opposed by one-fourth of that community shall be proceeded with.

3. Provincial Legislatures should consist of three-fourths elected and one-fourth nominated members.

4. Non-official nominated members should be taken equally from the Hindus, Europeans, and Moslems.

5. Extension of Reforms to N. W. F. Province.

6. Sindh should be made into a separate province.

7. Abolition of special electorates such as the Indian National Chamber of Commerce, Bengal Mahajans Sabha, Land Holders' Electorate, the Universities, the Corporation of Calcutta, the Marwari Association, etc., save and except the European, Anglo-Indian, Labour and Depressed classes.

8. The strength of the legislatures in major provinces should be between 175 and 200 members.

(b and c) Provincial and Imperial.

Half of the members of the Cabinet, both Imperial and local, should be Indians, of which half should consist of Moslems.

(d) Universities, Municipalities. District Boards. Local Boards, Circle Union. Village Panchayets.

The same proportion between the Hindus and Moslems as in the case of elections and nomination to the legislative bodies, should be maintained, with the provision that the Vice-Chancellor of each University should be alternately a Hindu and a Mussulman.

Public Service.

The proportion of Muhammadan employees in each department of public service in each Province should be fixed and allotted on the same scale of proportion as Muhammadan members in the Provincial Legislative Councils. Commissions in the Army and the Navy should be allotted to Hindus and Muhammadans in proportion to their strength in the Army.

This is not a question of merely loaves and fishes, as some politicians from the nationalist camp would represent it, but it is a question of the power, prestige and political influence of a community and of its opportunity to serve its motherland, apart from the inherent right of each child to have a finger in the pie which his mother may prepare. Both the Hindus and Moslems are children of the same soil and, therefore, both are entitled to share in due proportion in the loaves and fishes which their common motherland can afford, subject only to the limitation that their digestive functions might not be deranged. To quote again from this Association's Memorial to the Secretary of State for India, in 1917: "It cannot be gainsaid that the political importance of a community depends, in no small measure, on the members of that community who constitute the personnel of the administration, and occupy places in the service of the State. By not having their legitimate and proper share therein, Moslems in India have not only suffered in prestige and influence, but also in actual power and affluence. Their virtual ostracism from various departments of the public service, which, during the last seventy years, have become close monopolies of their non-Moslem fellow-subjects, has led to the creation of further impediment in the way of their educational, material, and political progress, and is at present hampering their efforts to keep abreast of their non-Moslem fellow-subjects, and to assert their proper place in the body politic of India. While about seventy years ago, Mussulmans held predominant and commanding position in India, their legitimate claims to serve the State in all spheres, are now not only ignored, but systematically relegated to the background, owing to shuffling of cards in departmental offices, which are now more or less entirely manned by non-Moslems, and in which the departmental European heads are necessarily more or less in their hands and at their mercy. It is often put forward as an excuse that owing to their backward education, the Muhammadans do not get their legitimate shares in the services of the State. This assertion, your Memorialists beg strongly, but respectfully to submit, is absolutely without foundation, as a close scrutiny of the qualifications of the personnel of each department would disclose, and is intended only to add insult to injury to a great and historic community. As a matter of fact, the claims of qualified Muhammadan candidates are often completely ignored and overridden by the shuffling of cards in the non-Moslem-manned departmental offices, and incompetent men from non-Moslem communities are preferred. When such has been their fate while Mussulmans have been under the ægis of British rule, they naturally view with misgivings and consternation the fate which will overtake them as regards their proportion in the personnel of the Administration and in the service of the State under Home Rule or Self-Government, when non-Moslem influence will, as things stand at present, necessarily be more predominant. Therefore, before Mussulmans can accept any Home Rule or Self-Government scheme, they respectfully claim that the British Government which undertook the administration of the Empire principally from Moslem hands, should allot and guarantee to the Moslems their proper and legitimate share in the personnel of the administration and in the public services. Your Memorialists would, therefore, humbly suggest that the proportion of Muhammadan employees in each department of public services in each province should be fixed and allotted on the same scale of proportion as Muhammadan members in the Provincial Legislative Councils. Commissions in the Army and the Navy should be allotted to Hindus and Muhammadans in proportion to their strength in the Army, and arrangements for their training should be duly made. Congress politicians vociferously shout for Indianisation, and flourish and trumpet about the formula, once uttered by a British statesman, that efficient alien government is worse than a Government of the people by the people for the people. But whilst displacing the efficient British administrators, they want to appropriate all places in the administration and the public services for themselves. They forget that the Moslems also constitute a large section of the Indian peoples, and that, therefore, it would not do to plant exclusively Hindu administrators and public servants (who are as much alien to the Moslems for all practical purposes as, and worse in some respects than, the British) over the heads of the Moslem people. They then try to confuse the issue by raising the cry of inefficiency against Moslems. We do not, for a moment, admit that the Mussulmans would prove less efficient than the Hindus as administrators or public servants, if equal opportunities were afforded to them, bearing in mind the fact that the Moslems are inheritors of administrative capacity and instinct for eight centuries in India before the British entered the field. Again, our reply to them is, "If you are so much enamoured of efficiency, admittedly the British are more efficient than you and, therefore, you are not entitled to raise the question of displacing them. In any case, you cannot have it both ways." Indianisation would be repugnant to the Moslems if it merely meant Hinduisation of the public service and administration, but Moslems would favour it if it meant a due proportion of Moslems as well as Hindus in the public service in the administration with an adequate British element to equipoise the two conflicting Indian elements. The Moslems are already smarting under the present system of administration, which is practically Hindu, with some British figure-heads, more or less impotent for good or evil, and they would not consent to any measure that would further consolidate or strengthen such an obnoxious system of administration in which they are not allotted their proper share. They realise that non-Moslem Indian administrators and public servants have contributed to their ruin—economic, political, educational, and that, therefore, it is absolutely necessary for the protection of their interests that the Moslem element should be effectively represented in the administration and public services in the provinces, and in the Central Government in the same proportion as their representation in the provincial councils and the Central Legislature. If this is not done, they would have no hesitation to denounce Indianisation and would prefer to see no extension of the Reforms in any direction. They can submit to the tyranny of one who has the right of conquest probably on his side, but they refuse to submit to the tyranny of many who can lay no shadowy claim to such a right. The absence of the Moslem element in sufficient strength from the judiciary of the country is causing alarm among Moslems, who are fast losing their confidence in a non-Moslem-manned judiciary. This obvious wrong should be immediately redressed.

Separate Moslem Electorate.

It has suited a number of Congress politicians to assail the principle of separate Moslem communal electorate under the false pretext that it is causing communal dissensions in the country and standing in the way of the attainment of nationhood. On this subject we will quote again from this Association's opinion on the Montagu-Chelmsford Constitutional Reform Scheme submitted to the Government of Bengal in 1918 : " That question was threshed out in all its bearings by eminent statesmen like Lord Morley and Lord Minto, and previously by Lord Dufferin and Lord Lansdowne, who decided, after meeting hostile criticism, that, having regard to the conditions of Society in India, it was absolutely necessary that the Muhammadans should have communal electorates with separate representation with due regard to their numerical strength and political importance, not only on Legislative Councils, but on all self-governing bodies. This decision proved wise and statesmanlike, in that it protected the interests of Mussulman minorities in India, and in some measure quieted racial antipathies between Hindus and Mussulmans. It is clear, therefore, that the communal electorate for Moslems instead of being a hindrance in the growth of nationhood has, in some measure, eased the Hindu-Moslem situation. To disturb now the principle of the Moslem communal electorate, would result in disturbing the existing peaceful political truce between the two important communities by kindling afresh racial antagonism and bitterness which would wreck the working of any Reform Scheme. The authors of the scheme say Communal Electorate is opposed to the teaching of history. My Committee urge that it is not fair to borrow copy book theoretical maxims from western countries, where populations are homogenous, by reason of common religion, common sentiment and common language, and in many cases, of common race, and apply them wholesale to the people in India who are divided by lines of cleavage in all or most of these matters. The duty of the practical statesman is to face facts as they exist, to examine the soil as it is, and then to lay the foundation for any constitutional superstructure that they may contemplate. Historical and existing facts cannot be got rid of by theoretical constitutional maxims borrowed from the West, without endangering and bringing down the whole superstructure. The facts that Muhammadans form 70 millions in India, that they ruled over the country for seven centuries, before the British appeared on the scene, that they are distinct from the Hindus in religion, tradition, historic heritage, and in many cases in race, social usage, and in their general outlook on life and its ideals cannot be lightly ignored by any wise statesman. These considerations require that efficient safeguards for Moslem communal self-development should be provided by the State. My Committee do not at all subscribe to the contention of the authors of the scheme, that the communal electorate is either a hindrance to the growth of nationhood or leads to divided allegiance, and makes men think as partisans and not as citizens. Even in the most advanced countries of Europe, my Committee venture to think such family or religious considerations are not absent in ordinary affairs of life, and even in the matters of voting or returning Members of Parliament. It is only when the State is threatened by any external danger or a national crisis that those narrower feelings are dominated and overborne by the higher sentiment of nationhood, and by the higher sense of duty to the State. A striking illustration of this contention of my Committee is furnished by the admittedly loyal attitude of Moslems in India in the present War. Although torn by various feelings, they have been stirred in the sense of duty to the State, when threatened by external danger, and given it the first place above all other considerations. This illustration ought to sufficiently explode the Reform Scheme authors' theory of divided allegiance. My Committee, therefore, most strongly insist that the communal electorate for Moslem with separate adequate representation in the ratios as suggested in this Association's Memorial of November last, should be retained intact and unqualified, and subject to no revision by Parliamentary commissions and irrespective of the consideration that the Moslem electors are in a majority in any Province. The Principle of Moslem communal electorate is based on solemn and repeated pledges by Viceroys and Secretaries of State for India, and has subsequently been affirmed by the national pledge of the Hindu nation to uphold those State pledges in any scheme of political reconstruction for India. To violate those pledges, whether State or National, would create distrust in the minds of the loyal Indian Moslem in regard to all solemn pledges in the future, that may be given by the State or the Hindu nation. My Committee insist upon Muhammadan communal electorate, even where Muhammadan electors are in majority in a province, because if the franchise is extended to agriculturists and labourers they realise that, as things stand at present in Bengal, they, being entirely beholden to the Hindu Mahajan, Hindu landlords or the Hindu lawyers, would not be able to exercise their vote independently, for returning Muhammadan members. When Primary Education will have been adequately provided by the State for the masses, when the Co-operative Credit System will have taken root, when sufficient time will have elapsed to train the Moslem electorate, such a contingency may possibly be avoided. But at present it is next to hopeless to expect that because the Muhammadan electors are in a majority they will necessarily be able to return Muhammadan Members." Therefore, separate electorate should not only be limited to Legislative Councils, but extended to all self-governing local bodies such as District Boards, Local Boards, Municipalities and other autonomous institutions like Universities, Port Trust, Improvement Trust, etc. It may not be out of place to add that Mr. Chintamani, a prominent Hindu politician, has admitted that separate electorate causes removal of friction between Hindus and Moslems. If, therefore, there have been frictions between the two communities, it is due to the non-extension, as yet, of separate electorate to all self-governing bodies where the every day problems of life such as sanitation, health, education are dealt with.

Territorial Readjustment.

If there be any territorial readjustment, we suggest that such readjustment should not be made to the prejudice of Moslems and to their conversion into minorities in Provinces where they form majorities at present. We may, however, suggest that Eastern Bengal, with Assam, may be reconstituted a separate province, as we believe that enlightened public opinion, both Hindu and Moslem in Eastern Bengal, would at present support such a separation. In that case, Western Bengal, with Orissa and Behar, could form a separate Province as before. In this Association's Memorial of 1917, with Secretary of State for India, we demanded extension of the reforms to the North-Western Frontier Province, and the separation of Sindh from Bombay; and we repeat the same demand again. It has been asserted by responsible British statesmen that the reforms have been conferred on the people of India as a reward for their war services. If that be so, it is a curious irony of fate that martial races in the North-Western Frontier Province, who, amongst the Indian people, made the largest contribution of their life-blood for the success of the British in the Great War should not receive a share of the war boon, whilst the intelligentsia of India, who made the least of such contribution, should be its recipient. United Moslem opinion throughout all the Provinces has demanded extension of Reforms to the North-Western Frontier Province, but only the Congress Hindu politicians have opposed it. This is another object lesson which furnishes an acid test of the sincerity of their friendly professions for Moslems, and demonstrates their hollowness. As regards Sindh, there is nothing common historically, linguistically or ethnically or culturally between the Moslems of Sindh and the people of the Bombay Presidency, who are mostly Mahrattas.

We have recommended abolition of special electorates save and except in the case of European, Anglo-Indian, Labour, Ryots and Depressed classes. Landholders, Mahajans, Zamindars, possess influence and wealth, and can easily come through general electorate and need no special protection. The persons who represent the Universities and the Calcutta Corporation are educated men of influence, such as lawyers, doctors, etc., and they can easily come through general electorate, and at the same time protect the interest of the Universities and the Corporation. It is the poorer classes of labourers and agriculturists and ryots, and the depressed classes that need protection, and therefore we suggest that there should be special electorate for the labour classes and ryots, and depressed classes. The Hindu general electorate should be divided into depressed and non-depressed electorates. The old Moslem Aristocracy in Bengal has gradually disappeared from various causes, and Bengal Moslems, therefore, must rest their hopes for a future on the uplift, intellectual, moral, social and economic of the Bengal Moslem peasantry. Up to twenty-five years ago the Indian poor, the Indian peasant, the patient, humble, silent millions, the 80 per cent. who subsist by agriculture were apparently the principal concern of British rulers and administrators. On this point we will quote the eloquent language of a great Viceroy, Lord Curzon, who thus spoke on the eve of his departure from India: "It is the Indian poor, the Indian peasant, the patient, humble, silent millions, the eighty per cent. who subsist by agriculture, who know very little of policy, but who profit or suffer by their results, and whom our eyes, even the eyes of their own countrymen, too often forget, to whom I refer; he has been in the background of every policy for which I had been responsible, for every surplus of which I assisted in the disposition; we see him, not in the splendour and opulence, not in the squalor of great cities; he reads no newspapers, for as a rule he cannot read at all, he has no politics. But he is the bone and sinew of the country, and by the sweat of his brow the soil is tilled, from his labour comes one-fourth of the national income, he should be the first and final object of every Viceroy's regard."

Since, however, the inauguration of the Reforms, a silent change appears to have come over the spirit of the dream of British administration in India. The poor, the labourers, the agriculturists, the toiling millions, do not seem to occupy its attention as before. The wealthy mahajans, the rich landlords, and the intelligentsia seem to absorb its attention. The ryots and agriculturists, and the toiling millions in the rural areas of Bengal die yearly in shoals of cholera, malaria, and other preventible diseases for want of medicine, doctors, and for want of pure drinking water. They have no good roads for miles, and the natural waterways that nature had provided for them are silting up, but little or no care is taken to remove the silt. Even the boon of free primary education is not extended to them. If they are oppressed by the Amlas of the big absentee landlords, who generally live in Calcutta, they often dare not, nowadays, to take their complaints to the local police or the local magistracy, for they find that big landlords are everywhere by the side of high officials, and fill in large numbers the Legislative Councils and the Cabinets. It may be added that, owing to the predominant influence of landlords and zamindars in the Reform Legislative Councils and in the Cabinet in Bengal, the Bengal Tenancy Bill, though often introduced in the Legislative Council for improving the status of ryots, has for one paltry reason or other been shelved. This has further deepened the impression that the zamindar's interest counts more now in the counsels of the Government than the interest of the toiling ryots. Yet the toiling ryots and the millions of agriculturists of Bengal, in point of fact, are more intensely loyal to the British rule than the landlords and the intelligentsia. The ryots and agriculturists do not care for this or that constitutional form of Government; they only care for good harvest, good drinking water, plenty to eat, and for freedom from the exactions of unscrupulous Amlas of absentee landlords, Shylock-like mahajans, and from the wiles of crafty legal touts who pauperise them after each good harvest. It is for the Commission to see whether this silent reversal, since the Reforms of the old British policy as outlined by Lord Curzon, would in the long run be conducive to the stability of the British rule or to the happiness and contentment of its toiling masses. We suggest that no time should be lost in establishing special electorates for ryots and labourers for their return to the Legislatures, and for making their claims and grievances heard at first hand.

Educational System and Educational Grants.

It is strange that in the Province of Bengal, where the Muhammadans form the majority, the control of University education is practically entirely in Hindu hands, so far as the Calcutta University is concerned. We omit, for the present, reference to the Dacca University, which is a creation of recent date and whose influence is confined practically within the limits of the Dacca city. As regards the Calcutta University, it is planted in the Hindu quarter of Calcutta and its controlling heads are almost all Hindus. Moslems have little voice in its deliberations and have little or no share in its control. The result is that during the last thirty years a silent process of cultural transformation of Moslem minds in the direction of Hinduisation has taken place throughout Bengal. Whilst fifty years ago in most of the villages and hamlets of Bengal, Moslems could be found who were accomplished Persian and Arabic scholars and who, at social gatherings, could easily converse in Urdu or Hindustani and recite Persian poetry and quote authorities from the Q'ran and the Traditions, now there is a dearth of such men, and it would seem that the Islamic culture has been effectively banished from rural homes even amongst respectable Moslem families. In their places have sprung up Hinduised Moslem Pundits who can read and write Bengali and recite Sanskrit, but who can hardly converse in Urdu and are more or less innocent of Arabic or Persian culture. Such little Islamic culture as yet is left in Bengal is due to the existence of a few Madrasahs in Bengal. But the Calcutta University and the District Boards and Municipalities in Bengal have done their best quietly enough through their Hindu agencies during the last forty years, to discourage and extirpate Islamic culture from Bengal. Bengali language and literature is liberally encouraged, whilst every difficulty is placed in the acquisition of Arabic, Persian and Urdu languages in Zila schools and village schools and other aided schools in Bengal. The only solution for this difficulty is to be found in the establishment of a separate Moslem University in Calcutta and of separate Moslem Zila schools, as there are separate Moslem Muktabs alongside Hindu Pathshala for primary education in the villages of Bengal, with separate Moslem educational Budget and separate Moslem Provincial and District Board educational grants based on the basis of their representation in the Legislative Councils. There should also be separate Moslem Boards for Secondary education amongst Moslems. And Moslem education should be a reserved subject, as this Association urged in its opinion on the Montagu-Chelmsford Reform, in 1918. We also endorse the following from this Association's Memorial, in 1917, to the Secretary of State for India :—" Provincial educational grants for Muhammadans in each Province should be on the same scale of proportion as that suggested above for the election of Muhammadan members in Provincial Legislative Councils. District Board and Municipal Educational grants should be allotted to Muhammadans according to their numerical strength in District Board and Municipal areas." We need not add that at present the bulk of educational fund goes to Hindu education, to the neglect of Moslem educational interest. Whilst the Presidency College practically for the benefit of the Hindus was established fifty years ago, at Government expense, in a Hindu quarter of Calcutta, Moslems were denied the benefit of a separate college in a Moslem quarter only until two or three years ago, whilst a Moslem Minister was in charge of education in Bengal, although the Moslems had been crying hoarse over it for more than forty years. The result has been that the Moslems have fallen into the background. Again, although about ten years ago the Calcutta University Commission, presided over by Dr. Sadler, recommended the extension of the principle of Moslem communal representation to the Calcutta University, no effect to this recommendation has yet been given, to the great detriment of Moslem educational interests in Bengal.

Urdu Language.

Urdu language is the lingua-franca of India. As its name signifies, it means the language of the camp; that is, it is a language which was evolved by the commingling of the different races, Hindu and Moslem, on the battlefields of India when they fought together in the service of the Moghul Emperors of India. It is, therefore, a language in which both the great Indian communities can take legitimate pride as the offspring of the union of the two communities in the past. It is a language which is understood more or less throughout India, and it is easy to learn. It should, therefore, be recognised as the lingua-franca of India, and its use should be permitted in the Courts and the Legislatures of India. And whatever some Indian Nationalists may say to the contrary, obsessed as they are now by camouflaged Communalism, their ancestors, equally with the Moslems, used to take pride in speaking that language even some sixty years ago. Moreover, if they are sincere in their professions for the attainment of Indian nationhood, they would find in the recognition of the Urdu language as the lingua-franca of India an effective instrument for its attainment.

Constitution making.

For countless centuries and through a long vista of ages the Indians have been accustomed to only one form of government, namely the personal rule of autocrats. To call upon the Indians to frame or suggest a constitution on the Western pattern is to impose upon them a task for which they are hardly equipped by their traditions or by their training. This is demonstrated by the fact that, although for the last six months or so, some of the prominent leaders of India have assembled together in different cities of India under the auspices of what they have styled the All-Parties Conference, their labours and collective wisdom have not yielded any tangible results, and often their efforts to produce a constitution acceptable to all parties have been split upon the rock of inter-communal problems. And, therefore, for us to suggest any particular form of constitution will be a rash venture. But this much we would emphasise, that the solution of inter-communal problems between Hindus and Moslems is an essential factor for the evolution of any constitution or for its smooth working. Therefore, more than any particular form of constitution what the Indian Muhammadans are anxious about is this, that there should be statutory provision for the safeguards of their rights and privileges as set forth above, and should be made organic part of any constitution that the British Parliament may grant to the people of India, so that these might not be tampered with by any Indian legislature without the sanction of the British Parliament and without the united consensus of Moslem public opinion in India. With this observation, and subject to the above proviso, we proceed to offer some remarks on some of the points mentioned in the Appendix of the Communique of the Commission.

1 A. Franchise may be extended and qualifications of electors may be reduced by half.

B. Elections may be direct.

C. We have already indicated our views in the body of the memorandum.

D. At present there is hardly much touch between representative and constituents who are mostly illiterate and politically untrained, with the result that the representatives say and do things in the Councils for which they are seldom, if at all, called to account by their constituents. This leads to a worse irresponsible form of Government.

E. Although parties and groups are formed, they do not rest on any solid basis of principle or policy. Save and except the Swarajist party, who have a definite programme and definite policy, however destructive it might be. Other groups or parties are more or less based on personalities; and personal ambitions and jealousies often distract them, in the absence of a definite policy. Nor are the Moslem parties or groups, though they are formed for the protection of Moslem communal rights, free from this evil. Neither the constitution of the Council nor the condition of Indian society, with its present standard of public life, lends itself to the formation of great parties, as in England or other advanced Western countries.

F. In the absence of free compulsory primary education, it is not possible to have informed public opinion among the masses or the electors, especially in rural parts.

G. We favour nomination of officials and non-officials on elected bodies.

2 A and B. We have already indicated our views in the body of our Memorandum.

3. Amongst the local self-governing bodies, we attach the greatest importance to the extension and development of Union Boards. They are the essential basis of any future democracy in India. They serve a useful purpose in looking after the immediate concerns of villagers, and have to provide village roads, village schools and village sanitation, and in some cases have been vested with the power to try petty criminal cases.

C. and D. At present, it seems desirable in the interest of these local self-governing bodies (Municipalities, District Boards, etc.), that they should be under the general supervision of officials of provincial Government and the general control of provincial Government. When such bodies will have further developed, such supervision and control could be delegated to a Local Self-Government Board in charge of a minister at the headquarters of the Government.

4. Unitary Cabinet seems desirable. Executive Council might be abolished, and the Governor might carry on the Administration with the help of ministers alone. But in the present state of inter-communal tension, it is necessary that Law and Order should be a reserved subject in the hands of the Governor.

E. There should be collective responsibility among the ministers.

I. Second Chambers appear to be desirable to correct the vagaries of First Chambers, and to avoid certification by the Governor.

J. The experiment of provincial autonomy may be tried, with distinct statutory proviso that, in case it breaks down or is guilty of maladministration, the Central Government will resume it.

L. If there be reserved and transferred sides there should be separate purses.

5. The Central Government should have the power of superintendence and general control of the Provincial Government. Save and except foreign relations, it should have the power in all central subjects without sanction of the Secretary of State for India. The Secretary of State's control should be limited to the foreign relations of India.

E. The Executive of the Central Government should not be subject to the legislature, and should have a strong British element.

9 A. The status of the Indian Civil Service should be maintained intact as recommended by the Lee Commission, and an effective British element should continue in that service.

E. We have already indicated our views in the body of our memorandum.

In concluding our Memorandum, we cannot do better than close it with the concluding words of this Association's Memorial to the Secretary of State for India in 1917 :—

" In conclusion, your humble Memoralists beg to state that they have ventured to offer these observations, in the hope that by honestly and faithfully representing Muhammadan ideas with regard to the safeguards necessary for the protection of Moslem interests under any contemplated political reforms and administrative readjustments, your Memoralists may render some loyal assistance to you in achieving the object which you have in view in visiting India, viz. the welfare of the people of India at large. Your Memorialists feel that as the trend of Imperial policy appears to be to grant, in due course of time, autonomous administration to the various provinces of India, with the gradual reduction of the British element in the personnel of the State, it is absolutely essential at this state in the development of Indian affairs to have the rights of the Mussulmans to share proportionately in such and future developments placed upon a firm and acknowledged basis, rather than leave the principle for settlement to a future time, at the risk of bitter friction and fierce strife. Fully recognising that the development of India must proceed upon the mutual goodwill and co-operation of the two great component elements in the Indian population, your Memorialists feel it necessary that these two component elements should be equally strengthened educationally, politically and materially, and freed from religious prejudices and social and racial animosities, in order to constitute a healthy and progressive composite whole. Your Memorialists are not prepared to say that such a millennial point in the destiny of India has yet arrived, and therefore your Memorialists hope and trust that you will not treat their suggestions as the outcome of racial or religious rivalry, but as prompted by an honest and sincere desire to ensure the uninterrupted future advancement of India as a whole, by sure and steady steps, towards the goal of self-government within the British Empire. Ever since the disappearance of the Timuride dynasty, the Indian Moslems have transferred their whole-hearted allegiance to the British Crown, and England to-day, in their eyes, stands in the place of the Great 'Moghul,' as the protector of their rights and the upholder of their privileges. For England now to place the Indian Moslems, without proper, definite and ample safeguards, under the heels of a hostile non-Moslem majority, would, your humble Memorialists venture respectfully to submit, be a cruel act of breach of faith and violation of trust, and would be subversive of solemn engagements and sacred pledges entered into from time to time between Great Britain and her representatives in India, and the past Moslem sovereigns and potentates and Moslem peoples in different parts of what now constitutes the British Empire in India. Your Memorialists beg to assure you that in safeguarding the interests of the seventy millions of His Majesty's loyal Mussulman subjects in India, at this critical stage in the history of its development, you will be strengthening the basis of their unswerving loyalty to the British Throne, and laying deep and firm the foundation of their peaceful self-development, political advancement and national well-being, side by side with the great Hindu community, under the aegis of the beneficient British Crown, and your name will be remembered with gratitude by Indian Mussulmans for generations to come. Your Memorialists feel confident that you will be gracious enough to give due, earnest and sympathetic consideration to their prayers, and that you will deal fairly and wisely with Muhammedan claims."

Deputation consisting of representatives of the Central National Muhammadan Association and Branch Associations and of the Moffussil Anjuman Islamia, Eastern Bengal, called and examined.

The deputation consisted of :—

Representatives of the Central National Muhammadan Association :—

The Honourable PRINCE AFSAR-UL-MULK MIRZA MAHOMED AKRAM HOSSAIN BAHADUR, Member, Council of State, Vice-President (Spokesman).

Mr. A. H. GHUZNAVI, M.L.A.

HADJI CHAUDHURY MAHOMED ISMAIL, M.L.A.

Mr. UNSODDAULLA, Sheriff of Calcutta.

Mr. SYED ERFAN ALI, Barrister-at-Law.

KHAN BAHADUR HADJI FAZLUL HUQ.

KHAN BAHADUR MAULVI ABDUS SALAM, Honorary Secretary.

Representatives of the Branch Associations :—

MAULVI SHARFUDDIN AHMAD, B.L. (Mymensingh Muhammadan Association).

MAULVI MOHAMMED HAMID ALI, B.L. (Bogra Muhammadan Association).

MAULVI MUJIBUR RAHMAN, B.L. (Howrah Muhammadan Association).

MAULVI ULFAT HOSAIN JORADAR, (Chuadanga, Nadia Muhammadan Association).

Representatives of the Moffussil Anjuman Islamia, Eastern Bengal :—

The Honourable KHAN BAHADUR MAULVI ABDUL KARIM (Member, Council of State), Tipperah.

MAULVI SHARFUDDIN AHMAD, B.L. (Mymensingh).

MAULVI MOHAMMAD HAMID ALI, B.L. (Bogra).

256. The Chairman : I understand that this deputation consists of representatives of the Central National Muhammadan Association, with Prince Akram Hossain as spokesman, and do I understand, also, that it is desired to bring in some representatives from branch Associations ?—Sir Abdelkerim Ghuznavi : A few from branch Associations.

257. The Chairman : And some representatives of the Moffussil Anjuman Islamia of East Bengal ?—Sir Abdelkerim Ghuznavi : Yes.

258. The Chairman : And who will be their leader ? The Honourable Khan Bahadur Maulvi Abdul Karim, I suppose ?—(Khan Bahadur Maulvi Abdul Karim) Yes.

259. Sir Abdelkerim Ghuznavi : Sir, before we proceed, I should like to make a statement. I would like to bring to your notice officially that recently a conference, an All-India conference of all parties of Mussulmans, was held at Delhi. On that platform were gathered Mussulmans of all schools of thought and of all political ideas, and they have put forward certain recommendations, which have been accepted, if I may say so, by the entire Moslem community ; and with your permission, sir, I will just read out the resolutions which were adopted.*

* * * * * * * *

Well, sir, this practically represents the views of the entire Moslem community, and I think it will save the time of the Conference if I say that these views have also been adopted by Moslem Bengal. But there are other matters that concern this province, and these matters will be put forward by the two deputations, one representing the Central National Muhammadan Association, and the other the Anjumans and district Associations of East Bengal, for whom my honourable friend, the Honourable Khan Babadur Maulvi Abdul Karim, is the spokesman.

260. The Chairman : Thank you very much. We might just start, I think, with one or two questions. Is the Central National Muhammadan Association a Bengal Association or an All-India Association ?—(Prince Akram Hossain) It is an All-India Association, but its activities are more or less chiefly confined to Bengal. We have branches all over India. We have about twenty branches in Bengal itself.

261. * * * I will now turn to page 50 (Memorandum from the Central National Muhammadan Association)—the proposals in regard to legislative councils. You say there: "Separate "electorate for Moslems in all councils on the popula- "tion basis, subject to the limitation that the minority "should have 40 per cent. of representation on all "legislative bodies." I follow that. The meaning is quite plain. Then you add : "That no resolution "or Bill affecting the religious, social or educational "interests of any community, which is opposed by "one-fourth of that community shall be proceeded "with." That, I suppose, means opposed by one-fourth of that community's representatives in the legislature ?—Yes.

262. It does not mean you take a vote right through the province ?—It means only one-fourth of the community's representatives in the legislature concerned.

263. Have you considered at all who is to decide whether or not a Bill does affect the religious, social or educational interests of any community ?—The community itself.

264. Is it to apply to other communities besides the Muhammadans ?—Yes, sir.

265. How many are there ?—I should extend it to more communities.

266. I want to go a little more into detail. For example, will you regard the depressed classes as part of the Hindu community ?—We do recognise that they are a part of the Hindu community.

267. So the depressed classes would not be entitled, through one-fourth of their representatives, to object to anything which they said affected their social or educational interests ?—Yes, that is so.

268. Of course, they are only part of a larger community ?—If they are taken as Hindus they would be included amongst the Hindus, and one-fourth of the Hindu community would be entitled to object.

269. Would it apply to the Sikhs ?—It ought to.

270. I am not quite sure how far the Central National Muhammadan Association has worked out this idea that no resolution or bill which any community thought affected its social or other interests should be passed if one-fourth of its representatives objected to it. I do not know how far you have thought that out with reference to other communities than your own ?—We were thinking of our own community. Indeed, in the Memorandum which we have drawn up, we have only been consulting our own interests. But if there is any suggestion that applies to us it ought equally to apply to other communities also.

271. But you were thinking of your own interests ?—Yes.

272. You then say, in your Memorandum, that "provincial legislatures should consist of three- "fourths elected and one-fourth nominated mem- "bers." Has your Association considered who should make the nominations and on what principle ?—(Khan Bahadar Maulvi Abdus Salam) Nominations are made by Government, and our idea is that they should be made by Government.

273. Government would nominate officials ?—They do. They do nominate officials.

274. I was speaking of the future scheme ?—We want to keep to it. We want to keep things as they stand as regards nomination.

275. You add in your memorandum : "Abolition "of special electorates, such as the Indian National "Chamber of Commerce, Bengal Mahajans Sabha, "Landholders, Electorate, the Universities, the "Corporation of Calcutta, the Marwari Association, "etc." Your view is that no landholders should have any special electorates ?—Our idea is that those who can get in through general electorates should not seek special electorates. We think that the landlords wield influence and have power and wealth and they can easily get through general electorates. The Marwaris, also, have got wealth and power and they can get through general electorates.

276. Am I to understand that these proposals on page 12 of your Memorandum are unanimously adopted by the executive of the Central National Muhammadan Association ?—Yes.

277. And that, I am told, is an All-India body ?—It is an All-India body.

278. Is it adopted, for instance, by the Muhammadan landowners of the Punjab ?—No, as our spokesman, Prince Akram Hossain, has already explained, we have confined ourselves to Bengal. (Prince Akram Hossain) Our activities are more or less confined to Bengal, though we have branches outside Bengal.

279. Then I see you say that the special electorates are to be confined, in the case of Europeans, Anglo-Indians, Labour and Depressed Classes ?—Yes.

* See Vol. II., p. 84.

Afternoon.

Deputation from Central National Muhammadan Association, &c.

—CONTINUED.

* * * * * * * *

7. Sir Abdelkerim Ghuznavi : May I ask you what your view is with regard to the transfer of Law and Order ?—In my opinion—I have given some thought to it—it should be exclusively in the portfolio of His Excellency the Governor.

8. What is your idea with regard to the establishment of a Second Chamber ?—Provided there is proportional representation of Muhammadans in the Upper House also I should be immensely in favour of it.

9. Are you satisfied with the Moslem representation in the public services ?—Not at all.

10. What do you think it should be ?—That is a point about which I have already expressed an opinion. It should be in proportion to the population.

11. Now about the methods of election. Do you think it would be helpful to have what I would call electoral colleges in each sub-division, the electoral colleges to be composed of representatives from various unions ?—My own opinion is that we can better have it if the representatives elected by the unions are given the power to send their representatives to the Council. By the delegation of authority to the representatives of the unions, I am inclined to the opinion that these latter can exercise their judgment and discretion in the selection of suitable candidates on behalf of the people who have not got any political sense.

12. That would also incidentally minimise what I should call corrupt practices in the course of elections ?—It is not only with a view to that, but also with a view to enable the intending candidates to be in closer touch with their own constituency which is impossible otherwise under the present state of things. Another reason is that these people being intelligent and able to understand the significance of a vote, their selection would be better.

13. Do you think there is a lot of corruption now prevalent in the course of elections ?—I have no direct knowledge of it, but I understand from reliable sources that it is prevalent.

* * * * * * * *

17. Mr. Travers : I believe you know that from Northern Bengal and Eastern Bengal there are a number of applications for the appointment of British officers as district magistrates or superintendents of police. Does your Association hold the opinion that it is desirable to continue to have a considerable number of British officers in the public services ?—Certainly. As a matter of fact, I have myself been a party to such application, and I would not be satisfied even with Indian Christians ; I want pukka Europeans.

18. Maulvi Abul Kasem : Khan Bahadur, you said that you will support the proposal for a Second Chamber because you feel that the Legislative Council or the Lower Chamber, if I may call it so, may sometimes go wrong and as a corrective body you want a Second Chamber ?—That is only one of the reasons. Another reason is that we will be following the precedent of those countries which have a democratic form of government.

19. In answer to Sir Abdelkerim, you said that you will favour indirect election because the people who will elect members to the Legislative Council will be more intelligent and also because the members of the Legislative Council will be in closer touch with their electorate. But is it not a fact that the member for a particular area, whether elected indirectly or directly, will have for his constituency the whole area as at present ?—Yes, that is so.

20. And consequently he cannot be in closer touch with the real taxpayers If these taxpayers are not intelligent, how can you say that they will elect proper representatives to the Union Boards ; they may elect wrong representatives. In that case what is the advantage of indirect election ?—The only answer that I can give is that we have to take our chance. The choosing of right or wrong men depends on you.

* * * * * * * *

22. Maharaja Shashi Kanta : Do you consider that the Chairmen and Vice-Chairmen of Local Bodies who are elected by joint electorate can truly safeguard Muhammadan interests ?—I do not.

23. Sir Arthur Froom : On page 51 of your Memorandum, you refer to the constitution of the Cabinet, both Provincial and Imperial. You say that half the members of the Cabinet should be Indians, of whom half should consist of Moslems. Who should compose the other half ?—That is for the Government to decide. We were specially concerned with the protection of Muhammadan interests, and we left the rest to be adjusted according to circumstances.

24. Would you have any objection to have Europeans for the other half of the Cabinet ?—I do not mind in the least.

25. Mr. Kikabhai Premchand : On page 49 of your Memorandum you say that you want safeguards for the protection of Moslem special interests. You must be aware that although the Bombay presidency has but 19 per cent. of the Muhammadans, they have a Muhammadan president of the Legislative Council and two Muhammadan members of the Executive Council. Does this bear out your apprehension that safeguards must be had if the extinction of the Muhammadan community is to be avoided ?—It is a matter which concerns the Bombay presidency.

26. But you are talking of the whole of India. —The Chairman : Although this is an All-India body, they are only giving their opinion from the Bengal point of view.

* * * * * * * *

32. Mr. Kikabhai Premchand : On page 53 you say, "The Hindu general electorate should be "divided into Depressed and Non-Depressed "electorates." Is this with the idea of splitting the forces among the Hindus ?—(Prince Akram Hossain) We have no such idea to divide the Hindus. It is only intended that the Depressed Classes might have a separate electorate.

33. Sir Hari Singh Gour : On page 26 you say, "For countless centuries and through a long vista "of ages the Indians have been accustomed to "only one form of Government, namely, the personal "rule of autocrats. To call upon the Indians to "frame or suggest a constitution on the Western "pattern, is to impose upon them a task for which "they are hardly equipped by their traditions or "by their training." Do you not think that your community should be satisfied if you advocated a continuance of that personal rule to which you and your community had been accustomed for countless centuries ? I think that will be a very good plan, is it not ?—No. Public opinion at present has undergone some change. It is difficult to measure what backing this view has, but there is a section —I do not say whether it is a major or a minor section—but there is a section of the population which does not like autocracy at present.

34. What is your view and the view of your Association ?—So far as the Association is concerned, it does not go into that question at all. It only says that whatever steps are taken, the interests of the Muhammadans should be safeguarded.

35. It will be equally satisfied with one system or the other ?—Quite.

* * * * * * * *

49. Sardar Shivdev Singh : I want to know whether the protection of the Muhammadan interests as put mainly in this Memorandum is based on the importance of the community as being the emperors of India for many centuries, or whether it is based on the backwardness of the community educationally, or economically or otherwise ?—It is based upon a number of considerations. It is based upon their numerical position, upon their political importance, and upon their backward state.

50. The view is held nowadays that special representation of different communities is a step backward to the growth of nationalism of the country. Do you think or does your Association think that in a certain number of years the protection afforded to your community will be enough to bring it to the level of the other communities, when there would be no necessity for communal representation in all the branches of the administration ?—Nothing will be happier than that. We should all very much like that there should be no need for protection at all. But as things stand at present I think it is very necessary that we should have communal representation, and I and my Association fail to see how separation brings about friction, or the retarding of the growth of nationalism.

51. Have you formed any idea as to the period within which your community will come to the level of the other communities ?—It all depends upon the progress made in the relationship of one community with the other.

52. Dr. Suhrawardy : Sirdar Shivdev Singh Uberoi has put to you a question as to when you think it would be possible or when it is likely that the Muhammadans would agree to the abolition of the communal electorates. Am I right in thinking that the Mussulmans of Bengal will be in a position to give up their claim to communal electorates as soon as it will be time for the Hindus to demand protection for them ?—It is very difficult to say.

53. My idea is this. The Mussulmans are numerically strong, but in other respects they are backward. But if in the Legislative Council and Local Bodies the Mussulmans dominate as they have been dominating in certain district boards in Eastern Bengal, would that not be the time for the Hindus to demand separate electorates for themselves and the Mussulmans to give up separate electorates ? Is not that time fast approaching, that is to say, the time for the abolition of communal electorate for all time ?—(Khan Bahadur Abdul Karim) We all wish that it could come even to-morrow when the Muhammadans would not like to have this sort of protection. As a matter of fact until a few years ago we had complete confidence in the sister community, the majority community of Hindus, and we were looking up to them as our brothers and guides. But, having regard to the course of events that have followed and having regard to the fact that the circumstances that I have adverted to in my replies might continue for any length of time, it is difficult to prophesy the time when that moment for fusion will come.

* * * * * * * *

58. Dr. Suhrawardy : (To the witness) : Mr. Kikabhai Premchand has pointed out to you that in Bombay there is one Muhammadan president and two Muhammadan members of Government. I am not concerned with Bombay, but is not it a fact that in Bengal, in spite of the Moslem majority, there is no Muhammadan President of the Bengal Legislative Council nor has one ever been elected, and there is only one member and one minister ? That is the other side of the sheet ?—There was at one time a Muhammadan President, the late Nawab Sir Syed Shamsul Huda.

59. He was appointed ; I am speaking of elected ?—Elected ? No. A prominent Muhammadan gentleman wanted to be elected, but he was defeated.

60. We need not go into details, but I want to show the other side of the sheet ?—My answer is that there was only one attempt, and that was not successful.

Memoranda submitted by the All-India Association of European Government Servants.

I am directed by the All-India Association of European Government Servants to submit this Memorandum in response to the invitation of the Indian Statutory Commission, dated the 8th March, 1928. It was requested that Memoranda should be submitted by the 1st of June, 1928. My Association has not been able to comply with that request, owing to the difficulty of consulting its constituent associations in the short space of time allowed, but it trusts that the Commission will appreciate this difficulty, and, in view of the position of the Association, will give due consideration to this Memorandum. My Association has had the advantage of consulting the Memoranda already submitted by the Associations of Bengal, Madras, Bombay, the Punjab, and the Frontier Province, and the Central Provinces, as well as of reading a note submitted by the United Provinces Association. Copies of all these documents are attached to this Memorandum. Many of the points which my Association desires to make have been put in more detail in the Memoranda of the various provinces which were considered and discussed at a conference of representatives of the constituent Associations, at Calcutta, on 27th, 28th and 29th August, 1928. This Memorandum is the result of that conference, and is designed to emphasise the points common to the representations of all European Government Servants in India.

2. The constituent Associations of the All-India Association of European Government Servants are the Associations of such servants in the following Provinces: Madras, Bengal, Bombay, the United Provinces, the Punjab and the Frontier Province, the Central Provinces and Assam. The Association is the only Service association which consists entirely of Europeans and can claim to speak authoritatively on behalf of Europeans in the Services. On the 1st January, 1928, it included 1,320 Europeans, most of whom are members of the Superior Civil Services. Officers of the Police and the Indian Medical Service and other officers of the Army in Civil employ are precluded by the orders of Government from joining the Association.

3. My Association recognises that the existence of a body of civil servants subject to an external authority is inconsistent with certain forms of Government. Nevertheless, it will be desirable for some time, at least, to maintain the British character of the administration. Apart from this, the disappearance of practically all the principal administrative officers of Government, either immediately or within a short term of years, is not likely to be contemplated by any Government as desirable. It was recognised from the initiation of the reforms in India that the maintenance of a considerable body of European Government servants was necessary, and, for this reason, and to encourage the many officers who desired then, and still desire, to remain in the service of the Government in India, the Services have been given certain rights and privileges by the Government of India Act of 1919, and the rules thereunder. The provision for the rights of officers who may remain in Service, or may be compelled in one way or another to retire, may be briefly summarised by a quotation from Section 96B(2) of the Government of India Act, 1919, where it is stated that "every person appointed before the commencement of the Government of India Act, 1919, by the Secretary of State in Council, to the Civil Service of the Crown in India shall retain all his existing or accruing rights, or shall receive such compensation for the loss of any of them as the Secretary of State in Council may consider just and equitable." My Association hopes that not only will no diminution be allowed, as a result of the Commission's deliberations, in the rights so secured, but also that they will be extended, as is only equitable, to cover officers who have joined since 1919.

4. My Association desires to state here the main rights, guarantees, and safeguards, assured at present to European officers in the Services, which are as follows:—

(i) The composition, powers, functions, duties and procedure of the Council of India are such as are prescribed in Sections 3 to 10 of the Government of India Act of 1919.

(ii) The control of the finances of India rests with the Secretary of State in Council (Section 21 of the Act).

(iii) Officers appointed before the commencement of the Act retain all existing and accruing rights or shall receive such compensation for the loss of any of them as the Secretary of State in Council may consider just and equitable (Section 96B(2) proviso).

(iv) The right to pension and the scale and conditions of pension cannot be varied so as adversely to affect any person appointed before the date of the rules made under Section 96 B(3) of the Act.

(v) The classification of the Civil Services in India, the methods of their recruitment, their conditions of service, pay and allowances, and discipline and conduct are governed by rules made by the Secretary of State in Council (Section 96B(2) of the Act).

(vi) The Governor of each Province is required by his Instrument of Instructions to safeguard all members of the Services in the legitimate exercise of their functions and in the enjoyment of all recognised rights and privileges and to see that the Government order all things justly and reasonably in their regard.

(vii) A Public Service Commission has been appointed (vide Section 96C(1) of the Act) which the Governor-General in Council must consult in cases of appeals against punishment before passing any orders on an appeal to him or before forwarding an appeal to the Secretary of State. The Commission may be consulted by the Governor-General in Council in cases of memorials and by Governors or Chief Commissioners before orders are passed. The Commission is further required to advise, when so requested by the Governor-General in Council or a Local Government, on questions affecting the conditions of service of All-India, Central or Provincial Services; and the Governor-General in Council must obtain the advice of the Commission on questions as to the extent to which officers of the All-India Services and Central Services, Class I, are affected by the abolition of any post or classes of posts.

(viii) Every officer has the right to appeal or to memorialize. Every officer who has been appointed by the Secretary of State in Council has the right to submit an appeal or memorial ultimately to the Secretary of State in Council.

(ix) The salaries and pensions of persons appointed by or with the approval of His Majesty or the Secretary of State for India in Council are non-votable (vide Sections 67A(3) (iii) and 72D(3) (iv) of the Act).

(x) No officer may be dismissed by any authority subordinate to that by which he was appointed and the Secretary of State in Council (except so far as he may provide by rules to the contrary) may reinstate in that service an officer who has been dismissed (Section 96B(1) of the Act).

(xi) All officers of the services named in Schedule 1 of the Premature Retirement Rules have the right to retire on proportionate pension with passage gratuity.

The rights, safeguards and guarantees quoted above are secured by the Government of India Act of 1919, and are a fundamental part of the conditions under which the European services of the Crown in India serve. My Association would urge that no reduction of those rights, safeguards and guarantees should be made as a result of any changes which may be made in the system of Government in India without the award of adequate compensation to the officers affected. In the opinion of the Association, this compensation should take the form of a proportionate pension plus compensation for the loss of career involved. Further, the right to retire prematurely upon such terms should be unqualified, and should be a continuous option lasting throughout the period of each officer's service. My Association does not at present desire to lay down any definite principles on which compensation for the loss of career should be calculated, but they are strongly of opinion that the compensation given should not be less than that awarded to officers of the Egyptian Services in 1923 under somewhat similar conditions.

5. My Association wishes to draw particular attention to the guarantee that the European officers at present possess in the control exercised by the Secretary of State in Council over the finances of India. That guarantee is the security, which those officers have, that their monetary claims will be met in full. Should the Commission consider it necessary to recommend any change in that control, whether by transferring it from the Secretary of State in Council, or by altering the composition, powers, duties and procedure of the Secretary of State's Council, my Association trusts that the Commission will recommend the retention by the Secretary of State of complete control, either over such portion of the Indian revenues as will ensure that the monetary claims of all European officers will be met in full, or over a fund constituted from such revenues to meet these obligations. At present no security exists beyond the control of the Secretary of State that the payments due to European officers on account of pensions or provident or family pension funds will be made; and, in spite of repeated protests by the Services, all contributions made by them to such funds are merged in the general revenues of India. It is possible that in the future these revenues will be controlled by a National Government, which may not be prepared to meet the responsibilities in respect of pensions and the like incurred by its predecessors. To remove this lack of security, my Association would urge that funds should be lodged in London sufficient to cover existing and future liabilities on account of pension and provident or family pension fund payments due to European members of the Services, who have joined before the recommendations of the Commission are brought into force, or to their families. Failing such action, they suggest that the British Parliament should assume the responsibility for the liabilities in question.

6. Apart from the general question of such payments, my Association is apprehensive lest the changes that may be introduced should affect the stability of the rupee, with consequent loss to European officers serving, or who have served, in India. My Association, therefore, desires to recommend to the Commission that statutory protection should be given by the British Parliament to all European officers against a fall in the sterling value of the rupee.

7. Whether the report of the Commission results in changes affecting European Government servants or not, my Association desires to urge that the option of retirement on proportionate pension or gratuity, given in the existing rules to certain officers, should not lapse, as at present provided, when the action to be taken on the report of the Parliamentary Commission is known. Officers are still apprehensive of developments in the future. For example, the safeguard given by the Instrument of Instruction to Governors is bound to become less efficacious in future under political pressure. Further, the conditions of service have developed in such a way since the option of retirement was granted that it would be only equitable to extend that option to all Europeans now in the Services. They are equally affected by adverse conditions arising out of the political development of India.

8. My Association desires here to mention a special point on which apprehensions are felt by the European members of the public services. There is, and for some time past has been, a growing shortage in the number of European medical officers in Civil employ in the provinces. The members of my Association have always regarded medical attendance on themselves and their families by European doctors as one of the most essential conditions of service in India. The question is dealt with in paragraph 93 of the Report of the Royal Commission on the Superior Civil Services in India of 1924. The recommendations of that Commission represent the minimum requirements of the European members of the Services, and my Association trusts that the number of European medical officers in Civil employ in India will not be allowed to fall below that needed to fulfil those requirements. Recent regulations in connection with the Indian Medical Service indicate that European medical officers of that Service may not be available for Civil employ in sufficient numbers. In that event steps should be taken to procure competent European doctors from some other source.

9. My Association wishes also to offer a suggestion as to the constitution of the Public Service Commission set up under the Government of India Act of 1919. At present only the Chairman is ineligible for any further appointment under the Crown in India. In view of the increasing importance given to political considerations in dealing with administrative questions in India, my Association urges that no Member or Chairman of the Commission should be eligible for any further appointment under the Crown in India or for a seat in the Council of the Secretary of State for India.

10. Hitherto, this Memorandum has dealt largely with the position of European Government servants who are members of the Superior Services, and have their interests protected by the existing law. There are, however, a number of other European officers whose cases have been dealt with in the Memoranda of the constituent associations, including (a) officers who have taken service with the Government of India or a Provincial Government under a contract; (b) officers who belong to an ordinary pensionable Provincial Service; (c) officers who belong to a pensionable Central Service whose pay is votable; and (d) specialist officers appointed by the Secretary of State, but not in the Superior Services, whether their pay be votable or non-votable. Such officers have undoubtedly and justifiably taken employment under Government with the anticipation that British control of Government in India would persist. As that control relaxes, their position is bound to become more difficult. It is easy to imagine how an unfriendly Administration could make such officers' lives so unpleasant as to drive them from the Service, even without compensation. Many such officers are members of the Provincial Associations of European Government Servants, and my Association desires to impress upon the Commission the necessity for their protection. In future, when any Government in India desires on its own initiative to employ European officers by recruitment through the Secretary of State, or the High Commissioner for India, my Association is of opinion that the interests of such officers should be assured by a clause in the terms of their engagement requiring the Government concerned to guarantee, by means of reserve funds, or otherwise, the fulfilment of the terms of the engagement regarding notice, and a return passage to Europe, in the event of the salary of the officer concerned being refused by vote of the Legislature. A further safeguard desirable is the appointment of a reliable arbitrator in the case of contracts of service, and my Association suggests that the final arbitrator in all cases should be the Secretary of State himself. In respect of European officers in pensionable services, whose pay and allowances are votable, my Association considers that it will be only equitable to admit them to similar terms, as regards premature retirement with proportionate pension and compensation for loss of career, to those which may be granted to the officers whose pay and allowances are non-votable.

11. My Association would summarise the position which it desires to place before the commission as follows. It represents the majority of European Civil officers serving in India. Those officers have deliberately chosen a career in India; many are bound by ties of family tradition to the Service of India, and to most it would be a wrench to break with the work of their lives, and with the country and the people whom they have served. But they recognise that Indian conditions are altering every day, and they feel compelled in justice to themselves and to their families, therefore, to demand that their position should be clearly defined, and that they should receive protection if they stay in the Service, or compensation if they are forced to go, whether by adverse conditions or direct discharge. The form which such protection takes at present, and might be given in the future, and the lines on which compensation might be given, have been set out in this Memorandum, and my Association trusts that the suggestions made will receive full consideration from the Commission.

12. My Association is prepared, through one of its members, to give oral evidence during the visit of the Commission to Calcutta in December, 1928, if so desired. It is not possible to state the names of the witnesses at this date owing to the exigencies of the Public Service.

Enclosures:

Copies of Memoranda submitted by the Provincial Associations of European Government Servants.

Preliminary Memorandum submitted by the Bengal Association of European Government Servants and Managing Committee of the All-India Association of European Government Servants.

The Bengal Association of European Government Servants comprises within its membership European Government Servants from all the various services in Bengal, excepting Police, Jails and Indian Medical Service. It is recognised by the Government of Bengal. Its membership on January 1st, 1928, totalled 183. The Council of the Bengal Association is also, for the current year, the Managing Committee of the All-India Association. A copy of the Rules of that body is attached.* The All-India Association is recognised by the Government of India. Its total membership is 1,320.

2. The Council of the Bengal Association desire to emphasise that this Memorandum represents the views of that Council alone. It has been impossible to obtain the support of all the Provincial Associations to an All-India Memorandum in the short time available. Such a Memorandum is, however, under preparation, and we ask that, in the circumstances explained, it may be received in due course, and examined by the Commission. It is obvious that as regards the future, the evidence which the Service Associations can give, and the consideration which they may justly claim, will largely depend upon the result of the preliminary labours of the Commission during its ensuing visit to India, and we would accordingly urge that an opportunity may be given for the submission of further evidence at a later date.

3. We desire at the very outset to remind the Commission of the fact that the Montagu-Chelmsford Reform Scheme brought about a profound and radical change in the conditions of the Public Services in India. This change was, indeed, an inevitable part of the scheme, and, as is well known, the sources of recruitment of Europeans for the Indian Services were greatly affected thereby, while the confidence of existing members of the Services in regard to their future career was seriously undermined. So rapidly did this factor come into prominence, that the questions of the conditions of retirement and the security of pensions, formed the subject of a Despatch from the late Mr. Montagu, then Secretary of State for India, to the Government of India, dated February 9th, 1922.

4. We respectfully invite the Commission's particular attention to the contents of that Despatch, for we regard its terms as having an important bearing on the matters under discussion. Paragraph 2(b) of that Despatch gives us the assurance that in such possible changes as the Statutory Commission are now investigating " It will be the unquestionable duty of the Secretary of State in Council to consider fully the extent to which such changes affect the conditions of service of those who will be bound by them, and whether they are such as to necessitate a re-opening of opportunities for voluntary retirement on pension ; that it will further be his duty to take steps to secure the enactment of such provisions to that end as may seem just and necessary." In paragraph 4, of the same Despatch reference is also made to the serious obligations devolving upon His Majesty's Government and on Parliament in the direction of giving full security for all pensions to officers entitled to them, and adequate compensation to all officers whose services are compulsorily terminated.

5. Responsible self-government for India is the goal of the British Government. It is evident that the existence of officers under the control of the Secretary of State, and not finally subject to the local authorities, is inconsistent with any form of real self-government. When this goal is finally reached, there can be no officers left who are still under this control. The problem of advancing towards this objective necessarily includes the problem of what is to be done with the Services. This Association has no desire to enter into any discussion of political questions, or to discuss what changes ought to be made ; it is only concerned to see that if changes are made, their effect on the Services is duly considered, and the interests of the Services properly protected. If no changes are made, then there is nothing to discuss. We must assume, therefore, that some change will be made, and that this will presumably be in a further move towards responsible self-government, with the consequent result that ultimately there will be no Services left as at present constituted.

6. It is reasonable to assume that changes will be considered Department by Department, and that more progress will be made in some Departments than in others. This has already been done to some extent: for example, European recruitment has been stopped in the Indian Educational Service. It may be possible to go further, and decide that in the case of some Departments there is no place for the European officer controlled by the Secretary of State, but that if European officers are required they can be recruited on special terms by local Indian Governments. This would mean the compulsory retirement of officers now serving in those Departments. In such a case we would press that terms of compensation for loss of career should be offered to such officers, similar to those secured for the members of the Egyptian Services in 1923. A less advanced stage would be where it was decided that it was not possible for the present to eliminate European officers, responsible to the Secretary of State, or even possible to leave it to the chance that European officers with the necessary training and experience could be recruited direct by Indian Provincial Governments. In that case, we would press that in no circumstances should the control of the Secretary of State over the Service concerned be relaxed.

7. It will have to be recognised that the decision that European officers must be retained is a definite decision that the goal of self-government cannot be reached at present in the particular Department. There is, perhaps, some danger that this may be overlooked, and disappointment may be caused by what will be called an offer of a pretence of self-government, an offer of the form rather than the reality. Where it is decided that such officers must remain, it may also be decided that this is only a temporary stage, and that the officers at present serving will suffice to tide over the period until full self-government in the particular Department is given. In other words, it may be decided to stop further recruitment in that Department. We have already pointed out that this is the position reached in some Services. The position of the officers left will have to be considered. It is very likely that they will not be wanted, that the Minister in charge of the Department will think that the further step to full self-government should have been made. The officers left may or may not receive fair treatment. It will have been the decision of the Secretary of State, on behalf of Parliament, that they should remain to carry on the work of their own abolition; it is, therefore, essential that his control should remain so that he can protect them.

8. In practice we foresee that it may be difficult to make this control really effective if the Secretary of State is not to interfere in what will appear to be matters of detail in the internal affairs of the local Indian Governments. Appointments to selection posts may be given on political or even personal grounds, postings to the less favoured stations may be made, a policy of pin-pricks may be adopted in order to induce officers to retire, and, in such cases, we are very doubtful whether the Public Service Commission will be able to act as an effective safeguard. It will be difficult, if not impossible, for the

* Not enclosed.

Secretary of State to give protection in such matters. The result may be that officers will be compelled to retire, although ostensibly their retirement will be voluntary. There is one form of protection, however, which the Secretary of State can provide, namely, a guarantee that in all cases better actuarial terms of proportionate pension are given. These should be based on an impartial and fair assessment of the position of each officer with regard to the Provident Fund and other privileges and prospects which he is surrendering by premature retirement. If it is thought that, in case of a given Service, the offer of such terms might defeat the intention of retaining a certain minimum of European officers, this in itself will be a measure of how unsatisfactory and difficult the conditions in that Department are found to be. The only remedy will be to offer better terms of pay to the officers in the Service concerned.

9. We have previously alluded to the possibility of a still less advanced stage where it is considered that the goal of self-government is so far off that it is necessary to continue to recruit European officers for the Department concerned. Even here the change will probably take the form of "Indianization." Departments and their work are closely inter-related. The conditions of work in one Department are vitally affected by the conditions in another. If some Departments are changed, as is contemplated above, the position of officers working in those less advanced on the road to self-government will be materially affected. We think, therefore, that officers in these less advanced Departments should also be given the opportunity to retire on proportionate pension on similar terms to those mentioned in paragraph 8 above.

10. It is evident that if compensation and pensions are granted, as suggested, there must be some security that these will be paid. If, as has been previously assumed, we are moving towards responsible self-government for India, though this objective will not in the immediate future be reached, officers will have to be retained, who, at some future date, sooner or later, will be dependent upon Indian Governments for their Pay, Pensions, and Provident Funds. There must, in these circumstances, be some definite guarantee at this stage by the British Government, that these will, in fact, be paid. When we ask that the control of the Secretary of State should remain, we mean amongst other things, that he should be in a position to enforce payment of all amounts due on account of Pay, Pensions and Provident Funds of all officers for whom he has at any time been responsible.

11. In conclusion, we venture to summarise the essential points of our present Memorandum as follows:—

(1) Real Self-Government for India is inconsistent with the existence of the Superior Civil Services as at present organised.

(2) Possible stages in the devolution of the various Departments of Government may be classified as follows:—

(a) Where European officers are definitely no longer required, and those who remain in Permanent Service will be compulsory retired.

(b) Where recruitment of European officers to existing Services will be stopped, but officers already in Service will be retained to tide over the period till stage (a) is reached.

(c) Where it will still be necessary for the Secretary of State to recruit European officers under his control.

(3) For European officers coming under paragraph (2) (a) above, full compensation with terms not less reasonable than those granted in Egypt should be given.

(4) For European officers retained in permanent service under category (2) (b) above, opportunities for retirement on proportionate pensions on terms more equitable than those now prevailing should be offered.

(5) For European officers retained or recruited under category (2) (c) above, opportunities for retirement on proportionate pension or equivalent Provident Fund should remain open indefinitely.

(6) In all cases of European officers in the Superior Services, the full responsibility of the British Parliament as foreshadowed in the late Secretary of State's Despatch, dated February 9th, 1922 (a copy of which we append hereto), should be definitely acknowledged.

Copy of Despatch, dated 9th February, 1922, from the Secretary of State for India, to the Government of India, as published in the Statesman of the 6th April, 1922.

PUBLIC SERVICES AND RETIREMENT.

MR. MONTAGU'S LETTER.

Proportionate Scheme Guarantees.

The following is the full text of the Despatch of the Secretary of State, dated February 9, and published at Simla on Monday in a Home Department resolution on the subject of the retirement of officers on proportionate pensions and the security of pensions already earned and in prospect:—

I have recently addressed you by telegram suggesting for the consideration of Your Excellency's Government the desirability of taking early steps to remove the misapprehensions which, I have reason to believe, are widely entertained as to the meaning to be attached to the passage quoted in the margin (given below) from paragraph 3 of the resolution issued by your Government with my approval on the 8th November last, on the subject of the terms and conditions on which officers of certain Indian Services who desire to be released from further service, in consequence of the introduction of constitutional reforms, may be permitted to retire prematurely on proportionate pension.

(The following is the marginal quotation referred to above:—

All applications must reach the Local Government before the 31st March 1924, by which date officers will have ample opportunity to appreciate the effects of the recent constitutional changes, and to arrive at a considered decision. Officers of the Services specified who do not apply before that date will not be eligible for a pension on premature retirement in consequence of any constitutional developments which may subsequently take place.)

It has been represented to me that this passage in the resolution has been commonly interpreted as intended definitely to preclude any officer whose employment may hereafter be terminated prematurely, either by the Secretary of State in Council under the constitution provided by the present Government of India Act, or by an Indian Dominion Government, should such be constituted by an instrument amending or repealing that Act, from claiming pensionary recognition of the services which he has rendered, and compensation for their unexpected termination. And apart from the fear that such consequences are intended in the matter of compulsory retirement, I understand that the passage is further regarded as closing the door on any hope of the renewal of an offer similar to that held out by the resolution, even on the occurrence of further legislation to amend the Government of India Act, which may have the effect of marking a further stage towards the grant to India of Dominion Status, and the combined effect of these impressions has been apparently to give colour to the idea that a leading motive which prompted the Secretary of State in Council, and your Excellency's Government in framing the terms and conditions embodied in the orders of the 8th November, was a desire to induce as many as possible of the members of the All-India Services, for whose maintenance, welfare and efficiency those authorities are directly responsible, to abandon their employment at the earliest possible date.

2. Your Excellency's Government will, I am confident, share my deep regret that language could have been used which is capable of an interpretation so fundamentally at variance with our objects and intentions, and I trust that it is now clearly understood by the members of the Services that :—

(a) Nothing in your resolution has reference directly or indirectly to the compulsory retirement of officers whose employment it may hereafter be decided, by whatever authority, to terminate for whatever reason, before they have completed such service as, under ordinary regulations and expectations, carries the claim to a pension.

(b) That when the time comes for His Majesty's Government to recommend to Parliament further legislation with the object of granting to India a larger measure of Self-Government, it will be the unquestionable duty of the Secretary of State in Council to consider fully the extent to which such changes affect the conditions of service of those who will be bound by them, and whether they are such as to necessitate a re-opening of opportunities for voluntary retirement on pension; that it will further be his duty to take steps to secure the enactment of such provisions to that end as may seem just and necessary, and that nothing in your resolution was designed to absolve the Secretary of State in Council from this obligation, and,

(c) That in fact the intention of the passage in question was simply to emphasise the circumstance that the right to apply for a proportionate pension was an exceptional right, conferred on the express recommendation of the Joint Select Committee of both Houses, with the implied authority of Parliament, in order to meet the conditions which have been brought about by the Act of 1919, or which may arise in the course of constitutional development under that Act, and, consequently, that the right was one which, once offered and exhausted, it would not be proper for the Secretary of State in Council to renew, save as the result of a similar mandate given on account of constitutional changes arising out of further Parliamentary legislation.

Security of Pensions.

3. I desire, however, to take this opportunity of endeavouring to dispel other analogous anxieties which have been brought to my notice as being felt by members and ex-members, not only of the Indian Services, but also of the Home establishment of the Secretary of State in Council, as to the security of their pensions (whether in the course of payment or in prospect) in the event of India's acquiring full Dominion status, or such an approximation to that status as has effect of transferring from the Secretary of State in Council to the Legislative Assembly some portion or the whole of that measure of control over the appropriation of the revenues of India and over the services which is by the present Act and Statutory Rules, vested in the Secretary of State in Council.

4. It would, of course, be idle for me to pretend that any declaration by myself, by the Council of India, or His Majesty's Government as at present constituted, would have the effect of binding any future Government or Parliament as to the measures which they should respectively propose and ratify to safeguard the existing and accruing rights of persons in the Civil Service of the Crown in India whose conditions of employment may be affected by whatever further legislation Parliament may, in its wisdom decide hereafter, to enact in pursuance of the policy inaugurated by the Act of 1919 : but it is evidently not generally appreciated that no change in or diminution of the powers of control now exercised by the Secretary of State in Council in this regard, nor in modification of the law which now makes such pensions a statutory charge upon the revenues of India, could be affected without the fullest public discussion, and by means of express Parliamentary enactment. It cannot be anticipated that His Majesty's Government and Parliament will treat lightly their obligation to ensure, as an essential part of such an enactment, that all pensions current at the time shall continue to be paid, that those officers whose services may have to be compulsorily terminated shall be adequately compensated, and that those who are entitled to pensions shall receive them, but, in any event, I desire to place on record, with the full concurrence of my Council, my conviction that no future Secretary of State in Council of India will be found wanting in his duty of securing the fulfilment of those obligations, or will be found willing to surrender in the smallest degree the control which he exercises under the existing law, save on conditions which will adequately ensure that the rights and expectations which it is now his duty to protect are fully guaranteed.

Memorandum submitted by the Punjab and Frontier Association of European Government Servants.

1. The Punjab and Frontier Association of European Government Servants was constituted in 1922 with the object of protecting and promoting the interests of European members of the Services, owing to a general feeling of insecurity following the introduction of the reformed constitution of 1919 and the announcement of a policy of rapid Indianisation of the Services. It consisted on 1st January, 1928, of 309 members representing all branches of the Services. This number is approximately 65 per cent. of the total number of Europeans in the Services in the Provinces concerned, who are eligible for membership of the Association.*

2. In the list of questions which the Indian Statutory Commission will investigate, contained in the Appendix to the "invitation to submit Memoranda" issued by the Commission on 6th March, 1928, appears :—

"10. The position of the Services, e.g. :—
(a) Indian Civil Service.
(b) Other All-India Services.
(c) Provincial Services.
(d) The question of recruitment and of Public Services Commissions.
(e) Indianisation."

We do not feel at all sure as to the matters in respect of which the Commission wishes to have evidence regarding the position of the Services, but we take it that in this connection the Commission is chiefly concerned to report the extent to which the provisions contained in the Government of India Act, and intended to safeguard the interests of the Services, have proved effective; and, if considered necessary, to make recommendations for the modification of those provisions in the direction either of strengthening or of relaxing them. This is indeed a matter of the first importance; for we recognise that among the most striking anomalies inherent in the present constitutional régime is the necessity imposed upon popular Ministers of employing as agents for the execution of their policy, members of Services over which they have only limited control; and though the cessation of recruitment for All-India Services in all transferred fields of the administration, except the Medical Department, means that in course of time this anomaly will cease to exist; it is difficult to conceive that Indian opinion will tolerate its continuance over the long period that must elapse before the All-India Service element in existing transferred departments has disappeared, to say nothing of the period that must elapse before this result is obtained in departments which have not yet been transferred, but may be recommended for transfer, by the Commission. Responsible Government with an Executive which is not ultimately amenable to the same authority as that which makes and unmakes the Government is not a fair proposition; and we would, at the very outset of our Memorandum, insist that it is the British Government, as the authority which has imposed the Services on India, which whould be responsible for compensating those Services for any injury they may have to suffer in consequence of the cessation of powers already made or to be made in future. If the attainment of responsible government by India is indeed the goal of the British Government, we can see no justification for the retention by the British Government of power to enforce the rights of the Services against the wishes of the future rulers of India. By all means let attempts be made to obtain India's recognition of the obligations she owes to the Services, and thus to lighten the burden which must otherwise be borne by the British Government, if the rights of the Services are not to be disregarded, but let the British Government clearly avow that the rights of the Services are guaranteed by itself whether agreement is reached with India or not. It may be contended that much weight need not be attached to the utterances of Indian politicians who have declared that if India obtains Home Rule the pensionary rights of the Services will not be recognised, but with such an example before our eyes as that of the Southern Irish Government, which, in defiance of the pronouncement of its own highest judicial authority as to the right to compensation conferred by the Treaty, has refused to acknowledge that right, we cannot feel that our rights are secured unless they are explicitly guaranteed by the British Government.

3. We have indicated above that the present position is anomalous from the Indian point of view, but it is equally anomalous from the point of view of the British element in the Services, that, while the authority which appoints them, and in the last resort decides whether they shall remain in service or not, is the British Government, the authority which passes judgment on their work and otherwise has undisputed control over their destinies is an authority in India, and is more and more becoming an Indian authority. In this respect there is little if any difference between the position of those of us who are serving in the transferred field of the administration and those of us who are serving in the reserved departments in the portfolio of the Indian Member of the Executive Council. It would indeed be surprising if a conscientious Indian Member did not in any case feel bound to act precisely as if he were a popular Minister in the administration of the departments in his charge; and in this Province, where hardly any distinction has in practice been made between the transferred departments and the reserved departments in the portfolio of the Indian Member, members of the All-India Services serving in the two fields of the administration have in effect been dependent in exactly the same way on His Excellency the Governor for such protection as they may have needed. Now, in this Province we do not complain that the Indian Member or the Ministers have shewn any hostility to the European members of the services as such: indeed, we readily acknowledge that their relations with us have been most cordial, and that the Legislative Council as a whole also has not displayed any racial animosity towards us; but we cannot be certain that the present temper of the Punjab will always remain the same, or that we shall always have Ministers and Members of the same stamp, or that we shall always have a British Governor; and we cannot be blind to the racial hostility which has been displayed in the local press, the Legislative Assembly and the Legislative Councils of other Provinces. In these circumstances we cannot view our position with equanimity when the authority to pass judgment on our work, and to decide questions of our promotion, appointments, etc., may be not merely unsympathetic, but positively hostile. For this reason, we would most strongly urge that even if no change is made in the control of the Services exercised by the Secretary of State, the right to retire on proportionate pension which some of us enjoy should be maintained, and that a similar right, or the right to a gratuity of equal value in the event of premature retirement, should be extended to those of us who at present do not possess it. The changes in conditions in India to which we shall presently refer, and the risk of unsympathetic or hostile treatment to which we have referred above, affect us all in almost equal degree, and it is only right that we should, all of us, have the same means of escape if we find our position too difficult. This is indeed a matter of the most vital importance to those of us who have no pensionary rights and are dependent for provision for themselves and their families after retirement on a provident fund, which only in the last ten or twelve years of service amounts to an appreciable sum. For such of us it would at present be impossible to contemplate premature retirement, however distasteful service might become.

* Members of the Police and Indian Medical Services, who are not eligible, have been excluded from this calculation. On the other hand the Association includes European Officers recruited by the Secretary of State who do not belong to any particular service. Throughout this Memorandum the term Services must be understood to cover all such Officers.

4. We turn now to an examination of our present circumstances. As regards our financial position, we may say that we consider the concessions made in consequence of the recommendations of the Lee Commission to be generally satisfactory, though the failure of Government to give effect to those recommendations in certain particulars has left a sense of grievance which it would cost little to remove. While, however, we are, on the whole, satisfied in this respect, it would appear that the terms of appointment are not sufficiently attractive to enable suitable European recruits to be obtained for certain Services, such as, for example, the Railway and Medical Services, and that if a European element is to be retained in these Services, it will be necessary to offer better terms. There are, on the other hand, many other aspects of our position beside the financial one, and the changes in conditions during the last few years have been such as to make some of us doubt whether they have been wise to remain. Among these changes, perhaps the most important is the rapid Indianization which has taken place. This has had two main consequences: a decrease of social amenities and an increase of official responsibility. The social change has been most perceptible in small stations. In earlier days, with some half-dozen European officials and their families stationed in such places, life was pleasant, and there were opportunities for social intercourse and relaxation: now, however, there are many more places than before at which a single European is stationed, and the only society is that of Indians. There is here no question of racial antipathy or racial arrogance; it is simply a matter of fact that Indian and European ways of living and manners of thought are so radically different that unmixed Indian society can no more afford relaxation to a European than unmixed European society can afford it to an Indian. A further change which may, perhaps, be classed as social, is the great reduction in the number of European doctors available for attendance on the wives and families of European officials. In this respect the Government of India has so far failed to carry out the recommendations of the Lee Commission; and the matter is one on which the members of our Association feel very strongly.

5. The increase of official responsibility which has resulted from the Reforms is a matter of more serious importance, but is not due solely to Indianization of the Services. One of the chief causes of this increase of responsibility is to be found in the intensifying of communal feeling which has taken place since, if it has not been occasioned by, the Reforms. This has led in many cases to the selection of Europeans for the most difficult and most disagreeable stations, especially places where communal troubles are to be anticipated, and though the services rendered by European officers when communal troubles break out are at the time gratefully acknowledged by those chiefly concerned, "advanced" politicians almost invariably have fault to find with the measures taken to restore the public peace, if they do not actually attribute its breach to the machinations of Government and its European officers. The bane of communalism, however, does not end here: it is a poison which pervades the internal economy of every Service, and whether it is an appointment imposed from above or an appointment suggested from below, there is rarely an appointment in respect of which a European officer in any department, reserved or transferred, provincial or central, can be quite confident that it was not made or suggested from communal considerations. Nor is the influence of communalism confined to appointments; for there is no matter into which communal considerations may not enter, whether it be a judicial decision, the giving of a contract, a report on the work of a subordinate, a recommendation for the enforcement of a penalty or the conferment of a favour; and the European officer has constantly to be on his guard lest he be made the tool of communal intrigue. We do not wish to imply that there are no Indian officers who are not swayed by communal feeling in their work: there are many, and we recognise that the greatest credit is due to them for their resistance to the constant overwhelming pressure that is brought to bear on them; nor do we deny that even before the Reforms it was the desire of Government that all communities should be represented in the Services, and we do not suggest that any Government could in present conditions view with equanimity the monopolizing of the Services by any one community: but we do insist that the Reforms have vastly intensified communal consciousness, and that the task of the European officer has been rendered much more difficult and distasteful in consequence.

6. As regards the increase of responsibility due to Indianization of the Services, apart from the exaggeration of communal differences involved therein, we submit our views with diffidence and reluctance, but we trust that it will be recognised that the opinions we express are honest opinions, and that their expression is intended only to contribute to a just appreciation of the position with which the Commission has to deal. Broadly speaking, then, we affirm that the responsibility of the European officer has been greatly increased owing to the Indianization of the Services because the Indian officer generally speaking has not the same pride in his work, the same conscientiousness in detail, the same feeling of individual responsibility as the European. There are of course exceptions to this rule, and we may be wrong in holding this opinion, but whether the opinion is right or wrong it exists, and its existence adds enormously to the burden of our work. Naturally this opinion is not altogether shared by the Indian Ministers and Members who now have such a large voice in the management of departments, so that on the one hand there is no full appreciation of the extra burden on European officers, and on the other hand there are bound to be serious differences of opinion as to the suitability of particular Indians for particular appointments. This is in fact only one aspect of a much wider problem, and that is the reconciliation of Western and Eastern standards of conduct and efficiency. The difference in these respects is indeed in many ways so great that there are some of us who are inclined to think that the time may come when the European cannot continue to serve if he is not to lose his self respect.

7. We have emphasized above the changes that have made the position of European officers in the Services more difficult and the reasons why apprehensions are entertained for the future; but while there are some of us who would before now have exercised their right to retire on proportionate pension if sheer necessity had not compelled them to submit to conditions which have become highly distasteful to them, there are others of us who have found compensation for these changes in the added interest of their work and are anxious to continue to take their share in the development of the country, and to contribute what they can to the realization of responsible self-government in India. Those of us who have been in closest contact with Ministers and Indian Members know well that they appreciate the services which European officers can render to the country and recognize that the time has not yet come when India can do without them; and we, on our side, recognize that for so long as we are wanted, it is our duty to remain and do our best, even if conditions are not so pleasant as formerly and our work is subjected to much more searching criticism. But we must be certain that we are wanted, and we do not see how this can be assured if the present organization of the Services is maintained. We have already observed that the maintenance of that organization is incompatible with true responsible Government, and we are, therefore, forced to the conclusion that the Services as at present constituted cannot remain. There must then come before long a time when a definite break must be made with the past and only such European officers must remain as the Indian Governments wish to employ. Many of us will be willing to face the difficulties and take the risks of voluntarily re-engaging and we may hope that many of us will find re-employment, but most of us have dependents to think of, and a condition of any such arrangement as we have envisaged above must be that our pensions for past service are guaranteed by the British Government and that those of us who are unwilling to re-engage or fail to find re-employment shall be compensated for loss of career on some such terms as were given to the European element in the Egyptian services. We do not desire to enter into any details in this connection, but we would urge that these and other questions connected with the Services should, if any radical changes are recommended by the Commission, be referred to a second and special Commission on the lines of the Lee Commission.

PUNJAB AND FRONTIER ASSOCIATION OF EUROPEAN GOVERNMENT SERVANTS. [Continued.

8. In conclusion, the essential points to which we trust the Commission will subscribe in consequence of this Memorandum are as follows:—

(1) If responsible self-government for India is the goal of the British Government, there is no justification for the retention of the Services as at present constituted, which are an obstacle to the attainment of that goal.

(2) If this proposition is not accepted and the present control of the Services by the Secretary of State is to be maintained, the right to retire on proportionate pension should be retained and extended to members of all Services alike, no matter when recruited, or whether serving under the Central Government or a Provincial Government, and in the case of Services which have no pensionary rights, arrangements should be made for the payment of a gratuity of corresponding value in the event of premature retirement.

(3) If the proposition advanced in Clause (1) is accepted and only such European officers are to remain as may be willing to re-engage for service under Indian Governments and can obtain re-employment, those who are unwilling to remain or fail to obtain re-employment should not be given merely a pension or gratuity in consideration of past service, but should also be compensated for loss of career.

(4) In either case the British Government should definitely undertake liability for the payment of pensions, provident funds and gratuities to members of the Services at a rate of exchange not less than the present rate of exchange fixed for pensions.

Supplementary Memorandum submitted by the Council of the Punjab and Frontier Association of European Government Servants.

1. The Punjab and Frontier Association of European Government Servants includes a small number of Europeans who have taken employment under the Provincial Government. Such officers, as the result of the constitutional changes of 1919, are already dependent upon a vote in the Punjab Legislative Council for their salaries and are liable to transfer or dismissal by Ministers. In this connection the Punjab and Frontier Association of European Government Servants wishes to draw attention to letter No. F-201-24 Ests. of the 7th August, 1924, from the Secretary to the Government of India in the Home Department, addressed to all Local Governments. In this letter, which dealt with the recommendations of the Lee Commission, the Government of India remark that the Secretary of State wishes that the subject of claims made by Europeans in the Provincial Services should be carefully examined, and the Government of India in the same letter expresses the view that the protection of rights of the European Officers appointed by Local Governments must be secured. As far as this Association is aware no practical results have followed these statements. The European officers concerned feel that such remaining security and consequent peace of mind as they now possess is due to ephemeral circumstances. These circumstances are the sense of moral obligation felt towards them by high European Government officials, and the fact that they, a small number, work with a large body of officials, who are protected by the Secretary of State, and from whom they receive reflected protection. Under a further measure of Reforms this fortuitous and unsatisfactory protection would probably disappear. In this event they would find their careers at the mercy of a vote wielded by an Assembly possibly antagonistic, and certainly lacking the long traditions and experience of similar bodies in England.

2. It may be argued that since such officers have accepted terms of service for which the Secretary of State is not responsible they can have no claim on him to consider hardships they may suffer caused by further constitutional changes. This Association, however, points out that the letter quoted in paragraph 1 shows that the Secretary of State had no desire to disregard the hardships of these European officials, but, on the other hand, recognised that their claims should receive special examination. Since no protection has resulted, it appears to be even more necessary than hitherto that the claims of these officers should be dealt with before further measures of Reform become effective. The Punjab and Frontier Association of European Government Servants, therefore, asks the Simon Commission to recommend that before any further widening of responsible self-government becomes effective, this outstanding question of protection to be given to Europeans employed by the Provincial Governments should be examined by the Secretary of State and a pronouncement made upon it by him, and that the form that this protection should take should be :—

(a) Compensation for loss of career due to termination of service.

(b) The extension to these officers of the right to retirement on proportionate pension or on proportionate provident fund.

Memorandum submitted by the Bombay European Government Servants' Association, Bombay.

Under the invitation to submit Memoranda which was published on the 6th March, 1928, I am directed by the Council of the Bombay Presidency European Government Servants' Association to submit the following remarks for favour of consideration by your Commission.

2. I am to forward herewith a copy of the Rules* of the Association, the membership of which it will be observed is confined to European Gazetted Officers in Civil Employment under Government in the Bombay Presidency, except Police or Prison Officers. The Association has at present 225 members and is subsidiary to, and affiliated with, the All-India European Government Servants' Association, which Association will no doubt be submitting a separate communication to you.

This Memorandum has been drawn up by the Council of the Bombay European Government Servants' Association but, owing to the shortness of the available time, it has not been possible to obtain the approval to it of the individual members of the Association. In the opinion of the Council, however, it may safely be taken that the views expressed in this Memorandum are broadly speaking those of the majority of the members of this Association.

3. I am to point out that this Association does not desire, nor in view of the recent investigations and findings of the Lee Commission does it seem right and proper, to bring forward anything in the nature of a detailed schedule of grievances. What this Association respectfully presses for at the present juncture is that the recommendations of the Lee Commission should be fully carried out and that reasonable safeguards should be applied to the interests of the European members of the Services in India, both under the Reforms that have already been enacted and under such as may come into force in the future. This is especially necessary as there is a large number of officers who have so far been very little affected by the Reforms, but whose position may become very different with the extension of the Reforms now or in the future to the Departments in which those officers may be serving. The most important safeguard is some system under which European Officers of the Services who may have been in the Services before the existing Reforms were introduced, or who may join these services in the future and then find themselves adversely affected by further reforms that may be introduced thereafter, shall, at any time, be enabled to retire without unduly damaging their careers. It is suggested that this can best be done by means of a system of proportionate pensions and of cash compensation for the loss of future career, somewhat on the lines of the terms that were granted to certain officials under the Egyptian Government.

In this connection, I am to point out that when the present Premature Retirement Rules on Proportionate Pension were first published, the option given was for a very restricted period only, and there was in consequence an immediate rush of applications for retirement. When the period for the exercise of the option was extended, quite a number of these applications were withdrawn. It is presumably not the wish either of the Government of India or of the Secretary of State in Council that European Officers should be alarmed into applying for a proportionate pension and retiring before they normally would do so.

Conditions such as these can only mean an increased drain on the revenues of the country and have a deleterious effect on the calibre of the recruits that will come forward for the Services in the future. It is, therefore, most undoubtedly to the interest both of Government and of the Officers themselves that there should be every inducement for the Officers already in the Services to remain contentedly in these Services.

The present position in regard to the option of Retirement on Proportionate Pension is that " the option shall continue in force and may be exercised until the action proposed to be taken on the Report of the Commission provided for by the Government of India Act, is known, when the whole position will necessarily be reviewed." I am to emphasise that from the point of view of the European Officers in these Services, it is very desirable not only that they should know what action is proposed to be taken on the Report of the Royal Commission, before they come to a decision as to whether they can continue in the Services or as to whether they should retire, but also that they should be given a reasonable period in which to work under the changed conditions produced by that action which is taken on the Report of the Royal Commission. I am to suggest, therefore, that the period during which the option remains in force should be extended at the very least for one year after the issue of the complete and final orders by the Government of India or by the Local Government (whichever authority may issue such orders) on the recommendations of the Statutory Commission.

It has been contended that the existing offer of retirement on proportionate pension has unsettled Officers and kept them on the lookout for other appointments. I am to submit that this is an entirely incorrect view, and that the exact opposite has been the case, viz., that the existence of the present option has led a large number of Officers to remain contentedly at work, who would have undoubtedly have left if the offer had not been kept open.

4. The existence of an adequate channel of appeal for any Officer who may consider that he has been unfairly or unjustly treated is a sine qua non for a contented and efficient service. Such a channel of appeal at present exists, and I am to say that my Council note with satisfaction that certain classes of appeals to the Governor-General in Council shall be referred to the Public Service Commission and that other classes of appeal, not only to the Governor-General in Council but also to the Governors of Provinces may be referred to that Commission. In this connection, however, I am to state that in the opinion of my Council in order to ensure complete impartiality, no member of the Public Service Commission should thereafter be eligible for any appointment under the Crown in India or for a seat on the Council of the Secretary of State for India. It is submitted that a system under which a seat on the Public Service Commission may be a stepping-stone to further advancement in the service of Government does not tend to impart to the decisions of the Service members of the Tribunal that judicial impartiality which is essential for the proper performance of its functions. It seems, therefore, desirable that the members of the Public Service Commission should hold their appointments directly under the King Emperor and be ineligible for any other appointment thereafter under the Crown in India, or for a seat on the Council of the Secretary of State for India. It is, however, considered to be essential that nothing shall adversely affect the present rights of Officers of Government to appeal to the Secretary of State for India.

5. I am also to ask that the earnest consideration of the Commission be given to the case of those European Government Servants who do not belong to the Imperial Services. Their number is large. Most of them belong to the Provincial Services in Transferred Departments and their pay is subject to the vote of the Legislative Councils. Their position is in consequence particularly vulnerable to attack by the politically minded, and the most fair and impartial Minister would be helpless in the face of a racial attack on the emoluments of the Officers under his administrative control. It may be noted also that a Minister does not stand or fall by the vote of the Council. The legislature may cut out deliberately all the European Officers in his Department, but neither the Law nor the Custom of the Constitution demands that he should in consequence resign. There are, therefore, large numbers of European Officers who may, at any time, find themselves dispossessed of their appointments, not because of their inefficiency nor because the posts they hold are unnecessary or redundant, but simply because the local legislature desires to take a short cut to Indianisation. In this Presidency the Legislative Council threw out the vote for the Department of Industries which had a European Member of the Indian Civil Service as Director, and then demanded the restoration of the vote with an Indian Director. The Director being a member of the Indian Civil Service was not affected as his pay is non-voted, and he would be given another post, but had the Director been a member of the Provincial Service or an Officer on Contract, he would have lost his employment purely on racial grounds.

* Not enclosed.

In this province, too, there are Specialist Officers —necessarily engaged on contract—holding posts that are permanent and whose whole staff is permanent. Some of them have had 15 years' service and over. The Lee Commission strongly recommended that such Officers should be made permanent, but that recommendation has been ignored, and these Officers, despite their long service, are liable at any time to be dismissed at six months' notice, with no reason given, and with no compensation and with no pension, except what their provident fund gives them.

I am, therefore, instructed to ask that the position of officers not belonging to the Imperial Services should receive careful examination.

6. In conclusion, I am to state that in so far as the interests of the European Officers of Government are concerned, the main issues which the Council of the Bombay European Government Servants' Association desire to bring to the notice of the Royal Commission are :—

(a) The continuance of the system under which an officer may retire without undue financial loss in the event of the conditions of his appointment being changed to such an extent after his entry into it as to render it in his opinion impossible for him to remain.

(b) The continuance of an adequate channel of appeal for officers who may consider themselves unjustly treated.

(c) The position of those European Officers referred to in paragraph 5 above who are not members of the Imperial Services.

Memorandum submitted by the Madras Association of European Government Servants.

The Madras Association of European Government Servants was formed in January, 1922, with the object of protecting the interests and position of European members of the All-India and other Services, including Specialist appointments, which it was felt might be rendered insecure by the introduction, in 1921, of the Reforms and by the rapid Indianisation of the Services. On May 1st, 1928, it had 206 members representing all branches of the Services eligible for membership and about ninety-five per cent. of all European officers of the All-India Services. Officers of the Indian Police Service and of the Indian Medical Service are not permitted by Government to be members of the Association. The Association is recognised by the Government of Madras.

2. In the Appendix to the " Invitation to submit Memoranda," issued by the Indian Statutory Commission, item 10 deals with the position of the Services.

3. With reference to item 10 (b) the following remarks indicate the views of this Association :—

(i) The transferred subjects in the Madras Presidency, in so far as they affect the All-India Services, are Education, Agriculture, Veterinary, Public Works (Buildings and Roads), Medicine, and the All-India Services concerned are the

(a) Indian Educational Service,
(b) Indian Agricultural Service.
(c) Indian Veterinary Service,
(d) Indian Service of Engineers and Public Works Specialists,
(e) Indian Medical Service.

Recruitment to (a), (b) and (c) was stopped from April 1st, 1924. These Services will, therefore, come to an end with the retirement or demise of the present members. No corresponding Provincial Services have yet been instituted by the Local Government to take their places.

A table (I) is appended showing the variation in the number of posts in the cadres of these Services held by Europeans from the years 1914 to 1928.

(ii) The reserved subjects in the Presidency, so far as they affect the All-India Services, are (a) Revenue and Judicial, (b) Forests, (c) Police, (d) Public Works (Irrigation), and the All-India Services working in these subjects are the

(a) Indian Civil Service,
(b) Indian Forest Service,
(c) Indian Police Service,
(d) Indian Service of Engineers.

Recruitment of Europeans to these Services proceeds more or less in accordance with the recommendations of the Lee Commission.

A table (II) is appended showing the yearly variations in the number of European Officers in the cadres of these Services in the period 1914 to the end of 1927.

4. The position of the All-India Services may be considered under the heads (a) financial, (b) social, (c) political.

(a) The financial position of the Services has been improved though some classes of individuals have grounds for complaint on points of detail. There still remains, however, a definite feeling of insecurity in regard to opportunities for preferment, and in regard to pensions and provident funds. There are advanced Indian politicians of considerable standing who have openly advocated the repudiation by India of her obligations in the two last named matters should she ever attain complete independence, and we feel, and always have felt, that our legitimate claims should be guaranteed either by the British Government or by a reserve of Indian funds held in London.

We are also disturbed at the long delay (which now amounts to thirteen years) in giving effect to the proposals for a Family Pension Fund. Even when this is instituted, confidence in it can only be assured by some such guarantee as that asked for in respect of pensions and provident funds.

The Services are most anxious that, whatever further changes may be made in the constitution, some guarantee of the safety of their financial and other rights be given.

(b) Under social we would mention the increasing isolation of officers in mofussil stations owing to the rapid Indianisation of the Services. Many stations, which in the past were staffed by Europeans, now contain but one or two. Mofussil life which in the past had considerable social attractions has now very largely lost them owing to the rapidly diminishing number of European officers. There is no question of lack of sympathy between the two classes of Government servants, but ways of living differ so widely that relaxation is not ordinarily to be found by either in the company of the other.

The matter of medical attendance by European doctors requires serious and immediate attention. The Secretary of State has recently passed orders intended to safeguard the needs of European officers and their families but the success of the scheme depends upon an adequate supply of European I.M.S. officers. Whether European medical men will respond and seek to join the Service on the new terms offered remains to be seen ; present indications are that they will not. It may, however, be laid down as axiomatic that on the provision of European medical officers in India will largely depend the willingness of officers at present in service to remain and the recruitment of European officers in the future. The provision of European medical officers is regarded as of the utmost importance.

(c) The political situation has not hitherto materially affected the position of the Services. So far as we are aware there has been no victimisation, and relations between officers and Ministers have been generally friendly. We would, however, add that up to the present the political parties in power have been of moderate tendencies and that in most cases the Ministers have recognised the need of European help. The work of European officers is of course subjected to more intense public criticism than used to be the case, there is a lower standard of efficiency, and the changed conditions of work have caused many to despond and to take less pride and interest in their work. This is in some cases due to the fact that officers are called upon to carry out policies in which they have little faith, and which they know are merely devised to place or to keep a Minister or a party in power.

The reduction in the number of Europeans in the Services has thrown a greater degree of responsibility upon those who remain ; subordinate officers require closer supervision by their superiors and the more difficult tasks in the more uncongenial surroundings generally fall to the lot of the European. This state of affairs he will face cheerfully though he may feel sometimes that the fact that he is undertaking the lion's share of the work and responsibility is imperfectly recognised.

We are strongly of opinion, however, that the comparative immunity we enjoy is principally due to the protection expected by reason of our present position under the Secretary of State and of our right of appeal to the local Governor and the Governor-General. There have been cases in which selection grade posts have been filled or left unfilled, and promotions made in a manner which was considered unjust. Such cases have occurred in both reserved and transferred subjects, and have only been rectified after representation to the Governor-General or to the Secretary of State. We may, therefore, admit that the safeguards provided in the Government of India and subsequent Acts and in the rules framed by the Secretary of State thereunder have hitherto prevented the position of European officers of the Services from being prejudiced.

5. These remarks apply to the Services working in the transferred fields, but are equally applicable to Services working in the reserved fields.

6. We therefore emphatically urge that in any changed conditions that may result from the present Commission our present position under the Secretary of State should continue, our present rights of appeal be assured, our present rights to proportionate pension and the protection of our pay and allowances from the vote of the Councils be preserved and that the right to retire on proportionate pension should be granted to all in service on the date on which the new régime is introduced. If it is decided that our present position and rights are incompatible with any further instalment of self-government that it is deemed desirable or necessary to confer, we request that we may be retired on lines similar to those on which the Egyptian European Services were disbanded in the event of any new terms of service proving unacceptable.

7. In conclusion we would submit that the following points are considered essential:—

(1) That if the present members of the "transferred services" and of the present "reserved" and "central services" are to be retained, all the rights and privileges which at present are enjoyed shall be assured in full.

(2) That provision be made for rendering pensions, provident funds, gratuities and any other financial claims and privileges absolutely secure, and that retirement on proportionate pension be extended to all European officers at the time of any change in the constitution. In regard to the "uncovenanted" Services we ask that the scale of proportionate pensions be based on Rs.8,500 a year instead of Rs.7,500, as at present. When the latter sum was fixed it was on the basis of the full pension which might ordinarily be attained, but when this was, as a result of recommendation of the Lee Commission, raised to Rs.8,500, a corresponding and logical amendment was not made in the rules governing proportionate pensions.

(3) That if the retention of the Services as at present constituted is found to be incompatible with any scheme of responsible Government it is decided to confer and if, in consequence the Services be disbanded, that the members of the Services at the time of the introduction of the new régime should be permitted to retire and be given compensation on the lines indicated in paragraph 6 for loss of career.

8. With reference to item 10 (d) we would refer to the Public Services Commission only as it affects the present members of the All-India Services. The Public Service Commission (Functions) Rules, 1926, govern its present functions. The only criticism of these rules we have to offer is that the application of Rule 17 might have been extended to all cases of interests adversely affected.

The satisfactory working of the Public Service Commission and the confidence it enjoys with the Services depend almost entirely on its capacity and independence. Instances are not wanting in which one or both of these appear to have been lacking.

We are emphatically of opinion that membership of the Commission should not be a stepping-stone to any higher appointment, and that no member of the Commission should be eligible for appointment to any higher post under the Crown.

We also consider that when technical matters and appointments are being considered by the Commission, officers with the necessary technical knowledge should be co-opted to assist in its deliberations, and that when matters relating to a particular Service come before it that Service should be represented on the Commission. For these purposes powers of co-option would have to be conferred on the Commission.

There is also the danger that the Public Service Commission may tend to usurp the functions of the Secretary of State or of the Governor-General in the disposal of appeals by members of the Services, and that these authorities may be content to accept the advice offered without themselves investigating particular cases. We, therefore, press for an assurance that the Commission will not be regarded as having assumed the functions of the Secretary of State or be allowed to interfere with the intimate relationship which has always subsisted between him and the Services.

9. With reference to item 10(c), the European members of Provincial Services in Madras have in many cases been recruited in England. At the time of their recruitment the posts to which they were recruited were generally considered to require a European and these officers were usually regarded as of similar social and official standing with Imperial Service officers. Many of them were members of families with Indian traditions who, for financial or other reasons, had not been able to join the Imperial Service. These officers are few in number and there is no possibility of their increasing; when they joined, the British character of the administration was a main inducement and there was no reason to expect any such radical change in their position as has been effected by the Reforms of 1921.

If the British character of the administration is to be further weakened, it is clear that the position of these few European officers will become more and more precarious; consequently all the considerations touching security of position, emoluments and pensions adduced in the previous sections of this Memorandum apply with not less force in their cases.

MADRAS ASSOCIATION OF EUROPEAN GOVERNMENT SERVANTS. [Continued.

TABLE I.

Year.	Indian Educational Service. (a).			Indian Agricultural Service.			Indian Veterinary Service.			Indian Service of Engineers and Public Works Specialists.			Indian Medical Service. (b).
	1	2	3	1	2	3	1	2	3	1	2	3	1	2	3
1914	32	32	100	12	10	83	2	2	100	92	67	73	60	55	92
1915	32	31	97	12	10	83	2	2	100	108	65	60	60	58 (32)	97
1916	33	29	88	12	10	83	2	2	100	108	65	60	60	56 (39)	93
1917	33	28	85	13	11	85	2	2	100	108	65	60	60	50 (35)	83
1918	35	30	86	15	11	73	2	2	100	108	60	56	60	49 (38)	82
1919	35	30	86	16	12	75	2	2	100	108	58	54	60	50 (35)	83
1920	39	30	77	18	14	78	2	2	100	98	57	58	60	46 (16)	77
1921	44	29	66	26	14	54	4	4	100	77	60	78	60	46 (9)	77
1922	67	30	45	27	14	52	5	4	80	79	57	72	60	38 (3)	63
1923	67	26	39	27	14	52	5	4	80	77	53	69	60	34	57
1924	67	27	40	26	10	38	5	4	80	56	47	84	50	32	64
1925	67	25	37	25	9	36	5	4	80	56	43	77	50	32	64
1926	67	23	34	24	6	25	5	4	80	56	42	75	50	29	58
1927	67	21	31	24	6	25	5	4	80	62	41	66	50	28	56
1928	67	20	30	24	6	25	5	4	80	62	42	68	50	25	50

TABLE II.

Year.	Indian Civil Service.			Indian Forest Service.			Indian Police Service.			Indian Service of Engineers.
	1	2	3	1	2	3	1	2	3	1	2	3
1914	175	166	95	32	30	94	76	76	100			Vide above which gives figures for both branches of the service; it is not possible to separate them.
1915	175	166	95	32	30	94	76	75	99
1916	173	163	94	32	30	94	76	72	95
1917	173	157	91	32	27	84	76	71	93
1918	173	149	86	32	25	78	77	69	90
1919	173	144	83	42	26	62	77	67	87
1920	173	148	86	43	26	60	77	71	92
1921	173	148	86	61	35	57	77	75	97
1922	175	147	84	64	37	58	77	71	92
1923	180	148	82	64	35	55	77	72	94
1924	180	141	78	64	35	55	77	75	97
1925	183	131	72	64	34	53	76	72	95
1926	183	120	66	64	32	50	77	71	92
1927	183	114	62	59	32	54	77	63	82

Notes.—Col. 1 gives the cadre ; Col. 2 the number of Europeans holding permanent appointments ; Col. 3 the percentage of Europeans.

(a) Includes the Women's Branch. (b) Numbers in brackets show Officers on Military duty.

Memorandum submitted by the Central Provinces and Berar European Government Servants' Association.

1. This Memorandum is submitted by the Central Provinces and Berar Association of European Government Servants in answer to the Commission's invitation in their Announcement of the 6th March, 1928, and sets forth the views of the Association on the position of the Services (vide item 10 of the Appendix to the Announcement). The Association was formed in 1921 and consists at present of 123 members. This number is approximately 93 per cent. of the total number of European Officers who are eligible for membership. Members of the Indian Police and Indian Medical Services are not eligible for membership. The Association was the first of its kind in India. It has always contained a higher percentage of membership than sister Associations in other Provinces, owing no doubt to the fact that whilst the inauguration of the Reforms aroused apprehensions as to their future in the minds of Europeans in every province in India, these apprehensions were, for local reasons, particularly acute in the Central Provinces.

2. It is recognized that the Indian politician regards it as an anomaly in the present constitution that popular Ministers are compelled to employ as agents for the execution of their policy, members of Services over which they have only limited control, and though the cessation of recruitment for the All-India Services in the Transferred Departments, except the Medical Department, means that in course of time this alleged anomaly will cease to exist, it is difficult to believe that Indian opinion will tolerate its continuance over the long period that must elapse before the All-India Service element in the departments already transferred has disappeared. My Association moreover cannot blind itself to the possibility that other departments will be transferred involving All-India Services to which European recruitment still continues and in which therefore the disappearance of the European element will be still longer delayed.

